

ALLEN COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY

3 1833 01742 7284

ALLEN COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY
1000 EAST 17TH AVENUE
COLUMBUS, INDIANA 47202-1000
PHONE: 317/344-2200
WWW.ACPUBLICLIBRARY.COM

THE

FRIEND

A

RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

---

VOLUME LXXVIII.

---

PHILADELPHIA:
PRINTED BY WM. H. PILE'S SONS, 1905.

INDEX.

- Ackworth school in 1792. Account of a visit to, 167.
Activities that drown religion, 28.
Advices, 314.
Affliction. Consolation in, 108.
Africa. Letters from, on the value of literature sent there by Friends, 100.
On the frequency of trial wars in, 144.
Increase in the number of missions in, 351.
Agents for "The Friend," 64.
Agriculture. The studies necessary to the successful pursuit of, 46.
On inoculating the ground, to increase crops, 54.
An Arizona cactus farm, 222.
On the cultivation of blueberries, 369.
Aluminum. On the production of, 343.
Albertson, Mary H. Notice of the death of, 191.
Algiers. A visit to, 298.
Armenia. Appeal for aid for helpless widows and children in, 207.
Anger. On reconciling, before sun set, 124.
Algeria. A visit to, by Elizabeth S. Kite, 318, 355, 364, 373, 379, 386, 394, 402.
Anecdotes of former Friends, 406, 410.
Animals. Names of groups of different, 62.
The instinctive sense of human character by, 285.
Anselm's prayer, 173.
Antiseptic. Sodium perborate a new, 222.
Antitheses, 99.
Apostolic Succession. The, 249.
Arabia. Missionary efforts in, 391.
Asphalt. On collecting in Venezuela, 398.
Atena. A brief visit to, 298.
Athens unscientific, 225.
Athletic contests. Remarks on, 141, 207, 213.
Athletics. On the use and abuse of, 222.
Atmosphere. Experiments into the higher regions of the, 208.
Atmospheres. Remarks on individual influences, entitled, 10.
Australia. Dalgty the new capital of, 112.
- Babylonia. Buildings unearthed in, dating to nearly 5000 B. C., 55.
Bacon, Ann Eliza. Utterances of the late, in prayer and praise, 345, 355.
Bailey, Richard B. Brief mention of, 236.
Balderston, Samuel F. Expressions of, on the love of the world, 161.
Barnard, Hannah. Testimony of Hudson Mo. Meeting against, 299.
Bartholomew. Notes of a visit of Wm. C. Allen and Wm. B. Harvey to, 301, 309.
Bananas. How ripen, 126.
Baptism not the new birth, 242.
Baptism with water among the Northernmen, 218.
The, which Friends own, 313, 409.
Bartram, John, the botanist. Brief mention of, 227.
Batey, Joseph and Rebecca. Brief mention of, 177, 202.
Battin, Reuben and wife. Brief mention of, 271, 278.
Henry, Jr. Brief mention of, 274.
Catharine. Brief mention of, 286.
Barday, John. Testimony of, to Divine revelation, 273.
Robert. Account of, and his "Apology," 337.
Barnard Hannah. Testimony of Hudson Mo. Meeting against, 306.
Barnardo, Dr., the rescuer of street waifs in London, 389.
Baxter, Richard. Testimony of, to the work of the Holy Spirit, 303.
Beau, James. Account by, of a meeting of Friends in New Hampshire, 179.
Beautiful is the splendor of the trees. Essay entitled, The, 142.
Beating right. On, 206.
Bellows, John. Notice of a Memoir of, 21.
Quotations from, 77, 78.
Hannah. Brief mention of, 391.
- Benezet, Anthony. Brief mention of, 109.
An account of the life of, 357.
Berry, Mary. Account of the life and religious character of, 247.
Besse, Joseph. Advice of, to the youth among Friends, 157.
Bettle, Samuel. Brief mention of, 186, 193, 202.
Samuel, Jr. Brief mention of, 229, 286.
Bible Society. The British and Foreign, 24.
The shooting of a, stopped, 72.
A, the messenger of rest, 180.
Birds. The law in New Jersey for the protection of, 151.
On the migration of, 182.
In defence of the, 292.
In the Hebrides, 325.
How to see, 338.
The great slaughter of, for ornaments, 398.
Blackburn, Abel H. Brief mention of, 271, 278, 236.
Louisa S. Brief mention of, 334.
Blind. Testimony of a Friend who is growing, 84.
A dictionary for the, 87.
Boers. Work done by Emily Hobhouse in aid of the, 376.
Boatfall building of the Eddystone lighthouse, 123.
Bonwill, Huldah H. Notice of the death of, 319.
Book Notices, etc. A biography of William Penn, by Augustus C. Buel, 9, 17, 47.
John Belows. Letters and Memoir, 21.
The Jewish Encyclopedia, 31.
Sixth Annual Report of the Free Hospital for Poor Consumptives, 39.
Liberty and a Living, by P. G. Hubert, Jr., 54.
An ancient book printed by Benjamin Franklin, 53.
Success among nations, by Dr. Emil Reich, 65.
Thomas Chalkley, a booklet, 119.
Bulletin of the Economic Zoologist, 126.
The Simple Life, by Charles Wagner, 129.
Letter on the Russo-Japanese War, by Leo Tolstoi, 135.
Solemn Review of War, by Noah Worcester, 135.
The American standard revised Bible, 157.
Engraving, entitled "Penn's Treaty with the Indians," 159.
"A Quaker Experiment in Government," by Isaac Sharpless, cheap ed., 159.
The Centennial of the Friends' Meeting House, Fourth and Arch Streets, 175, 255.
The Cher-kee Advocate, 175.
Friends' Almanac and Calendar, 183.
The First Publishers of Truth, 189.
The Oxyrhynchus, one and two, 200.
How to cook for the sick, by H. V. Sacluse, 206.
The Sacredness of Human Life, issued by Phila. Friends, 207, 225, 229.
Proceedings of the Toronto Conference, 207.
The Passion of Christ, 215.
Documents relating to the Philippine islands, 215.
A Gazetteer of Indian Territory, 248.
Journal of Friends' Historical Society (London) for First Mo., 1905, 255.
Frenzied Militarism, 263.
Notice of an Egyptian, nearly 5000 years old, 263.
Metamorphism, U. S. Geological Survey, 279.
Lecturers from little hands, by Patterson Du Bois, 316.
The Imperial Drug Trade, by Joshua Rowntree, 383.
The Westonian, 391.
The origin of certain place names in the United States, 391.
The first publishers of Truth No. 3, 415.
- Borax. The sources of, in the United States, 102.
Bottles. Method of removing glass stoppers in, 87.
Boy. The responsibility of a, who is his own master, 51.
A mother's locket the treasure of a school, 55.
- Boy. Thoughtful remark of a, 62.
The reasoning and courage of a small, 76.
Six important things for a, to know, 90.
On "fooling" a, 95.
Should always be on guard against evil, A, 132.
On treating wisely, a, of peculiar character, 255.
The value of honesty in a, 290.
A, who endeavored to make every occasion a great one, 415.
A needed lesson to a cruel, 415.
Bys engaged in growing corn in Illinois, 174.
Remarks on the training of, by E. C. Embley, 223.
Bohemians. Notice of missionary effort among, in Chicago, 223.
Books. On the short life of many, 167.
Bradford, John, the martyr. Advice of, 348.
Brandwood, James. An account of the life and religious character of, 190.
British Museum. Gramophone records to be collected by, the, 333.
Business. On putting principle before, 149.
Experience of William Evans on Divine guidance in, 173.
Burrayet, John. An account of, 330.
- Cadbury, Joel and Anna K. Brief mention of, 319, 407.
California. A house in, made from the wood of a single tree, 62.
Can the theatre be called safe? Essay entitled, 300.
Capital punishment. An address by Friends upon, 229.
On Rosedale and Portland, 11.
Chalkley, Thomas. A gift of, the foundation of Friends' Library, Philadelphia, 227.
Chamberlain, Sarah. Extracts from memoranda of, 231.
Character. On causes which form, 30.
The effects of a good, 85.
A precious, not always recognized at first, 214.
A, beloved for kindness and good will, 374.
Charge delivered by Samuel Fothergill, 308, 317.
Chain-gang. The merciless punishment of the, in Georgia, 39.
Charcoal burning. On, 174.
Cheerfulness while at work. The helpfulness of, 151.
Children. On rearing, 10.
The reverence shown by, to their parents often imperfect, 50.
The duty of parents to insist that their attend meetings for worship, 116.
The seriousness of, to be cherished and respected, 119.
The prevention of crime by neglected, 131.
The duty of early influencing, against war, 140.
The danger of teaching, falsehoods at home, 144.
urging the voting of prohibition candidates, 145.
On teaching, lying and thieving by example, 188.
may be instrumental in leading their parents to God, 251.
China ware. A strong cent for mending, 87.
China. Large purchases of Christian literature by natives of, 111, 223.
Sacrifices by people in, to obtain rain, 183.
Foolhardiness in, condemned by the wife of a Chinese minister, 199.
Turning to God from idols in, 221.
Increased openness in, to missionary efforts, 240, 351, 360, 383.
Modern meth ds adopted in a city of, 263.
Chinese Quaker. Notice of Tong Sing Kow, a, 415.
Christ. Our bodies to be temples of, 3.
Evidences of the universality of the light of, 7.
The imperfect obedience to the teaching of, throughout Christendom, 53.
To obey, implies passivity, both in waiting and acting, 57.
speaking in men, 76.
The teachings of, before his appearance in the flesh, 81.

- ist. The blessedness of being under the law to, 81. Is the true antidote to war, 89, 113.
- On the expiatory offering of, on the cross, 97, 114, 129, 161, 353.
- On the blessedness of the religion of, 110.
- On the character of, 142, 158.
- On the light of, 193, 345.
- Was written as the "savings" of, 200.
- suffered much more, 239.
- The blessed effects of the cross of, 262.
- The Word nigh in the heart, 273.
- in the heart is the standard of morality, 281.
- A declaration of London Yearly Meeting in 1829 concerning, 283.
- the Teacher of teachers, 339.
- Faith in, professed by a Mohammedan Afghan, 416.
- A Key to thinking of, 401.
- Be obedient to, although unpopular, 412.
- ispirational. The imperishable nature of, 51.
- Car windows and, 395.
- ing, Lucy. An account of the life and Christian character of, 371.
- Christian science "congregations." Statistics of, 292.
- icizing and not helping. On, 411.
- uch. Remarks on Fairs and entertainments by the same, 299, 315, 323, 343, 369.
- A sect is not a 31.
- A, is not a social agent, but a religious institution, 32.
- The danger to the, from material prosperity, 108.
- On the operation of, in building his, 108.
- On mission in the, 109, 332.
- On a man-conducted, 121.
- The professing, responsible for the continuance of war, 126.
- The professing, in bondage to ceremonies, etc., 129.
- ments. Essentials of, defined, 152.
- A higher spirituality the reason-to-be of a separate, 205.
- On the prosperity of the, 207.
- The true work of a, is done by co-operation with Christ, 209, 263, 323.
- Protest against ecclesiastical supremacy in the, 209.
- A, putting lies into boys' mouths, 327.
- ock. The most accurate, in the world, 359.
- ristian. What a, is, 413.
- ristians. Are, true to name? 59.
- Testimony of the early, against war, 141.
- urchman, George. Brief mention of, 363.
- urchian frugality and moderation, 127.
- life may begin imperceptibly in youth, 196.
- experience. What, is, 327.
- uridge, Richard. Steps in the Christian experience of, 153.
- Remarks on, as sitting in time of prayer, 175.
- ored woman. Efficient service rendered by, to her own race, 75.
- Mental activity shown by a, 363.
- ored people. A critical period for the, in the United States, 240.
- A present call to Friends for service for the, 232.
- osed meeting-house. Narrative by James Bean, entitled, The 179.
- izens' Conference on the Bible principles of civil government, 336.
- omfort, John S. Brief mention of, 374.
- Come to stay? Remarks on combatting evil, entitled, 18.
- omposure. On Christian, 289.
- and, Rebecca. Brief mention of, 271.
- ong. Remarks on atrocities in, 39.
- ostaninople. Notes of a recent visit to, 366.
- omfort, A. Th. Remarks on prostration, entitled, At a more, 29.
- onversation. Bitter words in, to be repented of, 55.
- ope, Thomas P. Remarks of, on the passing of summer, 71.
- owperthwaite, Levi R. Dying testimony to the value of our "minor" testimonies, 88.
- omposition. Obedience in connection with, 345.
- omunity. On the real cause of blessing in the, 361.
- omunity of Modern Israelites. A set entitled, 343.
- ontentment. The riches of, 52.
- ooke, Jay. Anecdote of, 279.
- ope, Benjamin. Brief mention of, 58.
- onstantinople, C. Brief mention of, 248.
- otton, Priscilla. Dying advice of, to Friends, 262.
- otton. On making artificial, 94.
- Crimes. Increase of, on so-called holidays, 7.
- Intemperance leading to, 52.
- The efforts of churches against, urged, 160, 280.
- Statistics of, in South Carolina, 184.
- Crocodiles. Temptations likened to, 123.
- Cross of convalescence. Extract entitled, The, 92.
- Crosby, Fanny, the blind hymn writer, 232.
- Cruse of the "Arabic." The, 293, 298, 306, 314, 322.
- Cuba. Recent religious visit of Abram Fisher in, 263.
- Culture will not save the soul, 325.
- Days and Times. Essay entitled, 197.
- Day, Jane. Notice of the death and character of, 63.
- Dangerous ground in the high school, A, 165.
- Davison, James O., Governor of Wisconsin. Notice of, 280.
- Deaconesses. The demand for, 215.
- Deceitful "Sunday" newspaper. The, 90.
- Death. On preparing for, in this life, 170.
- Deaths.—Mary H. Applegate, 112; William Atkinson, 344; Eliza Foster Browning, 48; Alfred Brantingham, 54; John Bell, 64; Anna Bundy, 72; Henry Bacon, 112; Mary Eliza Ballinger, 136; Elizabeth Bowles, 144; Ann Eliza Bacon, 208; Hannah Boone, 224; William Betty, 226; William Branson, 229; Eleanor Burt, 239; John R. Bidle, Jr., 344; William Bundy, 360; Mary M. Bowerman, 368; Joshua T. Ballinger, 392; Anna Cooper, 48; Levi R. Cowperthwaite, 96; Rachel P. Cooper, 184; Sarah B. Coggeshall, 272; Lydia Beede Dillingham, 344; Hannah Patton Day, 390; Rowland J. Dotson, 368; Deborah D., Lydia S. Edgerton, 400.
- Assent H. Edgerton, 288; Isaac C. Evans, 344; Rachel H. French, 192; Sidney Garrigues, 280; Thomas Gilbert, 328; Emma J. Gibbins, 252; Emma J. Hadley, 40; Louis P. Hampton, 56; Hannah N. Harry, 120; Jane Harris, 168; Louisa Dewees Harworth, 184; Mary Ann Haines, 216; Mary E. Hunt, 236; Mary S. Hall, 364; Lyra T. Harvey, 312; So-anna Robins n Howland, 336; David Heston, 344; Margaret Jane Jenes, 47; John S. Kirk, 72; Elizabeth Kennard, 216; Henry Longstreth, 240; Truman C. Moore, 112; Sharpless Mercer, 120; Esther Masters, 120; Lydia L. Oliphant, 156; John P. Osler, 88; Mary M. Parker, 88; Joseph Taylor, 328; Rachel F. Parker, 242; Sarah Lightfoot Price, 272; Fadhia Patterson, 266; Hiram Roberts, 72; Bathsheba Ramsey, 88; Elizabeth Richardson Reeve, 256; John Ramsey, 312; Rebecca C. Rhoads, 352; Elizabeth B. Smith, 72; Mary Ellen Sharpless, 88; Joseph G. Stead, 184; Sarah A. Thayer, 204; Isaac Steves, 304; Anna Spencer, M. D., 344; Sarah D. Sears, 368; Alice Elizabeth Stratton, 400; Israel Steer, 416; Sidney Temple, 144; Joseph Taylor, 328; Mary Ann Temple, 368; Hannah Twichel, 406; Louis E. Webster, 32; Ann M. Way, 72; S. Abbott Warrington, 88; Henry Walter, 284; Hannah Whitney, 416; Elizabeth W. Young, 136; Mary J. Yeom, 339.
- Defalcations. On causes of, 176.
- Delay of God. Essay entitled, The, 411.
- De Marsillac John. Anecdotes of, 406.
- Dew. Essay entitled, The, 307.
- Dewees, Aaron. Notice of the labors of, at Tunes, 351, 367, 412.
- Funice. Brief mention of, 351, 412.
- Aaron, Jr. Brief mention of, 367.
- Miranda G. Brief mention of, 367.
- Diversion, wholesome and unwholesome. On, 252.
- Divine illumination. The effects of, on mankind, 10.
- pointings. On obeying, 79.
- On looking for, 87.
- Divorces. Remarks on, 263.
- Doukhobors. On the present condition of the, in Canada, 15, 148, 364.
- On the doctrinal soundness of the, 238.
- On school work done by the, in Canada, 364.
- Dean. A. Thomas Bundy, 187.
- Dress. The Scriptures teach plainness of, 13, 77.
- On the testimony of Friends in relation to, 17.
- On the temptations to girls from costly, 64.
- Religion manifested in, 71.
- On the bondage of women to fashion in, 80, 85, 351.
- The duty of women to discourage extravagance in, 171.
- Drinker, Edward. Reflections upon the life and death of, in 1782, 373.
- Drugs. The price of certain, likely to advance, 359.
- Dry store. Two million subscriptions in one, 22.
- Dwelling. Anecdote relating to, 414.
- Dying soul. On the attendance of religious meetings, entitled, The, 69.
- Eastlack, Sarah. Brief mention of, 262.
- Eating in olden times. Remarks on, 62.
- Eddystone lighthouse. Different notes and results in building the, 123.
- Edgar, Jacob. Brief mention of, 286.
- Edgerton, David. Notice of the family of, 183.
- Editorial.—The stars and stripes, 1; We have broken with our past, 1; The pedigree of Quakerism, 9, 17; Things happen in silence, 17; The itching ear as heard over churches, 33; The gift of shepherding without vocal preaching, 33; The persecution of Friends levelled, 41; Comments, 41; Small organization complete only in the Spirit, 57; A military reflexion on military life, 57; The energetic passivity, 57; Reading war news, 57; "A sensation-ridden people," 65; Who says "Hireling?" 73; Before Christ, 81; International Christianity, 89; The perpetuation of a Friends levelled, 90; On an ex-convict's conference meeting in Boston, 97; A monster not to be removed by ignoring it, 97; Peace to be maintained by weapons of warfare not carnal, 105; The work of Christ with Christ left out, 113; Shall the church get down to business or up to faithfulness, 121; Cleared for action, 129, 131; For profession with Friends, 137; The present-day turn of Christian interest, 137; "No message," 145; Notice of Friend's City Home, 153; Recruiting for the pulpit, 153; The courtesy of the Truth transcends the conventional, 153; Comments, 161; Informal religious education, 161; On the eradication of Christ, 61; Education by instruction, 161; Phrases and phrases, 169; The joy of the upper side, 169; Education as the enemy of war, 169; A public mind, 177; Comments, 185; Neglected meetings, 185; Offending one of these little ones, 193; Selected light, 193; Nations, Christian and pagan, 201; Co-operation, 209; The declension in the ministry, 217; Altruistic asceticism, 225; 146; saving and minding, 225; Rest in work and work in unrest, 233; Groping towards the light, 233; More Russian "Quakers," 241; Comments, 249; The Apostolic Succession, 249; A momentary victory and lifelong defeat, 249; Comments, 257; Remarks on a reform political party, 257; Denominationalism, 257; The doctrinal education of the Doukhobors, 258; "Burga urbem," 265; Small prayers be up to date, or up to heaven? 265; Coming up higher, 273; Hard of hearing, 273; These are the beginning of sorrows, 281; The standard of reform universally available, 281; Comments on the published list of names, Allen and Allen, B. H. B. 281; Composure, 283; Remarks on abstaining from certain indulgences during Lent, 287; On voting against conscience, 297; On the nature of a real revival in religion, 297; War not the antidote for war, 305; "Right Reverend (Blank), D. D.," 313; The cheap and the precious baptism, 313; Educating Indians, 313; Session of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting for 1905, 321, 323; The communion table of obedience, 345; What God hath joined, 353; Dispersed members, 353; The Harrisburg horror or the world-construction, 353; Japan and war, 353; Forms for the formalist, the Spirit for the spiritual, 353; The community and the poverty, 363; Shall the Yearly Meeting be 369; Leaders and pointers, 373; Public weddings, 385; On faithfulness, 393; Misplaced retirements, 393; The organization, 393; Notes, 401; A key to the thinking of Christ, 401; A doctrine no release from its life, 409.
- Educational Conferences among Friends. See, 349.
- Egypt. Bread found on, ascertains the date, 206.
- Extracts from a papyrus of, nearly 5000 years old, 276.
- Notes of a recent visit to, 322.
- Electric power. The growth of the, in the United States, 22.
- Elliott, John, the Indian missionary. Notice of, 55.
- Elkinton, Joseph S. On the character of the late, 361, 407, 415.
- Notice of the funeral of, 368.
- Joseph. Notice of the labors of, among Indians in New York, 91, 98, 114, 122, 130, 138, 147, 154, 162, 177, 186, 193, 202, 226, 254, 262, 278, 286, 310.
- Mary. Brief mention of, 270.
- Joseph, Jr. Notice of a proposed visit of, to Japan, 255, 270, 319, 382, 389.
- England. Causes of physical deterioration in, 94.
- Notice of the persecution of "passive resisters" in, 151, 191, 319, 391.
- Queen, Alexandra of, refused to attend horse races, 152.
- The cultivation of cotton promoted by, 222.
- Early newspapers in, 279.
- Temporary instruction adopted in, 204.

- England. A friend in, imprisoned under the Education Act, 319.
- Episcopalian. Notice of the Archbishop of Canterbury, 80.
publicly condemned by a bishop of, 408.
- Euthanasia treated, 163.
- Estangh, John and Elizabeth. A sketch of the life of, 260.
- Evans, Joel. Brief mention of, 226, 254, 262, 270, 278.
Thomas. Brief mention of, 186, 193, 202, 235, 286, 311.
William. Remarks of, on entering into and conducting business, 173.
On the blessings of a religious life, 189.
On the state of the Society of Friends, 259.
Elizabeth. Anecdote of the late, 406.
- Faith. Considerations on the life of, by Thos. C. Upham, 101.
The test of, a parable, 211.
to do, is the faith which saves, 339.
- Faithfulness. On learning, 44, 411.
is the law of an ascending church, 121.
in early rudiments the basis of the larger spiritual life, 60, 67, 72.
to the new life. Essay entitled, 315.
- Family. On the protection of the, 377.
- Fashion and death, 124.
- Fashions. On dangerous, 375.
- Fenelon. Extract from, 297.
- Forms for the formalist, the Spirit for the spiritual, 353.
- Football morality. Extract entitled, 264.
- Fiction. A little maid's view on the writing of, 175.
- Finland. Natives of, valuable immigrants in the United States, 39.
- Fisher, Hannah. Rodman. Journal of, in Philadelphia in 1793, 366.
- First day of the week. The deadening effect of newspaper reading, etc., during the, 90.
Movement to abandon rail road excursions on the, 157.
- Forest. On finding one's way out of a, 335.
- On planting a tree by a rail road for ties, 342.
- Forestry in Pennsylvania. The successful labors of Dr. J. T. Rothrock in, 127.
in the Southern Appalachian region. The need of, 319.
- Food. Medicinal value of certain articles of, 6.
The bread of the ancients, 6.
Method of quickly heating, 14.
Substitutes for meat as, 63.
Our, is purer than that of our ancestors, 279.
- Fothergill, Samuel. Brief mention of, 236.
A charge delivered by, 308, 317.
- Fox, George. Notice of attacks on the character of, 9, 17.
On the character of, by William Penn, 156.
The early life of, 166.
Notice of the will of, 215.
represented as a champion of liberty, 232.
Address of, from Derby prison, in 1650, 332.
Advice of, to a friend in civil office, 349.
- France. The habit of saving money encouraged in, 167.
One effect of closing the religious orders in, 207.
Light springing up in, 300.
- Friends. Religious communications addressed to, 38, 84, 100, 149, 197.
On the state of the Society of, 1, 7, 23, 33, 41, 51, 65, 90, 101, 117, 121, 145, 148, 161, 185, 191, 217, 259, 265, 311.
Account of the labors of, on behalf of the Indians (continued from Vol. LXXVII, p. 410), 2, 11, 20, 25, 33, 41, 49, 58, 66, 75, 83, 91, 98, 107, 114, 122, 130, 138, 147, 154, 162, 170, 177, 185, 193, 202, 209, 214, 226, 234, 246, 254, 262, 270, 278, 286, 295, 302, 310, 318, 326, 334, 341, 350, 358, 367, 374, 383, 390, 397, 406, 412.
Remarks on the above, 3.
On schools under the care of, 7.
The effect of the restoral system among, 7, 15, 23, 33, 90, 95, 103, 161, 304, 311, 217, 316.
On the origin of the Society of, 9, 17.
Notice of Brightlats meeting house of, England, 15.
The silent meetings of, 17, 223.
On the testimony of, to plainness of dress, 17, 330.
On the plain language as used by, 17, 118, 330.
The importance of having school teachers among, convinced of our principles, 18.
- Friends. Comments on the above, 58.
On a true revival in religion among, 38.
On singing in meetings for worship of, 41.
Notice of Philadelphia Quarterly Meetings of, 39, 143.
The mission of, yet unfulfilled, 43.
Appeal of the worship of, to intellectually estranged Christians, 45.
Notice of Lansdowne Monthly Meeting of, 47.
Comments on the above, 57.
The testimony of, against vain compliments, 51.
Comments on the above, 117.
Notice of proceedings of the Eastern Quarterly Meeting of North Carolina, 79, 379.
A debted testimony to the value of the so-called minor testimonies of, 88.
An ideal community composed of, 103.
and the negro population of Philadelphia, 109.
On the rise and progress of, by William Penn, 115.
On using the name of, by those who disregard the principles of, 121.
Address to all young, by one of themselves, 125.
Comments on the above, 146.
How a Welsh boy became a member among, 147.
The light of Christ the foundation of, 137.
On the joining of, with others, in benevolent associations, 137.
Business improvements originating with, 142.
Notice of Haverford Monthly Meeting of, 143, 191, 199.
The doctrine of, in regard to forgiveness of sin, 145.
On the views of, in regard to priests, preaching and ordinances, 145, 345.
The duty of protecting the children of, from improper associates, 146.
Remarks of the Chicago Evening Post on, declining to sell goods to the United States Navy Department, 149.
Reasons for not granting the use of meeting houses of, to others, 153.
Remarks of an American envoy in reference to, 158.
At Iowa, Yearly Minute of exercises of, 159.
The character of, at their rise, by William Penn, 164, 172, 180.
Notice of change in holding Frankford particular meeting, 175.
Account of a meeting of, in New Hampshire, now closed, 179.
The remedy for smaller or weaker meetings of, 185, 191.
Notice of publications on the early history of, 189.
Statistics of, 191, 215.
Notice of social gatherings of, 191.
Remarks on, entitled, A mutilated Query, 195.
Counsel to, on the observance of days and times, 197.
A meeting for worship of, in old time, 213, 349.
Notice of a change in the time of holding Chester Monthly Meeting, N. J., 215.
A sketch of the history of, in America, 1735 to 1779, 227, 228, 346.
Address by, of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, entitled, The Sacredness of Human Life, 229.
Comments on the above, 225.
Address of, in Bristol, Eng., against ecclesiastical supremacy, 231.
Remarks of, a stranger upon attending a meeting of, 234.
Notice of the exercises of, during the Revolutionary War, 236.
An address to young, by a young Friend, 246.
Remarks on a plain exterior among, 261, 330.
The testimony and advice to, by Priscilla Alden, 262.
Worship prearranged out of the meetings of, 265.
Notice of interviews of, with Presidents of the United States, 266, 351, 358.
Faithfulness of a woman, previous to the rise of, 275.
Notice of accommodations for, in Pasadena, Cal., 303.
The baptism which, own, 313.
A history of the adoption of a stated ministry in meetings under the name of, 316.
Notice of "Reading Circles" among," 319.
The consistent conduct of, makes way for them, 323.
On the character of the early, 330, 349, 354.
- Friends. The too frequent intercourse of, with other injurious to, 338.
Declarations respecting, by the late Ann Eliz. Bacon, 345, 355.
Evidences of love amongst, in 1692, 348.
Advice of Geo. Fox to, in civil office, 349.
Remarks on Educational Conferences among, 349.
The responsibility of, when dispersed abroad, 353.
On the rules of, relating to marriage and contracts, 377, 485.
Address to the isolated members of West Branch Monthly Meeting of, Iowa, 387.
On maintaining an organization by, instead of principles, 393.
The rejection of ceremonials by, no excuse for lack of spiritual life, 409.
Friends' City Home. Notice of, 153.
Report of management of, 158.
Historical Society. Notice of, 255.
Friends, Peace Association of. Notice of two essays republished by, 135.
Friends' Temperance Association, 341.
Friends' Institute. Report of, for 1904 and 1905, 367.
Friends' Home. On conducting, 377.
Funeral factory. Extract entitled, 104.
customs attacked, 203.
Freemasonry. The dangers and evils of, 370.
Furniture. How to take out bruises in, 222.
- Gambling on ocean steamers. On, 59.
Efforts in Siam to lessen, 304.
Generosity and corruption. Extract entitled, 403.
Geology. Notice of remains of the mammoth, &c., in Ohio, 38.
Getting along with people. Extract entitled, 210.
Gibraltar. A recent visit to, 294.
Gidley Eunice K. Account of, at the age of one hundred years, 69.
Notice of the death of, 175.
Girlard Stephen. Anecdote of, 302.
Gir and the stolen clock. A, 76.
Girl. A lesson to a, on meeting disappointments, 211.
a partner with her mother. A, 396.
A, being the truth, 399.
A, agreeable in company, 402.
Gladstone William E. Noble action of, in the Boer war, 110.
Glaisher John. Account of the life and ministry of, 61.
Glass. The invention of pressed, 38.
Glue. Principles for making, 214.
Go straight and keep steady. Extract entitled, 84.
Golden rule. Impressive popular recognition of the, 30.
Gordon Cynthia. Brief mention of, 278, 412.
Gospel the power of God unto salvation. The, 29.
Good woods from the valleys of Wales. The, 282.
Gough James of Ireland. Extracts from the Journals of, 26.
Grace. The aid of Divine, in everyday life, 221.
Grand President U. S. Anecdote of, 363.
Green Church. Notice of the, 24.
Green John F. and Herbert of Ireland. Notice of their recent death, 78.
Grindilla, a minister. Testimony of Thaxte Monthly Meeting concerning, 291.
Grubb George of Cork, Ireland. Notice of the recent death of, 335.
- Haddon Elizabeth. A sketch of the life of, 260.
Hair brushes. To stiffen the bristles of, 93.
Hale, Sir Matthew. Exemplary conduct of, 243.
Happiness comes from within, 210.
in labor. On, 303.
Harrison Joseph of Houtzdale, Pa. Brief autobiographical account of, 125.
Haste. He that believeth shall not make, 261.
The value of daily physical exercise. Essay entitled, 37.
Health. Medicinal value of certain foods, 6.
The discovery of the small-pox germ, 38.
Colors in wall paper affecting, 38.
The different effect of temperance and exercise upon, 87.
The case of a Japanese on a vegetarian diet, 87.
Physical deterioration in England, 94.
Removal of a criminal propensity by a surgical operation, 103.
The need of sleep to, 134.
The value of olive oil to, 206.
On the fear of taking cold, 206.
The value of daily physical exercise to, 221.
Sodium perborate, a new antiseptic, 222.
Bran water recommended instead of tea, 287.

- Health. The injury to, from beer drinking, 366, 375. The effects of high altitudes upon, 391. The habit of setting with one knee crossed harmful, 414.
- Heart sunshine. Extract entitled, 30.
- Hebrides. Brief account of the, 325.
- Helping others and telling about it, 10.
- Heroism of a woman nurse, 55.
- Hicks Elias. Remarks on the unsound doctrines of, 97. Infrances are often our best helps, 148.
- Hog Joseph. Remarks on the warning given by, to the United States, 34.
- Hon. George F. On the character of the late, 111.
- Hogeland Caroline. Brief mention of, 270.
- Holy Scriptures circulated among Japanese soldiers by permission of Japan, 55, 160, 231.
- On versions of the, in Scandinavia, 56.
- The, as a language maker, 82.
- The, as more widely circulated than any other book, 30.
- taken to Yakutsk in Eastern Siberia, 104. Given away as premiums, 111.
- The number of versions of, 143.
- A Syriac version of St. Matthew, 143.
- On rightly understanding the, 149, 177.
- In Arabic sold in Frankfort, 151.
- The improved version of the, in the American revised edition, 157, 263, 303.
- Distribution of the, in the Far East, 160.
- The injury done by casting doubts upon the authenticity of the, 193.
- The, carried free by post in Central America, 207.
- Very cheap editions of, in Japan, 223.
- A translation of the New Testament into Japanese, 223.
- The prevailing desire for the old version of the, 239.
- The reading of the gospels, commended by the Pope, 239, 387.
- The increasing influence for good of the, 268.
- Prizes offered by Helen Gould in reference to versions of, 303, 304.
- translated into two Chinese dialects, 327.
- printed in short hand, 335.
- Not he, but Christ is the Word of God, 369.
- Home. The comforts of, depend upon the inward disposition of its members, 111.
- A warning against the decadence of religious life in the, 112.
- The service in from the cheerful conversation of parents, 117.
- life. Rules for, 213.
- The order in a, which makes for comfort, 277.
- Honor shown to a parent, 347.
- Hoovee John, of Youghal. Brief account of, 199.
- Howell Arthur. Anecdotes of, 406.
- Hull Fildeman. Memorial of Creek Monthly Meeting concerning, 334.
- Hunt William of North Carolina. Brief mention of the ministry of, 231.
- Huster Christiana. Brief account of, 68.
- 'I can't, but Jesus can.' Heroism of a boy, entitled, 274.
- I fought, I can, I will. Extract entitled, 13.
- Icebergs. How, are formed, 20.
- Notes on, 63.
- Iceland. The first railroad in, 30.
- Idol of change. Essay entitled, The, 85.
- Image breaker. Extract entitled, The, 313.
- Immortality. The universal belief of mankind in, 351.
- Indictment of "Yellow Pulpitism." Extract entitled, An, 316.
- India. The number of distinct languages in, 207.
- Indian chief Little Turtle. Notice of, 2, 11, 20, 25.
- A prohibition speech by, in 1801, 339.
- Corr Hunter. Notice of, 20, 85, 114, 122, 130, 226, 341.
- Red Jacket. Notice of, 58, 66, 98, 107, 163.
- Black Snake. Notice of, 138, 178, 202.
- James Robinson. Notice of, 170, 186.
- Isaac Halltown. Brief mention of, 412.
- Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. Account of the labors of (continued from Vol. lxxvii, page 410), 2, 11, 20, 25, 33, 41, 49, 58, 66, 75, 83, 98, 107, 114, 122, 130, 138, 147, 154, 162, 170, 177, 186, 193, 202, 206, 219, 226, 234, 246, 254, 262, 270, 278, 286, 302, 310, 318, 326, 334, 341, 350, 358, 367, 374, 385, 396, 397, 406, 412.
- India. History of, and of two missionaries, 199.
- On the general treatment of the, in the United States, 303, 313.
- Delaware. Address of, to Friends in 1798, 25.
- Indians Creek. Address of, to Friends in 1802, 41.
- Onondaga in 1810. Notice of, 66.
- Demoralization of, by Wild West shows, 351.
- Stockbridge in 1826, 178.
- The mistaken policy of educating, to be soldiers, 213.
- Difficulty of translating into the language of the Micmacs, 351.
- Indian Territory. The need of laws to enforce prohibition in the, 181.
- A Gazetteer of the, 248.
- Infidelity. The unscientific character of, 225.
- The fruits of, 402.
- Infidel teaching refuted, 29.
- Infidels convinced of the Truth, 42, 68.
- Institute for Colored Youth. The opening of the, as a normal school, 92, 305.
- The objects of the, 109, 305.
- Annual report of the managers of the, 305.
- Intemperance. Notice of movements to lessen, 5, 29, 61, 86, 116, 118, 150, 181, 212, 244, 294, 366, 405.
- The effects of, in Germany, 5.
- The lesson of the Baltimore fire in regard to, 5.
- The need for local option to suppress, 6, 181, 212, 294.
- The right to use temperance instruction in schools, 29, 294.
- lessened at Treadwell island, Alaska, by a Y. M. C. Association, 47.
- The effect of, in enlarging the jails, pointed out, 62, 61, 244, 395.
- On the effect of the canteen upon soldiers and, 57, 86, 181, 182, 244, 340.
- The efforts of liquor sellers against prohibition, 61, 86, 118, 181, 212.
- The names of signers to liquor license applications may be published, 61.
- Local option law in Oregon, 61.
- Benefits of prohibition in Kansas, 61, 212.
- The beneficial effect of temperance instruction in schools, 61, 294.
- In condemnation of Bishop Potter's connection with the saloon, 61, 62, 86, 116.
- Positive orders not to enter a saloon, 77.
- Physical deterioration in England due to, 94.
- Remarks on prohibition in Maine, 96, 405.
- The danger of, resulting from certain patent medicines, 116.
- Remarks of President Roosevelt on prohibition, 118.
- Saloons not to be licensed in Barnesville, Ohio, 118.
- The danger of food seasoned with alcoholic drinks, 150.
- The Hepburn-Dolliver bill, 181, 212.
- Damages obtained from a brewery, 182.
- Eighty-five per cent. of whiskey in Pennsylvania adulterated with wood alcohol, 182.
- The price of a father, 188.
- Local option adopted in several States, 212, 244.
- Efforts used in Pennsylvania to defeat local option, 212, 244, 294, 340.
- Spreading by delivery of liquors by dry goods wagons, 287.
- On temperance instruction in England, 294.
- Action of the Emperor of Germany favorable to temperance, 295.
- The attitude of the saloon in politics, 340, 366.
- Action of the late Congress in reference to, 340.
- Statistics of life insurance companies affected by, 341.
- No man appointed to office in Indiana given to, 360.
- Statistics of the consumption of intoxicants, 366.
- The injury done by beer, 366.
- More beer, more whiskey, 366.
- A prohibition speech by an Indian chief in 1801, 339.
- The objections to license stated by the Governor of Missouri, 405.
- Advance steps in N. Carolina against, 405.
- Local option defeated by politicians in Penna., 405.
- Inward Light. Extract entitled, The, 342.
- "It is as it is." Essay entitled, 149.
- Irrigation. The largest work of, in America, 414.
- Items concerning the Society of, 7, 15, 23, 31, 39, 47, 63, 79, 88, 95, 102, 119, 127, 135, 143, 151, 159, 167, 175, 183, 191, 199, 207, 215, 223, 235, 263, 271, 279, 287, 295, 303, 311, 319, 327, 335, 368, 391, 407, 415.
- Items illustrative of the warning words in Habakkuk ii: 15, 116.
- Items from "The Converted Catholic," 290.
- I was in prison and ye visited me. Extract entitled 100.
- Japan. On the profession of Christianity in, 47, 63, 201, 233, 351.
- Notable medical discoveries made by natives of, 62.
- Remarks on the effects of the present war upon, 62.
- On the recent changes in religious views in, 63.
- The vegetarian diet of the people of, 87.
- Chemists in, prominent in research, 94.
- Sand and mud brought by children in, 174.
- On the alphabet used in, 183, 272.
- Compulsory school education adopted in, 312.
- On the claim of, to be a civilized nation, 336.
- A visit to, by Joseph Elkinton, 382, 389, 396.
- as a resort for tourists, 391.
- Japanese. Extract from a letter of a Christian, 230.
- Testimony of a, to gospel love, 373.
- Jews. Notice of the Zionist movement among, 15.
- The, of New York City, 326.
- Jerusalem. An Episcopal place of worship in, 223.
- Remarks on competing sects in, 223.
- Jones Edwin. Notice of the sudden death of, 31.
- Sarah. Brief account of the religious experience of, 50.
- Sybil. Remarks on the life of, 159.
- Anecdote of, 410.
- Jordan Richard. Anecdotes of, 282, 410.
- Justice. Remarks on Divine, impartial, 225.
- Kafirs. Greetings among the, 126.
- Kekela James, an Hawaiian missionary, 215.
- Kempis Thomas á. An aspiration of, 179.
- Kind. The duty of learning to be, 214.
- Kindness to animals. A plea for, 112.
- of speech incited, 188.
- Kindley Charles. The love of, for animals, 38.
- Kinsey John. Chief Justice of Pennsylvania. Brief mention of, 228.
- Koenig Xavier. Letter of, to a Friend in Philadelphia, 300.
- Korea. The difficult language of, 119.
- Progress in, towards Christianity, 320.
- Presbyterians and Methodists in, 7.
- The effects of war in, 111.
- Knowledge. Valuable possessed by the illiterate, 70.
- Kossuth Louis. Farewell warning of, to America, 185.
- Lady. A child's definition of, a, 68.
- Lake Mohonk Conference, 111, 387.
- Land of promise in sunshine and shadow. Essay entitled, The (continued from Vol. lxxviii, p. 413, 4, 11, 19, 27, 35, 43).
- Language. The testimony of Friends to the use of the plain Scriptural, 51, 117, 118.
- English, as an international, 303.
- Plea to maintain the purity of the English, 390.
- Lee Jesse, a Methodist minister, in the Revolutionary war, 375.
- Catharine. Brief mention of, 286.
- "Let thy voice betray thee," 343.
- Let thine eye be single. Extract entitled, 230.
- Letter of W. H. Gibson, Jr., to the Chas. L. Willets' trustees, 100.
- Letters from Dunkhober boys in Canada, 364.
- Lewis Enoch. Brief mention of, 171, 178, 186.
- Life. On the simple, 54.
- On the finishing of, 68.
- The freshness of human, often disregarded in court, etc., 225.
- Increase of hopefulness in, often received from others, 243.
- On momentary victory and life-long defeat in, 249.
- Life insurance. Total abstainers in connection with, 341.
- Lightfoot Francis. Brief mention of, 341.
- Lincoln Abraham. Kindness of, to a bird, 206.
- Treatment by, of a Quaker opposed to war, 306.
- Logan James. Brief mention of, 227.
- Logia. Remarks on newly discovered, 53.
- London. The establishment of a mission for "society" people in, proposed, 39.
- Notice of meeting in Hyde Park in, 80.
- Correspondence in, entitled "Do we believe," 247.
- Longstreth Henry. Brief notice of, 207.
- Losing faith when things go well, 70.
- Louisiana. The value of subterranean water, to, 30.
- Love of our brethren illustrated in 1692, 348.
- Low Thomas. Brief account of, 355.
- Lloyd Thomas. Deputy Governor of Pennsylvania. Lying testimony of, 158.

- Lusts of the flesh. The joy of living above the, 169.
Lukens Solomon and Susan. Brief mention of, 246, 254, 262.
Luxuries. The benefit of doing without, 251.
Lynchings in the United States, 96, 104, 131, 215, 303.
On an address by Friends on, 229.
- Malta. A brief visit to, 298, 307.
Man's tendency to degenerate. Evidences of, 276.
Macon's Captain Joshua L. On the gifts and character of the late, 41.
Madeira islands. A recent visit to the, 293.
Maple sugar. On the preparation of, 94.
Marshall Humphrey, the botanist. Brief mention of, 227.
Marriage relation. Remarks on the breaking of promises in the, 67.
Marriages. On the rules of Friends in reference to, 377, 385.
Allen E. Sharpless and Mary T. Willis, 16.
Samuel Roberts Matlack and Marian Webster Stokes, 88.
Henry Hartley and Margaret C. Williams, 120.
Frank Harmer Goodwin and Susan Sharpless Forsythe, 152.
Walter M. Cooper and Anna P. Blackburn, 376, 384.
Maxims of Jane Lathrop Stanford, 380.
Meeting-house. Friends' Market Street. Probable picture of the interior of, 322.
Mercy, not sacrifice, 313.
Message to the church at Ephesus. The 84.
Methodists. Statistics in reference to, 39.
Notice of Barbara Heck in connection with, 80.
On the unworship character of the early, 144.
In Montevideo, S. A., 223.
Methodists Independent. Notice of, 215.
Mexico. Notice of the cathedral in, 263.
Mickey Governor John H. of Nebraska. Testimony of, against card-playing, &c., 243.
Milk. Solidified, used for knife handles, &c., 28.
Minister. The consistent character of the, essential to success, 21.
Ministers. Names applied to, in the New Testament, 284.
Ministry. The itching ear, with reference to, 33, 309.
No theological training can equip a man for the Gospel, 36.
To enter upon, it is not necessary to leave business avocations, 41.
Comments upon a "hired," 73, 95.
The perpetuation of gospel, promised by Christ, 89.
Two conditions which stifle true, 90.
On the claim that a bad man may still be a rightful minister, 99.
The, of the early Friends, by William Penn, 115.
Remarks on studying for the, 153, 191.
The, now adopted in certain meetings under the name of Friends, 161, 191, 316.
The, of the Spirit, by William Penn, 164, 172, 180.
The declension in the, 217.
Salary counsel respecting the, by Samuel Rowles, 290.
An appeal to the, to come up higher, 273.
Observations of Lyman Abbott and others on the, 283.
Faithfulness of a Friend in the, 333.
On retiring a man-made, 393.
Modern prophets. Extract entitled, 293.
Modern nomenclature. Extract entitled, 372.
Mohammed. On the teachings of, 27.
Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, 275.
Monroe. Letter of President, to the Seneca Indians, 114.
Morality. The standard of, is that of the gospel, 211.
Mormon proselyters. The activity of, 111.
Mourning preachers expelled from Hungary, 215.
Morriss Samuel. Brief mention of, 286, 310, 341.
Mosquito. Successful methods of exterminating the, 31.
Mother-made man, A, 157.
Mott George W. Brief mention of, 350, 412.
Abigail B. Brief mention of, 350, 412.
Movement of ministering Friends, 31, 23, 63, 79, 88, 103, 119, 127, 135, 143, 151, 167, 175, 183, 191, 199, 207, 215, 223, 238, 245, 253, 255, 259, 263, 267, 271, 275, 279, 285, 291, 301, 309, 368, 391, 407.
Muller George. The work of faith by, continued, 80.
Murray Lindley. Brief mention of, 227.
Music. Instrumental in places of worship not allowed in parts of Scotland, 39.
Practical experience with, in places of worship, 123.
Is it not a mockery in worship? 240.
- Nantucket. On the decline of Friends in, 319.
Nation alive to religion, A, 218.
Nations. On the overruling of Providence in the affairs of, 101.
On professedly Christian, and pagan, 201.
Righteousness exalts, 355.
Natural History, &c. The names of fishes, 14; The horn-bill as a plasterer, 22; An elephant that sleeps standing, 23; The dislikes of animals, 54; How sea-birds get drink, 63; The robin that remembered, 77; A gigantic turtle, 78; A "Quaker parrot, 79; Orioles' nest building, 84; How animals swim, 94; The winter sleep of animals, 127; The gypsy moth, 134; Bird migration, 132; Oyster hatching, 214; Sea life at the Bermuda Islands, 333; Alaska dogs, 342.
Neighbors. On the duty of calling on, 287.
Negro. The character of the, 7.
On the lynchings of the, 104, 133.
New England. The influence of, depends on its Christianity, 319.
New Jersey. On the law in, for the protection of our pigeons and fowl, 131.
New York City. Statistics of one mission in, for the poor, 263, 351.
Large foreign element in, 383.
New York State. The Santononi quadrangle in, 6.
New Zealand. The influence of, depends on its Christianity, 319.
New Zealand. The great geyser in, 126.
Newspaper. Account of an Eighteenth Century, 373.
Niagara Falls. How two boys crossed, 397.
Non-essentials as guards of essentials, 330.
Norm Katherine. Brief account of, 381.
Notes. Extract entitled, 297.
Notes in general, 7, 15, 23, 31, 39, 47, 55, 63, 80, 96, 104, 111, 119, 127, 143, 151, 159, 167, 175, 183, 141, 199, 207, 215, 223, 231, 239, 247, 263, 271, 280, 287, 295, 303, 312, 319, 327, 335, 343, 351, 360, 375, 383, 391, 407, 416.
- Obedience. Incident in the life of Henry Havelock illustrating, 46.
In connection with spiritual communion, 345.
Oilley Daniel. Notice of the exercises of, during the yellow fever in 1793, 362.
Ogden Lind C. Brief account of the, 83, 154, 178, 318, 342, 413.
Old home-week reflections. Extract entitled, 111.
Omission. Extract entitled. The virtues of, 251.
Omnipotence of God. The, 130.
On the road to Wellville. Essay entitled, 221.
Only an hour. Account of a dying fashionable woman entitled, 124.
Opportunities. On making the proper use of, 18.
Optimist. The true, 222.
Orthodox Christian views. Statement of the Friends' Intelligence upon, 215.
Others before self. Extract entitled, 175.
Our inner life. Extract entitled, 12.
Out or in. Extract entitled, 276.
- Paint. To remove, 93, 398.
Palestine. Notice of different so called "holy" places in, 4, 12, 19, 27, 35, 43.
Tablets with cuneiform inscriptions found in, 293.
Notes of a recent visit to, 314, 322.
Panama canal. Facts relating to the, 94.
Papyrus plant. On the, 332.
Parents. Advice of S. L. Grubb to, 268.
Parrall James. Letter written by, in prison to Friends, 155.
Parker Alton B. Notice of Judge, 15.
Patient continuance in well doing, 213.
Patriotism. Mistaken public opinion respecting, 140.
Passmore of summer. The, by Thos. P. Cope, 71.
Passmore Rebecca G. Brief mention of, 262.
Pastoral monopolizing, 15, 35, 103.
Pastors. The effect of among Friends, 161.
Pastors in the limits of a Yearly Meeting in Iowa, 103.
Peace Congress. Notice of the late International, 7, 93, 97, 113, 119.
Echoes of the, 103.
Society and President Roosevelt, 215.
Proceedings of the Lake Mohonk Conference in reference to, 387.
Pearson Jane. Brief account of, 133.
- Peirce Jane. Anecdotes of, 410.
Penn William. Notice of a biography of, by A. C. Buell, 9, 17, 47.
Remarks of, on spiritual liberty, 50.
The doctrine of salvation stated by, 81.
A testimony of the Quarterly Meeting of Friends in Reading, Maryland, respecting, 95.
Account by, of the rise and principles of Friends, 115.
Remarks on the effect of the pacific treatment of Indians by, 135, 141.
On the character of George Fox, 156.
On the character and ministry of Friends in the beginning, 164, 172, 180.
On the public mind in, 177.
Fruits of the peaceful policy of, in Pennsylvania, 227.
Copy of a deed from Indians to, 312.
On the concern of, for right government in Philadelphia, 398.
Remarks of, on love, 395.
Pennsylvania. The origin of the name, 350.
Remarks on Slaves in, 375.
Perfunctory service, 71.
Personal influence. Extract entitled, 246.
Philadelphia. On a crusade against shameful vice in, 263, 265, 271, 295.
Account of the yellow fever in, in 1793, 361.
Comments of the municipal government of, 369.
Observations of Edward Drinker on the settlement of, 373.
Photograph used as a witness, A, 343.
Physicians. One consulting, at ninety years of age, 206.
Pim Abigail. Brief account of the religious character of, 3.
Joshua. Brief mention of, 119.
Place for everything. Extract entitled, A, 140.
Plants. Seedless apple trees, 38; The bamboo tree, 38; A rare orchid, 166; Noised American trees, 166; The eucalyptus, 214, 279; A cactus farm, 222; The Western Catalpa, 279; The papyrus, 332; A seedless apple, 414.
Poetry—Original. Secrets, 52; Through second to first, 68; war, 101; The sinners in Zion are afraid, 92; At the well, 106; The rainbow, 115; As they went, 117; At Jacobs' well, 129; An ever present helper, 239; Thirst for God, 351; Does thy brother stumbe? 379; The silent meeting, 387; As Jesus taught, 403.
Poetry—Selected. Aspiration, 124; Behold the kingdom of God is within you, 51; The better land, 92; The blossom, 221; Before it is too late, 323; Complete in Illinois, 371; Blessing of the sun, 412; Consolation, 420; Christ the Word, 246; A Christian's answer, 269; Divine love commemorated, 67; Do it to-day, 294; At eventide, 54; Growing old, 123; The gate of the year, 203; The gust of every day, 205, 396; The grave of Morgan, 370; The harvest moon, 27; A helpful touch, 109; Hope on, 150; An honest prayer, 268; Heights and depths, 318; He answers, 301; Invocation by Secretary John Hay, 302; The Indians' prayer, 349; In His care, 389; I cannot, yet I can, 390; Keep to the right, 20; Lines on Friends in Sandwich Mass., 23; Lines, 31, 37, 61, 78, 82, 111, 118, 125, 131, 133, 135, 139, 140, 147, 149, 350, 355, 351, 375, 405; Let us be patient, 148; Life (an unique poem), 380; To my dog Blanco, 40; My service, 96; My grandmamma, 140; Nothing without love, 75; Nothing between, 17; Praise for creation and Providence, 93; Per pacem ad lucem 131; A prayer, 255; The pilgrim's wants, 270; A quiet mind, 71; Shekims, 305; Shall we lower the bar, 290; A suggestion, 394; Sometimes, 395; The Truth, 99; To-day, if ye will hear his voice, 142; Take heart and go on, 188; They had been with Jesus, 242; Unto the end, 341; Voice from home, an incident of the Russo-Turkish war, 110; Vision, 382; Women and war, 213; Wings of a Dove, 222; The washerwoman's song, 251.
Points. A few, 282.
Popes. Notice of five contemporary, 119.
Postage stamps not legal tender, 102.
Varieties of, 335.
Potatoes. The manufacture of alcohol from, 22.
Population of the world could stand on the Isle of Porto Rico. Notice of a visit of Wm. C. Allen and Wm. R. Harvey to, 191, 207, 223, 238, 245, 253, 259, 267, 275, 285, 291, 301.
Remarks on the above, 281, 297.
Vidal Garcia. An itinerant preacher in, 296.
Increase of treatment, 296.
Prayer. On sitting in time of, 175.
Remarks of Thomas Story on the Lord's, 299.
Prayers. Brief but full, 165.

- Prayers. On the qualification for, 265.
On "canned," 384.
Presence of mind. Incidents of, in Friends, 71.
Preacher. Notice of Kehelband, a "boy," 24.
Preachers. Criticisms on, 55, 63, 95, 167, 177, 207.
291, 239, 282, 287.
Remarks upon a list of salaried, 119.
Remarks on popular, 143, 316.
The reward of, spiritual, 183.
A "trust" formed by, in Maine, 312.
The title of "Reverend" applied to, 313.
Preaching in New England. Observations on, 15.
Preaching the witness, 21, 377.
The true call and qualification for, 36.
Conveyed by telephones, 39.
The gift of sheepherding without vocal, 41.
By laymen encouraged by Edward Everett Hale, 54.
Under Divine anointing and that prompted by human passion, 65.
On rhythmic tones in, 257.
Uncion in, can not be imitated, 274.
Priest. Remarks on the word, 255.
Progressive revelation. Extract entitled, 27.
Promission speech by Little Turtle, A, 399.
Prohibition. The value of, depends upon the performance, 195.
Prophecy. On, by H. L. Hastings, 26.
Prosperity. On the true, 28.
Spiritual dangers attending, 70.
Promises. On gods and bad, 85.
Providence. On deliverance, 220.
Public opinion. The great influence of, 128.
On influencing, against war, 140.
Putting heart in it. Comments on employees, entitled, 60.
Presbyterians. On forms of prayer objected to by, 334.
Utty. How to soften, 214.
Pyle Abigail. Anecdote of, 410.
Quaint names, 327.
Quaker. On the use of the name, as a trade mark, 31, 79.
On the origin and use of the name, 79.
The name sometimes better understood than that of Friends, 143.
Quakers. Extract entitled. What the world owes to, 142.
Quakerism. The pedigree of, 9, 17.
The new, is old anti-Quakerism, 41.
And the scholar, 45.
Without testimonials, 117.
Defined, 201.
Race-courses, gambling, etc. Notice of efforts of Friends against, 266.
Race suicide. Observations on, 304.
Railroad. A huge bridge for the Cape to Cairo, 335.
Cultivation of timber by a, for ties, 342.
Railroads. Movement to abandon excursions by, on the First-day of the week, 157.
In reference to books sold on, 276.
Reading Mildred. Anecdotes of, 410.
Recal matter. Care exercised over, at news-stands, etc., 273.
Reaching the witness. Extract entitled, 31.
Real life, 271.
Realization of an ideal. Essay entitled, The, 74, 82.
Redemption of the gang spirit. Essay entitled, The, 131.
Reflections of a young woman at the age of seventeen years, 251.
Religion. On paid agents in, 99.
Close attention and obedience necessary in the work of, 100.
True, a friend to true science, 115.
Self-sacrifice an essential in, 119.
The nature of true, 127, 170.
The danger to, of speculation upon mysteries, etc., 135.
Distinguished from theology, 149.
The best proof of, is the life of its professors, 162.
On different phases in, 169.
Obedience to Divine requiring essential to, 263.
Statistics upon "revivals" in, 288.
A fasting season no part of, 296.
On a true revival in, 297, 303.
A powerful agent in preventing crime, 303.
Reasons assigned why a revival in, does not come, 391.
The new, having, 401.
The emptiness of a home without, 404.
On malpractice in, 411.
Rest in work and work in unrest, 233.
Restlessness. Widespread, 360.
Religious life. The blessing of a, 189.
Religious periodicals. Comments on different kinds of, 201.
Religious gatherings. Notice of out-of-door, 415.
Repentance. The need of, not sufficiently urged, 336.
Rhoads Charles. Testimony of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting concerning, 196, 204.
Selections from the journal of, 211, 220, 229, 237, 242, 250, 258, 266, 274.
Rhoads James E. Brief mention of, 311, 319.
Rhoads Rebecca G. Remarks on the recent death of, 327.
Robson Elizabeth. Brief mention of, 147.
Robert College, Constantinople. Brief account of, 247.
Robinson John. Counsel of, to the pilgrims at Leyden, 65.
Rodman Sarah. Account of the death of, from yellow fever in 1793, 361.
Roads. The success of oiled, in the Western States, 22.
Roof Elinh. Anecdote of, 63.
Roosevelt President and peace. On, 215, 216.
Practical advice by, 242.
Roman Catholics. Transubstantiation as held by, to be denounced by the ruler of England, 39.
Orders committed to in the imposition by, 78.
Proposed refutation of so-called errors by, 128.
A cathedral of, partly paid for by a lottery, 159.
The cost of canonizing a saint by, 160.
Late action of, against duelling, 167.
A bishop's robe dating back to 1288, 167.
Threatened separation among, in Austria, 167.
Remarks on the, as walking in but partial light, 192.
Workers of the, in Africa, Asia, etc., 215.
The reading of the gospels by, commended by the Pope, 239, 387.
Transubstantiation taught by, 290.
The worship of Mary taught by, 290.
Efforts of, in Wales, 343.
Ceremonies observed by, 351.
The Aglipay schism among, in the Philippines, 375.
Proposed ceremony respecting Pope Pius IX, 379.
Rowntree John Wilhelm. Notice of the death and character of, 287, 295.
Russia. Low rate of wages in, 78.
Lavish expenditures in places for worship in, 111.
Account of the late baptism of the son of the Czar of, 119.
Count Tolstoi on the true method of social improvements in, 191.
On, as a so-called Christian nation, 201.
Proposed emigration from, of so-called "Quakers," 241.
Statistics of dissenters from the Greek Church in, 351.
Russian Quakers in California. Account of the, 269, 310.
Sabbath. The Christian, 289.
Sacerdotalism disowned, 283.
Sacredness of Human Life. Remarks on, 225.
An address by Friends on, 229.
Saud. Bricks made of, 391.
Saturn. A new satellite of, 30.
Saving money. Plans adopted for, 163.
Scattergood Thomas. Brief mention of, 363.
Incident of the prophetic ministry of, 62, 260, 310.
Scattergood Joseph. Notice of the labors of among Indians, 286, 310, 319, 326, 341, 350, 367, 383.
School. The Institute for colored youth as a normal, 92, 109.
Schools. On the "Batavia experiment" in, 15.
The importance to Friends of teachers of, concerning of our principles, 18.
Comments on the above, 58.
Insanity produced by overworked labor in, 28.
The right to use temperance instruction in, 29.
The proper, for the education of farmers, 46.
On developing religious life in ordinary, 55.
On, for colored people in Philadelphia, 169.
The evils of secret societies among the youth in, 165.
Statistics in reference to First-day, 167.
On training colored persons for teachers of, 305.
On following the teaching of Christ in, 353.
Science and industry. Notes relating to, 6, 14, 22, 30, 38, 46, 54, 62, 70, 78, 83, 93, 102, 120, 134, 166, 174, 206, 214, 222, 279, 287, 319, 335, 342, 359, 391, 398, 414.
Schism. On, 109, 332.
Screw. To loosen a rusty, 214.
Scotton Robert. Brief mention of, 122, 139, 154, 177, 202, 269, 271, 310.
Sea life at the Bermuda Islands, 333.
Seaweed industry in N. England, A, 335.
St. Louis. Notice of a Bureau in, to supply reliable accommodations at hotels, etc., 96.
Sealed orders. On obeying, 219.
Sects enumerated as emphasers of special doctrines, 55.
Secret societies. The dangers of, 370.
Secret societies among students. The evils of, 165.
Select Society. On the continuance of the, 407.
Self-culture. On, 287.
Self-sacrifice, 175.
Selfishness. The subtle character of, 259, 395.
Sermons. Large prices for, 2.
though not remembered, were not lost, 142.
Sharpless Aaron. Brief mention of, 285.
Shilott Thomas. Concern of, on account of newspaper reading, etc. on First-day, 90.
Sheep. On shepherdling, 334.
On the history of, 414.
Silent retirement. The benefit of, 370.
Sins. Convictions for, a test of spirituality, 228.
Short talks from her home to heaven. Extract entitled, 4.
Short prayers for a long comfort. Extract entitled, A, 108.
Siam. Notice of American missionaries in, 215.
Silence. Discoveries made in, 223.
Simplicity the law of true intercourse, 85.
Simple life. Serving the Master is the law of the law, 169, 199.
A Jewish rabbi on, 183.
Simpson John. Brief mention of, 49.
Singing as a part of worship. Remarks on, 122, 123, 127, 407.
On empty unrealities, 185.
Remarks of Count Tolstoi against, 188.
Slavery. Brief notice of the efforts of Friends against, 236.
On the labors of John Woolman against, 346, 356.
Slighting work. Extract entitled, 44.
Slough of despond. Essay entitled, The, 52.
Slumbering sins. Remarks on paying debts entitled, 411.
Small people great examples, by Chas. Wagner, 347.
Smith, Sarah E. Brief mention of, 270.
Smith, Sarah T. Brief mention of, 390.
Socialism. The dangers of, 24.
Son of man. Essay entitled, The, 158.
Soul. On the human, as distinct from the mind and body, 198.
South America. Increased openness in, for missionary efforts, 239.
Spain. Bull fights no longer lawful in, 224.
A recent visit to, 223.
"Speak the truth in love," 166.
Speech. Four good rules about, 52.
Spencer, Jesse. Brief mention of, 202.
Spurgeon, Charles. The large sale of the sermons of the late, 232.
Stanford, Jane Lathrop. Maxims of the late, 380.
Stanton, Mary. Account of the illness and death of, 278.
Star Antares. The colossal size of the, 206.
Steeple-house. A, indeed, 240.
Story, Thomas. The bridged character of, 69, 118.
Notice of the abridged Journal of, 207.
Account by of a meeting for worship, 213.
On the Lord's prayer, 269.
Sturge, Sophia. Brief mention of, 7.
Suez canal. A new, proposed, 279.
Suicide. Christ as a reformer, in the spiritual realm, 199.
Suffering. The benefit of, in the spiritual realm, 199.
Sulphur. On the commercial sources of, 134.
Summary of Events. 16, 24, 32, 39, 48, 36, 64, 72, 80, 88, 96, 104, 112, 120, 128, 136, 144, 152, 160, 168, 176, 183, 192, 200, 208, 216, 224, 232, 240, 248, 2, 6, 264, 272, 280, 288, 296, 304, 312, 320, 328, 336, 343, 352, 360, 368, 376, 384, 392, 400, 408, 416.
Susquehanna River basin. On the, 414.
Swim. The importance of learning to, 70.
Temper. There are no governable, 250.
Temperance. Notice of movements to promote, 5, 29, 61, 86, 116, 118, 150, 181, 212, 244, 294, 340, 366.
The effects of, as compared with exercise, upon health, 87, 94.
Theatre. The demoralizing effects of the, 116, 300.
Religious meetings held in a, 207.

- Theatre. Testimony of Governor Mickley of Nebraska against the, 243. against the, be called safe? 300.
- Theatre-going for children. The special evils of, 37.
 Their worth while. The, 277.
- Thomas, Jonathan. Notice of the labors of, among Indians in New York State, 226.
- Thomas, Richard H., M. D. Notice of the death of, 163.
 Notice of a proposed biography of, 287.
- Thoughts. The government of the, 187, 389.
- Tibet. Missionaries ready to enter, 104.
- Tobacco. Physical deterioration in England due to, 94.
 Experience of Isaac W. Hampton in giving up the use of, 133.
 The use of cigarettes leads to crime, 134.
- Tolstoi, Count. Remarks of, against singing, 187.
 Advice of his mother to, when a boy, 374.
- Town without a religion. Extract entitled, A, 124.
- Toulimin, Amy. Extract from, on her religious views in later life, 171.
- Tract Association of Friends. Appeal on behalf of the, for aid in distributing tracts, 235.
- Treaty. The, with the Boers in South Africa, 166.
- Tree. The usefulness of the eucalyptus, 214.
- Trees. On the advantage of planting, by night, 14.
 On the change of color in leaves of, 257.
 Why we plant, 408.
- Trials. The shames of times our greatest mercies, 98.
- Trifles. Remarks on, 87.
- Trouble made beautiful, 131.
- True progress. Essay entitled, 24.
- True to principle. Anecdote of a young man, entitled, 302.
- Trusts. The real remedy for avaricious, 303.
 Turning to God from idols. Essay entitled, 221.
- Typewriter operator. Account of the first, 359.
- Tyranny of the less important things. The, 14.
- Unfinished wall. Remarks on faithfulness entitled, The, 333.
- Unhappiness. On the habit of, 15.
- Unitarians. On the unsound doctrines of, 97, 183.
- United States. Remarks on the flag of the, 1.
 Deaths and injuries from the observance of Independence Day in the, 15.
 The manufacture of postage stamps by the, 31.
 Warning to the, from the experience of former nations, 34.
 A prophecy respecting the, attributed to President Lincoln, 65.
 A sensation rider people in the, 65.
 Statistics of the population of, 78.
 Lynchings in the, 96, 104, 131.
 Statistics of immigration in the, 96.
 Care of letters addressed to the President of, 96.
 Remarks on Christian belief in the, 96.
 Boys employed in the postal service of the, 126.
 Remarks on the name of the, 175, 348.
 Farewell warning of Louis Kossuth to the, 185.
 Remarks on lessons of evangelistic meetings in, 191.
 The use of lofty titles in the, condemned, 195.
 On excluding the Chinese from the, 199.
 Statistics of homicides in, 224.
 The dangers to health on inauguration day in the, 235.
 A plan proposed to influence emigrants to, 375.
 On the recent death of six Senators of the, 383.
 On the increased cost of living in the, 391.
- University Extension lectures. Notice of, 152, 207.
- Vain compliments. Essay entitled, 51.
 Remarks on the above, 117.
- Valentine Thomazine. Brief mention of, 270, 286, 310, 367.
- Visit to Algeria. A, 348, 355, 364, 373, 379, 386, 394, 402.
- Visit to Japan. A, 332, 389, 396.
- Volcano. An erratic, 414.
- Wait for Him till you hear, then wait on Him. Extract entitled, 61.
- Wales. A present religious awakening in, 207, 215, 218, 223, 231, 233, 265, 271, 282, 297, 300.
- Wain Nicolas. Anecdotes of, 406.
- Walton, Joseph S. and Abigail. Brief mention of, 154.
- Wagner Chas. Remarks of, upon attending a Friends' meeting in Philadelphia, 95.
 Brief mention of, 119, 123, 183, 199, 300.
 Comments on The Simple Life, by, 129.
 Extracts from, 146, 205, 347.
 Extract from a farewell address of, 167.
- Wanted-prophets. Extract entitled, 101.
- War. The testimony of Friends against, 17.
 Righteous and not war the true defence of nations, 28.
- War. Testimony of President Adams on preventing, with Indians, 33.
 A promise of peace between Argentina and Chili, 55, 375.
 Remarks on the canteen in military camps, 67, 86, 181, 182.
 The reading of the daily news respecting, to be discontinued, 57.
 Remarks of Prof. H. van Dyke against, 66.
 Steps in the progress of nations to prevent, 74, 82, 93.
 The true antidote to, is the Spirit of Christ, 80, 105, 113.
 Notice of the Interparliamentary Union in favor of peace, 93.
 Notice of the International Peace Congress meeting at Boston, 93, 97, 113.
 The Spirit of Christ to prevail over all, 101.
 is to be ended by weapons that are not carnal, 105, 160.
 Sentiments of delegates to the recent Peace Congress in opposition to, 105, 111.
 notes, 110.
 Noble action of W. E. Gladstone in a Boer, 110.
 The churches of Christianity responsible for the continuance of, 120.
 a reversion to barbarism, 127.
 On the, between Russia and Japan, 127, 132, 159, 183, 201, 213, 281, 295, 303, 357.
 Some sinister results of, 132, 303.
 Notice of two publications against, recently published, 135.
 On influencing children in favor of, 140.
 is unwise under the Christian dispensation, 141.
 Testimony of General Miles against, 167.
 Intellectual education not a sufficient antidote to, 169.
 Expenses for, in Germany, 191.
 Inoculation of, through toys, 227.
 A child's way to prevent, 244.
 The wrong done by applauding destroyers of mankind, 263.
 A boy's argument against, effective, 286.
 Courage in, not a Christian or moral virtue, 287.
 War not the antidote for, 305.
 Testimony of a Quaker against, 306.
 Proposed movement against, in the interest of reforms in China, 325.
 Comments on the wrecking of a railroad train, in comparison with, 353.
 Testimony of Jesse Lee against, in 1780, 375.
 The devastation caused by the Boer, in South Africa, 376.
 Proceedings of the Lake Mohonk Conference in reference to, 387.
 Remarks on, entitled The warrior versus the saint, 390.
 Notice of remarks on arbitration by D. Estournelles de Constant, 407.
 Purification of, by ozone, 78.
 An inexpensive filter for, 87.
 Laws against the pollution of, 166.
- Washington, D. C. A boarding-house in, recommended, 135.
 Warning unheeded, A, 260.
 Watchman, what of the night. Essay entitled, 148.
 Watchfulness on self, 250.
 Wealth. Success hindered by, 322.
 Danger in, lest the Lord be forgotten, 325.
 On vast accumulations of, 375.
- Webster Daniel. Anecdote of, 59.
- Wells. Notice of the preservation of records of, at Washington, 102.
- Wesley John and Friends in Ireland, 26.
 When is a man poor? Extract entitled, 173.
 White Haven Sanitarium for poor consumptives. Appeal on behalf of, 152, 391.
- Whitehead Geo. Account of life and labors of, 349, 354.
- Whittier John C. On the character of, 173.
- Whitson Samuel and Rachel. Brief mention of, 270.
 Who built the subway? Extract entitled, 355.
- Wickedly preachers in England. Brief account of, 215.
 "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured again," 323.
- Wife. On cruelty to a, 47.
 A tribute to a good, 77.
 The neglected society of the, 283.
- Wilberforce William. Brief account of, 289.
- Willard Francis H. A native Alaskan missionary, 415.
- Williams Eleazar. Brief mention of, 178.
- Williams Roger. Proposal to rescind the order for the banishment of, in Mass., 55.
- Willis Charles L. trustees. Letter addressed to, from Liberia, 100.
- Wistar Thomas Jr. Notice of the labors of, among Indians, 255, 262, 278, 319, 341, 350, 358, 383.
- Wood John. Brief mention of, 262, 270, 286.
 Susanna L. Brief mention of, 262, 270.
 Henry. Brief mention of, 374, 383.
 H. Remarks of, on the death of a Friend, 297.
 Hannah F. Brief mention of, 383.
- Wood. How to clean polished, 214.
 How to darken oak, 222.
- Woolman John. The home of, in Mt. Holly, N. J., 209.
 Remarks of, on the desire for wealth, 257.
 Sketch of the life of, by Edith Barsley Bell, 236, 335.
 Abner and Abigail, 278, 286.
- Woman. Faithfulness of, a religious conviction, 277.
 the slayer of King Alcohol. Essay entitled, 311.
 The irreligious, 404.
 Notice of a, engaged in mining, 408.
 a master miner, 396.
- Women. The honest, of, 203.
 An Episcopal convention of, 271.
 On preaching by, 327.
 The dislike of, for housework, 398.
- Words. Mispronunciation of certain, due to laziness, 78.
- Work. If done always wasteful, 78.
 Workman. The wise, perfects himself in details, 87.
 Worldly conformity. On, by James W. Alexander, 3 pastimes. Testimony of Governor Mickley against, 243.
- Worship. The performance of, in silent meetings, 17, 33, 223, 313, 315.
 Testimony of Chas. Wagner respecting silent, 9.
 The duty of children to attend meetings, 11.
 Remarks on singing as a part of, 122.
 On organists and choirs in places of, 123.
 A meeting for, held by Friends in old time, 21.
 Remarks of a young woman of seventeen on silent, 251.
 pre-arranged out of meetings for, 265.
 Music in, as a mockery, 340.
- Worth Ebenezer. Notice of the labors of, among the Seneca Indians, 209, 219, 226, 234, 246, 270, 272, 286, 319, 326, 341, 358, 374, 383.
- Write. How to, 123.
 Writers. The efforts of great, to emancipate mankind, 92.
- Wright Asher and Laura M. Brief mention of, 41.
- Yarnall Peter, the minister. Brief mention of, 259.
- Yearly Meeting. Iowa, held at Earlham, 1904. Notice of proceedings of, 135.
 Minute of exercises of, 159.
 Iowa (larger body) 1904. Notice of, 191.
 London, 1904. Notice of a Chinese epistle to the women's 15.
 1829. A declaration of, 283.
 1905. Innovations upon the practices of Friends by, 311, 407.
 London, 1905. Notice of proceedings of, 31.
 New England, 1904. Remarks on, 7.
 North Carolina, of Conservative Friends, 1904. Notice of, 151, 159.
 Ohio, 1904. Notice of proceedings of, 127.
 Philadelphia. Account of the labors of the Indian Committee of (continued from vol. lxxvii, page 419), 2, 11, 20, 25, 41, 49, 58, 66, 75, 83, 91, 98, 107, 111, 122, 130, 138, 147, 154, 162, 170, 177, 183, 202, 209, 219, 226, 234, 246, 270, 282, 270, 273, 285, 295, 302, 310, 318, 324, 334, 339, 350, 358, 367, 374, 383, 393, 397, 406, 412.
 Notice of the first printed utterance of, Address of the Representative body entitled The Sacredness of Human Life, 223.
 Notice of the establishment of the Meet for Sufferings of, in 1796, 236.
 1905. Notice of proceedings of, 321, 327, 331.
 On the rules of, relating to marriage, 37.
- Yearly Meeting's correspondence. Extracts from, 73, 90, 135.
 On brevity of utterances in, 335.
 A Christian life may begin imperceptibly, 196.
 A seeking for light by the, and obedience to, 233.
 The benefit of spiritual retirement to, 370.
 The disillusionment of, 408.
- Zionism. Notice of Herzl the leader of, 15.
 Zion people demand attendence by, of religious meetings, 39.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 16, 1904.

No. 1.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Descriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

(South from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to
JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

The Stars and Stripes.

Our national emblem has its stripes which we become symbolic of bloody war, alternate with those of the white-winged dove of peace. Though our sins be marked as scarlet or of crimson dye, there is a cleansing which flows from Christ as their only hope of being made white as snow. Then over the purified expanse

Peace will come into dominion the stars in the blue heaven which now seem put into a corner. That the whole device is appropriate, our condition was unexpectedly opened to our view a few days since. May the blood-stripes be written out, or remain only as history, and the stars of light come into dominion.

Whether it was so intended or not by designers building more wisely than they knew, we were pleased that so much of space, if only a corner, seemed given, to a symbol and prophesy of the kingdom of heaven, and to those who turning many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever." May this feature, though now comparatively no bigger than a man's hand," practically so spread as to cover our political horizon.

The inspeaking word is gradually extending its dominion, as leaven to pervade the whole lump. While we have been hearing public speakers alleging any other explanation or ground of progress but that, we felt conscious that they were shy of any allusion to heavenly influence, for fear of an appearance of cant. So we hear of only dutifulness in labor, of high-ideals, of education in a way which seems to include pointings to the supernatural, of patriotism careful to discriminate between "my country right" and "my country wrong," of the play of higher minds upon lower minds, of laying for our country as the highest form of laying down our lives for country, of "for the people's sakes exalting ourselves," all echoes fainter or stronger of Christ the living and inworking word, subduing all things to himself. He alone can "redeem the flag." And no small part in this is ours, to whom peculiarly He has given "a banner to display because of the Truth."

WE HAVE BROKEN WITH OUR PAST, complains Richard Olney in the important address which he pronounced last week concerning that policy for our country which is rife among the people to-day in strong "contradiction to what Americans have professed to love and to have loudly boasted of in the past." Like language to his may be addressed to young truth-seekers not only in our principles of political action, but in the principles of our religious Society:—It is imperative that they should give them earnest consideration. It is for them to say whether there is to be a break with all our past which ought to be and is to be perpetuated; whether principles as embodied in constitutions and writings once deemed models of wisdom and inspirations to humanity, are now to be relegated to the limbo of antiquated superstitions; whether the flag [of our testimonies] shall symbolize the ideas and ideals of the standard-bearers who are identified with all that is most glorious in our past history, or shall stand for the theories of the new guides and teachers of the present hour. That a function so weighty in point of responsibility and so honorable by reason of that very responsibility will be satisfactorily discharged by our young truth-seekers who are determined to know only Christ and Him crucified, is not to be doubted. To these I may well close by commanding the wisdom of Lowell, who, being asked how long the American republic would last, answered (as we would answer for the Society of Friends) that it would last as "long as the principles of its founders were valued and acted upon."

The eternal is never past. Though the heavens and the earth may pass, Christ's words and the Word Christ shall never pass away. There is no breaking with the past where there is no breaking away from Christ. In Him is all of the past, present, or of the future there is for us.—"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today, and forever." George Fox said his mission was to bring us to the feet of Christ, and leave us there. In Christ is all of George Fox there is for us,—all of Barclay, all of Penn, all of Apollon, all of Cephas, all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge,—"all are yours;" therefore let no man glory in men, in the letter, in the history considered as temporal. "For the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal," and faith is the evidence of them. We are forbidden to glory in anything but Christ's cross, which is the lifting up and the victory of the spiritual over the carnal.

Lay hold, then, on the present eternal Life, in the true and holy witness for it speaking to our present condition, and "how shall not He who gave up his own Son for us all, freely give us all things?" In the Christ of to-day the past is secured, every permanent element perpetuated, there is no breaking with the unchangeable truth, and we best conserve all fore ordained truth by joining in with it as it passes our door, "manifest in these last days for us." George Fox is ours, Edward Burrough, Stephen Grellet, and a long line of standard bearers ours, only as we are Christ's. The one way not to break with all that is true in the past is to abide in Him.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The editorial of Sixth Month 18th, on "Christ the Refuge from Suicide," speaks of the life of love as a pure and happy life. Christ is within the hope of glory. Such a life invites us into life, into an earthly life of peace and joy in the Holy Spirit.

Coming down onto a very much lower plane to seek a check, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps (now a Ward) wittily says: "It is not good form to go where you are not invited." Following on, may we not query as to the actions that are more or less suicidal? Are not all habits, customs, passions and acts that break the well-known laws of health an undermining of vitality.

Again we find the imitation of Christ, the acceptance of his gift of the Holy Spirit, the way of the cross to be the antidote to all suicidal acts as well. It is the spirit of Christ that lays the ax on all these corrupt roots.

The good will be checked from indulging the least unjustified wish for the closing up the period of this life.

A dear friend when reduced very low physically and then further oppressed by a very sultry atmosphere, she felt that she could not live through another such day,—a voice sounded in her spiritual ear: "Thou art not going to die; thy mansion is not ready!" She then answered audibly, "Let me live, then, for on the other side I do not want to live around."

It is wise for us with watchfulness and prayer to seek to fill out the full measure of our day in obedience and love.

H.

Large Prices for Sermons.

Probably the highest sum ever paid for a sermon goes each year to a German preacher, who receives three thousand six hundred dollars for his effort. In 1630 a wealthy French baron named Favart, who lived in Elberfeld, died and bequeathed his money to the Protestant church there, on the condition that it should be invested and the interest given annually to some clergyman, chosen haphazard from those holding the poorest living in the see, on condition that he preach a short sermon extolling the good deeds of the dead baron. It is generally delivered on the first First-day in Sixth Month, and being of only a half hour's duration, is paid for at the rate of one hundred and twenty dollars a minute.

Each year the sum of one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars for a sermon of ten minutes' duration is paid for what is known as the "golden sermon," which may be preached in any church edifice within a radius of six miles of Haberdashers' Hall, London. Many years ago a man named William Jones died and left a large sum of money to the Haberdashers' company, stipulating that the interest was to be given to the preacher of the best sermon within the radius mentioned. As this was a somewhat difficult matter for the company to decide it was determined to distribute seven hundred and fifty dollars among the clergymen of the East End and pay the remainder of the two thousand dollars which was the annual interest, to the preacher of the "golden sermon." This discourse is never preached twice in the same church building.

Large prices are paid for other sermons. Each year on the anniversary of Queen Victoria's accession to the throne, a sermon is delivered in Durham Cathedral, which must not be more than a quarter of an hour in duration. For this the preacher receives eighty dollars. There is nothing to show how the custom originated.

Many have heard of the "lion" thanksgiving sermon, which is preached in a fashionable building in London each year. In the seventeenth century Sir John Sayer, then Lord Mayor of London, had a miraculous escape from being killed by a lion during a journey in the Far East. On his return he ordered that a thanksgiving sermon should be preached each year, and set aside a sum of money, the interest on which was to be given to the poor of the parish, while the preacher retained what he considered a fair price for the sermon. In "St. Giles's Church," in the same city, a sermon is preached each year in memory of Charles Langley. The church is filled with poor people, and among the congregation the sum of four thousand two hundred dollars in clothes and money is afterward distributed. The clergyman receives ten dollars, and each of the church wardens two dollars and fifty cents.

WHAT the world calls high places seem low in Christ's sight, and the lowly places, as men rate them, are the places that are highest in heaven's view.

THERE are two freedoms—the false, where a man is free to do what he likes; the true, where a man is free to do what he ought.
—Chas. Kingsley.

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 410, vol. lxxviii.)

In the Eleventh Month of the same year [1798], the Committee had an interview with Blue Jacket and Red Pole, chiefs of the Shawnees, and two other Western Indians, with their interpreters, for which, with a present made to them, the minutes state, "they expressed much gratitude, and mentioned that the kindness they had received from friends of this city was very cordial and that they would be willing to requite the same, should any of our people go into their country. The Sachem also informed our said friends that the President had recommended the Indians to attend to the voice of the Quakers who were peaceable people and friends of the Indians."

A few weeks later a company of thirty-seven Indians, Chiefs of Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks and Cherokees were in the city; with a number of whom the Committee held a conference in the Fourth Street Meeting house, located on Fourth Street, below Chestnut Street. It was taken down in 1859. The Wm. Forrest Building stands upon its site. This interview appears to have been an interesting and satisfactory one, in which the principles of religion on several subjects as held by Friends were brought into view. The replies made by several of the Indians to what was said to them are referred to in the minutes, from which the following is taken. Conoskeske, or Col. Watts, a Cherokee chief expressed "his great satisfaction at what he had heard, saying he remembered to have heard of such a people a few years ago after some of his nation had been here, which account remained with him an uncertainty till now, he was a witness of its reality and that the sentiments and advices imparted at the interviews with us, were such as he had never heard before; they had sunk deep into his heart and he wished to have some books that might be communicated to his people by those that could read, and also that such instruction as they had here received, might be more extensively spread in their nation by personal visits from some of our people [pretty general information having been given to the Indians that if any Friends came among them, from religious motives, they would have certificates of the unity of their brethren therein, to prevent imposition]. He remarked particularly on the counsel imparted, not to revenge injuries, and gave repeated assurances that though he had received advice of one or two of his people being killed, he was determined not to retaliate, but to adhere to peace, concluding with strong expressions of regard to Friends, and of his fixed purpose to follow their advice. One of the Choctaws in a speech of considerable length expressed their satisfaction with the conference, observing that their disposition was to be always peaceable, and their wish to live in harmony with the United States, etc."

"At one of the aforementioned interviews, the speech delivered by Swanhausen, an ancient chief of the Creeks appears worthy of noting, being in substance as follows:

"I am an old man, yet have travelled much this year to promote peace, went many hundred miles to the Treaty on the frontiers of Georgia, held by the Commissioner of the United States and of the State of Georgia, with my nation, where several matters were adjusted to my satisfaction—I then returned home, but after a short time came by invitation to this city to make the chain of friendship still brighter. On my way, and since coming here, I have met with nothing unpleasant, nor do I regret all the toil and fatigue of my journeys to establish a firm peace. I believe the good Spirit above made both white men and red men, but suppose that it is because we are red men that the white men often impose upon us and try to get our land, which we do not want to part with.

"Brothers, I am glad to find there is a people who love peace, and give such good advice to red men. I was a stranger to you till since my coming here, you kindly took notice of me—A few days since one of your women delivered a talk which I have hid deep in my heart; I never heard such a one before; I want to tell it to my nation after I get home, and for fear I should forget some of it, would like to have it in print that it may be fully explained to them.

"You desire us to follow farming and raising grain and cattle, but we are so poor we cannot buy the needful utensils; you mention having sent a plow, some hoes, etc., to my nation; I never saw a plow amongst any of our people nor do I expect ever to see any of those things you have sent, as they are gone by water, and I live so far back and so many want them who live nearer.

"We have very few hoes, what few we get is from Pensacola, where I sometimes go, but they are very dear; I think we must be imposed on in the price of them and other articles, as I see them in the hands of almost all the poorer white people as I come along."

Early after the appointment of the Committee the plan of taking Indian children into the families of Friends for the purpose of educating them in the ways of civilized life under religious influences was considered, and from time to time, homes were found both for boy and girls.

The report to the Yearly Meeting in 1799 mentioned that two boys of the Creek Nation had been placed with a Friend in Bucks Co. In that year several individuals of the Oneida Stockbridge and Tuscarora tribes desired that some of their daughters should be placed in the families of Friends in order for their better education, and in compliance with this request Henry Simmons, who had previously resided among them, accompanied by Joseph Clark, made a journey to the Oneida Reservation and brought to the city four girls of the Stockbridge, and two of the Tuscarora tribes who were placed with Friends in Chester Co. At suitable opportunities three of these girls were returned to their homes, in company with persons from their own neighborhoods in the Indian country. The other three remain with Friends until 1801. Joseph Clark the undertook the journey of accompanying them to their home in New York. In an account of this journey he says, "On my arrival at Stockbridge and delivering up the girls, I could discover no less joy manifested by the whole nation, than by their parents." A council was called in which he states, "I informed them at it was neither curiosity, ease nor interest, at induced me to leave my habitation; but at their children whom they delivered to me our years ago, might be safely returned to them, with their qualifications and improvements. And as the great and good Spirit had reserved them from various evils, so I hoped they would continue to do well; with more to at import."

*A communication from our friend Martha Routh here alluded to.

Through an interpreter they replied as follows: "Brother, attend. We rejoice to see you come by the side of our fire-place; and at our girls have been preserved from various dangers; also, that you have been preserved while walking all along the long path; and we know that all you do is out of love to our poor Indians."

Each girl had a Bible and other religious books, in which they could read; also, a spinning wheel, with abundance of clothes of their own making.

In the early part of 1798, Little Turtle, a celebrated chief of the Miami Indians came to Philadelphia, and brought with him a letter of introduction to Owen Biddle, one of the Committee. From Gen'l James Wilkinson, which contains some passages well worthy of preservation as the testimony of a man who had large experience in the matters of which he writes. He says:

"Although I have lived many years in the habits of warfare with the red people of the United States, my heart has not forgotten to compassionate their condition, even in the most gloomy scenes—for alas, they in all their wars have been but the deluded instruments of ambitious and interested white men.

"My late intercourse with the various tribes and nations from this neighborhood to Lake Superior, convinces me that the cruelties of the savages are derived from those who style themselves Christians; because the further removed from communication with the white people, the more honest, temperate and industrious I have found them.

"When we contemplate the fortunes of the aborigines of this, our country, the bosom of philanthropy must heave with sorrow, and our sympathy be strongly excited. What would it be to that man or that community merit, who claims the untutored Indian, opens his mind to sources of happiness unknown, and makes him useful to society? since it would be in vain to save a whole race from extinction, unless, if this people are not brought to depend for subsistence on their fields instead of their forests, and to realize ideas of distinct property, it will be found impossible to correct their present habits, and the seeds of their extinction already sown, must be matured.

"The bearer of this letter, the Miami's chief, the Little Turtle, who is at once the most distinguished warrior and the ablest councillor among the Indian nations, is forcibly impressed with these truths, and is anxious to co-operate in a fair experiment on his tribe. It is with this view particularly that I introduce him to you, in the hope that you may think proper to recommend him to the patronage of the benevolent society of which you are a member.

"The experiments heretofore made to reform the Indian character, have not been well adapted to the object. Our missionaries have in general, been narrow minded, ignorant, idle or interested, and have paid more regard to forms than principles. The education of individuals at our schools, have served only to disgrace us, as those individuals have generally turned out the most profligate of the nation to which they belonged. Speaking once to George White Eyes, who was, I believe, educated at Prince Town, respecting the incorrigible attachment of the Indians to savage life, he replied to me, "It is natural we should follow the footsteps of our fathers, and when you white people undertake to divert us from this path, you learn us to eat, drink, dress, read and write like yourselves, and then you turn us loose to beg, starve or seek our native forests without alternative, and outlawed your society, we curse you for the feelings you have taught us, and resort to excess that we may forget them."—How lamentable this, and yet how just. For my part, my dear brother, could I be made instrumental in any way to ameliorate the condition of these people and to lay the foundation of their permanent prosperity, it would be more acceptable to me than the most distinguished triumph of arms. A great source of my present happiness is the conviction that I have deserved and enjoy the confidence and the friendship of the Indians northwest of the Ohio."

(To be continued.)

Selected For "THE FRIEND."

Abigail Pim.

Abigail Pim was born on the 28th of the First Month, 1767, in Dublin; but upon the removal of her parents, John and Sarah Pim, to the neighborhood of London, she while yet a child, was brought with them. Her early years were marked by weakness of constitution, to which the vigor of her mental faculties formed a striking contrast; and even then, in the morning of life, she was religiously inclined, giving proof of her preference for that which is "enduring substance." As she advanced towards maturity, it appears, from some of her memoranda, that she was not without much painful conflict of soul, under which there is reason to believe that she was enabled, through the efficacy of Divine grace, to experience an increase of faith, and an advancement in the Christian course. At a further period she apprehended herself called to the work of the ministry, in which she came forth in the twenty-ninth year of her age; being then as for some time previously, and during the remainder of her life, a member of the Peel Monthly Meeting, in London.

Her ministry was clear, sound, and often in gospel authority instructively argumentative. She was frequently concerned to recommend an attention to the gentle intimations of the Spirit of Truth, without an undue expectation of very forcible impressions; believing, as she would in substance express, that "the still voice," in the secret of the soul, if hearkened unto in the daily occurrences of life, and amidst the temptations to which mankind are exposed, would not fail to conduct in the path of safety.

Besides her services at home, she was engaged, in the exercise of her gift as a minister to pay several visits within the limits of her own and of adjacent Quarterly Meetings; and after the decease in 1812, of her infirm, aged mother, to whom she had long been an affectionately attentive companion, she also performed religious visits to the meetings, and in several places to the families of Friends in Ireland.

"In advertising to the services of this our Friend, whose memory is dear to many amongst us," say the Friends of her own Monthly Meeting, "we ought not to omit her labors jointly with several others of her sex, in diffusing scriptural instruction, and awakening religious feeling among the female prisoners in the principal jail of the metropolis; a work well befitting a minister of the gospel of Him who came to call all sinners to repentance."

About fifteen months before her decease, her constitution betrayed increased symptoms of decay; and she was during this period, mostly confined to the house. Her long illness, although paroxysms of pain were frequent, was endured with exemplary resignation, accompanied not only with serenity, but at times, with cheerfulness of mind. Her love to her friends had increased with advancing years; and as the infirmities of nature had become more obvious, the influence of Divine grace was also more conspicuous. Her spirit, it may be truly said, was borne up above her bodily suffering; her intellectual power remained with unclouded brightness; and she continued to manifest a lively interest in whatever related to the prosperity of the cause of Truth. Of the secret exercises of her mind, she was not much in the practice of speaking to others; but to an intimate friend she mentioned, a short time before her decease, after alluding to the awfulness of death, that she had been tried with many fears, lest she should not be sufficiently purified to meet this solemn event; but that of late, these fears had been removed. And two days before the close of life, she said, speaking to her brother, "My mind is preserved in perfect calmness."

She very quietly expired, on the nineteenth of the Twelfth Month, 1821, at her house in Spencer street, Clerkenwell.

THE BODY AND THE SPIRIT.—It was a great mistake when spiritual people thought that God was honored by neglecting the body. It will be an equally great mistake if in these athletic days the idea prevails that if we developed the body we may neglect spiritual things. Our bodies are to be the temples of the Spirit of Christ. For that honor they cannot be too strong, nor too perfect in proportions. For that Guest our bodies must be kept sweet and pure. But Christ in us is more than a guest; He is a power, and we are living temples to show forth him who dwells in us; showing his light in our faces; speaking his words with our lips; lifting the fallen with his strength; walking with unwearied feet in his way; taking into all business, religious, and social life a feeling and an influence of strength that is always used for righteousness and helpfulness. Strength always used for truth is the ideal of true manhood.—J. M. Hull.

A SPEAKER—possibly more verbose than practical—was urging upon his group of hearers the duty of doing good and "opening the door to every heart with the key of kindness."

"Some of those doors are locked on the other side," muttered one of the listeners.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Land of Promise in Sunshine and Shadow.

BY MATHIAS DENKHAUS, A FRIEND OF THE FRIENDS.

(Continued from page 413, vol. lxxvii.)

Supposing that my details have not yet worn off the interest of the reader, we take a step back to the "Church of the Holy Sepulchre." This is a massive edifice within the walls, a mansion in the rock, whether natural or artificial, I know not. Light is chiefly supplied through the globe-like glass roof. It has no seats, but different apartments, in perhaps all of which is either an invented biblical relic, monument or sacred spot. The crown and glory of this church is the supposed Holy Sepulchre of Jesus. There is further to be seen the stone to the sepulchre, the place where God took the earth to create Adam, etc. Only a few years ago in digging in the back yard of the building, perhaps for a cistern, the holy cross (?) was found! Numerous other such inventions and traditions are imposed upon the people and readily believed, that is, by the thousands of pilgrims that come there every year. However, the climax is reached in the holy fire, that descends from heaven regularly every Easter afternoon into the holy sepulchre!

And it was their forefathers or predecessors in faith, who were talking about and working for "taking the holy land away from the heathen!" The venerable missionary, Samuel Gobat, who died as royal English-German Bishop in 1879, asked the bishop of that church, how he, an educated man, could allow such blasphemy and abomination; to which the latter replied, "If we did not, the Turks would choke our throats right quick." He had reference to the heavy taxes to the government.

There are represented in Jerusalem the different Catholic Churches, such as the Roman Catholic, called Latin; the Greek, including Russian orthodox; the Armenian or Gregorian and the Coptic or Abyssinian Christians. All these, except the Russians, have part in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, which on the much celebrated Easter Day is giving rise to serious trouble almost every year. Fight and tumult are regularly expected, on which account the Turkish government is keeping an extra company of soldiers in readiness, who in case of such emergency must employ all their energy to bring what they consider the Christians, to peaceful terms one with another.

The clock in this building gives the Arabic, that is, oriental time. Our seven is their one, and so forth. They are eight hours ahead of Ohio standard.

It remains to be said, that according to scientific explorations the so-called Church of the Holy Sepulchre is entirely out of place. From the very beginning a dream of Empress Helena, wife of Constantine the Great, was needed to credit the supposition that here was the sacred spot, where Jesus died and slept. We know from different scriptural and historical sources, that criminals, among whom Jesus was reckoned, were executed outside the walls. Even the fact, that the present wall does not take the course of the ancient wall, cannot justify the belief, that is held or at least alleged to be held by the Catholic Church. There are but few sites to which we can point with certainty, that here or there, this or that recorded historical event took place. How can there be any accurate tradition on such matters, when we consider that the Jews were for several centuries forbidden to settle on their native soil, while the Christians were so severely persecuted, that it was impossible for them to remain at home.

Protestants believe that there has been discovered the true Golgotha by that well-known Christian gentleman, General Gordon. This hill is located just east of the Damascus gate, and bears all the features of the Calvary of the Bible; also the hewn cave near by. (John xix: 42). However, our people do not own, nor endeavor to buy that hill, for the reason, that they do not intend to make capital out of it. And the Catholic Churches dare not revoke.

Proceeding eastward from the wall and going past Calvary with its open Arabic graveyard we come to the Latin Gethsemane. The Greeks have another. It seems likely though, that the former are right. The garden is enclosed by a stone wall with sufficient spaces, filled out by substantial wire netting, to give the garden even from outside by its many flowers an inviting appearance. Here are seen all the different memorial stations of the passion of the Saviour from Gethsemane to Calvary.

Still further, about a mile east of the city lies the Mt. of Olives with a Latin church edifice and a tower of recent date, from which a view over both seas, the Dead and the Mediterranean, was expected. The undertaking proved a failure, for the former is seen from Olivet any way while a view to the latter could not be reached. There is also a Latin church at the foot of Mt. of Olives, where the tomb of the virgin Mary is shown. The south part of the Olivet is known as Mt. of Offence. From this mount it was, where Jesus, coming from Jericho by way of Bethphage (Matth. xx: 29 and ch. xxi: 1), in the midst of a loud outbreak of praise on the part of His followers, beheld the city with weeping and sealed His ministry to Jerusalem by expressing the innermost of His great soul in such moving words of imperishable sympathy, as can come from a Divine Saviour's breast only. (Luke xix: 41-44). Bethphage, which is from Olivet as plainly seen toward the southeast, as Jerusalem toward the west, has one dwelling house and a new but inside unfinished church building, which was used by that fellach (farmer) as a granary. The path leads further out to the road from Jerusalem via Bethany to Jericho, the Dead Sea and the Jordan. Southeast of the foot of Mt. of Olives is the valley of Jehoshaphat (Joel iii: 2-12-14 and Zach. xiv: 1-5). The valley is covered with Jewish tomb stones having Hebrew inscriptions, a great many of which have become illegible by great age.

(To be continued.)

DANGER IN PROMOTION.—Promotion is often dangerous. Many a man who while living in obscurity and humble position lived unselfishly and walked with God, has become proud, vain, and selfish through promotion. His rise was a grievous fall. The honors of the world robbed him of the honor which cometh from God.

INDEED our cities show side by side the most heavenly deeds of Christian charity and the foulest iniquities of the pit.

Short Ladder from Her House to Heaven.

Over in New York a certain great house hired a new boy. In the multitude of clerks he was lost, unrecognized by his chief. In the middle of the afternoon it was his duty to stand beside the head of the house and place check and important documents for a rapid signature. He did this work with such skill and such exquisite manners that suddenly his employer looked up and recognized a new face.

"How long have you been here?"
 "Two weeks, sir."
 "How old are you?"
 "Fourteen, Mr. ———."
 "How much are you receiving?"
 "Three dollars."
 "Do you live at home?"
 "No, Mr. ———."
 "Is your mother living?"
 "No, Mr. ———, she died when I was three years old."

"Does your father do nothing for you?"
 "No sir."
 "With whom do you live?"
 "My teacher."
 "Do you mean your teacher in the public schools?"
 "I do, sir."
 "Three dollars a week will not support you."
 "Have you had any extra expenses this week besides car fares?"
 "I had a dentist's bill last week."
 "How much was it?"
 "Fifteen dollars. I am paying it off a dollar a week."

Just a few colors and strokes of the brush and lo, the artist paints the angel and the seraph. Very few the strokes you see a little child left an orphan at three, we see another woman coming into the home and counting it stepchild a burden. We see a man making himself unworthy, casting a little child into a great world. Then we see a school teacher interested in this boy, who must drop his classes, and then, opening her slender store she makes a home for this child, puts his feet on the first round of the golden ladder, teaches him by night. Somewhere in this city she is a heroine. I know not her name. She abid in our midst, and she lends glory to this city. Ten men like Abraham could have saved Sodom and ten women like this could civilize—Brooklyn and New York.

Oh, these old maid school teachers! They whole world would fall to pieces but for them! I sometimes think that they are the bolts that keep the machinery of society together. They are a lofty hilltop somewhere in this city, at the summit thereof is a little house, where this teacher lives with this orphan boy. He will take a very short ladder to reach from his house to God's heaven. Some day this boy will climb to greatness and position, if on health is vouchsafed him. But his honors will be hers.—Dwight D. Hillis.

THE faith of immortality depends on a sense of it begotten, not on an argument for it concluded.—Bushnell.

To exceed the righteousness of the Pharisees, our righteousness must go deeper than the outside, higher than the earth, further than men's opinion of us. (Matt. v: 20)

TEMPERANCE.

The matter under this heading is furnished THE FRIEND on behalf of the "Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia," by Benjamin F. Whitson, 401 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

There is nothing we cannot overcome: not life's evil instinct is inherited, that some trait unborn makes thy whole life forlorn, and calls down punishment that is not merited. Of thy parents and grandparents lies the Great Eternal Will. That, too, is thine heritage; strong, beautiful, divine: the lever of success for one who tries.
—ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

When you find yourself along side of another man being, settle it in your mind that you study the correspondence, the agreement, the enities, rather than the antagonisms and differences between you two. The whole code of good manners, not to say Christian behavior, is found in this one precept—Francis E. Willard.

THE DOLLIVER-HEPBURN BILL.—Congress journeyed before passing this highly important measure. There is every reason to believe however that it will be passed next winter upon the reconvening of Congress.

There is one saloon in Philadelphia to about every eight hundred people. Some saloons make profits as high as $30,000 to $50,000 annually, according to the Philadelphia Press, which advocates an increase in the license to $500.

Ravelli County, Montana, in the very heart of the Rocky Mountains, with a population of 10,000, has voted the saloon out by a majority of one hundred and eighteen.

Graham County, Texas, is a dry county, and the commissioners are trying to rent the jail as a corn crib. In another dry county the jail is rented for a dwelling.

The report of the inspectors of the Eastern Maryland Penitentiary for 1903 shows that the four hundred and thirty-three prisoners committed during the year three hundred and thirty-seven used intoxicating drinks, one hundred and thirty-three moderately and two hundred and thirty-four immoderately. There were twenty-six abstainers. To the drink habit do one hundred and ninety attribute their committing crime.

Of two thousand nine hundred and thirty-six inmates in the New York city almshouse, two thousand seven hundred and twenty-nine were committed for destitution, mainly due to drink, says J. W. Keller, president of the department of public charities in that city.

The Wilmington, Delaware, grand jury, says in a recent report, that eighty per cent. of the cases examined can be traced to saloons.

Under the Illinois law, persons injured in property or person through the act of a drunk-man, may receive damages from those who sold the liquor causing intoxication.

Nearly eighty towns and villages of Illinois declared against license on Fourth Month 19th, 1904.

Pasadena, Cal., a no-license city of sixteen thousand population, had only thirty-eight arrests last year. Stockton, a city of seventeen thousand, with plenty of saloons, had one thousand seven hundred and four arrests.

With the enforcement of the prohibitory law in Hutchinson, Kansas, there has been a reduction in two years of the cost of criminal cases from $5,000 to $500.

All the liquor organizations in Ohio have been united to protect the trade and to fight the Anti-Saloon League.

Ohio has nearly 900 dry townships out of over one thousand three hundred, and four hundred and thirty dry municipalities out of seven hundred and sixty-four. Indiana has five hundred and fifty-two dry townships out of nine hundred and seventy-five, of which one hundred and fifty-six have been made dry under the Nicholson law.

Cambridge, Ohio, a city of more than twelve thousand, which two years ago voted the saloon out, has recently reaffirmed her position as a dry city in another election under the Beall law.

The National drink bill for 1903 was $1,242,943, 118.

It is claimed that not enough gold has been produced in California in fifty years to pay the American drink bill for sixteen months.

Pneumonia kills seventy per cent. of its alcoholic victims, and but twenty-eight per cent. of its non-drinkers.

The wide open policy prevailing at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, is bearing fruit in a long list of crimes and debaucheries.

The Supreme Court of North Carolina has decided that as liquor "being regarded as an evil and an enemy to civilization, the restrictions imposed upon the saloons are not oppressive."

The Duluth & Iron Range Railroad is added to the long list of roads that forbid their employes to enter a saloon under penalty of discharge.

The New Voice of Fifth Month 12th, says a million men operating on two hundred thousand miles of railroad, are pledged to total abstinence as one of the tests of service.

The Civic League Record, of Liverpool, says that one-third of the saloons in that city have been closed and police expenses have been reduced $40,000 annually.

"The Germans spend $750,000,000 a year in drink, twice the amount of the army and navy budgets, and one hundred and eighty thousand persons are brought before the courts through drink. The number of criminals is increasing by ten thousand annually and the number of convicted persons has increased from two hundred and sixty-nine thousand two hundred and forty-nine in 1882 to four hundred and seventy-eight thousand one hundred and thirty-nine in 1899. In the insane asylums intemperance furnishes thirty per cent. of the inmates and eighty per cent. of Germany's idiots are the children of intemperate people. The loss to industry through excessive drinking is incalculable."—Count Douglas in the German Diet.

In the United States thirty million people are living under prohibition and multiplied hundreds of temperance hotels are flourishing in these districts.

The last saloon may not go this year, or next, or possibly in a decade, but the necessity is before us of conserving our energies, of centralizing our endeavors, of striking no blow that does not count effectively in the contest.

In this connection, it is proper to say that no one church or denomination can solve the liquor problem alone, and no church or denomination as such can assume the functions of going into the Legislature, or the courts, or the political arena to drive out the saloon. The church or denomination, however, may properly and effectively unite with others in choosing a joint agency to represent them in a well-planned and wisely-directed campaign against this organized iniquity, which by virtue of its protection by the law, has become the greatest foe of the church in our day.—Anti-Saloon League.

THE LESSON OF THE BALTIMORE FIRE.—That was a significant occurrence during the Baltimore fire, when for a week the police compelled every saloon in the city to close its doors. What greater testimonial could have been given to the harm of the saloon? Of all the myriad business interests in that great metropolis of the South, only the saloon was signalled out as an institution of danger in those distressing times. If the saloon cannot be tolerated in times of calamity, why mar the times of peace and prosperity by authorizing its existence?

It is significant also that by the action of the police, the responsibility of the public for the saloon was emphasized. The fact is the people simply tolerate the saloon up to a certain point and time, beyond which everybody demands prohibition. Is it not the height of folly to wait until the saloon has done its worst, before stamping it out? Better not tolerate it at all.—Keystone Citizen.

THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE having been instrumental in effecting splendid results in the interests of temperance and saloon abolishment in most of the States in the Union, has at last entered Pennsylvania and has inaugurated a vigorous campaign for law enforcement and for "local option." S. Edgar Nicholson, formerly of Indiana but now residing at Harrisburg, and a member of Baltimore Yearly Meeting of Friends, has been appointed Superintendent of the Pennsylvania branch of the League. He has had long and extensive experience in the work in several States, and is Secretary of the National Anti-Saloon League.

He thus outlines their work, inviting the co-operation of all who are willing to assist. He says:

"Fading Republicans and Democrats and party Prohibitionists, in large and influential numbers, who, while thinking differently on a variety of governmental questions, think alike on the temperance question, just as we find Presbyterians, and Methodists, and Lutherans, and Baptists, and many others, who, thinking differently on the logical matters, think alike on the temperance problem, we undertake to organize all these varied interests of all parties and of all churches, into one centralized force, where according to League plans, the efforts of all, so far as there is unity, may be combined in one mighty movement against the saloon. In other words, the League has endeavored to provide a basis of operation from which the influence of every man and woman who is against the saloon, may be utilized to the very last limit."

He asserts that Pennsylvania is behind most of the States in the matter of temperance reform, and that the liquor interests are planning to make it more and more difficult for the people to improve conditions. It is evident, he says, that Local Option will not become the law of Pennsylvania without a determined struggle. The problem will become one largely of the superiority of organization and management, and whether or not the burden of this needed legislation is going to lay heavily upon the heart and conscience of our Christian people.

WHY HAVE LOCAL OPTION?

1. It embodies the just principle of home rule on a question of tremendous importance to every community.
2. Under the Brooks law, the people have no rights whatever that give them any authority on the liquor question.
3. The people now have the privilege of protest, but after that has been made, the case passes beyond their jurisdiction, and is left solely to the option of the courts, whose jurisdiction even is curtailed by the mandates of the law.
4. That the people, by every right known in government, should be the final authority in determining the sale of liquor in their jurisdiction, is a statement that will hardly be combated except by those whose personal interests in the business are at stake.
5. There are numerous counties and communities in the State where the overwhelming public sentiment is against the saloon, and yet the saloon exists in spite of the popular protest and against the public wish, because there is no statute to give them relief.

TAKE THE BEST YOU CAN GET.—Those temperance people who unerringly local option, where it is an advance step, should note that local option in a great State, by adding city to city and county to county may become equal to State prohibition in a smaller State. The persistent local option battles in Massachusetts cities, notably Cambridge, and Quincy, and Brockton, have helped prohibition everywhere. Town prohibition, county prohibition, State prohibition by statute, State constitutional prohibition, national prohibition, are, respectively, good, better, best, and best of all. But, while we work for the best of all, let us get as much as possible of the good, both because it is good, and because it will help us to get the best.—W. F. Crafts.

Science and Industry.

Dunn's index shows that at no time since the beginning of the boom, one year excepted, has the cost of living at this season been so high as it is now. The rise from the low point of 1897 has been more than 40 per cent.

MEDICINAL VALUE OF FOOD PRODUCTS.—Some physical culturists claim that a vegetarian and fruit diet produces an excellent complexion. However true that may be it is certain that in the food products of earth and tree are many whose medicinal value cannot be too highly estimated.

For instance, spinach and dandelion are good for kidney troubles; celery is good for those suffering from rheumatism, neuralgia, disease of the nerves and nervous dyspepsia; lettuce and cucumbers cool the system, and the former is good for insomnia.

To produce perspiration and relieve the system of impurities try asparagus.

Tomatoes contain vegetable calomel and are good for liver troubles, and strawberries make for a good complexion.

There is nothing, medicinally speaking, so useful in cases of nervous prostration as the humble onion. It is almost the best nerve tonic, and may be used in coughs, colds and influenza; in consumption, scurvy, hydrophobia, gravel and kindred diseases.

White onions overcome sleeplessness, while red ones are an excellent diuretic. Eaten every day, they soon have a whitening effect upon the complexion.

For malaria and erysipelas nothing is better than cranberries, while juice of blackberries is useful in all cases of diarrhea.

Lemon juice, with sugar and the beaten white of egg, may be used to relieve hoarseness.

Figs are valuable as a food to those suffering with sluggish system, and pie-plant is excellent for purifying the blood.

THE BREAD OF THE ANCIENTS.—Loaves of bread thousands of years old have recently furnished an interesting study to scientists abroad. Professors Brahm and Buchwald have analyzed a number of specimens found in Egyptian tombs, and Dr. Lindet has examined some old Roman bread dating back before the Christian era.

The Egyptian bread was more than thirty-five hundred years old, but was still recognized as a cereal product prepared by baking. Nay, microscopic inspection showed that the starch grains still retained their peculiar structure, while dead yeast cells were plainly discernible. The grain of which the bread was composed was emmer, which is related to our modern wheat.

These ancient Egyptian loaves had the appearance of being charred as if by fire—a circumstance due to slow oxidation by the atmosphere, going on through thousands of years. It was ascertained by experiment that the same effect could be produced upon new bread by exposing it for forty-eight hours to a temperature of 220° Fahrenheit. In this case the process was one of combustion.

The yeast employed in making the ancient loaves was probably of the same kind as Israelites in the days of the great Pharaoh the Oppressor used, calling it "leaven." It was what is known nowadays as a wild yeast, its germs or spores being afloat everywhere in the air. A bit of dough was preserved of each batch prepared for the ovens; when this was added to the next dough, yeast contained in it quickly spread throughout the whole, only a little being required to leaven the whole lump. But when the people of Israel were wandering in the Wilderness they did not always have yeast handy, and were obliged to eat unleavened bread.

The best examples of old Roman bread have been found at Pompeii, which, it will be remembered, was destroyed by an eruption of Vesuvius in the year 79 A. D. Forty-eight loaves were dug out of one bakeshop. The specimens markedly resembled those taken from the Egyptian tombs, and were originally composed of ground barley.

The ancient cliff-dwellers of our own southwest raised Indian corn and made their bread of it. Once in a while a loaf of it is discovered in one of their deserted houses; speculation is naturally indulged as to the degree of its antiquity. Perhaps it is a hundred or five hundred years old. In the extremely dry climate it has not decayed. Saturday Evening Post.

MAP OF SANTANONI (N. Y.) QUADRANGLE.—It is not often that the coloring on a topographic map made by the United States Geological Survey of an eastern area is restricted to brown and blue, the tints used respectively for mountains and hills and for lakes and streams. There is usually a liberal sprinkling of black on the face of every sheet, to indicate the presence of houses, roads and other works of man. But on the map of the Santanoni quadrangle (New York), recently published by the Survey, there are no cultural features worth mentioning, and the black was required for little else than lettering topographical features of the map. One club house and two private houses are only evidences of man's activity that appear on the sheet. The region is uninhabited except by the native denizens of the mountain forests and the occasional visitors who come to hunt and trap them.

This quadrangle covers about 220 square miles of the most picturesque country in the East. It lies in the heart of the Adirondack Mountains and is inaccessible to the tourist except from the South over the only wagon road represented on the map—a road about 30 miles long. No post-office is shown on the sheet as the nearest one, Tehawes, lies about 10 miles south of the southern edge of the quadrangle. Scenery is the one great star feature of this map, but it is sufficient to make the sheet one of the finest ever published by the Survey.

One of the most conspicuous features of the scenery is Santanoni Peak, which holds the center of the topographic stage, and towers 4621 feet above the sea level and six hundred of lofty feet above the surrounding peaks, contrives to give its name to the w trangle. It is supported by an imposing pany, consisting of Seward Mountain, Seyr Mountain, Street Mountain, Wallace Mountain, Calamity Mountain, Mount Adams, Amersand Mountain, which are respectively 4404, 4120, 4216, 3860, 3641, 3584, 3365 feet above sea level. Even the mon level of this exalted region averages at 1700 feet above the top of the ocean. Perhaps the most striking feature of the is the southeast cheek of Wallace Mountain, which is the greatest cliff in the Adirack region—a perpendicular wall of granitic sheer and straight 1355 feet above celebrated Indian pass at its foot. Near point, in Wallace Ponds, the Hudson proper has its secluded beginnings.

The Universal Light of Christ.

to eat and to drink and to be warm and fortable and to be able to spend our days casting and merriment were the only pss of our minds, "we should all be what lowest of us all are at this day."

is, then, a wise instinct, if nothing high-which has furnished every nation that has rged from barbarism a maxim almost identical with the Golden Rule. The Persians, the ese, the Old and New Testament, the an, and every people and every religion some form of that precept which has exsed the humanity and the wisdom of the ole and which has served as a touchstone a guide for their wisest and best. And wise the great sense of the intelligent peo-to-day is that "in every well-regulated y there is at least a general coincidence ven the path of duty and the path of perity.

ishonesty, selfishness, falseness, sensual-disregard for the rights of others will ultiy bring their own punishment, either in the law and public opinion or from their ence on the conscience and the peace and racter of the individual; and Bishop But-maintained a tenable thesis when he de-d that even in this "bad world" there moral government, and that the inevitable ue of vice is to lead to misery and of ue to lead to happiness and blessedness.

is the conclusion of the ages, and for e who are seeking for some general rule anction upon which this line of conduct is e based, the rule has been as well stated, aps, as by any one else, in the quaint lan-ge of William Penn, the founder of this onwealth:

There is a great God and Power, that made the world and all things therein. hom you and I and all people owe their g and well-being, and to whom you and I t one day give an account for all that we do this world. This great God hath writ- His law in our hearts, by which we are ght and commanded to love and help and ood to one another, and not to do harm mischief unto one another." — Public per.

It is a poor investment to buy a moment's at the expense of untold manliness."

NE of the purest and most refined pleas- in this world is that of doing good.— ry.

Items Concerning the Society.

"My remembrance," says George Cadbury, "of those of those admitted into our Society forty or fifty years ago, is that they applied for membership not because they were believers in Quaker principles, but because these advantages were held out to them, and instead of being a source of strength to our church, they were only a source of weakness, and their children, though educated at our schools, did not become Friends."

Speaking of Friends' Education by schools, Godfrey J. Williams, in the London Friend, says: "At present the standard of efficiency is everywhere rising, and each school is independently developing its own resources. The consequent increase of fees is slowly placing the education at our boarding-schools beyond the means of many Friends, and the numbers have to be recruited from outsiders. We trust that light may soon dawn on the problem of how to provide an education under Quaker influence suited to the requirements of all classes of our members."

An "impartial onlooker" writing in the Northern Whig, Ireland, has come to the conclusion that there is no ground for anticipating the decay of Quakerism despite "the obliteration of many country congregations, and the steady outflow of wealthy members to the Anglican communion." This loss he traces to two causes: first, to the national tendency to drift to urban centres; and secondly, to "the broader and more liberal view which Quakerism itself inculcates—to its own loss it must be admitted." To its own loss of what? We suppose he means "of numbers." For true Quakerism inculcates nothing to the loss of itself. And it inculcates "the broader and more liberal view" than what view, or whose views? We suppose, than the view of those who do not inculcate the immediate operation of the universal and saving light of Christ in the heart.

THE FAILURE OF UNFRIENDLY METHODS FOR FRIENDS' MEETINGS.—Some thirty years ago the determination to meet a popular need by modifying out of existence the meetings based on silence took hold of certain leading preachers among Friends in the Middle West [of America]. To-day the religious movement they set going, which still bears our name, is a spent force. The roll of membership even, which follows the actual facts at some distance of time, is diminishing year by year in the pastoral Yearly Meetings. But sensationalism that is unsuccessful has lost its whole raison d'être, and is in pitiable case. And the steady-going, persistent Quakerism it supplanted has been separated off, or is scattered and discouraged, not able to act. We may be sure that every feature in this objectless would be repeated in English. Meantime America has a chance of not forgetting Quaker truth, through its retention in Philadelphia and Baltimore, in the smaller bodies throughout the West, and in the six Yearly Meetings whose forefathers were lost to us in 1827.

Said the Providence Journal: "The gathering of the Friends from all parts of New England does not present in these days the picturesque spectacle that it once did. Some still have pleasant memories of the quiet companies of Quaker women, in their soft drab gowns, with white lace or linen at the throat. Peacefully they looked out from the depths of their 'plain' bonnets. And the men, in their straight-collared coats and broad-brimmed hats, which they doffed not to mortal man or sacred edifice, but only in homage to God or to suit their own convenience. The peculiar dress of the sect has nearly disappeared, and they will appear this year simply as quiet citizens from rural New England.

"The Yearly Meeting was held continuously in Newport for two hundred years or more until 1876, the only exception being during the Revolution, when the British held Newport. Then they met at Smithfield, in northern Rhode Island. Since 1876 the meeting has been held alternately at Newport and at Portland, Me., until this year, when it is to be held at Friends' School in this city. At first the meetings were held in the homes of prominent Newport Friends. When Roger Williams rowed his boat all the way to Newport in order to argue certain questions with George Fox, and found that Fox had left the city, he was invited to meet other Friends in Governor Bull's house, which served as Friends' meeting-house at that time. Governor William Coddington entertained the meeting at his roomy mansion for more than fifteen years, till his death, in 1688. The present meeting-house was built about the year 1700. The Friends seem to have held the Governor's chair in Rhode Island for at least half the time till the Revolution, when their prestige was thoroughly broken by their opposition to the war."

Notes in General.

Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, lately characterized the Bible as the greatest book in the world.

On account of the terrible disaster with the General Slocum the First-day school and other excursions are said to be given up by New York people.

John Bancroft Davis, writing as "An observer of the East of Asia," states that only two denominations have gained a foothold in Korea; these are the Presbyterians and Methodists, between whom there is perfect harmony.

Speaking on "The Coming of the Light" C. F. Dole says: "The impression everywhere grows of the moral order of the universe. There is hardly a doubter or agnostic who does not believe in some form in this majestic moral order."

Joseph Cross, of Lawrence, Mass., who is believed to be the oldest living Congregationalist minister, as he is the oldest living graduate of Harvard College, has recently celebrated his ninety-seventh birthday. He was ordained seventy years ago.

An editorial in the Independent says: "More crimes are committed for pleasure than for all other causes combined. Every police court has more than double duty after a holiday, even a religious one. The devil does most of his business out of office hours."

The Christian Register endeavors to portray no selfish heaven, saying: "The heart of an honest Christian grows too big with the possible salvation of his neighbors to be willing to sit down in a golden city, to rejoice forever over his achieved personal salvation."

Says the New York Evening Post: "Let us not condemn either the white or the black race for the deeds of its exceptionally fendish members; and let us bear in mind the part which newspaper partiality and lack of the proportion in the treatment of such crimes has in doing a practical injustice to the colored race."

Joseph Sturge's daughter Sophia, of Birmingham, England, is among those coming to attend the great Peace Congress in Boston. It was Joseph Sturge who, in Boston, in 1841, first proposed an International Peace Congress. Sophia Sturge has special schemes on her own part in behalf of peace to present to the workers there. Dr. Yamei Kin, the scholarly Chinese woman now in this country, will probably speak for China.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The Democratic National Convention lately sitting in St. Louis adopted a platform of principles in which by the influence as is said of William J. Bryan no mention was made of the views of the Convention in regard to the maintenance of a gold standard. The Convention agreed upon the first ballot to nominate Judge Alton B. Parker, of Esopus, New York, as the candidate of the Democratic party for the Presidency. Upon learning of this action Judge Parker sent a message to the Convention in which he expressed his approval of the gold standard, and that if his views did not meet with the endorsement of the Convention, he asked the withdrawal of his name. Upon this the Convention practically adopted his views, formally assuring him that the gold standard was firmly and irrevocably established. The Convention afterwards nominated H. G. Davis of West Virginia as its candidate for the Vice-Presidency. He is eighty-one years old.

Among other declarations of the Convention are the following: We demand the extermination of polygamy within the jurisdiction of the United States and the complete separation of Church and State in political affairs. We favor the withdrawal of the Senators by the direct vote of the people. We insist that we ought to do for the Philippines what we have already done for the Cubans, and it is our duty to make that promise now, and upon suitable guarantees of protection to citizens of our own and other countries resident there at the time of the withdrawal of the Spanish flag, to give them a free and independent to work out their own destiny.

A thorough investigation of the sanitary conditions of all the bakeries of this State has been ordered by Chief Inspector John C. Delaney. In a letter to all deputies he says: "No more important duty relating to public welfare devolves upon this department than the inspection of bakeries. The summer season is a time of special exposure to vermin and other sources of uncleanliness in such establishments, and then, also, the temptation is strong to be disrespectful of exercising the care necessary to keep conditions up to the highest standard of sanitary requirement."

You will, therefore, for the two months to come givebakery the first place in your daily care, letting less pressing interests wait. Familiarize yourselves afresh with the law governing bakeries, and then, making that your model, do your very best to have every bakery in your respective districts come up to the requirements. Any orders you may find it necessary to issue should be accompanied with immediate action. If necessary, compel compliance by prosecution."

The Populist National Convention, lately meeting in Springfield, Ill., nominated Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, for President, and Thomas F. Tribbles, of Nebraska, for Vice-President. Its platform advocates eight hours as a day's labor, the ownership by the Government of rail roads and a general system of telegraphs and telephones.

The Chicago Tribune gives the number of casualties thus far resulting from accidents occurring during the celebration of the "Fourth" in the United States as 52 killed and 3049 injured. It says: "The death roll this year is one less than that of 1903, but the number injured is 616 smaller. The fire loss was $80,000 less than that of last year."

At Jackson, Mich., on the 6th instant, 5,000 persons assembled in Loomis Park to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the birth of the Republican party in that city. It was there on that date that the first State Convention, acting in the name of "the Republican" was held. A detachment from Louisville, Ky., of the 6th Sigs. 4th Filipino students, who applied for admission to the Dupont Manual Training High School, have been informed by the School Board that their color debar them from the privileges of the public schools. The word "colored" in the law relating to the separation of races in the South is to be construed to include the children—negroes, Indians and those of the brown races.

A case of lockjaw occurring near Media, Pa., has lately been successfully treated and is regarded as a remarkable cure. Besides the regular treatment the doctor injected her with tetanus antitoxin lymph four times a day. The patient was wrapped in blankets and responders, at intervals, to the air.

A despatch of the 4th instant from Salt Lake City says: "Four tons of grasshoppers have been destroyed within the last few days by farmers in Central Utah, especially in San Pete county. The pests have grown to be such a nuisance in recent years that the last State Legislature offered a bounty of $100,000 on a pound of grasshopper. San Pete county has during the past week paid bounties on more than 7,000 pounds of grasshoppers captured in the neighborhood of the town of Ephraim, alone."

The Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota has lately become again overstocked. The entire output of the Texas oil fields is said to be now less than one day's yield of one large producing well in 1901.

A bulletin has recently been published at Washington respecting the Philippines, which gives the aggregate population of these islands as 7,635,426, in which the people are classed as "civilized" and "wild" in the proportions of 1,286 and 6,347,140 respectively. The land area of the islands is estimated at 115,029 square miles, or 73,616,540 acres, of which 40,000,000 acres are in forest, worth $2,000,000,000 and 21,000,000 are public lands available for agriculture.

FOREIGN.—It is stated that the Japanese forces have surrounded Fort Arthur on the land side, and that they have occupied all the commanding hills, including Wood Mountain, within a radius of seven miles of the fortifications. Heavy fighting for six days is reported in the neighborhood of Port Arthur.

A despatch from Berlin mentions that Prince Ukhtomsky in a recent interview stated that "Discontent in the front has become acute. The prisons are being filled with people of intellectual note, while increasing numbers are being banished or deported to Siberia."

At the same time Prince Ukhtomsky is convinced that there will be no revolution, at least none in which the educated classes will participate, since these classes are well aware of the hopelessness of contending against the army and police.

An imperial ukase has been issued in Russia calling for 447,000 recruits for the army. This, on account of the present war, is said to be double the usual number called for.

Recent despatches from Gyantse state that the British Government under Lord Younghusband has been engaged in scaling the walls of fortifications in that city, followed by house-to-house fighting, meeting with stubborn opposition. Recent inquiries by the State Department at Washington of the British Government in reference to this expedition against the Tibetans has developed the fact that the despatch of the 7th inst. from Washington, that "the British home government was lukewarm if not absolutely indifferent in the matter of sending Colonel Younghusband's expedition toward Lassa."

"Indeed, it is said here, Colonel Younghusband was allowed to go forward only to save the pride of Victoria Curzon. The latter fancied that he had not been treated with the respect and consideration by the British Government that he felt he deserved, and failing to secure what he deemed due official recognition of the representatives of the Indian Government sent by him into Tibet he appealed to the home government for an armed escort to secure proper treatment for his envoys, and the home government reluctantly assented."

The British Government, by its official unwillingness to withdraw this punitive expedition as soon as it can obtain from the Tibetans promises of yielding the points which were at issue between India and Tibet before the expedition crossed the border of the latter country. These are pledges of freedom of trade between the two countries and official recognition of the right of the British Government's representative to exercise his functions in Tibet."

It is said that Englishmen view with distrust and discontent a policy in regard to Tibet which is liable to add materially to the responsibilities and burdens of the Government.

The best timekeeper in the world is said to be the electric clock in the basement of the Berlin Observatory, which was installed by Professor Foerster in 1865. It is enclosed in an air-tight glass cylinder, and has frequently run for periods of two or three months with an average daily deviation of only fifteen one-thousandths of a second.

An arbitration treaty between France, Sweden and Norway has been signed.

A despatch from London of the 8th says: Important discoveries in connection with cancer were announced today, when the Prince of Wales presided at the annual meeting of the General Committee of the Cancer Research Society, distinguished experts briefly summed up their year's work as follows:

Civilization is not the cause of cancer, which prevades animal as well as human life and attacks all its subjects at relatively the same age and periods.

It is not an infectious disease and is not transmissible from one species to another. A cancer cell can acquire power of self-propagation.

Cancer is not caused by a parasite.

The malsady is not on the increase. Radium has been found to exercise no curative effect. A serum has been discovered from which good results are hoped.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each of the following for vol. 78.

Joshua T. Ballinger, N. J.; David J. Brown, G't'n; P. S. Gwathrope, Pa.; J. Elwood Hancock and for Roy Taylor, N. J.; Joshua L. Bailly, Pa.; John Cole, O.; F. W. Wood and for Edgar M. Wood, Ill.; Hannah H. I. and for Dr. Howard Ives, N. J.; J. M. Rich, Kan.; Sarah A. Holmes, N. J.; Mary G. Satterthwait, Pa.; Jim Trimble, Pa.; William Evans and for Thomas J. B. J. J. Barclay, Hilyard, Pa.; Anne E. Howell and Aubrey Howell, G't'n; Sarah P. Chambers and for Al Sharpless, Pa.; Anna L. Price, Pa.; Lewis Forsythe, Ann Shoemaker, G't'n; Thos. Woolman, Phila.; Wadette Stokes, N. J.; Rezin Thompson, O. M. and S. Doulton E. S. Deats, N. J.; Mary Ann Haines, N. J.; Evan S. and for Benjamin L. Bates, Iowa; Mary Ann Wag Pa., and for Mary J. White, N. C.; Hugh Foulke and Susan Y. Foulke, Pa.; Richard T. Osborn and for Edin L. Post, N. Y.; William Scattered, Pa.; Henry Hal Phila., 60 for herself, Hattie L. Deacon, Ky., and M. Nell R. Haines, N. J.; Charles C. Scattered, Pa.; H. Hall, P't'd; Jane S. Warner, Pa., $10 for herself, Ed. J. Warner, Essex Co. Me.; Martha Price and De L. Copeland, N. C.; Mary E. Cadwalader, Phila.; Amy I. Exton, N. J.; Phillips Chambers, Pa.; A. F. Huston for Elizabeth B. Calley, Pa.; George B. Borton, N. Wm. Bettle, N. J.; Henry B. Leeds, Agent, N. J., $66 William Matlack, Dr. Joseph Stokes, M. and R. Matt Uriah Borton, Miriam L. Roberts, Jos. H. Matlack, N. H. Roberts, Edwin R. Bell, Mary W. Stokes, Sally Kaighn, Howard H. Bell, Henrietta Haines, Sally Roberts, Anna K. Woodward, S. N. and A. B. Warren, Allen H. Roberts, Wm. E. Darnell, Beulah S. Le J. Whittall Nicholson, John M. Roberts, Margaretta Satterthwait, Ebenezer Roberts, Elizabeth H. B. Bley, Merton Linton, Margaret C. Venable, Lydia H. pincoet; Deborah W. Buzby, 66 for herself, Wm. M. D. ner and Walter S. Reeve, N. Newlin Stokes, M. D., eon B. Contact, O.; David Heston, F. G. F., and A Maxwell, Ind.; Alice A. Carter, N. J., $6 for herself, S. Ellen Carter and Sarah C. Satterthwait, Pa.; Hal Mittle, N. J.; P. Ellis DeCon, N. J.; Mary J. Foster for Amos O. Foster, R. I.; Clarkson M. Gifford, M. Elizabeth Wright, N. J.; George P. Stokes, N. J.; J. Anna Sharpless, Pa.; John Wylie, N. J.; Phebe H. gess, Pa.; Mary S. Walton, Pa.; William Biddle, Jr., James G. Biddle, Pa.; John W. Biddle Pa., Tacy M. B. Pa.

Renittances received after Third-day noon will appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Wanted.—A Friend to teach two children and a in household duties.

Address "R,"

Office of THE FRIEND

A FRIEND in delicate health, residing in central York, desires to engage a man and wife to care for house, garden and grounds, and to be preferred.

Address W. W.,

Office of THE FRIEND

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., P. I. During the Seventh and Eighth Months the Library be open on Fifth-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

The Friends' City Home can accommodate a young men, who may propose to spend the summer and in the city. Address Mary T. Wildman, 1623 3rd Street.

Friends' Separate School.—Friends who desire enter children for the school next beginning each Month will kindly communicate their wishes to the our, so that places may be reserved for them.

J. HENRY BARTLETT,

140 N. 16th St., Phi

Westworn Boarding School.—A stated meeting of the Committee on Boarding School will be held in the mitted Room, at Fourth and Arch Streets, on Saturday, the 23rd inst., at 10 A. M.

JOHN W. BIDDLE, Clk

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS
No. 42 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII

SEVENTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 23, 1904.

No. 2.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

scriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SALTMARSH, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

South from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to
JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

The Pedigree of Quakerism.

Without present access to Buell's "unsynthetic" biography of William Penn, we find enough of it in a recent number of the Literary Digest to engage cursory attention for the present. Others are said to have handled with facility the unbalanced book itself, but we here concern ourselves with the periodical's presentation, as sowing much more broadcast those versions of the book which libel Fox and tend the worst, but without the show of earnestness which that journal usually exhibits by accompanying charges with counter presentations.

The biographer traces the origin of the sect John Saltmarsh, who was born in Yorkshire 1596; whose book, "Sparkles of Glory," was first published two hundred and fifty years ago. "John Saltmarsh wrote volumes transcendental poetry in mystic prose." Of doctrine Augustus C. Buell writes:

It amounts to a protest against all formalism, regularity, and discipline in religious organization; against canons, observances, rites, set modes of worship, and ordained ecclesiastical functions of all kinds whatsoever. On the other hand it amounts to a declaration that the human conscience which "grows up with God" is a supreme law unto itself and unites its own being. . . . It means that in "pure, spiritual, comprehensive" religion the conscience of the individual sanctified by the "inner light must be the measure of sanctity and the guide to holiness." The postulate of this is, that organized churches under any and all forms of administration, may become solitary houses or temples whose veils are drawn or "suns whose light is darkened," wherever "God has gone out and hath left such an administration."

It remains only to add that the sole judge to whether "God is gone out and hath left such an administration," etc., is the conscience of the individual sanctified by the "inner light." And the individual is also endowed with judgment from which there can be no appeal as to the presence of the inner light in his own conscience, and also as to its quality, degree, and intensity.

"Such," reads the Digest, "was the doctrine that formed the basis of the sect known as the 'Society of Friends.' Saltmarsh contributed nothing but the doctrine; the foundation of the sect was the work of George Fox, a man whose contrast with the other is thus set forth by the author of the volume under consideration."

So far as can be ascertained from authentic records, Fox began to preach in 1647, the same year in which Saltmarsh was dying. Whether the first expounder of the doctrine would have approved the apostle's practical application of it must forever remain an unanswered question, because mania and death deprived him of the opportunity to investigate or even observe the work of Fox. The two men were antipodal in fiber, traits, and antecedents. One was a classical scholar of exquisite learning; the other a "village yokel," as his contemporaries called him. One was a recluse, a dreamer, a poet; the other a hustling stalwart zealot a giant in bodily strength, moral fortitude, and mental audacity. One was a subtle-brained mystic of the cloister; the other a huge muscled, strong voiced preacher of the open air, the fields, the highways.

The summarizer adds: "As a promulgator of the teachings of Saltmarsh, Fox avowed in the broadest sense and most sweeping scope the doctrine of supremacy, even absolution of the individual conscience sanctified by the 'inner light.' He held that every man might have a revelation of his own that there might be as many manifestations of God in the conscience as there were converts. . . . Fox however possessing a strong sense of the practical, formulated what might be called the 'canons of his church.' Canons of which 'some were sound and salutary in law and morals, some were visionary and chimerical while others were frivolous and whimsical.'"

We cannot challenge all the above turns and terms of expression whether of Saltmarsh or Buell, which may seem inadequate or unjust; but each Friend will know how to estimate them as he reads. There remains quoted a series of slurs* on the views of Fox and the Friends, which defeat themselves and indicate the writer's disqualification, for pronouncing judgment on things which are to be spiritually discerned. The animus shown, like Macaulay's, makes as a sealed book to him the true inwardness of Fox, Penn, or a Friend. But what has its order in time,—what has priority or posteriority, historical succession or apostolic, to do with the truth of a truth, to make it or unmake it. Time, earlier or later, is not authority of truth. Let Saltmarsh's and several others' glimpses of the light stand for what they are worth,—is it any discredit to Quakerism if proved that it was not original with George Fox? Neither he nor we would refer it to any other original than Christ by his Spirit. It would be a severe blow to our confidence in Fox's doctrine to find it traceable to him and no farther; or not to have originating force, freshly and independently, in many hearts both before Fox and since. Letters from some of our own correspondents show its independent opening in them in solitary places, without having heard of Fox or the Friends. We could wish the biographer, instead of finding one,—Saltmarsh or any other,—who had anticipated Fox in the same view of truth, had referred us to sixty. The basic truth of his principles being at the same time Life must be expected to crop out here and there throughout Christian history. Even though societies called Friends might move or sit to suppress it, it will not down. The larger the cloud of independent witnesses of the inspeaking Word, the greater the confirmation to us of its truth.

*The matters of these will be seen in Allen C. Thomas's article which has appeared on page 412, number 52, vol. lxviii, since the above was written.—Ed.

William Penn, whose biographer the accomplished writer undertakes to be, claimed the doctrine of Friends as no first discovery of Fox or of his time, but as "Primitive Christianity Revived. We accept all the historian's help in tracing the beginnings of Quakerism as much farther back than Fox as he can get them.

They date not from Fox, but from where John in his first chapter puts the date, namely "In the BEGINNING was the WORD." The same was the beginning which Fox emphatically claimed for the manifestation of the Word in whose living openings his faith consisted.

The value of Fox consists in his teaching us to receive the word of faith from its Author and Finisher, his pointing all men to Christ as "the Word nigh thee, in thy heart and in thy mouth." Rom. x: 6-8. If it came to Saltmarsh, Tauler, or Francis of Assisi, it came from the same Source. When water comes from the skies, there is no need of piping it to Fox from Saltmarsh as its source. There is small probability of the "village yokel" of twenty-four years ever having read productions of this "classical scholar of exquisite learning." It is said that the Bible was his one book, his constant companion, with whose language from beginning to end his memory was saturated.

In the first eighteen verses of John's gospel is shown the genesis of Quakerism from "the beginning," of which Fox was a prominent one in the long line of repeaters, and a herald to generations following. Many Protestants in heart and faith went before Luther also, but that does not weaken Luther's foundation. It helps to confirm it.

Neither of these two instruments might in another age have been heard,—at least with the same avidity. The time when any messages seem least to be idle tales, is when they are closest to the present hunger of men's hearts. In the fulness of the times they stand in their spiritual (which is their apostolic) succession for the message due to their age; Equally due is the message of Quakerism to the present age, whether coming in other tongues or ours. But by repetition and by worldliness men's ears are grown callous to what was good news in days that tried men's souls; and Quakerism may be awaiting a re-statement in fresh terms of the living Spirit. Ever new is the wine of the Spirit, but every new bottle will not hold it merely because new; but only such as are of its own shaping, its own expression, its own adaptation to the state of the times. "There is one, even Christ Jesus who can speak to thy condition," whether this be said to the condition of the times, or of a man only. On the rock of this revelation, which will include the Holy Scriptures, conviction for sin, and the light of forgiveness through Christ,—Fox's whole system was built. It remains to be the foundation of all that can specifically be called Quakerism to-day.

(To be continued.)

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Atmospheres.

The name of atmosphere is applied generally to the air we breathe, to the ether, that encircles our planet. In motion it is felt as a breeze, or wind. It furnishes the oxygen that fills the lungs and gives power to the blood,—and Genesis ix; 4th says: "the life thereof, which is the blood."

The vibrations of this atmosphere striking the drum of the ear send a sensation to the brain that we call sound language, how varied the volume and tone, concords and discord! This unseen envelope sustains the watery exhalations of the earth, returning them in gentle dews and fruitful showers. The fleecy clouds,—how beautifully they float across the azure sky! How attractive the auroral hues, or the apocalyptic splendours of cloud and ray at sunset!

The subtle and all-pervasive characteristics of a race or people envelop them as an atmosphere. So we differentiate the Mongol, or the Aryan; the Anglo-Saxon, or the Celt; the Negro, or the Indian; the Chinaman, or the Arab. Each city has an atmosphere. He who breathes it is imperceptibly influenced and often dominated by it. Some can rise above and become lights, purifiers; a city within a city that cannot be hid.

A crowd or audience develops a moral atmosphere charged with a magnetic force that develops the nucleus of an enthusiastic party or sect; or it may degenerate into a mob that has a will independent of individual character as a quiet aggregate; as different as a free sailing breeze from a cyclone. Influences of this subtle, pervasive, penetrative nature create the felt atmosphere of churches, senate chambers, court rooms and private houses.

Each individual has a subtle atmosphere of his own, more or less highly charged; gay or sad, his weather affects the group he approaches. No man liveth, or can live to himself alone. We speak of the powerful preaching of example. Do we realize that we carry about all the time an atmosphere more or less hypnotic?

What a power a righteous, pure minded woman constantly exerts! Her presence is a tonic, an uplift.

Then, the atmosphere of a Christian home, what a leavening power! Cæcilius, a Carthaginian Christian, became greatly interested in the conversion of a friend, a cultured, worldly young patrician. The Roman was a fatalist in that he did not believe in a Power that could free him from the mastery of his passions. Introduced into the home and the every day life of the Christian family of Cæcilius, he saw that which convinced him of his mistake,—he was converted. Augustine speaks of this Cyprian as a great Christian light. What an atmosphere, Stephen Grellet and his family evolved. It was powerful, felt by some to be too highly charged for those of less spiritual life. Again can we rise to an appreciation of the spiritual atmosphere of Swarthmore Hall, especially during the two years that George Fox more continuously made it his home? Recall the noble self-sacrificing spirit of Margaret Fell. Three gracious daughters with their Quaker husbands were additions to the high converse and flow of soul. Heaven anticipated.

H.

HER MISSION.—Some one overheard two neighbors talking about "Aunt Susan" and silently prayed that an eulogy somewhat similar might be said for her when life's last day should have passed. This is what she heard: "I don't know that Aunt Susan ever did very much, but she was awful good to the children. She never could see a little one crying without stopping to comfort it. Many a time she's come into my house when the children were at sixes and sevens, and me cross with their fretting; and in a few minutes she would have them all peaceable as angels. And I'd be ashamed of myself to think I hadn't the time to do it, instead of scolding at them. Somehow folks that saw much of Aunt Susan couldn't bear to be harsh to the young ones."
—Selected.

LET us serve God in the sunshine while He makes the sun shine. We shall then serve Him all the better in the dark when He sends his darkness.—Faber.

Divine Illumination.

Some men think that religion is nothing but feeling, and that all light comes from science. We believe in and advocate the study of science. The mind is greatly enlarged and improved by science. Science has done wonders for the world. But they are mistakes who imagine that religion hampers the intellect. God is light. The more of God one has in his soul the more light he has. The Spirit of God touches, awakens, quickens, and lightens the intellectual faculties. The genius of many great men has been awakened, not science, but by religion.

What was it that awakened the genius of John Bunyan and made him great? What prepared him to produce one of the most fascinating and powerful books in human language? It was not science, but religion. What was it that awakened the genius of Saul Tarsus? What illuminated the mind of Isaac Watts, of Charles Wesley, of John Milton? It was not science, but the Spirit of God. Some of the chief builders of nations owe their illumination to religion. It was the Spirit of God that took them up out of obscurity and ignorance and stimulated them to great things.

When the Spirit of the Lord enters into the heart of a man and takes full possession he made to see that the Almighty has endowed him with wonderful powers for some use. When one is truly born of God he begins to think and study, his faculties begin to unfold, and he begins to use them in the service of God and humanity. In almost every great revival of religion some great soul is brought up out of obscurity and darkness and turned into the way of service and light. Great ministers, great teachers, and great authors have received their first impulse toward greatness from the touch of the Holy Ghost. Jesus was the light of the world, and through contact with Him men become lights in the midst of a perverse generation. Many bright lights have risen on the darkness of this world but the brightest of all have been those who were kindled by the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ and the Spirit of the living God.

HELPING AND TELLING.—"I know she would do anything in the world for me," said a lady who was enduring some weeks of invalidism speaking of a helpful friend. "She will all me to lack for no care or attention, and she will do it all willingly, too, for she has the kindest of hearts, but at the same time I know that she is telling her family and acquaintances how tired she is, how hard illness makes her work, and what inconvenience it causes her. It will all be true; does cost labor and trouble, but"—with nervous little laugh that was near to tears—"I'd be so glad if she would only do it as much and say nothing about it."

It was not ingratitude, nor was it wholly invalid's sensitiveness that prompted the words. It was rather plain that love was not sufficient reward for love's service without the actual compensation of admiration and sympathy from others. Boasting of our charity we all condemn, but boasting—perhaps it is the form of half complaining—of the service which kindness or relationship compels, is more insidious habit.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 3.)

A few Friends were named to have an interview with Little Turtle and one or more of the andot chiefs who were then in the city. This was done, and at the next meeting report was made that they had an agreeable opportunity with Crane, a chief of the Wyandots, wife and Sharawatree, a warrior, and also in Little Turtle, at the Fourth Street meet-house, in company with many other Friends, which was attended with considerable satisfaction.

Little Turtle was a principal chief of the Miami and associated Indians in the war which was ended by the treaty of Greenville in 1795, and was considered as one of the most sagacious and far-seeing men of his tribe.

Little Turtle accompanied by several Indians of the Miami and Pottawatomie tribes was in Philadelphia a few years afterwards, when a satisfactory conference was had with such of the committee as resided in the city, and as the minutes of First Month 14th, 1824 state, "a present was made them of sundry articles amounting to fourteen pounds, fifteen shillings and four pence." During this year was also in Baltimore, where he had a conference with Friends there.

He was the bearer of a request in 1798 from the Delaware and from the Delaware and Indian nations residing northwest of the city, that some of the young men belonging to the Society of Friends, should settle among them, to give them instruction in farming.

The strong desire expressed by the Committee to discourage the use of intoxicating liquors, in their reply was no doubt entirely in accordance with the feelings of Little Turtle, and in an interview with President Adams petitioned him to prohibit the sale of rum to his nation, because, as he said, President Adams had lost three thousand of his Indian children one year by it.

Previous to leaving the city, the following address was prepared to be delivered to Little Turtle, together with some useful articles as a present. Although this letter is of considerable length, yet the sentiments it contains and the explanation it affords of the views of the committee at this time, seem to warrant its insertion as a whole.

"The Representatives of Friends, commonly called Quakers, of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and the State of Delaware. To our brothers the Miami and other Indian Nations united with us.

"Brothers.—In a communication to you about thirty-three months ago by the hands of the General Wayne, you were informed of the views we felt on account of a stop being put to the shedding of blood, and of our desire that the great overruling Spirit of peace and love should so influence and direct your councils, that the sound of war might not any more be heard in your land; which desire we still feel, and wish it may be happily felt among you.

"Brothers.—We were pleased to meet with your brother, the Little Turtle, one of your great men, now in this city; for we are always desirous of opportunity to talk with the wise and diligent men among our Indian brothers, who will continue to love, bearing in mind the friendship which existed between your grandfathers and ours, who lived in peace and harmony, keeping clear and bright the chain of friendship by acts of kindness towards each other, which chain has never been tarnished between us, though it is now more than an hundred years since our grandfathers came with ours and your brother Onas over the great waters to settle in this land of Pennsylvania, then a wilderness,—and while our forefathers had the chief direction of public affairs, there was no war between white men and red men in Pennsylvania.

"Brothers.—Since those times of peace and brotherly kindness, the paths between the white people and the red people have been stained with blood, with which our hearts have often been much grieved; for your brothers, the friends of all men, called Quakers, still hold the same peaceable principles as your grandfathers and your brother Onas did, and since the governing powers which have taken place in America seem to believe that national safety cannot be maintained without war, we can have no hand in government further than to use our best endeavors to persuade our great men to do justice and maintain peace with our Indian brothers and all men; which we often do, and we hope such a disposition now has place in the hearts of many of our great men of the United States.

"Brothers.—We know that the power of the bad spirit in the minds of men is the cause of wars and fightings, and we believe you must know this also, for the Good Spirit in your heart, if ye will mind it, teaches you as well as us, that without peace and love, men cannot be happy, and that misery is the certain fruit of hatred, revenge and cruelty. The bad spirit has many ways to seduce men to their own hurt and the hurt of their neighbors; and the use of strong drink is one of those ways; by this not only the red people, but many among the white people also are so blinded in their understanding as to become desperately wicked, coveting their neighbors' goods and even thirsting for blood. We have long had to lament the miseries this great enemy has produced in the world, and have many years labored with our own people, not only to deny themselves the use of spirituous liquors, but also not to trade or have any dealings in them. We have represented to the great men in government, the dreadful mischief of suffering them to be carried among our Indian brothers.—They agree with us that it is a cause of much disorder and unhappiness, but that while the red people continue such slaves to the love of strong drink, it will, by one means or other find its way to them, and all their endeavors to prevent it will be to little purpose. Brothers, let the sober, wise men among you lay this to heart, and consider what can be done under the influence of the Good Spirit, towards conquering this great enemy among yourselves. We wish to encourage such to give the whole strength of their understanding to this truly honorable work, and the Great Spirit above you gives to the spirit in man a right understanding, we trust will bless noble endeavors, and make such good men among you beloved as fathers of the people, and as bright stars in their nation.

"Brother.—When we see you honestly and diligently engaged in this great concern, it will be very encouraging to us to do you all the service we reasonably can in promoting your instruction and improvement in pursuing a peaceable, comfortable and happy way of living; and what we may find it in our power and believe right to do, we wish you to understand is from a pure desire to serve you, and increase your happiness. We want not any of your lands, skins or furs, or anything that is yours, but wish for you the sole benefit of your goods and possessions and that you may enjoy them in peace.

"Brothers.—Our hearts were made glad and thankful to the great and good Spirit to find by the talk delivered among us by your great man, our brother, the Little Turtle, that both he and many of your wisest men were strong in the desire to be instructed and encouraged in the cultivation and improvement of your lands and that the minds of your people might be convinced and know for themselves how good and how pleasant it is to live a life of sobriety, industry and peace; for we have understood you have much good land, one acre of which, well cultivated, will do more in supplying the comforts of food and clothing for yourselves, your wives and children, than can be procured by the strolling hunter from one hundred acres of unimproved wilderness.

"Brothers.—In this journey of our brother, the Little Turtle, through a great country full of people, who, by their labor and industry have pleasant settlements and plenty of good things, he will be able to give you such an account of the advantage our red brothers will find in a like manner of living, as we hope may produce some good, on his return among you; and as he has assured us he really believes the young men of his nation will give up to follow a course of industry, it affords a pleasing prospect that good things are yet in store for our Indian brothers.

"Brothers.—If it were in our power to send among you a number of men skillful in clearing of land and tilling the ground, and they should do the work for you while your people continued to get drunk and live idle, it would do you no good, but end in disappointment and tend much to discourage the good design, and should we hire one or more to go to your country and instruct you in farming, if such went for the sake of money, we should be afraid they might not prove good men, and be a hurt rather than of service to you.

"Brothers.—We are sensible that if some good men, from a sincere desire to promote your welfare, were induced to go and reside among you and show you the best manner of improving your grounds, using the farming tools, training your cattle and horses to work profitably, and the most comfortable way of ordering your family concerns, that it might, under favor of the good Spirit, be of much advantage to you; and we are not without a hope that some such will be found, and when that is the case we are willing and ready to encourage them, and afford them such help and supply as is needful for the purpose, but take care, brothers of any that may come in our name without a certificate from us that they are true men, and come with our consent and approbation.

"Brothers.—Above all things we recommend you to look to the instruction of the Good Spirit in your own hearts, without which your dependence on men to make you a happy people will be in vain. At present we see not what we can do more for your help than to supply you with some tools of husbandry, such as you are most in need of, either hoes, axes, or other necessary implements. These we are willing to help you to if proper conveyance for them can be found.

"With sincere desires for your undisturbed peace and true welfare, and the safe return of our brother, the Little Turtle, among you, we remain your friends and brothers.

Signed by twenty-seven Friends.

PHILADELPHIA, Second Month 21st, 1798.

This letter was replied to by Little Turtle, writing from Fort Wayne, under date of Eighth Month 30th, 1798, in which he acknowledged the receipt of the mills and other articles sent to him from Philadelphia, and adds—"Brother, it is also with pleasure that I inform you that I have explained the talk delivered me by my brothers at that place the twenty-first of last February to all the Indians in this country. They all thank the Great Spirit for the friendship you have for your red brothers, and some of them, as well as myself, thinks that there is good things yet in store for your red brethren."

(To be continued.)

The Inner Life.

This inner life is our real reality, not less so because invisible. The outer life is only the scaffolding of the building; it is only the husk or shell. The inner life is the real building.

All moral and spiritual defects are due to a vitiation of the inner life. The withering and uprooting of the soul's choice plants are never accomplished through the forces of the outer life; the work begins within.

No man or woman with a sweet, healthy inner life can fail of success. Storms may howl and the earth may quake, but there is something within which preserves the calm eternal, and holds every star of experience within its proper orbit.

The inner life is fed by the waters of the Infinite, and warmed by the beams of the Sun of righteousness.

How can we possess the rich, powerful inner life, when body, mind and soul are constantly exercising their energies upon the vain, perishing things of earth? We must take time to cultivate the unseen fields of the soul. We must constantly stand face to face with God, drink in the strength of His nature and the inspiration of His presence. If we do not, the inner life must perish. Prayer, meditation, worship, reading, obedience,—these are channels through which God pours His golden, vitalizing streams into the inner life.

The saddest moment in life to a man or woman is when there is a discovery that the inner life is gone, and only the outer shell is left. Yet the inner life goes gradually and secretly. No one has ever been robbed by others of this priceless possession.

Let us be watchful. Let us remember that as long as God is in this inner life, there is security there, and that no thief has ever been able to break the lock of prayer and trust and Divine wisdom.—A Revised Selection.

TRIUMPHANT living is better than triumphant dying.—E. P. Tennyson.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Land of Promise in Sunshine and Shadow.

BY MATHIAS DENKHAUS, A FRIEND OF THE FRIENDS.

(Continued from page 4.)

Bethany, south of and not far from Jerusalem, was the home of that blessed and happy triangle of Lazarus, Martha and Mary, of which little circle Jesus was the soul, in like, all other biblical cities and villages, an Arabic settlement. I ventured out there by myself via Mt. of Olives, but the villagers made me repent of having not heeded the warning of friends, who, by their long sojourning in that country knew the mortal danger of going out alone. Consequently I missed some of my inspired relation toward that place, once the scene of the Master's love and glory, now "in memoriam."

South of Jerusalem, at a distance of six miles, we reach Bethlehem, of which five thousand and inhabitants are partly Christians, Protestant and Catholic. The former have an elegant European building, where I heard the German minister Boeticher preach in Arabic.

Last month I received the sad intelligence of his death. He had accompanied an exploration party to the Dead Sea and while bathing in the biblical river Arnon, had the misfortune of drowning. Had it been in the Jordan I would easily understand how, but so I must conclude, that a physical trouble came over him, which surrendered him to the merciless element. He was a useful man of high culture and well beloved with our people. His wife had gone one year before I came, in 1895. The Greeks, Latins and Armenians have a cloister in Bethlehem.

Over the supposed place of the nativity of Jesus is erected a church edifice similar to that of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem.

On inspecting the den in the rock I noticed that the walls were pretty well smoked; showing, that it had been used, like other mansions of the kind, as a dwelling place. Every Arabic house,—certainly every house of the fellahs, is blackened with the soot of the fire on the ground. The luxury of a stove they cannot or will not allow of.

If spiritual feelings have any relation to facts, I am at least inclined to believe that here is the spot, where the Light of the World bodily appeared. What the "Church of the Holy Sepulchre" is to the Catholic pilgrims at the Easter season, is the "Church of the Nativity" at the Christmas season.

Bethlehem is quite famous for the beautiful articles that are manufactured here. Breast pins and fancy articles of various descriptions are made by Arabic-Christian natives of the city of David. The stone masons of that village have the reputation of being the best in the country. I feel certain, had not the fate of all the centuries past tended to the demoralization and degradation of the Arabic people, their artists would rival the Italian and their philosophers might give us many nuts to crack.

Hebron, also south of Jerusalem, has a population of ten thousand, of whom a great many are Jews, the rest Mohammedans.

There is an old enclosure around the presumed cave of Machpelah, the family sepulchre of the patriarch Abraham. (Gen. xxiii: Here are also the famous Solomon was pools. By the way, it may be stated, that the wagon road from Jaffa branches off Jerusalem,—one, as already said, to Betha Jericho and the Dead Sea, the other to Belehém and Hebron, where it comes to an end.)

There is no other wagon or cart road in the home of the Jews, the rest of the passenger and beast-of-burden ways are trails.

Jaffa, the Joppa of the Bible, (Acts x: has a population of fifteen thousand. It still the only seaport of Judea. Ships cannot go to land there on account of the rocky condition of the haven, such as it is. One narrow strait only allows canoes to land. The waves tossing here are fine to behold. Frequently steamers have to shelter themselves by taking flight to the open sea, and be bound by a schedule, often proceed on, ignoring Jaffa and dependencies. As Jerusalem, there is a German Lutheran Church and an English Episcopal Mission for the Jews in Jaffa, also a German congregation of the Society of the Temple of which we will speak later.

Lydda, (Acts ix: 32), not far from Jaffa, a little place. The English Episcopal Church has an Arabic Mission here, with a native deacon as pastor. The St. George church building of the time of the crusaders is shown there. It is still a great, and—for the country—splendid building, but has undergone repeated vicissitudes of destruction. At every time it was rebuilt, it had to suffer loss of original enormous dimensions. The adjoining mosque covers part of the ground formerly belonging thereto. Sharon (Song of Solomon ii: 1) is an agricultural chiefly wine-cultivating colony of the German Society of the Temple.

There are no Jews or Mohammedans residing here. It should be remarked, that Lydda and Sharon are on the plain and do not belong to Judea proper. Ramleh, six miles from Jaffa on the road to Jerusalem, was built by the crusaders and still shows the ruins of a great cloister.

On Salein, three miles south of Ramleh an ancient Philistine sandy soil. Here is nothing else but the two thousand five hundred acres intended agricultural colony of the Syrian Orphanage in Jerusalem, where Father Schuler was anxious to settle his boys when dismissed on coming of age, instead of being obliged to give them up to the dangers of the Arabic life all over the country.

However, no building permission could yet be obtained from the government, although costly and strenuous efforts have been made. Pecuniary presents have so far proved no avail in this case. The trouble is, a Christian settlement is wanted. A lumber building—the only one in the country—was permitted to be put up, but this calamity a sore drawback to the proposed colony. Good hopes a well of one hundred and fifty meters has been dug and a pump with a $20 carbon oil gas-generating motor from Germany been put in, a cement reservoir for irrigation been constructed and other improvements made. The German Emperor during his visit at the occasion of the dedication of the new magnificent German Lutheran church edifice in Jerusalem, was requested to intervene in this extremely difficult matter; to which assented; but to my knowledge the good was yet looked for. Here I spent five months in educating and preaching. A time which I yet look back in spirit with deepest and sincerest praise to God, who in spite of much that was unpleasant and at last sickening, put the seal on my ministry and gave an abundant grace before all concerned.

It may be in proper place here to remark, that I went to Palestine, having a deep concern on my heart to labor in the blessed Gospel and lay down my life for immortal souls, despised—in a sense—the aid of a Society, going voluntarily at my own expense. Through misinformation before Beirut, the sea fort Syria, where my ship, a French steamer, was chartered, and where I went off to visit the Christian Mission, I came to miss my steamer, through which I lost all my effects whatever. My later official record stated that nothing could be found. This real dreadful dilemma, connected with the unspeakable spiritual condition things as I found it, weighed my spirit down to praise the Lord—to the feet of my Redeemer.

For a short time a guest in the Syrian orange, with whose founder and son I had connection by correspondence from here, afterwards I made my headquarters within the city of Jerusalem, and I engaged myself in visiting Jews, declaring unto them by word and good example Christ the Messiah. After two months the Lord opened my way to Bir-Salem, near the trouble about a locality for meeting and all such as is needed in public work was concluded. The visible rapid gaining in consequence, both on the part of the boys, the European help and headquarters in Jerusalem made me feel—I know not how—at least to be low in the dust before the Lord. It seems to me now, that my faith could never have been so thoroughly tested at home, as here in a desert land far from friends. So Rom. viii: 13 was manifestly verified in my case. If the whole story from beginning to end was reduced to writing, it would read like a romance. I imagine to have a novel before me under the heading: "Learned to love Jesus more," while I very lines breathe and lo, near the fire of burning soul you would discover in sympathetic ink:

"Praise ye, praise ye the Lord."

Much that is interesting, could be said and volumes be written about various other cities, now Arabic settlements of Judea, which we will now pass by. God knoweth.

(To be continued.)

The Scriptures says a leading Methodist never certainly teach plainness of dress. The Holy Spirit also writes the same truth upon fully awakened hearts. But few sanctified people adorn themselves "with gold, or pearls, or costly array." These are not in accord with a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of the Lord is of great price.

The fact that we recognize our mistakes in the past as the best sort of reason for believing that we are improving. We have got our eyes opened to some things; and though we shall probably make mistakes in the future just as in the past, they will not be the same ones.

I Ought, I Can, I Will.

These may be called the three pillars of manhood. In all the world, there is not a noble edifice of character, not a goodly building of achievement, which they do not support. First comes the Ought, the divine imperative, the feeling of duty, God's voice speaking in the soul; then the Can, the consciousness of ability; and then the I Will, which turns on the steam and makes things go. Out of these have been conjugated all the indicative and imperative moods and tenses of civilization. What a wonderful thing is this Ought, shaking and disturbing and agitating human society forever! It gets into the thoughts of men and gives them no rest. They hold meetings, they attack iniquities, they contend for rights, they pour out treasure and blood for some great principle. I say it is wonderful. Here am I, flung out into the eternities, a little speck in the midst of creation, eating and drinking and breathing for a few days and then gone. Why should I, a mere bundle of bones and blood, hurrying across the years, running my little race, be met at every turn and angle of life by this most troublesome Ought? When I want to rest and enjoy myself; when I want to sip a little of the world's nectar; when I want to eat a few of the apples of Sodom; when I want to spend my money for that which is not bread—why should I be challenged and interfered with by this unsleeping and persistent Ought? If it would only let me alone, what a time I might have!

But it will not let me alone, and that for the reason that I am something more than a bundle of bones and blood—not bones and blood at all, but a man, God's image walking through time, and destined to walk beyond time's border line forever. Ought never disturbs the stars or the rivers or the oceans or the animals; but it does disturb you and me. It stings us with many a sharp regret. It cries "Halt!" when we turn aside from the straight path. It holds the plumb line up against the wall we are building. It keeps us awake sometimes in the night and peoples our dreams with ghosts, because we are infinitely more than all stars, and all the perishing universe of matter. Ought is the word that declares our pedigree and our immortality and affirms our kinship with the skies. The youth who fights against this Ought always fights a losing battle. The electric spark struck out by the trolley might as well fight against the sun. Heeded, loyally obeyed, it lifts and glorifies. Hushed and stifled, it leaves the life to slip down into mire and misery and despair.

Now the second great word—I Can. Remember what the poet has said:—

So near is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When duty whispers low, "Thou must"
The youth replies, "I can."

The youth of that spirit can no more be kept down than you can keep the tide from pressing up the shore. The word king is simply a modification of the word can. Far back in ancient times, the man who came forward and said, "I can," and backed it up by deeds, was made king. The kingly men to-day and evermore are the men who believe they can. Discount yourself, and the world will take you at your own appraisal. I Can is splendid capital for the young man, or for the mature, and a most excellent treasure in time of age. But for the young, especially its value cannot be overestimated. The youth who takes I Can as a seed thought, plants it in his consciousness, tends it, cultivates it, as the gardener does his choicest vine, finds it reaching out and gathering strength from all quarters. Such a youth makes circumstances his servants. He hitches them to his chariot and compels them to draw him toward the sun. When John C. Calhoun was in Yale College, he was a tremendous worker. Some of his fellow-students ridiculed him for his intense application. But he replied, "I am forced to make the most of my time, that I may acquire myself creditably when I go to Congress." This speech, of course, was greeted with a laugh, to which young Calhoun said firmly, "Do you doubt it? I assure you if I were not convinced of my ability to reach the National Capitol as a representative within three years after my graduation, I would leave college this very day." I Can was in his soul, and, sure enough, he did go to Congress.

Next, the last of these three words—I Will. This is the executor of the soul. A man may see his duty and be conscious of his ability to do it, but it will remain unperformed unless there is the exercise of the will. If good intentions and noble desires could save the world, it would have been saved long ago. But the best of desires and intentions amount to very little until they are translated into performance by the force and persistence of an inflexible will. It is not lack of ability or lack of conscientiousness that strews the shores of life with failures, but lack of nerve and pluck and application, which are the sturdy children of the will. Without resolution it is impossible to do, impossible to rise out of the valley, impossible to climb up the rough mountain slopes. As well try to get up a ladder without grip in the fingers or stiffening in the backbone. When General Grant was a boy, he looked and looked, but no word in the dictionary could he find the word "can't," and the men who omit that word from their dictionaries are the men who go to the front. "I will not equivocate, I will not retreat one inch, I will be heard," said William Lloyd Garrison, and he conquered. There is no use in snubbing men of this type. They move right on and up, and all the faster for a little opposition. Be assured of this, that a life without will must in the nature of things be a life without force, a life, like a piece of seaweed, unrooted, forever swinging in and out, and up and down upon the waves.

—R. F. COYLE, in Forward.

"No more mischievous and misleading theory could be propounded, nor any one more dishonoring to the Holy Spirit, than the principle that because the Spirit was poured out at Pentecost, the church has no need, and no warrant, to pray any more for the effusion of the Spirit of God. On the contrary, the more the church asks for the Spirit and waits for his communications, the more she receives."—Smeaton.

There is a toy which is given to the victim, and he is told to see if he can blow the whistle. He blows and puffs a fine cloud of soot over his own face! That toy is like detraction.

The Tyranny of the Less Important Things.

Modern life is so complex; so many demands are made upon our time and our energies; there is so much to do and see and hear and read that one cannot compass everything. He is compelled, in the very nature of things, and whether he will or no, to slight much, and the problem which he should ask himself is: What shall this be? Shall it be the myriad of little things with which life is filled up, and among which it is largely wasted or shall it be the things that are really worth while?

The magazines, the light reading, the calls, and the vast number of small things which all of us are surrounded by and perplexed with, should be left for the most part until we have done that which is worthy of us. If one does the small things first there is no time left for anything else. One should not, therefore, begin at the wrong end. He should not always be doing little things. Do the important things first; get that disposed of; and then devote such time and energy as you have left to comparatively unimportant affairs. Many of them deserve much less time than they get; others deserve no time at all, and can be eliminated from the problem. Many a call is entirely unnecessary; many a magazine or novel need not be read; many an apparent duty is quite superfluous. Much energy is wasted in things which are apparently necessary, but which, did one give the matter any thought, would in fact be seen to be either entirely unnecessary or worthy of small consideration; and blindly devoting ourselves to them, we rob ourselves of the higher duties and pleasures whose places they usurp.

Do the important thing first, and let the comparatively unimportant thing wait upon it—this rule of action, like every other, should be applied with wisdom, and modified in accordance with one's environment. It is of course not meant that the business man should leave his face unshaven until he has stubbornly done the important thing of the morning, nor that the housewife should let her shoes go untied until she has read a chapter of Green's History. (Although I may add parenthetically at this point that I have a great respect for the woman who lets her bed go unmade until afternoon if she has something more important to do in the morning, and who does not go through the world with a dust cloth ever in her hand!) There are certain little things, insignificant things, which must be done, and done in their proper time and order; there are other things which must also be done, but which can be postponed and done superficially; there are other things again which need not be done at all. These classifications every one must make for himself, and he must apply the rule that has been laid down with liberality and wisdom, suiting it to his own needs and conditions.—H. E. Mason.

RELIGION is not a strange or added thing, but the inspiration of the secular life, the breathing of an eternal spirit through this temporal world.—Henry Drummond.

THE knowledge of God is undoubtedly that which affords the greatest happiness to mankind, as the want of it makes one the most wretched of all beings.—Hans. Egged.

Science and Industry.

Tinned meats for the Russian troops are prepared by a process which enables the contents of each tin to be served hot without a fire. This boon is secured by having the ordinary tins filled with food "jacketed" in patent tins. The patent tin contains water, together with a chemical mixture, by means of which the water can be raised to boiling point in ten minutes or a quarter of an hour. All that is necessary to do when it is desired to heat the food is to puncture the top of the patent tin, the chemical mixture being thereby forced into the water, which soon begins to boil.

The difference between the two well known varieties of cement, the Rosedale and the Portland, lies in the fact that the first named is a natural product and the latter is an artificial. The former is made by burning a shaly limestone in kilns and grinding the clinker produced with buhr-stones to a very fine powder, which, when mixed with water, soon sets and forms an artificial stone nearly as hard as the original rock. Portland cement, on the other hand, is made by combining chalk or some other form of limestone free from magnesia with siliceous clay, these materials being intimately mixed and made into bricks, which are burned in kilns with coke fuels at a very intense heat. The resulting clinker is ground in the same manner as natural cement and is much stronger and sets quicker than the other.

TREES PLANTED AT NIGHT.—It was long since observed that budding trees, when transplanted in the evening, and immediately and copiously watered, were much more likely to thrive than those that had been moved in the day. But this knowledge did not lead to any well defined theory on the subject until the experiments of René Rouault, a French expert, proved beyond a doubt that distinctly beneficial results could be gained by transplanting wholly at night.

Being called upon to transplant a large tract toward the end of Fifth Month, 1903, Rouault determined to work at night, and in order to be sure that he made no mistake he transplanted a Holland linden, which had been in his own nursery for five years, at ten o'clock at night. He carefully watered the tree, and the branches which bore buds were freely moistened. The linden did not appear to suffer from this transplanting, and continued to grow normally, without showing any signs of weakness. Encouraged by this success, Rouault performed the work of transplantation entirely in the night time. The results were excellent, only two trees dying, though the choice of the species was extremely wide, containing many which do not readily submit to the process of transplantation.

With reference to the precautions to be observed, it should be stated that trees should not be transplanted while their buds are too tender, and that the work should be done between ten o'clock, P. M. and 2 o'clock, A. M. It is desirable that the roots should be covered with earth which has for several days been exposed to the effects of air and light. This should be settled by copious watering, which forces the earth between the roots, and not by pressure with the feet. For t first fifteen days after transplanting the boughs and leaves of the trees should be abundant sprinkled.—Philadelphia Record.

THE NESTING OF FISHES.—The New York Commercial Advertiser says that Manag Spencer of the Aquarium of the Battery, H had years of experience with fishes, and through constant study of them in captivity has, according to his own statement, not only been compelled to believe that they have a reasoning power higher than instinct, but that they are equipped with a means of communication which is the next natural step upwards, point of intelligence.

"That the fishes talk or communicate is sound is hardly probable," says Spencer "but actions often speak louder than words and by means of various actions there is certainly some sort of understanding maintained between different fish. Communication does not necessarily have to be by sounds. It means of words we convey our thoughts to other people, and in the order of animal life between fishes and man nearly all have means of vocal expression. To my mind, the conduct of certain fishes—in fact, a large majority of them—during the breeding season shows most conclusively that each fish has some means of knowing the intention and attitude of the other. Take, for instance the common bass, which exemplifies this theory as well as any other. From specimens in captivity have noticed that a distinct understanding exists. When the time for breeding arrives the male bass selects a certain spot of gravel where the spawn of the female is to be deposited.

"Of the spot in the sand he takes possession, and to do so he does not necessarily have to fight and defeat every other male fish in the tank. In many instances I have seen a male fish much smaller than others in the same tank mark off such a place and retain possession without coming in conflict with any of his neighbors. After he has selected a spot for a nest he arranges a slight hollow in the sand to suit his domestic fancy, and then induces the female to deposit her spawn. After this has happened he kindly tells her go about her business, and he proceeds to take care of the eggs and rear the young fish when they are hatched. This little spot, home, and all the other fish in the tank, large and small, respect its sacredness.

"The little stickleback, which is one of the most pugnacious fishes, although one of the smallest at the Aquarium, shows a degree of intelligence that is remarkable. Like the bass, the male fish builds the nest, carries the eggs while incubating and afterwards guards the young. One pair of these fish reared a family a short while since in one of the smaller tanks at the Aquarium. The male fish built the nest by collecting small bits of dead weed and tiny fragments of debris, which he arranged in a circle. When the receptacle for the eggs was completed it bore a remarkable resemblance to the nests of some bird and was apparently as well constructed. The eggs were deposited in due time, and the father stickleback settled down to a tireless vigil until the little sticklebacks should cast off the yolk sac and swim forth independent into the water.

world. The little fishes grew rapidly, and it took a day or so before they would be entirely free from the cumbersome sacs. The tale in passing over the nest where the young were swirled the water with his tail, with the sult that two of the tiny fishes were swept several inches from the nest. Seeing what had done, the father set about to repair the damage. He swam to the nearest offering, and, seizing it carefully in his mouth, ram with it back to the nest. Then he returned the other one in the same way, and, if satisfied with this achievement, settled down beside the nest contented."

SENATOR Chauncey M. Depew carries with him slips entitled "The Habit of Unhappiness," which he distributes to friends. The essay is as follows:

"Most unhappy people have become so by actually forming a habit of unhappiness, complaining about the weather, finding fault with their food, with crowded cars and with agreeable companions or work. A habit of complaining, of criticizing, or fault-finding or umbling over trifles, a habit of looking for drawbacks, is a most unfortunate habit to contract, especially in early life, for after a while a victim becomes a slave. All of the impulses become perverted, until the tendency to pessimism, to cynicism, is chronic."

"To this we add the following from H. L. Larnear: Those who can repress complaints, murmurs, and peevish bemoaning—better still, vexed feelings which beset us when those could inflict petty annoyances and slights on—will really find that their little daily worries are turning into blessings."

Items Concerning the Society.

The memorials of Charles Rhoads and Debbie E. Depew have been printed, and may be had at 304 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

We ought to state that the note in these Items last week, entitled "The Failure of Unfriendly Methods for Friends' Meetings," was written by an William Graham in the London Friend.

A Chinese Epistle was read in the London Women's Yearly Meeting, opening as follows:—"Greeting on the fifth-day of second moon, in the thirtieth year of the Emperor Kwany Hsu, our Yearly Meeting was held here."

"An interruption" is said to have occurred, "of a nature somewhat rare in recent years, namely the visit of a man Friend under a concern to visit a Women's Meeting. With admirable brevity and directness he delivered his message."

THE OLDEST MEETING-HOUSE.—A writer in the London Friend describing Brigflatts Meeting-house, the oldest Friends' meeting-house in the world, that it was erected in the year 1675, mentions its neighborhood Firbank Fell, on which "George Fox's Pulpit" is still pointed out. There his three years' sermon mightily moved the multitude and started the remarkable missionary journey of early Friends." It is said the young blacksmith as converted in the meeting-house through the ministrations of Sarah Wilson, who appears to have delivered a pointed message given to her. "A traditional Quaker thow comest to the meeting as thou comest from it, and art no better for thy coming, but what thou doest in the end?" One of the "most pathetic and able exponents of Quakerism"—the late Bishop Westcott—came on a pilgrimage to this meeting-house shortly before he died, in company with Llewellyn Davies. To him it was a worthy object-lesson.

Notes in General.

Judge Alton B. Parker, whom the Democratic National Convention at St. Louis nominated for President, belongs to the extreme "Catholic" party in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

"It is probably true that the compromising minister may 'reach' and 'influence' more people than the faithful preacher, but when he has 'reached' them what good has he done?"—Christian Magazine.

In the London Meeting for Sufferings a successful year's work in reference to the Doukhobors was chronicled, especially in regard to the school and nursing. Nurse Boyle feels that the Doukhobor women can now be left to work alone, and has returned to the States. The people, as a whole, are becoming very prosperous, and there is likely to be a struggle ere long between the communal and the individualistic ideals.

As the result of the Independence Day celebration throughout the country, fifty-two persons were killed and 2049 injured.

It is said that last year in this country, 432 persons died of lockjaw as a result of our noisy and barbarous way of celebrating the Fourth. Can any one name a battle in the Spanish War that cost so many lives of our people? How many battles of the Revolution can you name which were so fatal as this battle of ignorance under the name of patriotism?

A California clergyman, on a return visit to New England, notices changes in the thought of religious denominations. "I was impressed with the fact," says he, "that the question of the preacher's theology, conservative or liberal, is altogether secondary. In Boston the pastor of the Fremont Temple Church, a conservative of the conservatives, earnest, warm-hearted, strongly evangelical, speaks in plain terms of salvation through Christ, to congregations that regularly number from two to three thousand. The vital quality of the message, its adaptation to the daily needs of men, and the manifest presence of the Holy Spirit in and through it, seem to leave the question of liberality or conservatism quite to one side. The main thing is a spirit-filled, man-loving minister behind the pulpit, preaching with a definite purpose and steadily realizing it in the salvation of his hearers."

PASTORAL MONOPOLIZING.—The ministers who do everything keep their churches in the kindergarten stage of development. Clerical monopolization carried to its legitimate conclusion ends in Roman Catholicism. The clergy of the mediæval church gathered up into their hands the finance, the worship, the work of the church, and degraded the laity to the level of spectators. The clergy could read the Bible better than the laymen could, and so even this thing was monopolized by the priests. Alas, for the church that has a minister who is always doing things because he can do them better than anybody else! He himself will have nervous prostration at the end of the day, and the church will have something worse. It is the business of a minister to develop his people by rolling upon their shoulders church responsibilities, and one of the burdens which laymen ought to carry is that of financial administration. It is better to have a few hunders committed by men who are trying to do their duty than to have things run superbly by one man in the midst of a congregation of dummies.—Presbyterian Journal.

A Presbyterian minister writes that "church fairs and suppers and entertainments, held for the purpose of paying the church's debts, are an abomination in the sight of God—and it is amazing they are not a stench in the nostrils of all Christian people. Not one valid word can be said in their defense. They are evil, always, wholly irremediably evil. I know how many arguments can be brought in their support, but this only proves that there are many Christians who are yet in the stone age of spiritual discernment. If I were the pope of America I would declare it a mortal sin for any church to raise money by any commercial schemes whatsoever, and any church persisting in doing so should have its building sold and its name erased from the roll of Christian churches. How can we hope to make Christianity even respectable so long as churches sell ice cream and peddle bric-a-brac, in order to carry on their work? Such action defeats the very end for which the Church of God exists. The commercial instinct is already overdeveloped in the majority of men. Imagine Jesus holding a fair! Imagine John selling oysters that an additional missionary might be put in the field! Imagine Paul supporting his work in Ephesus or Corinth by urging men to eat ice cream for the glory of God! The fact that so many churches in America do these things, without realizing the enormity of their sin, is one of the most lamentable and appalling signs of the times."

THE LEADER OF ZIONISM.—Recently there has been announced the death of Dr. Herzl, the unquestioned leader in Zionism. Interesting facts have been brought to light. He was very highly educated. After securing his degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the University of Vienna, he chose literature and journalism as his lifework, wrote comedies, and was a special representative of a leading Vienna paper in Paris. Though a Jew, up to that time he knew practically nothing of his people's history, literature, religion, and ideals. The following incident shows how he was led to study them thoroughly: "One day he had occasion to go to one of the large railway stations of the French capital. There he saw emerging from trains a horde of timid, unkempt, hungry-looking human beings. He saw them transferred from that station to another under the watchful eyes of officials bent on insuring their departure from French soil. He made inquiries, and was told that these people were Russian Jews bound for America." The impression was deepened by the anti-Semitic wave which reached its high water-mark with the degradation of Dreyfus:

Herzl was an eyewitness of this event. Upon returning home from the courtyard of the Ecole Militaire, with the cry "A bas les Juifs!" still ringing in his ears, Herzl resolutely set himself to the task of providing a feasible solution for the problem involving the survival of his people. The immediate result of his travail was the publication of his pamphlet, "Judenstadt," in 1896; the second result, the gathering of the first Zionist congress in Basle in 1897.

Dr. Herzl was like Saul among his brethren, head and shoulders above them; tall, powerful, and of distinguished bearing. "Little swarzer," says a Jew, who considers him a prince in Israel, "that Emperor William could not suppress a look of admiration when he first set eyes on him at the gate of Jerusalem, that Joseph Chamberlain could not forget him while viewing the natural beauties of the great tract of land in British East Africa now at the Zionists' disposal, that De Plevie himself at Saint Petersburg could not but take him into his confidence and address him as the official representative of the Jewish people."

We shall now see whether his death is fatal to his cause, or whether there shall be the establishment of "a legal established State" in Palestine to which such Jews as wish may go.—Christian Advocate.

THE BATAVIA EXPERIMENT.—Grading in our modern schools has proved as disastrous in one direction as it has favorable in another. The weaker and slower have been compelled to compete with the physically stronger and the intellectually more rapid workers. John Kennedy, superintendent of the schools at Batavia, N. Y., found this problem crowding for solution. Then came an inspiration. "Let us," said he to the "Governor's" Board, "put an end to this killing of children." He proposed an extra teacher in every room, whose office would not be to hear recitations, but to give personal counsel and aid to any pupil falling behind in his class. It was to be purely a work of sympathy, requiring a person of fine tact. The experiment was tried in a single room, but the result was so marked on both pupils and teachers that what is called the Batavia Experiment is now spreading through the better class of schools in the whole United States. Although at the time when the experiment was first made we had an article about it, the value of the experiment cannot be too often reiterated. The recitation teacher is stimulated to do less nagging, while released from goading. The pupils, on the other hand, are relieved from trying to go through their strength and ability. Superintendent Kennedy says: "Schools may be administered to death, they may be mired in life." The president of the Board says: "This method of meeting our problem is not only a revelation; it is a revolution. It is of more than local importance." The effect on the health of the children was as marked as that on their scholarship. Children found it no longer necessary to take books home for night study—indeed, were forbidden to do so. A mother, rejoicing over a boy restored to health and intellectual vigor, declared it to be "A new phase of Christianity." As many as six times the number of pupils remain to graduate from the high school. This seems to be due in part to the fact that school life is more attractive and in part to the better health of the pupils. Perhaps there is nothing new in the idea of this experiment, but there is something new in the method. It is a realization of the Pestalozzian idea, that each pupil has a right to be personally educated for what he can best achieve. It is apparently a solution of one of the most anxious problems of modern life. We cannot afford to break down our young people in the process of preparing them for citizenship.

—The Independent.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—As the result of a stubborn disagreement, chiefly over wages for unskilled labor, an extensive strike in the meat packing industry of the United States began on the 12th inst. in Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Joseph, Mo., and other cities where large packing plants are located. More than 45,000 employees are involved. The price of beef has advanced in many places. In New York City the increased demand for poultry, eggs and vegetables caused by the lack of meat has raised the price of these commodities. In many restaurants have begun to feel the effect of the strike, and prices are being advanced in all eating places.

In the poorer sections of the city, on the East Side, many of the butcher shops, unable to procure a stock, have been forced to close their doors. In the tenement houses of the district many families are going without meat altogether.

Local dealers in Philadelphia state that shipments of live cattle had been made from various points. A large quantity of beef on the hoof, they say, is on its way from Virginia and Maryland; a great deal more has been shipped from the West.

A special report of the Census Bureau on occupations show that in continental United States the total number of persons engaged in gainful occupations in 1900 was 29,073,233, which was one-half of the population, 10 years of age and over, and nearly two-fifths of the entire population. Those of foreign birth aggregated 5,851,295, or one-fifth of the total number of gainful workers, and the statistics show that the immigration of twenty years has not increased the proportion of the foreign born in the working population of the country. Nearly 40 per cent. of the men and boys reported were engaged in agriculture.

O. F. Cook, discoverer of the Guatemala boll-weeviling ants, has telegraphed the Department of Agriculture from Texas that the new ants are destroying cotton boll worms and are attacking the similar injurious insects with a greater avidity than they do the boll weevils. Another important note is that they do not injure the lady-bird larvae, which are beneficial insects. He reports that the agricultural value of the ants now depends chiefly upon acclimatization and rapidity of propagation. These matters are being investigated.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has announced its statistics for the Southern States for the fiscal year ended Sixth Month, 30, 1903. They show that the par value of the railway capital then outstanding was $12,599,990,258, which represents a capitalization of $63,126,996,268.

The number of passengers carried was 694,891,535, an increase of 1,011,000 over the previous year. A despatch from Chattanooga, Tennessee, states that a prominent Mormon official has purchased substantial buildings in that city for the permanent establishment of headquarters for the Mormon Church in the South. All the Southern States will be in his jurisdiction and missionaries will be sent out from here. The headquarters were in Atlanta.

FOREIGN.—A despatch from London of the 12th says: The Foreign Office announces that a treaty was signed to-day by Foreign Minister Lansdowne and Count Wolf Metternich, the German Ambassador, providing for the settlement by arbitration of differences which may arise in a legal nature, or relating to the interpretation of the existing treaties between Germany and Great Britain. The terms of the agreement are identical with those recently concluded with France, Italy and Spain.

Statements have been published of a recent repulse of the Japanese in an engagement near Port Arthur with a loss of 2500 men. On another late occasion it is said Japanese troops were ambushed and 1000 of them destroyed.

A despatch of the 13th from Russia says: The harvest in parts of the country has been almost a failure, and that frost has seriously injured some of the crops. In one Province, that of Kieff, the Governor has instructed his local authorities to take all possible measures to prevent a famine.

A number of French Arch-bishops and bishops having sympathy with the republican government of France, it is said, lately received orders from Rome to tender their resignations to the Papal authorities. The prelates, it is added, consulted the Minister of Public Worship and the Interior, who directed them to tender their resignations, on the ground that the concordat required the assent of the State before removals were enforced.

Thereafter the Papal Secretary of State threatened the prelates with the termination of their episcopal powers unless they came to Rome within fifteen days. This also was submitted to Combes, who forbade the bishops leaving their posts. It is asserted that the majority of the bishops without consulting the government's wishes will be considered as a formal renunciation of the relations between Church and State.

A despatch from Rangoon, India, says: Captain E. R. Kost, of the Indian medical service, has succeeded in curing the bubonic leprosy, the bubonic typhoid, which, when injected into lepers, has a marked beneficial action in alleviating the symptoms of the disease. More than 100 cases of leprosy are being treated in Burmah by injections of this substance, and the treatment is also being tried at thirty places in India. Already four cases are reported cured, and in a great majority of cases of the same order treatment the improvement is marked.

The British Cancer Research Committee publishes the following: "In view of the increasing prevalence of cancer the committee deems it its duty to call attention to what may be done to combat the increase.

"No specific cure for cancer is yet known, but, as with cancer, the earlier treatment is begun, the greater the chance of success. Unfortunately, a large number of people put off seeking the advice of a doctor, instead of going to him immediately they notice anything wrong.

"The committee feels that it cannot too strongly state how important it is that the disease be recognized at the earliest possible moment. This recognition can be attained only by the patient going to the doctor for examination at the very beginning of the illness."

A despatch from Russia of the 11th says: The system of condemning political prisoners by administrative order has been abolished by imperial decree, and persons accused of political crimes henceforth will be tried by the courts, under the recent procedure. The reform is most far-reaching, ending forever the arbitrary condemnation to exile or even death of political suspects without the intervention of the courts. It is considered to be one of the most sweeping reforms of this generation.

A late despatch says: "An official statement regarding the imperial decree issued three days ago abolishing the system of condemning political prisoners by administrative order and granting them a regular trial in court for being sent to Siberia, shows that it is except stipulated that the order shall not apply to special cases." It has been stated by Gen. K. Koman that 1000 persons have been exiled to Siberia in one year—it is said that in many cases the offences were comparatively trivial.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, all dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

Joshua S. Wills, N. J.; $6 for himself, Jesse Sh. and Allen R. Sharpless; Howard A. Mickle, N. J.; R. T. Mickle, G'n.; William Berry, G'n.; Charles Ballu N. J.; Mark B. Wills, N. J.; M. T. Akins, Pa.; Wm. Warren, Pa., and for S. Eliza Warren, N. J.; Jo. Thomason, Phila., and for Dr. H. S. Thomason, Cal.; J. Satterthwaite, Pa.; Hannah B. Horne, Ind.; Joseph Bettles and for Susanna G. Bettles, Ill.; Samuel S. Gill, Cal.; Caleb Wood, Phila.; Anna Deacon, N. J.; W. L. Moore, N. J.; Thos. D. Hoopes, Pa.; D. D. Maris, I. Joseph G. Evans, N. J.; Mary N. Sharpless, Pa.; Sarah A. Wills, N. J.; Debe F. Stokes, N. J.; T. Lee Haines G'n.; Alfred C. Haines, N. J.; S. S. Haines, N. J.; A. and E. Harvey, Phila.; Jennie M. Harter, Phila.; P. Haines, Phila.; Jacob R. Elfrath, Pa.; Jane P. C. Phila.; J. H. Dewees, Pa.; Anna T. Griffith, Pa.; E. Beth Allen, G'n.; Benj. H. Coppock, Agent, Iowa; Elbert Emmons, Edward Edgerton, Joseph Edger Thomas Blackburn, Divis C. Hampton and Lydia H. Thomas, 70 cts.; James G. McCollin, and for Frances B. McCollin, Phila.; Rowland J. Dutton, N. J.; Emily Pusey, Pa.;becca F. B. Hulme, Phila.; Rachel E. Bell, Pa.; Wil T. Cooper, N. J.; Charles Grimshaw, Pa.; Sarah De Cou, N. J.; Richard C. Shoemaker, Pa.; $6 for him Conly B. Shoemaker, Jr., and Elizabeth L. Bradley; B. E. Ogden, Pa.; Joseph Evans, N. J.; Rubama J. McCollin, Wash., $1 to No. 27, V. 78; William Smallwood, Charles S. Carter, Pa.; A. Egle Haines, N. J.; James Moon, Pa.; Matilda W. Warner, Pa.; Rebecca A. Cox J.; Rebecca E. Haines and for Susan L. Haines, Pa.; Kite, G'n., and for Esther K. Alsop, Pa.; Thos. K. Bur. Act. Mass., $14 for himself, Sarah E. Mitchell, S. Gidley, Isaah S. Gifford, Jr., James T. James, Tucker and Jesse R. Tucker; Mary N. Glover, N. J. for herself, Virginia Nicholson and Eliza C. N. Brown Joshua Jeffers, Pa.; Hannah P. Smedley, Pa.; Mary I. dolph, Phila.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Wanted.—A Friend to teach two children and act as household visits. Address "R."

Office of THE FRIEND.

Wanted.—A young woman Friend as mother's help and to assist in light household duties.

Address B. J.

Office of THE FRIEND.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., Phila. During the Seventh and Eighth Months the Library be open on Fifth-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

The Friends' City Home can accommodate a young man, who may propose to spend the summer months in the city. Address Mary T. Wildman, 1623 Sans Street.

Friends' Select School.—Friends who desire enter children for the school year beginning next N. Month, may kindly communicate their wishes to the Secretary, at 104 Arch Street, for names.

J. HENRY BARTLETT,

140 N. 16th St., Phila.

Westown Boarding School.—A stated meeting of the Committee on Admissions will be held in the (the new) Room, at Fourth and Arch Streets, on Saturday, the 23rd inst., at 10 A. M.

JOHN W. BIDDLE, Cler.

MARRIED, at Friends' Meeting-house, Medford, N. J. on the nineteenth of Fifth Month, 1904, ALLEN R. SHARPLESS, son of Caspar T. and Rachel Sharpless, of Cambridge, N. J., (the latter deceased) and MARY T. WILLS, daughter of Joshua S. and Rebecca W. Wills, of Medford.

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS
No. 42 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 30, 1904.

No. 3.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price 1¢ if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

scriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,

PHILADELPHIA.

(Sent from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,

No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"Things Happen in Silence."

People have come to meeting when nothing was said, and have gone away entirely silent people."

to testified a visitor from England lately, in a new England meeting on Ministry. Silence was his hearing ear for that "more vital speaking which is without words." In meeting for worship which permit the hearing of "still, small voice," men are thrown in the sight of themselves. They cannot stand this long, without turning to the way of hope,—the equally inward revelation of their inner's love and life,—known in the authority of the true and holy Witness. "A combined voice" of living worshippers seems to carry within it a peculiar virtue into this effect. We have entered such a meeting clothed as we are with their old man, and come out of it with a new man put on the new man.

Indeed, things do happen in silence,—if not the most majestic of them in nature, why not the most spiritual in grace? The bursting of buds into blossoms and leaves; the mighty pulsations and speed of stupendous orbs day after day through space, in the majesty of the silence of works truly great, all preach the lesson of that which must happen only in silence. That certain pulsations in a sphere of air about one of these globes is essential to the worship worthy of the Creator and Operator of the Universe, is a contention derogatory to the Majesty of the King of Heaven. He being Spirit, the true part of his worship is in no grosser element.

He who beloved of the Almighty are the rich to have the humility of the poor, and the poor who have the magnanimity of the rich. Sadi.

"The Pedigree of Quakerism."

(Concluded from page 9.)

The remainder of Buell's blinded observations quoted in the Literary Digest have little to do with the genesis of Quakerism. Were he alone reporting on our religious testimonies as a stranger in a strange land, we might leave his case with a simple appeal from the man literary to the man spiritual. But he is not alone in this, and because there is congenial company for him in the same blindness which has happened to our Israel while the fulness of a gentile wave is coming in to overwhelm our testimony for truth, we do not shun to face his thrusts, even tho' without time to quench them. Says Duell of George Fox:

He also advised,—tho' we can not find that he rigidly prescribed—a peculiar style of dress for each sex which he himself designed and set the example of wearing as "an emblem of equality among men and a token of humility before God." [Which he is quoting, we cannot tell.] Fox is doubtless the only one who ever believed that dress could make men equal, or that God takes account of fashion-plates.

George Fox would be likely to have advised, —he probably did so by his example,—a simple garb independent of the changing fashions of time after time. And any form of dress, staying behind the fashions in order not to be their slave, must soon become peculiar. And fashion cannot complain of a steadfast dress on account of peculiarity, for peculiarity is all that fashion itself lives on,—the peculiar whim of a season. A simple steadfastness is peculiar towards flitting fashions forever, while fashion is ever on the dance to be peculiar towards itself of last season. Whether a steadfast peculiarity for God's sake be more fanatical than the flighty peculiarities for the goddess Fashion's sake, judge ye. That Fox believed that "dress could make men equal," rests on the essayist's innuendo only; but that no other man or woman ever believed so, we doubt when we see the attempted equalization of men as uniform parts of a machine under the demand of war, or others aping a social equalization under the demand of fashion.

Our distinctive attire was an evolution, and not a dictation. Fashion forced it rather than Fox; fashion left it distinctive by leaving the simplicity of an unchanging garb behind. And then Friends, left unique in the dignity of freemen from the bondage of that Mistress of worldliness, awoke to the discovery that they had builded better than they new. Non-conformity to worldliness had invested them with an outward sign of an inward grace; a badge of principles, that he who runs may read what persons of that appearance stand for, and may meditate on those truths with greater openness than if argued with in words; and the weak among us may be safeguarded from weariness, lest, as those bearing the standards of another profession say, "we belie, or dishonor the flag."

But when it is alleged that Fox stands alone in history as believing that "God takes account of fashion plates," we must refer the writer and his readers to what Isaiah believed in chapter iii: 18-24 and Paul in Timothy ii: 9, and Peter in chapter iii: 3. Surely God does take account of fashion plates, if he takes account of vanity. Said Campbell Morgan recently. "I never see a Salvation Army lass with her plain bonnet but that I feel like uncovering my head in worship,—not in worship of the bonnet, but of the spirit that prompts the wearing."

Proceeding to brand Fox's (and accordingly Isaiah's and Christ's) tenet of universal peace as "visionary and chimerical," and claiming that Quakerism "would never have had a chance to breathe but for the fighting of Cromwell's Puritans" and others (when the case was that had they or the early Christians taken to arms they would have ceased to breathe very summarily), the author indulges this assertion:

There is a fundamental trait in human nature—a trait than which none other lies nearer the foundation of all truth, right, and manhood—that may be described as an instinctive distrust of any doctrine or principle which its devotees are not willing to fight for.

We admit this, and contend that the devotees of Quakerism fought for their principles with their lives, as many martyrdoms show. And persecution may yet prove which of modernist members are Friends by their doing or suffering the same and for the same. But what of the Christians of the first three centuries, whose almost invariable declaration for their Prince of Peace was, "I am a Christian, and therefore I cannot fight!" This was a fighting in which both the early Christians and the early Friends were valiant for the truth upon earth. What our biographer conceives as "fighting" for principle, is the killung of men,—perhaps the most unprincipled and beastlike mode of fighting inventable. But the weapons of the Christian's warfare are not carnal, but sublime with all that spiritual heroism which the Apostle in enumerating them describes. Ephesians vi: 11-17; 2 Corinthians x: 3-5. If fighting means persistent struggle even unto death with powers of evil, if it means the sacrifice of worldly possessions and family endearments in testimony for a cause, if it means the unflinching facing of obloquy and public wrath for Truth's sake, then are Friends known as among the eminent fighters in history. Cromwell would not say they were not. As between soldiers of the Cross and soldiers of blood, the day shall yet declare where the crown belongs.

And when the writer calls the use of the singular number, thee and thou, to a single person "frivolous," he ridicules Christ and the Bible, he ridicules truth as a foundation for language. Whereas, one ought to honor most such scruples as hug closest to a sense of truth.* Also, to conceive the avoidance of catering to human pride by untrue forms of compliment which tickle vanity, as "a denial of the first tenets of Christ's religion," is not to know Christ. In assuming that the first tenet of his religion is to "do unto others whatsoever ye (disciples) would that they should do unto you," is it his tenet that we should indulge one's wishes irrespective of truth, irrespective of harm through his lusts or pride? Is etiquette as a Christian virtue to stand in dominion above truth, to ignore it or smother it at convenience? The essayist may infer that George Fox, in rising superior to conventional falsifications, was rude or discourteous. But such grace was found in the savor of his demeanor that William Penn, who knew him better, could testify. "He was courteous above all forms of breeding." There are innocent forms of civility which, as habitual reminders, help to keep us inwardly conformed to civility; just as "thee and thou," as forms of truth, and also the conscience to avoid other forms as untruth, serve to conform us to "truth in the inward parts." But from within outward is the surest education of considerateness for others, and an uncivil Quaker has much of Quakerism yet to learn.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Teachers Convinced of Our Principles.

There is much in "The School Rearing of a Religious Society" that is suggestive of deep thought and centres the mind upon our great needs in the acquisition of knowledge—and in "The Mission of a Friends' School" my heart responds approvingly to the sentiment expressed by the writer—"I feel strongly that we should take greater pains to secure Friends as teachers in our schools"—I would add, Friends from conviction—entering upon and pursuing their calling with hearts loving the Truth and loving children. Then might we open our schools to some non-members in confident expectation "that a knowledge of Friends and their distinctive faith (would) be instilled" in all alike—and that with "a wider ideal than the enlargement of our membership"—rather "in the Spirit of the prayer"—"Thy kingdom come."

"Modernism" would be much more easily baffled in its approaches upon the heritage, if those to whom we entrust the care of our children during the formative period of their lives, could only be imbued with a sense of the value and importance to the religious world of those principles that separate us from others in the practice of holiness.

Our teachers are to-day the most potent factor in "The School Rearing of a Religious Society"—not the committee in charge—it is the teachers who example and teach—it is they, who, themselves convinced, may mold the views and aspirations of the young.

This brings us to a consideration of the importance of co-operation between teacher and parent—where both are alike truly concerned for the child's highest good, letter writing between them will be unconstrained and lovingly performed—unjust criticism will be checked and "wisdom will be justified of her children;" co-operation is made easy. With the best possible conditions at school, indifference at home will spoil every effort to secure a hearty co-operation.

There seems to be special need just now for asking of the Lord that He would send into this teaching field, laborers of His own choosing, in-as-much as the tendency at present, is to select without reference to the religious views and standing of the appointee—literary and scientific attainment transcend religious character—would that ye might have both, for surely with the humble, they are not incompatible—then with all the rest and not apart from it would our "distinctive faith be instilled in the ordinary history lesson and in special classes"—"These things ought ye to have done and not to leave the others undone."

The Educational Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting is doing a much needed work in a most satisfactory manner, the value of which will be seen still more conspicuously in its effects upon some of our outlying meetings.

Westtown with enlarged opportunities might be vastly more serviceable to the Yearly Meeting at large than it is: with the door opened for admission into the school of such as are seeking to enter, whose parents with the of motives desire such an opportunity for children—whose affiliations are already laid with Friends, I expect we should find patronage of the school augmented by a very tractable, valuing the privilege at its worth. By "taking counsel of our fears' postpone (I use the word advisedly) from year to year, entering upon "a plantation" at hand that promises good future accord to the measure of labor bestowed consistently for Truth's sake, that the whole may be edified together.

SAMUEL EMLE

"Come To Stay."

Such is the easy-going popular phrase reference to admitted evils, which it is that it is useless to combat, since they entrenched themselves for good. The free of intoxicants, loose marriage relations, dissipation in high life, the impurities of theatre, the iniquities of the fleshly novel abominations of our great cities, have "come to stay." The phrase is quote the conscienceless man, in a spirit of brav as though evil had the upper hand, and be accepted as a fact, and given its prerogative right of way. It is quoted by the good disheartened man, who feels, somehow, there is a strong drift which it is useless contend against; that demoralizing practice as so entrenched in popular favor and that we may as well save our denunciations and opposition; we can gain no headway, must accept the situation and make the of it.

Such a philosophy as that cuts the nerve all action, and breeds an ignoble passivity; implied acquiescence in wrong-doing! reforms of the world have been accomplished not by letting things drift along their course, but by fighting the good fight of Christ has won His victories, not by preting that the bad will be sloughed off by inherent tendency, and the good will prevail by an inevitable law, but by struggling unceasingly warring against the worst on behalf of the best.—Western Christian Advocate.

How much of waste power there is in world! Turn where we will, we see ta unused, energies unemployed, opportunity for self-improvement and for individual public service neglected, gifts of body, and heart squandered, and acquisitions through lack of right and adequate direct Church and State are suffering because those who could fill to advantage important and full spheres fail to meet the demands through lack of plan, purpose, co-ordination and concentration, or through indifference and failure to grasp the situation and the need. This is a loud call for a proper recognition of existing conditions and for a hearty and complete response on the part of all who are more or less qualified for service to the calls that come to them in the various circles in which they move.—Ex.

If our hearts were only as ready as ours, when God's blessings smile at us, should answer back with a smile.

* To use the term "trifles" in connection with the attitude taken by the early Friends with regard to mode of address and of salutation is to entirely miss the ground of this testimony. In the Sixteenth century the singular pronoun was spoken only to "inferior" people, and the taking off of the hat was the acknowledgment of "inferiority." Hence the rage of some parents against their sons, and the deep resentment of all kindred dignitaries when these tokens of deference were withheld. But George Fox and his associates felt that, through the maintenance of these testimonies they were obeying a command to proclaim the brotherhood of man; and, in doing so, stood like a stone wall against any imposition of servile domination upon men under authority or in less prosperous conditions. The manner of carrying out Christ's injunction—that we should comport ourselves to all men as brethren and as servants of the one Master—will vary according to circumstances and conditions; but the Friends of to-day must be careful not to forget their debt to the martyrs of truth and of freedom, and must, in some form, bear witness against the trials of man. "Till the false die away, and the wrong disappears."—Australian Friend.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

the Land of Promise in Sunshine and Shadow.

(Continued from page 13.)

arning over our page of exposition we come to a chapter on religious and moral life in Palestine. The endeavors of our own people to be first in order. Beginning with the oldest and oldest mission in Jerusalem, there is mentioned the now greatly extended mission of the English State Church, known as the Episcopal Church, both for the Jews and the Arabs,—under the care respectively of the reverend Messrs. Kell and Zeller. They have a mission station in Jaffa, where I became acquainted with the able and loving Pastor Anderson.

When about to put up a meeting house here, the Society had similar trouble to obtain the necessary permission as in the case of the Syrian mission. The Turkish officers will always permit it to appear as if this was a matter of trifling importance. Petitions are forwarded to Constantinople, if considered too elephantine for the officers in Jerusalem, including the Patriarch. The Society, having fairly exhausted its patience and treasury, invented a successful idea. A camel stable was asked for and allowed to be erected, which was granted. The building remained vacant for about one year, when it was changed—for which there is no law—into a church house. This Mission is a large establishment in Jerusalem, including a printing press and shop for the manufacture of fancy articles, such as pens, pen cases, crosses, little boxes, etc., out of olive wood.

The next oldest Protestant concern is the Armenian Orphanage, not a mission in the ordinary sense, but of such a character. The name "Armenian" must not mislead one to mistake it for an institution of Syrian management. The founder, J. L. Schneller, named the House because the firstlings were orphans from a massacre of the nominal Christians by the never fully subdued tribe of the Druses of Mt. Lebanon. A people identical with the Armenians in Armenia. In the former slaughter of a thousand, according to other reports thirty thousand Greek Christians fell a victim to fanaticism with combined Mohammedan aid.

This occurred in 1860. "After the child was drowned," the European Powers "covered their eyes," by putting Mt. Lebanon under an international government until the present day. The question why a like step has not been taken in favor of the greater and far more civilized country, Armenia, can be answered in the oriental—universal problem, should such an occurrence take place in the Jewish Home, the European Powers would not be slack in laying hands on the country immediately, in whatever international conflicts this might result. All prepared, France and Russia are keeping their eyes on it. England is maintaining herself as a door neighbor in Egypt. All this is well known and fully understood at the "High Commission" in Stambul.

While the massacres went on undisturbed in Palestine, the soldiery in Jerusalem was doubled, with the strictest notice to the Pasha that nothing of the kind shall take place in Judea. My arrival in Beyrouth, was expected because two native Christians had been found murdered. An anxiety that happily proved useless. However, rumors of war went on continually and our people in Jaffa—certainly also in other coast cities of Palestine—became quite uneasy. Their fears did not seem without ground altogether, for during my homeward voyage from Jaffa to Port Said I observed four war steamers in one night, and there may have been more, for I did not watch to count the armored peacemakers.

The subject, not justifying a further branching off from the highway of charity into fields of barbarous bloodshed bids us to take up the thread of the Orphanage, where we dropped it. The history of this Institution is certainly eventful. A few sketches may suffice for the esteemed reader to form a judgment in imagination.

1. Establishment and maintenance of work dependent on private charity.
2. Father Schneller, sent by the Chrischona Society in Switzerland to assist Gobat, released with honor when taking up this work of his life.
3. Beginning with twenty-seven boys from Lebanon, in subsequent years Arabic orphans from all over the country, reaching the number of one hundred and fifty children in care up to 1896.
4. After that giving preference to Armenian orphans, reaching a climax of about three hundred.
5. Bir Salem as agricultural branch colony partly established.
6. From 1860-70 repeatedly visited by vandals, robbed of all belongings. Attacks on life.
7. Decree of the German Consul to quit orphanage for want of protection, (one-and-a-half mile north of city). Inmates of the same are guests in an English school for one year.
8. Intervening of the Powers, resulting in the establishment of military posts (of little account) in certain rural districts, including vicinity of orphanage.
9. Two attacks on the same thereafter. Father Schneller robbed of his clothes on his way home.
10. Ten feet high stone wall around orphanage buildings,—an imperative necessity. Iron door and guard all day up to date, not so much now as a measure against robbers, but against thieves.
11. Various difficulties.
12. Great persistency required.
13. Problem: "What manner of child shall this be?"
14. Father Schneller called to his reward on the 18th of Tenth Month, 1896.
15. His oldest son, Theodore Schneller, superintendent after his father's departure.
16. All the real estate consigned to a syndicate in 1892, (?) to avoid all the charities becoming a victim of the Turkish law.
17. Mamma Schneller deceased Fourth Month 30th, 1902. "Talitha Kum?" (Mark. v: 41) is the orphanage for girls, independent of the former and supported by German charity, as is also the Evangelical Hospital and the Asylum for Lepers. The Gobat School is an English boarding school, founded by that famous Swiss missionary in English service, who died as royal bishop in 1879 and was buried on Mt. Zion.

An Armenian Orphanage of recent date is reported from Bethlehem.

A respectable private mission among the Jews is that of the aged Abraham Ben-Oliel. Born in Morocco as a Jew, led to faith in Christ on Gibraltar, he served many years in Arabic-speaking countries under the auspices of the English Episcopal Church, after which he established a private mission in Jaffa, but followed an invitation to Jerusalem. His wife and daughters are teaching Jewish women sewing, and school learning to children.

The Russian-Orthodox own a villa of five splendid buildings with high iron fence around a yard and gate closed at night. Here are different apartments by grade for the accommodation of Russian pilgrims, where they may make themselves comfortable according to their financial ability.

All the Catholic churches there pretend to labor as missionaries to the native population, while in reality it is but proselyting—and that only—by making Latin Greeks, and Greeks Latin. The Russian pilgrims make out the largest percentage of the religious visitors of Jerusalem. The Volga River, the Black Sea and other waters besides the Mediterranean allow a cheaper way of travelling than from any other country. The thousands of pilgrims, both men and women, are evidently of the laboring classes. To our eye they have many curious features, as has every nationality, that is a product of circumstances. These people, misled and superstitious as they are, certainly understand how to adjust themselves according to teachings and limitations.

Another religious organization, just as self-conscious as any of the foregoing, is the Paris-Jewish Alliance. It is their motive to render their people in a measure independent of the Christian missionaries. The rabbis threaten with as much energy and as powerful an anathema as do the Catholic priests. But however strong the Jews may cling to the tradition of their fathers, the Jerusalem rabbi is not at all their ideal, for the reason that he is greatly suspected of taking a lion's share of the charities from home, that were originally given for the destitute sons of Abraham in the city of their fathers and of their God. The Alliance possesses a goodly number of houses, which for a short time are let gratis to the poorest Jews in need of such. They have a synagogue, a school and a hospital for themselves. One of the truest benefactors in Jerusalem, that should have been mentioned before, is the well-known "Bethel" Mission of the A. B. Simpson Christian Alliance. Four of their lady missionaries I met, the fifth or rather the first and oldest, was absent on a trip home to this country. Some were yet learning the Arabic language and by this time will have been stationed in Jaffa and other important places. They employ a native Bible woman and endeavor to reach Jews and Gentiles in evangelical ways. No proselyting, either by teachings nor money can be laid to their charge. Various other religious sects fight for a foothold in the holy city. Among these is one Finegold, advising to Christianize the Jews, with a teaching that denies Christ as the Son of God. And people with such ideas imagine themselves to be in the service of making others happy? However, he is not the only one whose dust on me I would shake off quickly. All will be answerable to the Master of the harvest.

A Baptist Mission of doubtful value is reported from Nablus, the Sychar of the Bible. (John iv: 5). The good old Jacob's well deep into the rock has been recovered. It is still yielding, if not the Water of Life, at least water unto life.

(To be continued.)

KEEP TO THE RIGHT.

Keep to the right, as the law directs,

For such is the rule of the road ;
Keep to the right, whoever expects Securely to carry life's load.

Keep to the right, with God and his truth

Nor wander though folly allure ;
Keep to the right from the day of thy youth,
Nor turn from what's faithful and pure.

Keep to the right, within and without,

With stranger and kindred and friend ;
Keep to the right, and you need have no doubt
That all will be well in the end.

Keep to the right in whatever you do,

Nor claim but your own on the way ;
Keep to the right and hold on to the true,
From the morn to the close of life's day.
—Our Boys and Girls.

FOR "THE FRIEND,"

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 12.)

Baltimore Yearly Meeting took steps to assist the Miami and Pottawatamie Indians in 1804, and in that year Philip Dennis accompanied by George Ellicott and Gerard T. Hopkins two members of a Committee appointed by the Yearly Meeting visited them at their homes near Fort Wayne, Indiana. The former came prepared to remain, in order to show them how to cultivate the soil, etc., and for this purpose a place to settle on was assigned him by Little Turtle and other chiefs about thirty miles S. W. of Fort Wayne. Associated with the above mentioned tribes were some Delaware Indians many of whom from their former residence near frontier settlers in Pennsylvania, were able to speak our language and were desirous of receiving assistance in adopting the customs of the whites.

The minds of Philadelphia Friends had been turned for several months towards making a settlement among the Senecas, living some two hundred miles west of the Oneidas, and in the Fifth Month, 1798, three young men who had offered to reside among them, viz. Joel Swayne, Henry Simmons and Halliday Jackson, accompanied by John Pierce and Joshua Sharpless, the former a member of the Committee, started on the arduous journey to the settlement of the Senecas, located upon the Allegheny River.

They went by way of Pittsburgh, the mouth of Oil Creek and Warren, Pennsylvania. At the former place they had an interview with General James Wilkinson, who was kindly disposed to assist them. John Pierce and Joshua Sharpless, after spending several weeks with the Indians, and assisting the young men to establish themselves among them, returned home by way of the Oneida Reservation.

This was the beginning of the labors of Friends among the Seneca Indians, which have been continued to the present time. A very interesting account of the journey of these Friends, kept by Joshua Sharpless, has been preserved, and may be found in THE FRIEND, Vol. xxi, page 14, etc.

The Friends took with them a letter to Corn Planter, one of the principal chiefs of the Senecas, at whose village, located upon the west bank of the Allegheny River, about five miles south of the southern boundary of New York State their first interview with the Indians took place. This tract of land containing about seven hundred and sixty acres now in Warren Co., Penna., had been given to Corn Planter by the State of Pennsylvania Third Month 16th, 1796, in consideration of his many valuable services to the white people, and especially that most important one of preventing the Six Nations of New York from joining the confederacy of Western Indians in 1790-91.

The Friends concluded it would not be best to make their permanent settlement upon the tract of land occupied by Corn Planter and his people, but higher up the river, where they would also be nearer to other villages of the Indians. They finally decided to locate themselves in the immediate vicinity of an ancient Indian settlement, called Genesanguhta, now known as Old Town, on the Allegheny River, about five miles above the State line, and nine or ten miles above Corn Planter's village.

This is said, in the History of Cattaraugus County, New York, to have been the first settlement made by white men within the bounds of that County.

Previous to their departure from Corn Planter's settlement, the Friends met in a council some thirty or forty Indians, six of whom were women. In this council the following address was interpreted to them, setting forth the objects of Friends in coming among them.

"To Corn Planter, and all our Indian brothers of the Seneca Nation, now living on the Allegheny River.

"Brothers: We have now been several days among you, and have had council with your chiefs and wise men, and have looked about your country, and have agreed upon a place for our young men to begin upon. We are glad and thankful to the Great Spirit, that everything we have proposed for your good, has been so agreeable to your minds, that we seem to agree like brothers, having but one mind in everything we do; and we hope we shall continue to be of one mind about all the things we have been speaking to you of.

"Brothers: You know the place we have chosen for our young men to begin upon at Genesinguhita; and we hope some of your young men will settle by them, and fence off lots for themselves, as they see them fence off theirs. Our young men will be willing to assist and instruct them in working their lots.

We think our young men will not be able to raise any more off their lots this year, than they will want for themselves, but we hope against another year they will have a little to spare; and we are willing they should give it to your old and infirm people that cannot work, one bushel out of four, of all grain, etc., they have to spare.

"Brothers: In order to encourage you still more to take up work, and to follow the ways we pointed out to you, we will agree to give you a little more. We will send you smiths' tools when our young men write us that you need them.

"Brothers: If you are industrious this summer, and raise a good deal of corn and some wheat, we will help you to build a good mill next summer, if a suitable place can be found for it. You must find half the money to build the mill, and we will find the other half. We hope, brothers you will save some money you get from the white people, that you may have your share ready against next spring. I think you had better choose one of your children to keep this money for you, till the time it wanted, or perhaps it may be all gone for whiskey or something that would not do you much good as the mill would.

"Brothers: We are also willing to encourage you to learn farming, by agreeing to give some small premiums to such of our Indian brothers, who are industrious and raise a good deal of grain.

"Brothers: We will give to every Indian living on this river, who shall raise twenty-five bushels of wheat or rye in one year on his own land, not worked by white people the sum of two dollars.

"2d. For every fifty bushels of corn raised by one man in like manner aforesaid, the sum of two dollars.

"3d. For every fifty bushels of potato raised by any one man in like manner aforesaid, the sum of two dollars.

"4th. For every two tons of hay raised aforesaid, and put into stack or barn, being mown or drawn in by white people, the sum of two dollars.*

"5th. For every twelve yards of linen cloth made by an Indian woman, out of flax raised on her husband's land, and spun in her house, the sum of two dollars, to be paid the woman.

"6th. For every twelve yards of woolen linsey cloth made by any Indian woman, on the wool of her own or her husband's sheep spun in her own house, the sum of two dollars to be paid to the woman.

"Brothers: We will give you these premiums for four years, if our young men stay here long—upon these conditions—that the person who applies for a premium, must produce certificate from two of the chiefs, signifying the quantity of grain, cloth, etc. for which the premium is demanded, and that it was raised or made in the manner above mentioned—and that the person has not been intoxicated with whiskey, at least for the term of months before that time. And our friends hereby authorized and desired to pay the premiums agreeably to what is heretofore pressed."

Joshua Sharpless observes upon the conclusion of this address:

"The Committee then expostulated with them on various subjects particularly their excessive use of strong drink, divers instances of which we had been eye-witnesses of, several of their women having been thus disgraced."

"Some appeared solid and heard us with attention; but as far as I have observed, little or no shame covers an Indian for getting drunk."

"The Indians withdrew for about an hour and then returned and made an answer in substance as follows:

"Brothers: We have heard all you wish to do among us. You are come here to see us.

You wish us well. You wish us to be as the white people. The white people are rich and get everything; but the Indians are poor and have nothing.

*The author of the History of Cattaraugus County quoting from this account of the visit of Joshua Sharpless, comments upon this offer of premiums for agricultural productions "as antedating by more than a year, the first similar offer made to white farmers Cattaraugus County."

Brothers: You told us one thing; it be good us to build a mill; we must ind $400 and will find $400. Brothers, we can't say but words at this time about this mill. We consult Capt. Chapin; if he thinks we will give our money, and will be able to raise the money you propose, then we will do it.

Brothers: We know how far you have been to see us; it is a great way from the shore, where our forefathers once lived. The white people have cheated us, and got our land from us, and now we have but little left. We will try to learn your way.

Brothers: You know there are some bad people amongst us; and you know that we have been cheated; and that makes us bad, and our minds uneasy. If we had not been cheated, we should have been very rich people, and had plenty of everything; and then things would be easy, and we could think the Good Spirit.

Brothers: The reason I mention to you at our being cheated is, some of my warriors won't mind what I say to them, but will be their own way, because they know I have never been cheated by the white people. If I had never been cheated, then my warriors would believe me and mind what I say to them; now they won't mind.

Brothers: We can't all go to work at once. One of my warriors will go a hunting to get venison, and sometimes they break a gun; then it takes a great deal of money to get a new one. We have very few hoes and axes, and such things amongst us, and we are not able to get them.

Brothers: I will go along with you to Canaigua, and there we will get matters settled at the mill, and bring it back to your young men in writing. Brothers, this is all I have to get to say; we will now shake hands."

Joshua Sharpless adds: "At the close of the speech we expressed a few words, representing among other things the unreasonableness of their present practice of making their brothers and sisters work all day in the fields, and in the woods, with their hoes and axes, and that they were playing with their bows and arrows; and recommending them to begin our way, by early settling their boys to business, and sending them out to hoe corn, etc. By early settling them to work, their minds would be trained to it, and they would not think of idleness." The Committee let them know that the riches of the whites to which they were alluded, were produced by industry; the men doing the work in the fields, etc., and sending the women to attend to spinning, sewing, etc., in the house. "We concluded by impressing on their minds that it was from the Good Spirit they received every good thing; and that He could hear every good thing they said, could see every good thing they did; and if they were good and industrious, the Good Spirit would love them, and bless them with many good things."

In a few minutes after, Corn Planter observed, "Now all things are done and settled, and will cover up the council fire."

At the close of the council, the young men had come to reside among the Indians, returned to Genesinguta, while Joshua Sharpless remained for a few days and took board with Corn Planter. Owing to the want of a competent interpreter, the Friends had but little conversation with the Indians, but on the 30th of Fifth Month Joshua Sharpless writes:

"We had a strong desire to know if they had any religious rites and ceremonies, and last evening, having some conversation with Corn Planter on the subject, he informed us they had two solemnities in a year; when it was the practice for the men and women generally to meet together in one place, one in the spring, and the other in the fall about the time corn is ripe; the latter was a time of rejoicing, and to return thanks to the Great Spirit for this blessing. They did not keep the first day of the week, but every one tried to think good in his own mind. As we could read the Bible, he queried whether there was anything said in it about the Indians. We informed him the Bible mentioned all nations, kindreds, tongues and people; and that included the Indians. We would have been glad to have told him, that though the Indians could not read the Bible, yet they were not wholly deprived of the benefits of the coming of Christ, for a manifestation of His Spirit, or measure of His grace, was placed in each of their hearts, and would, if minded or given way to, improve for all wicked words and wicked actions, and produce peace for well doing; but this was too refined and delicate a subject for our interpreter to handle.

"I have not been able fully to learn what number of Indians this village contains; but Corn Planter informed us there were about 400 persons, young and old, under his superintendency, much the larger part of whom are in or near the town. In the whole district there are three horses, fourteen cows and calves, one yoke of oxen and twelve hogs."

(To be continued.)

THE SOUL BACK OF THE SERMON.—Now that the theological seminaries are sending forth into the ministry the young men who have been trained by them for the work, it may be well to emphasize what doubtless has had some attention in the curriculum, but we fear not as much as it deserves. This is the personal factor in the pastor and teacher. No amount of learning, of familiarity with dogmas and history and methods, of ability to read the Bible in the original languages, can take the place of the soul-quality of the man. It is character that tells in every walk of life, but in the minister it is the essential prerequisite of success. It is the man back of the sermon that gives weight and force to his words, and except by his life, by his daily walk and conversation he wins the respect and confidence of the community, his preaching will be shorn of power however eloquently he may present the message. Men look for the fruit of the truth proclaimed in the life of him who proclaims it, and even the authority of announcing a "thus saith the Lord" will lose its effect when it shows itself powerless to mould the character of the messenger. The thing to be especially cultivated in minister and teacher is the heart—the imbuing it and the life with those graces of the Spirit which are born of communion with God and of soul-fellowship with Christ. What applies to the minister, is applicable to the Sabbath-school teacher, indeed to all who would exert an uplifting influence on their fellowmen.—Christian Intelligencer.

John Bellows.*

John Bellows was born at Liskeard in Cornwall, in 1831. His wife has produced a most interesting memoir of his life.

When six years old, he said, "Father, I've been thinking that if people are too poor to buy a Bible, our Heavenly Father can put the words of the Bible into their minds for them to think about," adding, "When I am in school, writing my figures, if I feel that I ought to pray, I can pray without opening my lips." Here was the germ of the central thought that governed his life, the work of the Spirit of God in the hearts of men. It finds ripper expression in later life when he says, "Christ not only took our human form and nature and suffered for us outwardly, but, as God, he enlightens all men, inwardly, to lead them away from sin to a state of redemption; and it is only as we receive this light, by obeying its manifestations that we can be made partakers of the salvation He is the alone Author and Finisher of." And again, "It we walk in the Light, as God is in the Light, we shall become like Him: filled with a love that can work no ill to his neighbour, that cannot hurt or slay him, filled with the presence of Christ, in the real Holy Communion that needs no outward symbol of Passover to perfect or to heighten it."

The fascinating Roman researches that John Bellows enjoyed among the antiquities of Gloucester, which became his adopted city of residence, must be passed over, not from want of cordial interest, but to centre attention on his consecration to the welfare of his brother man. He reverently believed in the universality of the love of God for all men. He says, "As God is en rapport with all He creates, He is manifested, in varying degree certainly, but still manifested, to every human heart, showing every man what is good and what is evil." "I feel certain that the Maker of all things is good and just—and if he is good and just, he cannot create any being with whom He is not in sympathy. He could not create Chinamen with less chance of sharing His sympathy than Europeans, because that would be unjust and unfair. 'The tender mercies of the Lord are over all His works.' Tender mercies include, above all, salvation; that is, He puts the power of being everlastingly purified and united to Himself, within the reach of every soul that was, or is, or will be created." "God would have all men be saved. But that which is to save all men must be extremely simple. Therefore anything which is not simple enough for all, cannot be essential to all. He who is the Source of godness must have more goodness than any other being. The Source of love must be more full of love than anything that emanates from that Source. Take a mother's love; something so great—so deep, as to be scarcely fathomable by man—something we rather apprehend than comprehend. What then must be the Heart that shaped and builded all the mothers' hearts that ever were from the foundation of the world till now?" These extracts from the letters of John Bellows represent something of the governing principle of the life.

* John Bellows. Letters and Memoir. Edited by his wife. With portraits, map and other illustrations. 392 pp. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $3.00.

His business life at Gloucester as a printer carried a singular charm from two governing characteristics, his delight in always turning out good work and nothing but good work with purity and simplicity of taste; and secondly, the beautiful friendship and loyalty which existed between John Bellows and everyone in his employ. "It was a source of the deepest satisfaction to him that several of his employees had been with him so long. The first he ever employed who came to him as a boy, gave him faithful service for forty-three years and is now in the employment of his sons. Several others also were his trusted servants for periods ranging up to forty years. There was no limit, as far as his means permitted, to his practical generosity to his work-people, and his sympathy with them in their trials was deep and sincere." When visiting St. Petersburg in 1892, a gentleman with whom he dined exclaimed, "You never go to balls, you don't go to the theatre, you drink no wine, you eat no meat; then do tell me if your life is worth living at all!" Yet it would have been hard to find anyone who got more keen enjoyment out of life than did he; certainly no one more interested in every phase of it, from the spiritual welfare of a nation to the passing amusement of a little child. This keen interest showed itself, among other directions, in his declining, for more than forty years, all printing orders that were in any way connected with the liquor traffic.

One of his greatest charms was as a conversationalist. Few men had such capacity for adaptation to whatever company he was in, and of imperceptibly raising the whole tone of converse to worthy themes. He was gifted with a far-reaching storehouse of multifarious information, and his conversations with much piquancy led out to that which was truly instructive and spiritually profitable. "His vivid imagination made his narratives instinct with life and animation. He was full of originality, so that it was impossible for him ever to be dull, and his remarkable memory enabled him to place his illustrations just where they produced the most telling effect." "Men and women were drawn to him instinctively, and his own character was on so high a level that, quite naturally and without effort on his part, the best elements of those with whom he came in contact were brought out." These gifts in conversation it is impossible to reproduce in a book. He acknowledged that he made mistakes, but his heart was right and his spirit true to the highest ideals. "Nearly forty years ago," he writes, "I made two mistakes—one in attacking John Bright, and the other in imagining that the Southern States of America were struggling for their proper rights. I have long since been sorry for these mistakes, and have said so." This frankness won the hearts of those from whom he sometimes differed. In later years he not infrequently spoke in meetings for worship, his brief and living messages being given with weight and power.

The intense sympathy of John Bellows for human need and sorrow led him to undertake many long journeys, and his travels greatly enlarged his views of life. "His outlook gradually widened with regard to the standpoint of others" whose creed was different from his own. In 1888 he visited Germany in company with his beloved wife and with one of his nine children. He stayed at Tréves, the Northern Rome. He had already signalized his literary discrimination and accurate taste and power of concise elaboration by his French Dictionary, so that he was known in literary circles. In 1892 more extended travel opened before him in the religious conviction that it was his duty to accompany Joseph James Neave to Russia. This lengthened journey opened out to him wide interests, and added many cherished friendships. It also resulted in a lengthened journey to the Trans-Caucasus. Among the choice acquaintanceships these journeys yielded none, perhaps, was more treasured than that with Count Tolstoi, who said, after much religious conversation with him, "God teaches us all, though we do not all see things from the same standpoint." "But if we are led by the Spirit, it will bring us into oneness with God." In 1896, in company with his wife, John Bellows visited Constantinople for the relief of the helpless survivors of the Armenian massacres. Their visit was of great service in this direction. He visited Russia again on a somewhat different errand in 1899, to plead for the Dukhobors, in conjunction with Edmund Wright Brooks. No journey and no amount of trouble or effort were spared when he felt it his duty to render practical aid to the oppressed, especially to those whose tender conscience exposed them to persecution. The distress in the Transvaal after the war, and slavery under our British Protectorate in East Africa, alike aroused active sympathy and earnest plea for the sufferers.

When the Dukhobors had settled in Canada, John Bellows and his wife carried out a long cherished wish to visit their friends in America, especially those in Philadelphia who were actively engaged in succouring the new emigrants. This American visit was the close of these long journeys. Their visit to Philadelphia, where one of their sons had already settled, delighted them. John Bellows says, "The Friends in and around Philadelphia are a sweet and dear people, whom I was going to say it would be impossible not to love."

In his later and riper years there was, perhaps, no plea that John Bellows sought more earnestly to enforce than "the duty of loving all men." Because of the faithfulness of the Dukhobors to this foundation truth he loved them so much. He says, "If the day is ever to come when the sword shall be beaten into the ploughshare, and the nations learn war no more, someone must make a beginning." He earnestly sought to be one with other Christians in urging this plea. He recognized it was a high attainment, but he made the effort in hope. To him it was the direct and clear call of God. While taking this position against all war, and against all that leads to war, he did not forget that "greater is he that overcometh himself than he that taketh a city!" In this spirit he wrought out his life's testimony. To this he bore faithful witness, the duty of loving all men.—London Friend.

You will generally suffer if you appear other than you are. The mask soon becomes an instrument of torture.

A LIFE of sin is like a lime-spring. The longer our hearts remain in it, the harder they grow.

Science and Industry.

TWO MILLION PRESCRIPTIONS IN ONE DAY.—In the sixty-seven years since Dr. Metcalf & Co. apothecary business was opened in Boston they have preserved over one million prescriptions of their own filling, and nearly million prescriptions received from other pharmacists.

OILED ROADS.—There are nine hundred and fifty miles of oiled roads in California. State was the first to make use of crude petroleum oil in road improvement, it having thus far hardly passed beyond the experimental stage elsewhere. It has been, however, marked success in the West.

THE GROWTH OF ELECTRIC POWER.—"Three or four of us was riding on a cross-town horsecar in New York recently," said an electric engineer of a large electric works. "It makes us think. Hardly more than fifteen years ago there were perhaps one hundred electric cars in existence. Last year my firm alone had orders for railway motors equaling in power five hundred thousand horses. Only a few years ago we surprised ourselves by making of hundred and twenty-five electric lights in a week—a new record. To-day we are making about two thousand. A few years ago the average size of our motors was five horsepower. To-day it's fifty instead of five." World's Work.

ALCOHOL IN POTATOES.—In Germany the use of potato alcohol to furnish light, heat, and motive power has been rapidly spreading. At present it converts into alcohol twenty million tons of the fifty-five million tons of potatoes it raises. It is burned like gas chandeliers and in street lamps, and for cooking, heat, and lighting, and is used for land and water motors as a power generator. Many years ago a prisoner in Sing Sing was found to be intoxicated from time to time, as the authorities could not find out where he got his liquor, as nothing of the kind was brought to him. After much searching it was found that he had extemporized a kind of still with an old teakettle, and that several of the prisoners saved their potato peelings and as much of the potato as they could, and he was distilling and distributing among them an alcohol that was strong enough to bring about the desired result. Anything that has saccharine matter in it will do to make into alcohol.

WALLED UP ALIVE.—A very interesting but one which follows the trade of a plasterer is the hornbill.

It makes its home in far off Africa, and the home is in the trunk of a hollow tree. Monkeys run wild in this country, and there is nothing they like better than hornbill eggs for breakfast, so in order to save the lives of her young the mother hornbill consents to what do you think? To be walled up alive!

She and her mate select a suitable tree trunk together, plastering up with mud; opening there may be in the trunk. Having made it small enough to only just admit the passage of her body, the mother hornbill gets in, and her mate continues plastering up there is only a little round hole left, enough for him to put in the tip of his beak. Through she passes in food to the mother while she catches her eggs and rearing her babies; do the latter get out into the light and until they have donned their first suit of feathers. Then the door of the nursery is opened and the family begins to enjoy its life again.

AN ELEPHANT THAT SLEEPS STANDING.—An African elephant at the Fairmount Zoo, has not lain down for sixteen years. It pronounced depressions in the asphalt of his apartment mark the spot where it sat and the great beast has shifted from leg to another. Swaying from side to side swinging his trunk with a motion like that of the pendulum of an ancient clock, he marks the flight of time by gradually wearing away a hard floor beneath him.

Of course, the elephant sleeps, but he sleeps standing with legs braced and well apart. He sees his eyes, and his keeper says, snores at it. Just why Bolivar never lies down is a mystery to his keepers and to many noted zoologists who have been told of his peculiarity. Though he is chained to a staple in the floor has room enough to lie down if he desires to do so. One of the guards thinks the beast is a heart disease and knows it and is afraid to hurt himself by attempting to change his position to any great extent. At any rate, the fact remains that he does not change. Bolivar and Lizzie, companions of Bolivar, are in a recumbent posture. Bolivar entered the Zoo in 1888. He was presented by Adam Edwards, and is said to be one of the heaviest elephants in captivity. He is a vicious brute and never allows the freedom of the paddock. —Exchange.

Perdotalism Disowned, and a Place for Silent Worship Claimed.

The British Friend issues a "Note of Warning" in a feeling of real concern over the tendency of some passages in the addresses of members of an American Yearly Meeting delivered in the recent Yearly Meeting at London. The editor says:

We refer especially to the remark made in a meeting on Ministry and Oversight which appeared also on the minutes of that body that sacerdotal office has never ceased in the Church; and to a certain disparagement of the true basis of our Meetings for Worship, in a discussion on "The State of the Society" at the Men's Yearly Meeting.

The doubt has been freely entertained whether, in the pressure of modern life, our Ministry can be maintained. The Conference held at York, coming, as it did, so near to the opening of the Woodbrooke Settlement, has given the impression in some quarters outside our body that we are abandoning our method, in favour of a trained and separated pastorate. We believe we interpret correctly the feeling of the Society in this connection as a whole, when we say that its deepest concern is that, in the developments which are going on, we shall go forward and not backward,—keeping close to the lines marked out for us by our history, and not straying into untried ways, or retreating to positions which our forefathers long ago abandoned. The guiding principle which has marked our course has been our ideal of prophetic ministry, exercised under the present rule and prompting of the Spirit; and it is because we fear that the tendency (we hope unintended) of the remarks we have noted is to switch our train on to a track that leads to hopeless reaction, that we feel compelled to utter this note of warning.

The statement that "the sacerdotal office has never ceased in the church," taken, as it was made, in immediate connection with the ministry of the word, is to put it mildly, liable to grievous misunderstanding. It is not too much to say that on this basis the whole fabric of ecclesiasticism and ritualism can be built; that this is all a Roman Catholic or a High Anglican asks; that, if you give him this, his whole system follows.

We venture to say that the statement is not sound historically. The broadest distinction in religious history is that between the "revealed" and the "traditional" religions; and of these the most distinctive mark is the relative importance attached to the "prophet" and the "priest." A prophet is a messenger, chosen directly by the Divinity and in personal touch with Him. A priest is a mediating official, one of an order—a performer of ceremonies through which alone God can be approached.

The main feature of prophetic history in the Old Testament is the conflict between these two conceptions of religion. Now and then, as in Ezekiel and Malachi, the priestly idea invades the prophetic consciousness; but broadly speaking, they are widely sundered.

In our Lord's own day, as Dr. Fairbairn has shown (in The Philosophy of the Christian Religion), the conflict took the form of a wide separation between the rabbinical school of the Scribes and Pharisees, with whose followers Jesus chiefly mingled, and the sacerdotal school, the Sadducees, who put Him to death. His own teaching was wholly of the prophetic and non-priestly order. His great Apostle, Paul, never once in all his writings alludes to priests or priesthood.

It is doubtless on the allusion to priesthood in the Epistle to the Hebrews, that the statement we are criticising mainly rests. That letter is addressed to adherents of the sacerdotal school, resident apparently in Rome—whose devotion to the Temple ritual, as Fairbairn suggests, may probably have been proportioned to their distance from its actual features. However this may have been, the whole point of the writer is this: "Taking at your own valuation these priestly offices, note how they are all fulfilled and therefore finished in Christ." If it is urged that this identification of Christ with the priesthood is of much more than temporary or local significance, we would grant it, but reply that it is absolutely impossible to deduce from this Epistle the continuation of a priestly human ministry. The author of 1 Peter speaks of Christians generally as a "holy (or royal) priesthood." In what sense? Just this:—that every Christian has now the same direct access to God as, under the old order, the priests were supposed to have. That is to say, the prophetic and not the priestly ideal is the true one. This, we feel sure, represents our friend's thought; but how, we ask, can that which is open to every one be in any sense called an "office?"

For a century or more the Christian Church remained wholly prophetic, and unpriestly in its organization for religious worship. And it was just as the consciousness of the Spirit's power and presence declined that priestliness grew up. Moreover, the ecclesiastical fabric reared on the basis of the priesthood was full of pagan elements adopted into Christianity. In the history of the Church there have not been wanting, from century to century, revivals of primitive or prophetic religion, which have been mostly persecuted, and even stamped out, as "heresies." The most lasting of these has been Quakerism. Shall we now abandon our history, and throw away our message for the world?

We note a similar danger in the depreciation of silence as the basis of our worship and our free ministry. Such a basis is essential, if a prophetic ministry, under immediate anointing, is to be given free scope. The experience of those with whom our friend is connected in America shows only too clearly the result of setting it aside. When Friends begin to preach from notes, and quite freely ask others "to preach for them next Sunday," there is something more involved than the retaining or abandonment of a peculiar practice; an essential principle is at stake. It is not necessary that all meetings or all ministry should be of one type; there may be, for instance, a ministry of teaching, which, if systematic, does not readily adapt itself to the prophetic method. But, if the prophetic ministry based on freedom and silent worship is abandoned, the sooner we break up our organization, and join some more efficient Church, the more quickly we shall cease to cumber the ground.

Items Concerning the Society.

Note the British Friend's protest:—"When Friends [?] begin to preach from notes, and quite freely ask others 'to preach for them next Sunday,' there is something more involved than the retaining or abandonment of a peculiar practice; an essential principle is at stake.

"But, if the prophetic ministry based on freedom and silent worship is abandoned, the sooner we break up our organization and join some more efficient church, the more quickly we shall cease to cumber the ground."

An extract from Mary A. Conway's poem, read at the Quarter Millennial Celebration of Sandwich, Mass., in 1889,—in allusion to the first settled meeting of Friends in America, in 1657.

When handsly dealt with otherweire,
The Quakers into Sandwich came,
True Friends they found who scorned to see
The power they held, but granted them
To dwell in peace, the Spirit with.
You may yet see apear Spring Hill
Their meeting-place, a sylvan glen Environed by protecting trees.
Here far removed from curious eyes,
Their God they worshipped silently,
Their choir the myriad song-birds were,
Their hassocks stones. The mossy sward Beneath their feet their carpet was;
An azure ciel, the sky above,
No temple made by mortal hands
Could rival this in loveliness.

* Christopher's Hollow.

Notes in General.

The Mormon Temple in Salt Lake City admits no "Gentiles." The Temple, which is built of beautiful white granite and was thirty years or more in building, cost nearly five million dollars.

The British and Foreign Bible Society on Sixth Month last despatched nine tons of Bibles and parts of Bibles in twenty-eight different languages from its warehouses. The demands from all parts of the world are said to be surpassing all previous records.

The Greek Church, which calls itself the "Holy Orthodox Catholic and Apostolic Church," includes three distinct branches—the church within the Ottoman Empire, subject directly to the patriarch of Constantinople; the church in the kingdom of Greece, and the Russo-Greek church in the domain of the czar.

Thomas C. Hall, professor of theology in Union Theological Seminary, says in the North American Review, that socialism, which is "not a science but a dogma, not a belief but a profound trust," is a most serious and determined rival to organized Christianity and that modern Protestantism is "wofully ignorant of its most formidable rival, Marxian Socialism."

A "boy preacher" is attracting much attention in Cornwall, England, and other places. He draws immense audiences when he preaches, and it is said by old Methodists that nothing like the interest and enthusiasm of the people to see and hear him has been witnessed for a century. The name of the young preacher is Kehelland. He began to preach at the age of fifteen.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—On the 20th inst. a conference was held in Chicago between representatives of the packers, the officials of the Meat Cutters' Union and representatives of all the allied trades employed at the stock yards, in which it was agreed to refer the questions involved in the strike of the butchers, etc., to a Board of Arbitrators. On the 21st several hundred of the strikers returned to work. On the 22nd it was stated that the strike was renewed in Chicago and other points where the big packing companies have branches, because the strikers were dissatisfied with the manner in which the employers proposed to reinstate their former employees pending a settlement by arbitration. The packers have issued statements to the press defending their respective course and laying all the blame for the failure of the course of arbitration upon the other side.

Plans have lately been made public for the founding of a hospital in this city to be devoted exclusively to the treatment of tumors and cancerous affections and scientific research into the causes underlying the recent remarkable increase in the prevalence of cancer. Statistics show that 966 persons died of cancerous diseases in this city last year, only thirty-three less than died of cancer in all of the seven largest cities of the country in 1870. It is estimated that 2898 cases exist here at the present time, and there are 11,302 cases in the State.

In the great fire which occurred in Baltimore in the Second Month last, 180 acres of the business portion of the city were burned over, causing a loss estimated at $60,000,000, and the destruction of 2500 buildings. It is stated that about 250 buildings are now in course of construction. Plans have been made to carry more, and it is expected that these figures will be increased to 1000 before winter arrives.

The Immigration Bureau has issued a statement showing a total of 44,582 inmates in the penal, reformatory and charitable institutions of the United States, not including Hawaii and Porto Rico. These comprise 28,939 males and 15,643 females. There are 23,548 in State institutions, 14,979 in county institutions, 5858 in private institutions and 697 in Federal institutions. There are 24,711 prisoners serving for life.

A despatch from Bonesteel, S. D., of the 21st states the registration for homesteads on the Rosebud Indian reservation lately closed for settlement was extremely large the past twenty-four hours, aggregating 15,000 at the four land offices, Bonesteel, Chamberlain, Fairfax and Yankton. The registration to date is upward of 97,000, and immense crowds continue to arrive on every train.

FOREIGN.—On the 11th inst., two English vessels were stopped on the Red Sea and overhauled by the Russian steamer St. Petersburg. Another vessel, the steamship Malacca, was captured on the 12th by the St. Petersburg. These events have aroused great feeling in Great Britain, and war vessels were ordered to proceed to the Red Sea. The pretext for the seizure of the Ma- lacca, on her way to Japan, was that she was carrying military stores, which were assumed to be destined for that country. The British Ambassador at St. Petersburg presented the specific protest of his government against the seizure and detention of the Malacca, as well as a general protest against the action of the Russian volunteers.

A despatch from St. Petersburg of the 21st says: While not admitting that the Russian captain seized the Malacca without some warrant, Russia will accept without question, Great Britain's assurance that the war munitions on board the vessel were government stores bound for the naval station at Hong Kong, and will order the immediate release of the vessel. At the same time she will maintain her right to stop and search any vessels believed to have contraband of war on board, and detain them if the manifests are not plain, as required by international law. The Emperor it is said is desirous of avoiding the slightest pretext for a quarrel, and personally gave orders to settle the matter promptly.

A German steamer was lately stopped by the Russian war vessel, Smolensk, and was compelled to give up 31 sacks of letters and 24 sacks and boxes of parcels intended for ports in Japan. While the right of searching the mails under such circumstances was admitted, it is stated that the Russians had not the right to remove them in bulk. The German government has made a strong protest to Russia against this seizure of the mails, which received prompt attention. It has since been decided by the Russian Imperial Council that further seizures and searches of neutral vessels should be stopped, and that having no other issue, the Russian steamer Skandia should be released, and the British steamship Arcton, from New York for Manila, which was also seized in the Red Sea, should be given up. Turkey has given orders to prevent the Russian volunteer fleet steamships Smolensk and St. Petersburg passing through the Dardanelles into the Black Sea.

On the 20th inst. London of the 20th says: The report of Joseph Chamberlain's tariff commission on the iron and steel trades arrives at the conclusion that the decline of the British iron and steel industry is due to the fact that manufacturers of America and Germany have secured control of the home markets by means of high tariffs and an organized system of regulating their export trade. "It is a general tariff consisting of a low scale of duties for foreign countries admitting British wares on fair terms.

"B — A preferential tariff, lower than the general tariff, for the colonies, giving adequate preference to British manufacturers and framed to obtain freer trade within the British empire.

"C — A maximum tariff consisting of comparatively higher duties, but subject to reduction, by negotiation, to the level of the general tariff."

A despatch of the 20th from Berlin states that all the rivers are unusually low, owing to the light rainfall this summer. The Elbe and the Rhine are low to the 15th. The Hamburg shippers have suspended operations to the upper Elbe and the movement of freight in the Rhine above Cologne is much impeded. The drought appears to have reached an acute stage in Silesia, where numerous dye works and factories have closed, owing to lack of water. Almost no rain has fallen for several months. The destruction of a battalion of infantry and 1000

It is stated that after a series of engagements, lasting thirty-seven hours, Japanese troops drove the Russians from a strongly fortified position at Kiaotung, on the Chi River, northwest of Motien Pass, near Port Arthur. The Russians lost more than 1000 men. Another Russian force, consisting of a battalion of infantry and 1000 men, was driven from the Che Chiao across the Tatsu River, after four hours' fighting. A battle has been fought near New Chang, after which the Russians withdrew.

A late despatch from Chicago says: Udunko, the ancient Ahab, perhaps the oldest city in the world, has long been the property of the University of Chicago's extensive expedition in Babylonia. This city has for many years been the object of search by Orientalists. It is mentioned in the code of Hammurabi, an early king of Babylonia.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

John B. Heston, Gtn.; Emeline P. Newbold, P.; Jane D. Engle, N. J.; Elizabeth C. Dunn, N. J.;

Richard S. Garrett, Canada, $5; John W. Tatt [P.]; Samuel C. Moon, Pa.; Frances E. G. [P.]; Gtn., for Jane E. Mason and Margaret H. [P.]; Jorgen Engle, Ia.; Anne W. Boone, Canada; Ward L. South, Pa.; J. Benj. Glavin, Pa.; Susa Kite, Phila.; Grace A. Tierney, N. Y.; Rebecca Allen, Pa.; Laura A. Osborn, Conn.; Susanna Clement, N. J.; Justus Robeson, Canada, $5; A. M. Ormsby, Phila.; J. A. Holloway, Agent, O., for Edwin Hall, Joseph Bailey, Abigail Sears F., Branson, Edwin F. Holloway and Sarah F. H. [P.]; George Wood, Phila.; Edmund Wood, N. Y.; William Biddle, Phila.; Charles Downing, Wilson Hutchens, Mo.; Wm. H. Moon, Pa., for Jesse W. Taylor, Phila.; Ann Kirkbride, Phila.; Joseph E. Fell, Va.; Margaret J. Jones, Cana E. C. Shoemaker, Cal.; Jacob V. Edge, Pa.; Jan Lee, Jr., Gtn.; Sarah A. Gilbert, Pa., $10 for I. self, Eliza G. Cope, Ann See, Albert M. C. and Charles E. Gibbons; Ezra Barker, Ind., for himself, Ann Haworth, Caroline Blackwell, Eliza M. Jones and George W. Mendenhall; J. Carey, Agent, O., $8 for Jacob Barrett, Wm. worth, I. M. Haworth and C. A. Stanton; Rich. Mott, Agt., Ia., $4 for George Dewees, J. Mott, C. C. Mott, James Mott, Daniel Mott, C. Smith and Wm. P. Young; B. V. Stanley, Agt. Ia., $5 for Samuel Bedell, Thos. H. Binns, C. T. Engle, Delitha Emmons, Samuel Emb Robert W. Hampton, Joseph L. Hoyle, John Hodgkin, Eliza Hoyle, Frances Jackson, Thos. H. Binns, J. B. Mow, James McGrew, V. H. Pollard, Nilton J. Swan, Branson D. Sidw Thomas E. Stanley, Morris Stanley, Edmund Smith, Joshua W. Smith, Elwood Spencer, I. W. Stanley, Zachues Test, Russel Z. T. Aaron K. Williams, Thomas D. Yocum and E. E. Young; S. A. Willis, for George Dewees, J. Tillie Yerkes, N. J.; Isaac W. Stokes, N. J., for Annie H. Stokes, M. Emma Allen, Samue Eves and Joseph H. Haines; David E. Coe and for Samuel R. Cooper, N. J.; B. F. Hoop Phila.; Martha R. Tewkrick, Phila.; Sophie Fuse, Pa.; George W. Thomson, per Caroline Thomson, Gtn.; Ephraim Smith, Phila., $10, so for herself, Morris S. Cope, Joel J. Smith; L. M. Williams, M. D., and Henrietta Green, Ireland, $5; Thomas W. Fisher, Pa., and for Israel Lane, N. Richard J. Allen, Phila.; Charity Baldwin, Pa.; H. Gibbons and for Mary T. Williams, Pa.; Will Aldred, Pa.; Elizabeth R. Reeve, Pa.; Dewees, Agent, O., $8 for Edwin Crew, Patia Fawcett, David Masters and Jason Penrose; Ay Mickle, Pa., $6 for Martha Mickle, William M. and Thomas Evans; Josiah Wistar, N. J.; C. W. Thompson, N. J.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Wanted.—A young woman Friend as mother's aid and to assist in light household duties.
Address J. B., Office of THE FRIENDS.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., Phila. During the Seventh and Eighth Months the Library will be open on Fifth-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

The Friends' City Home can accommodate a young man, who may propose to spend the summer months in the city. Address Mary T. Williams, 1623 N. Street.

Friends' Select School.—Friends who desire their children to be schooled year beginning next 1st Mo., so that they may communicate their children to the meet, so that places may be reserved for them.
J. HENRY BARTLETT, 180 N. 16th St., Phila.

Westtown Boarding School.—A stated meeting of the Committee on Admissions will be held in the Lecture Room, at Fourth and Arch Streets, on Saturday, the 23rd inst., at 10 A. M.

JOHN W. BIDDLE, Clerk.

Memorial of Debbie E. Cope is now for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street.

Price, paper cover, 5 cents; by mail, 6 cents; silk cloth cover, 7 cents; by mail, 7 cents; per dozen, paper cover, 60 cents; by mail, 55 cents; silk cloth, 90 cents; by mail, 75 cents.

Memorial of Charles Rhoads: Price, paper cover, 5 cents; by mail, 6 cents; silk cloth cover, 7 cents; per dozen, paper cover, 50 cents; by mail, 68 cents; silk cloth, 60 cents; by mail, 71 cents.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

OL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 6, 1904.

No. 4.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

scriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,

PHILADELPHIA.

sent from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,

No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

considered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 21.)

the Twelfth Month, 1798, a deputation of men from the Ottawa, Chippewa, and Potomac nations was in this city on business with the President of the United States, whom the Committee and other Friends accompanied to a conference; in the course of which the Indians delivered a speech which they had entrusted with from the Delaware Indians, related to the people called Quakers. This speech was thought by the Committee of sufficient importance to be laid before the Yearly Meeting of 1799, for more general information, accompanying its report.

The four tribes above mentioned, together with others (12 in all) had been associated in an open continued and destructive war which finally ended by the treaty of Greenville, the Twelfth Month 2nd, 1795, in which the Indians ceded to the United States a territory south of Lake Erie, forming about two-thirds of the present State of Ohio, and a stipulated payment in exchange, were left in a very destitute and stripped condition. This letter is in reply to one forwarded to them by the hands of Little Turtle two months previous, and is as follows:—

TO THE PEOPLE CALLED QUAKERS.

Speech delivered by the Delaware Nation of Indians at Fort Wayne, First of September, 1795.

Brothren:—We, the Sachems, principal Chiefs and Leaders of the Delaware Nation, come to you and take you by the hand through our brother Jonathan Schieffelin, Agent of Indian Affairs, whom we consider as one of ourselves, inasmuch as he will consult with us on the means of rendering us happy by the assistance of you our brothren, the Quakers.

Brothren:—We have received your speech to the Miami's Chief, called the Little Turtle, and will listen to your words, and thank you for the interest you take in our future well-being and the happiness of our women and children. We also thank the Great Spirit for having so disposed the hearts and minds of our Quaker brothren—as to remind them with the solemn promises made to us by their grandfather (Onas) saying that his children's children would hold fast of the chain of brotherly love, at that time made between our grandfathers and him—which chain he said should never be broken.

Brothren:—You strongly recommend peace: We are much inclined to peace. The war axe is long since buried deep in the bottom of the Great Lake, so very deep, that we hope the evil spirit will never be able to take it up again. There we hope it will ever remain; forgot, and never to be thought of by any of us. And that the Master of Light and Life, who disposes of all things according to His will and pleasure, may also dispose the hearts and minds of our white brothren to peace, as they used to be at that time, when our forefathers first met on this great island and smoked the pipe of peace with your grandfather Onas (Penn) on the very same spot where your great village (Philadelphia) now stands.

Brothren:—At that time the hearts and minds of men were white and good; the evil spirit, who works in the inside of the bodies of men, had then no power over them. Our villages were peaceful, and our paths at that time were covered with flowers, and we knew nothing of war; but soon after the bad spirit fixed himself deep in the hearts and minds of our white brothren. They made war against each other, and taught us soon to be as wicked as themselves, and like themselves cruel and unjust. It was them who took the pipe of peace out of our hands; it was them who led us astray and it was them who put the destructive war axe into our hands to strike against their white brothren and their helpless women and children! And they only are the cause of all our misfortunes, the destruction of our villages, the death of our young warriors and helpless women and children, the loss of our lands and our happiness.

Brothren:—We listen to your brotherly advice, our hearts are inclined to peace, although the bad birds are still singing the songs of death in our ears. We will not listen to their destructive songs. Our future hopes are fixed on you our brothren, the sons of peace; we will hereafter look up to you as our counsel and our friends. We well know that the younger children of Onas (Penn) are a wise and a good people, that they speak nothing but the truth and that they will never deceive us, nor let go the chain of friendship made by their grandfathers and ours at their first meeting.

Brothren:—We are told by you in your speech to us, "That you wish to know our situation, and in what manner you could be of service to us." We are poor and pitiful indeed. Destructive war has been the cause of many of our families to be scattered abroad in the wilderness, inasmuch that we can scarcely find their places of residence. Our once peaceful villages exist no more; our paths, which once were covered with flowers are now full of thorns, and stained with the blood of our young warriors, and of our helpless women and children, and we had almost considered ourselves as lost men, and thrown our bodies away; but by the advice of our brother Jonathan Schieffelin and the assistance of the Great Spirit, we will assemble together, and form an extensive village on the fertile plains of the White River. Speeches are this day sent to all our brothren by his (Schieffelin's) particular request, for that purpose, and we hope by the next summer we will all be assembled at that place, when we will point out the means of your assisting us.

Brothren:—Our friend and brother (Schieffelin) told us long since, that when he visited you in your great village (Philadelphia) two years past, that you expressed a desire of seeing us in our cabins in hopes of being thereby enabled to afford us some relief in our distresses. Should some of our brothren be still inclined to visit us, this will be a favorable opportunity for them to do so. Our brother Schieffelin has faithfully promised to take such of our brothren who think us an object worthy of their attention, under his protection, and will convey them safe to our villages. We will then be enabled to consult with, and tell our sentiments to our brothren in person, and as most of the principal chiefs are infirm, old men, incapable of undergoing a long and fatiguing journey, and even have not the means to do so though much inclined to see our brothren in their great village (Philadelphia). By their coming forward means may be devised to put it in our power to return with our brothren to their great village, and there brighten the chain of friendship on the same spot where our grandfathers first met in peace, and formed a chain which we hope the evil spirit will never be permitted to break.

Brothren:—Should the evil spirit operate upon the hearts of our white brothren, to induce them to wage war against our Nations, as we look upon you as our friends and brothren, we hope you will give us immediate information thereof, in order that we may thereby avert the dreadful calamities attendant on war, and prevent the spilling the blood of our helpless women and children.

Brothren:—We have nothing more to say at present, but recommend our brother and friend (Schieffelin) to the protection of the Great Spirit, and wish him a safe arrival among our brothren, on the lands where our grandfathers were born and lived in peace and happiness. And we hope when he returns amongst us, he will have something to tell us which will give great satisfaction to your brothren, the Delaware Nation. May the Great Regulator of all things, He who knows the hearts and minds of all men, so dispose the hearts and minds of our Quaker brethren, that they may never be induced to withdraw their friendship and counsel from men, who by their ignorance are easily led astray by the songs of bad birds; men who are real objects of pity and who require the protection of their white brethren, more at this time than ever."

This letter was replied to by the Committee:—The following paragraph form the concluding portion of their reply.

"Brothers:—We may tell you that we are glad in believing our rulers are disposed to live in peace with the Indian Nations. But we hope you will understand that the Good Spirit which inclines us to keep out of all that concerns war, teaches us also to live peaceable and quiet lives under the chiefs and rulers of our nation; therefore we cannot give or carry intelligence relative to war between two nations. All that seems left for us to do is to pray for and endeavor to persuade our rulers and all men to peace and concord.

"Brothers:—Our hearts were made glad to find by your letter that you were much disposed for peace, and that the war axe is long since buried deep in the great lake. We desire the evil spirit may never incline you to take it up again; and are sorry that your paths which were once strewn with flowers, are now covered with thorns. We hope you will not be moved from your peaceable resolutions by the bad birds, which you say still sing the songs of death in your ears. Do not listen to them; you have suffered too much already; it is time for you to sit down quietly and cultivate the land, and reap the benefit which the Good Spirit is ready to confer upon them that love Him. We remain your friends."

Signed by eighteen Friends.

(To be continued.)

It is a snare to judge of the place of a nation primarily by its material wealth, or its military power. History confirms as Revelation teaches, that the unseen forces are in the long run more effective than the visible. The strongest man in the Bible story was a hero in our childhood days, as militarism is in the newspaper columns of to-day; but we will see now that Sampson left the Israelites the worse for his rule; his moral weakness more than counterbalanced his great strength, and so it has ever been in the life of nations. Their lasting greatness can only grow out of pure, sober, true God-fearing lives; and, therefore, the love of God is the surest guide to a light-giving love of country. Your "Defence" will be much surer if it is founded upon righteousness—in public affairs as well as private—than upon any imitation of the conscriptions or military systems of the old world, which are making multitudes of men revolt against the present order of things in Europe.—Letter from Joshua and I. Kountree to Clerk of Australian General Meeting.

The common problem, yours, mine, every one's, is—not to fancy what were fair in life. Provided it could be—but, finding first

What may be, then find how to make it fair Up to our means; a very different thing.

—Browning.

Extracts from James Gough's Journal.

1748. About this time the Methodists had got some footing in sundry parts of Ireland, and in Mountmellick in particular. John Curtis, a Friend, of Bristol, who had been one of them about a year, having been afterwards convinced of our principles, and received a gift of the ministry, came over on a religious visit to Friends in Ireland, amongst whom his service was very acceptable. I was with him at a large meeting in the Court House in Athy, another in the assembly room at Athlone, and at several others which were very large. He appeared in inwardness of mind to attend upon his gift, and follow its leading; and concluded his service in Ireland with an epistle to Friends whom he had visited, which the national meeting ordered to be printed. I mention this by reason of what follows: one afternoon John Wesley made his first entrance into Mountmellick, attended by a large company on horseback, of those who joined him in Society. As several of their ministers had been here before, some of whom had invited me to come, and bring my family to hear them preach the gospel, I had not as yet found freedom to go; but hearing that John Wesley was to preach that evening in the open market place, I was not easy to avoid going, so I went, and standing at a Friend's shop door, I heard him begin with the following preamble or introduction:

"Before I unfold to you the oracles of God, I must first remove a stumbling block out of the way, which is this: I understand one John Curtis, from Bristol, hath of late been travelling in these parts, and endeavoring to lay waste that good work which it has pleased God to carry on by our hands, giving out that he was formerly a Methodist and acquainted with me. Now he never was a Methodist to my knowledge, and I think he could not be one in or about Bristol without it; and as to any acquaintance with the said John Curtis, I solemnly declare I never had any; only I remember being twice in his company occasionally about eight years ago. I hope no man will account me an offender for speaking the truth. If George Fox were here he would embrace me for it."

This was the substance of his introduction, in the same words, or very nearly the same, in which he delivered it, for I gave good attention to this part. Then he proceeded to what he called unfolding the oracles of God, which I thought was stamping the matter far too high. That evening I got two Friends to accompany me to his lodging to speak to him, thereupon at the first mentioning of the subject he discovered some warmth. "I tell you John Curtis has done more harm in his journey through these parts than ever he will do good as long as he lives. He has gone about scattering poison." This high charge he undertook to prove thus: "What poison is to the body, that bigotry is, to the mind; but John Curtis has been industrious to sow bigotry, that is to sow disaffection in the hearts of Christians toward one another, barely on account of difference in opinion." To all this, I replied to the following import—I was an entire stranger to John Curtis till he came into these parts, since which I had made use of the opportunity of contracting an acquaintance with him, and being pretty much in his company I have known him to be influenced by the universal love of God, and that he has endeavored to propagate the same in others. This thou canst never call scattering poison, and if my account differ from thine, so do the foundation on which it is built. For thou art only upon hearsay, which is too slender foundation whereupon publicly to asperse a man's character, who is not present to answer and vindicate himself. At this he seemed somewhat confused, and acknowledged that he had not duly considered that part of the matter, &c. I further observed to him that he ought to have duly regarded our Lord's directions, not to judge, &c. For if any good done, it is the Lord that doth it, and in what way and by what instruments He pleases; therefore all the glory is due to Him alone and no part of that glory or honor to any instrument, which can do nothing of itself, that it would be a sin in any instrument to take to itself what was due to God only, that if John Curtis faithfully did what Lord directed, he would be accepted, though no shining outward effects should arise from it. In regard to what thou hast alleged his sowing disaffection in the hearts of Christians towards one another, barely on account of difference in opinion; something occurs me on that head, which is that John Curtis might be endued with a sense of the danger which some might be in of magnifying and tolling certain men, instead of giving all glory to God, and apprehend it to be his duty to caution and guard them against that danger, which might be misconstrued by some seeking to sow disaffection towards them and their adherents. This opportunity concluded peaceably, with John Wesley's acknowledging that it had been to his edification, and that he therefore wished he could get the like opportunities with our Friends frequently; that he saw some things a clearer light than he had done before, that he would never say anything against John Curtis publicly again, unless he had intended a real foundation for it. I wrote John Curtis hereupon, who answered that he never pretended to, or spoke of his having any intimate acquaintance with John Wesley, but that he was regularly a Methodist some time. He sent me a certificate signed by several of the same fraternity and other testimonials. He also wrote to Wesley and sent me over copies of the letters that passed between them.

I was glad to see some in those awakened out of their sleep of darkness a thoughtfulness about their souls, and earnestly wished the increase and promotion of solid piety, but I had opportunity to observe, that those who were innocent and minded before, have continued the most steady and circumspect in their conduct; that those who had before gone into gross pollution being induced to believe that regeneration was an instantaneous, not a gradual work, did not sufficiently remain under repentance to let it have its perfect work; and that instead of pressing forward after the perfection of the inward life denying self and conformity to this world in its corrupting language and practice, their zeal too settled in the frequency of their meetings, hearing sermons, praying, singing and reading and treasuring up Scripture texts and passages in their memories, talking them over too li-customarily in conversation, which rendered these Divine truths like salt without proper savor, talking from them the awful light and dignity due to them. By these as Christian fortitude for standing steady in reverent simplicity and holy vigilance declined; a silent dependence on Christ, true teacher, was irksome, and that dependence was due to Him misplaced on an idol. The consequence was a dwindling blast on the first buddings of heavenly life, a decay of the Divine life; and many men soon returned, like the sow that was sown, to wallow in the mire and filth of aggression again; and threw off the affection, the insipid and surfeiting talk of religion; the form of godliness, which they had much gloried in, for want of humbly bending under the purifying power thereof.

Progressive Revelation.

Construction is the rescuer of thinking religions enervated by a rigid creed. . . . "Definitions," "explanations," so many doors by which man's reason escapes from the prison-house of extended creeds, does not imply that the great confessions of protestantism were not admirable in their that they did not contain great facts of Divine truth, that they did not answer a real purpose. No scholar can afford to be ignorant of the successive steps of unfolding revelation which have befallen theological systems. And yet in the present state of our knowledge, a system of theology which has been especially adapted to a given period, by the vitality and growth which it imparts (i. e. sustains), compel a subsequent age to reconstruct it. If all truth has been revealed, and if all revealed truth has been dug out of the Scriptures, then there may be no more on why a system of doctrine should not be finally and finally finished. But if the nature of revelation is such that truth can never be exhausted, then hinted in words, and must wait for forms before it can be understood in its fullness, variety and tendencies, then systems must precede experience, but must follow experience and record results. The life of man is continuous Divine Revelation. This without prejudice to Sacred Scripture. The Bible finished before it was written. The noblest of it must always be lived again before it can be understood. The life will always be more than the letter. The very method of revelation included the living element of the letter, as indispensable to its life. It is the unity of written revelation and the life of man going on outside of it— inseparable connection of the development of the race with the interpretation of parable, and prophecy, that made a complete final science of theology in the earlier of Christian civilization [as it is even impossible.—Christian Union].

BETTER than wealth, better than applause, better than the world's honor, is the reign of a Christ in a young man's heart.—Christ-Cynosure.

THE more men love the law of God, the more will they see the guilt of violating it.—Dr. ng.

THE HARVEST MOON.

Thou risest in glory,—thou full harvest moon!
All ruddy and glowing with light;
Like a gem that would rival the splendor of noon,
On the cool pallid brow of the night.

But as higher thou climest up yon bright arch of blue,
More pure and resplendent thy beam,
Shedding beauty on all, yet still softening the view,
Of hamlet and woodland and stream.

How it lights up the fields where the wheat-ear is bending,
And the path of the reaper, whose toil is now ending;

How it floats o'er the breast of the far-spreading ocean,
A pathway of silvery and tremulous motion.

It shines on the heath, where the wild flower is folded,

On the column, to art's nicest symmetry moulded,
On the bleak, rugged brow of the pine covered hill,
On the willowy marge of the lowliest rill.

And wherever it falls, God's rich bounty expresses,
Who the high and the low, in his providence blesses;
Faithful witness in heaven, still renewing the token,
Of a covenant love that shall never be broken.
—Maria Fox.

The Land of Promise in Sunshine and Shadow.

(Continued from page 19.)

But I promised to speak of the Society of the Temple later on. I think it was in the years of the sixties, when a certain Johann Hoffman, an eloquent German minister, succeeded by his mighty influence to induce a number of wealthy German farmers to sell their estates and go with him to Palestine to establish themselves in agricultural colonies,—not in a missionary capacity, but as a people ready to receive the Lord at His coming to restore His country and people. Strange to say, that even this man, powerful as he was, was a disciple of what is known in German divinity as "rationalistic theology," holding, that it is absurd to teach and to believe such records of the Bible, as are antagonistic to human reason. With them, spiritual reason must give room to carnal reason. It is the erring and soul-sicken- ing universalism of the different countries in divers terms. Every colonist or head of a family had to have not less than ten thousand dollars (German) for fear they might be troubled with paupers. As all others, they experienced the same difficulty in their dealings with the Turkish Government. One colony settled one mile south of Jerusalem, a second around Jaffa, a third not far from there in Sharon, a fourth in Haifa (Kaifa) at the foot of Mount Carmel. Ague and climatic fever reduced many families to a minimum, while some became utterly exterminated by the disease. Those in Sharon had the worst of all, because there was a swamp near by. One of them told me, they wanted to set out more eucalyptus trees to remedy somewhat the exceeding malarious condition of that place but the government "he says, would not let us." The colonists had many things in common, an expediency that ceased when a theological twist tended them in two. This uncomfortable malady occurred in all colonies, except in Jerusalem, where the presence of the founder, Dr. Hoffmann, succeeded in keeping things together, a virtue that with the rest of the settlement proved faint. As one may guess, they have their own schools, in Jerusalem also a high school, after which those that wish to acquire a scientific education, are sent to the old country. Where such an accomplishment was hoped to be reached in Palestine, it was regretted as a failure. The originator of the idea of the temple has followed the call of his Maker. His two sons reside in the Jerusalem colony, where they hold the position of their great father and engage in preaching, teaching, etc., besides editing the "Organ of the Temple," which on account of their members in the old country is printed in Germany.

The present generation of the Society of the Temple occasionally express themselves as unable to apprehend that certain inspiration, which caused their parents voluntarily to exchange a happy home, a comfortable situation, and by reason of their wealth a guaranteed future at home, with such a condition of things in a hostile country. What they have endured in sickness and death, in hard labor, failures through ignorance, in friction with friend and foe and mortifying elements of various names, is simply beyond description. Still, like the children of Israel in the wilderness, the greater part of the younger have prevailed—and to be said to their praise—hold on exhibition what their fathers have chiefly accomplished by endurance. Their lack of spiritual understanding, as well as power, is to be regretted. However I commend the good people to the care of the Everlasting Mercy.

At last a word about the prevailing religion of the country, which is called Islam. It originated in the mind of an Arabic merchant, who arose in 622 as the greatest and, strange as it is, most successful imposter in human history. It must be said however, that his success was not in spiritual power, but in the carnal weapons of his followers, who became rather fascinated by his psychological force upon the mind of such people, as we have unto the present day, who are always ready to yield to a greater power, whatever that power may be. Personally, I am inclined to believe that they were destined by God to serve His decree upon those people, particularly the strangely apostate Christian churches. The absolute eradication of all Christianity from all those countries is enough to make us tremble before Him, who sent the messages, addressed to the seven Churches in Asia (Rev. 2-3) into all the world. He is no respecter of persons, the time is very fast approaching, when not only the slackness of the majority of professors, but also the tampering with the Divine truth on the part of perverted teachers will turn into woe—or who knows—temporarily into superlative liars, foretold in I Thess. ii: 11-12, whose end is that of the beast.

However, Mohammed in all his fatal greatness was subject to the universal decree. "Every beginning is difficult." Born and at home in Mecca, where he ventured to bring out his new gospel, carnal in the extreme, he had to betake himself to Medina, where he found time to enrich the book, given to him, as he claimed, by Gabriel, who appeared unto him in the desert, where he had gone to meditate on religion; which resulted, as he pretended, in the commission of God through the angel to him, to carry out the supreme will as the Prophet of God with unlimited liberty, even above that allowed by that sacred book the Koran, to the most potent of his flock. He will judge all the world, says Mohammed, and even Jesus Christ is answerable to him. He will be just and considerate toward non-Mohammedans, but to his believers belongs the glory of all the different heavens with everlasting sensuality.

"Allah (God) is God and Mohammed is His prophet" is the creed of the Islam. To accommodate the reader with an analysis of the teachings of Mohammed's Koran which, in spite of some morals, contains the greatest blasphemy of human inventions, historic and—we may well guess—pre-historic, would almost seem to me as parlaying of their sins. Even the better elements in the Mohammedan system are practically useless, as for instance; "The truth only must be told in an oath, but a word (falsehood) not pre-meditated, Allah will not take seriously." However, they abstain from pork and liquor, but smoking is a common practice. Before the greatest contests Mohammed taught his believers to pray with face toward El Kuds (Jerusalem), after which Mecca and Medina were promoted to the holiest of the holy. On several occasions I observed, that they prostrate themselves on the ground, rise and repeat the ceremony in saying their prayers. The Turkish minarets in the form of a tower with watchman are calculated to stimulate the people to prayer. The stereotyped word is, "Come to prayer, come to security, Allah is great, Allah is most great, I testify, there is no deity but Allah."

Marvelous, wonderfully marvelous is the fact that these people can have such a sense of religion and yet utterly deny in heart and practice even the better teachings of their own scripture. They are greatly pleased by our imitation of smoothing the breast with the word, "Hamdillillah," that is, "thanks unto God."

The greetings of the Bible are still current among them. Mohammedan and Christian natives may, if well pleased, dismiss one with: "marsalami," (go in peace), but the former will never salute the latter with "May peace be with you." A few years ago a Mohammedan offered, or as he thought, presented his peace to another native near Bethlehem, whom he mistook for a fellow in faith. A minute later he found that the recipient of his peace was a Christian. With a storm he returned, fell on and beat him with the demand, "Give me my peace back, give me my peace back! Happily disinterested parties came by and released the poor victim.

The subsequent inhabitants of those countries have preserved the oriental costumes and manners, together with the whole character of the ancient generations, as far back as we have any record. One being thoroughly acquainted with the taste of that people of the present day, can hardly turn over a page in the Bible without being put in mind of one or the other self same incident, either in blessing or cursing or crafty tricks, far beyond our imagination. A few years ago, a European party traveled in Galilee, among whom was L. Schneller, the second son of the founder of the Syrian Orphanage. They asked a native to lease them his house for a time. Gladly he consented to their occupying it, but rent he would not take. With many words he explained over and over, that the house was worth so much (an amount exceeding the rate) but he was going to give it free to them. Our people, not being ignorant of their ways, laid down the price, which he accepted under blessings as, "God built your houses." A spectacle of the same type was the experience of Abraham with the children of Heth (Gen. xliii: observe verse 15).

The bearers of the oriental views, manners customs, tastes, etc., manifest an open hatred for all that is occidental, but sometimes it appears to me as if Providence had given it in their heart to preserve a vivid picture of the life and living of the generation in Bible ages.

(To be continued.)

Victims of Unnatural Schooling.

A writer in the Boston Transcript thus records the impressions caused by a visit to an asylum:

"I was amazed to see so many familiar faces, of persons whom I had missed from the street and other public places, and had supposed were dead; and in one sense they were. Many, and indeed I should say the majority, were teachers and overwrought scholars preparing to be teachers. One who accompanied me, and who had been at one time a patient here, and knew most of the histories of these patients, told me much that was sadly interesting. So many bright women. So many fine scholars. Is this the end for which they toiled and studied? One especially I shall never forget.

"Which was the most dreadful of all whom you saw?" asked my friend; and I described her. She was a babbling idiot, full of grimaces, of ceaseless talk, and painful laughter.

"And did you not recognize her."
"Recognize her? How was it possible?" Then I was told that she was once the brilliant and accomplished teacher who taught in Blank's school, formerly one of the most fashionable in Boston. I had known her well; I had admired her beautiful and serious face, and her serene and stately manner.

"I desired to look again. I begged permission to walk once more through the gloomy gallery. And now as 'through a glass darkly,' I could trace somewhat the changed features. The large dark, serene eyes were there, but the soul had fled; the features were as if cast of plaster, the face was the same, but it was like a face inverted, reversed, distorted—it was the face of an idiot.

"And now when I hear of vacations over during the hot days of September, and reflect how little during the whole year is the out-of-door life in New England, and how long a time we must be kept in the houses and in the school-rooms, a picture rises before me, a scene peopled with human beings who were once scholars and teachers in this same Boston, over-worked, over-studied, over-pushed, one brain doing the work of three, till the goal is reached, and the Bastille over the river is gained.

"When I hear of parents and guardians of youth speaking of their children's work in the school, the examinations and the 'emulations' and the prostrations that follow, I sometimes feel inclined to ask, 'To what insane asylum do you propose to send your daughter when she is finished?'"

The True Prosperity.

One of the greatest moral perils w prosperity brings in its train is absorptio external activities of every kind. When tides of material energy are at the fir hosts of men are swept from their spi moorings; not by gross temptations but by pressure of work and the cares which c with success. For there is nothing more acting than success; a man pays for it to uttermost.

The unsuccessful look at the success and see only the influence, opportunities authority which follow fast on the steps the prosperous man; they do not see the creased weight of responsibility, the ac care, the hosts of claims on time and strer and means which spring up on all sides cannot be evaded. The burden is alv heavy; it is sometimes too great to be bo for success has its tragedies no less than: ure. A sudden and great popularity comin a generous and kindly artist and writer a years ago brought with it such a burd correspondence and publicity, such demer upon time and sympathy, that it sapped vitality of the kindly man who did not k how to protect himself from the invasio the world.

Men cease to think of God because so o other things demand attention; they lose vision of spiritual things because so many jets close at hand must be looked at cared for. The most generous nature is o drained of the power of sympathy and quality of helpfulness by sheer exhaustion; he who gives himself so completely to terial duties and work that the end of the finds him a spent force has nothing left give to higher interests and to more endu work. The men who set out to make a tune in order that they may live their life they choose, and put body and soul into t undertaking, often come face to face at end, when the fortune has been made, v an empty life, a worn-out body, and a n that has lost the power to enjoy.

In such a period of prosperity as that thro which the country has been passing men imperceptibly swept along by the current, without being aware of the changes that being wrought in their aims and habits. power of attention is limited even in the str est minds, and the heart cannot have r great and deep affections. A few months the noise of all kinds of traffic, the rust every sort of activity, the turmoil of work in eager haste to cope with undertakings for their present strength, seemer drown the voices of religion and of the s ritual interests. A great and terrible soum rushing feet seemed to fill the world deafened those who were sensitive to the spoken cries of their time. There seeme be no longer any place for the quiet life, ancient sweetness of devotion, the old-t pieties. The world had become so noisy; there seemed to be no places where the s small voice could be heard; the world grown so crowded that there seemed to b longer any room for God in it.

Already, as the tide ebbs a little and machines move less swiftly and the noise diminishes, the sensitive feel the change; old hopes revive again; the old aims beo once more; there is time to remember there is room for his coming again. We prosper, and God best answers our prayers by sending a frost of adversity on all great tropical growths with which we have covered ourselves; for we think of our sins and He thinks of our needs; we care for our bodies and He cares for our spirits. Thousands of prayers are heard and answered while men wait in vain for the coming of the things they have asked for. When a man prays for prosperity, ease, comfort and peace, he means that he craves the best things for himself. God answers the real, not the spoken prayer, and sends the man the conditions which will give him, if he accepts them, the desire of his heart; and he does not know that what he really wanted has been granted.

We often pray for purity, for usefulness, for the highest qualities of character and forget that these things cannot be had without co-operation. We pray for strength, and when God sends the great perils which inspire courage we do not recognize the answer to our prayer. We are continually asking for the strength and peace and wisdom which can come only as the result of the discipline and thorough education; and when God sends the means of this exacting training, we cry out that our prayers are unheeded and we are forgotten!

How sensible man undervalues the blessings of prosperity, but there are greater blessings in his hand who knows when to give and when to withhold, and who cares for us, not our earthly parents who rob their children of the highest happiness by sheltering them from pain, but with the divine wisdom which sees beyond the little hour of time to the countless years of eternity. It is better to have than to be so absorbed in work that we have no time to live; it is better to have fewer interests of the hand and more of the mind; it is better to have fewer ties that bind us to the past and time and a wider freedom to enjoy the future's world. Happy are they who live in the light of the world with the dignity of immortal spirits, who take time enough for love and friendship and growth, and make room for the future in whom is man's only final prosperity. Selected.

AT A MORE CONVENIENT SEASON.—A Chinaman made complaint against a laundryman whose bill had not been paid, that is your charge against this young man (the laundryman)? The aggrieved Celestial said: "He munched by and by." Plenty of young men "too munched by and by." Have a purpose and fulfill it now. Most men never use the power they possess. Thousands of talents are wrapped up in napkins. Wrap them quickly and put them out to use. The world has need of them. Men as much as and disastrously by choosing to do, as by choosing to do. Manfully oppose to pull against the stream of evil; in doing we are doing no harm by lying on our backs, we are floating down towards the sea of ruin's cataract.

They make men out of such things as we said a bright eyed little boy to a cross which he called out, "What are you good

The Right of Temperance Instruction.

(Henry Sablin, the writer of the following in the Journal and Educator, stands among the foremost as an educational authority in Iowa.—Ed.)

The question which is raised again by Dr. Bowditch and Prof. Hodge brings the entire moral code as taught in our schools under fire, and possibly under condemnation. A large per cent. of the teachers in the schools of Massachusetts declare that, in their belief, scientific temperance instruction is, to say the least, of no benefit whatever. Upon what these teachers base their conclusions we are not informed. But let us apply the same methods in determining the results of moral instruction in the school.

The other day four boys, neither of whom had reached his majority, were arrested after a fight worthy of mature bandits, and are to be tried for murder. This morning I notice the arrest of three boys, the oldest not out of his teens, for the murder of an old woman. We are establishing courts for the special purpose of dealing with youthful criminals. We are making greater efforts than ever to impress upon our teachers the necessity of inculcating upon the children under their care the doctrine of right living. Now if we should ask a number of teachers in various cities: "How much do you think you are accomplishing in moral training in your schools," the results would not be very encouraging. It would, however, be as fair as the plan adopted in the case in hand.

The habit of cigarette smoking is said to be on the increase. Shall we on that account lessen our efforts against it? Why may we not say that most of our moral instruction is "unscientific and undesirable," and therefore should be abolished? In short, whatever charges are made against the system of scientific temperance instruction may, with equal force, be brought against every effort made to control and abolish the gigantic evils which threaten the American youth of to-day; profanity, licentiousness, disregard for law, dishonesty, and a score of others which might be mentioned.

In certain quarters the practice of inculcating total abstinence seems to be offensive, and yet no one was ever harmed by such teaching. On the other hand, no one can deny that hundreds, even thousands, have been ruined through habits which commenced with the moderate use of intoxicants. Supposing it is true that alcohol is at times a food, and not always a poison, it does not affect the truth that even as a food it is full of danger to man, both physically and morally. Providing it is true that the text-books are not scientifically correct, if from them the pupils learn the danger which comes from the use of alcohol and narcotics they certainly are better than none. Why should we take any backward step, or lessen our efforts in that direction?

It seems very singular that none of these scientific men, who denounce and decry our present school physiologies as worthless, ever venture to prepare one scientifically correct, which it is safe to put in the hands of the pupils. Here is a chance to do a good deed, because, according to their statements, such a book is sorely needed, and would supply a much felt want. Is it possible that they themselves are afraid to meet the criticism which they so unsparingly mete out to others? Let me quote an extract from the paper telegraphed to the Ottawa Sun: "Failing to observe the distinction between the diametrically opposite conceptions of use and abuse, some of its advocates have not hesitated to teach our children that the horrible results of a prolonged use of alcohol may be expected to follow any departure from total abstinence."

That is not far from the truth, because we do aim to teach them that there is a possibility, and a very strong one at that, that the dire results of intemperance may follow any departure from total abstinence. We are earnest enough in our determination to impress upon the plastic mind of the child that the origin of the drink habit is in allowing it to fasten itself upon them when the body and mind are alike in that plastic state which is incident to early childhood.

Let me make a fair proposition to these scientists who are so opposed to temperance instruction as unscientific. If they will prepare a text book accurately scientific, embracing all departments of physiology and hygiene, such a book as they can honestly and heartily recommend, and accompany it with such illustrations and methods of instruction as the latest discoveries and experiments seem to justify as correct, we will welcome its use in our schools, provided always, however, that its teachings shall be on the side of total abstinence, and that it shall set forth plainly the dangers which accompany the moderate use of stimulants and narcotics by the young.

A MIGHTY MYTH.—Some time since, a woman delivered a lecture in Lancashire, England, against Christianity, in which she declared that the gospel narrative of the life of Christ is a myth or fable. One of the millhands who listened to her obtained leave to ask a question.

"The question," said he, "I want to ask the lady is this: Thirty years ago, I was a curse to this town, and everybody shrank from me that had any respect for himself. I often tried to do better, but could not succeed. The teetotalers got hold of me, but I broke the pledge so often that they said it was no use trying me any longer: then the police got hold of me, and I was taken before the magistrates, and they tried; and next I was sent to prison and the wardens tried what they could do; but though they all tried, I was nothing better, but rather worse.

"Now, you say that Christ is a myth. But when I tried, and the teetotalers, the police, the magistrates, and the wardens of the prisons all tried in vain, then Christ took hold of me, touched my heart, and made me a new man. And now I am a member of the church, a class-leader, a superintendent of the Sunday school; and I ask, if Christ is a myth, how comes it to pass that that myth, is stronger than all the others put together?" The lady was silent. "Nay, Miss," said he, "say what you will, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation."—Christian Secretary.

Govern the lips
As they were palace doors, the king within;
Tranquil and fair and courteous be all words
Which from that presence win.

—Edwin Arnold.

The Smallness of Seeds.

A seed is naturally a little thing. There are no great seeds. Most seeds are so small that they are never noticed at all. The birds or the winds carry them, and the plants spring up where they had not been before, and whither no one saw the seeds come. And what is true of seeds literally, is true of them metaphorically. The seeds from which character springs are small—small thoughts or imaginations, small acts or omissions, small words or habits. Often times these are forgotten. They lie so far back in the past, and were at the time so inconspicuously small. But they were the seeds from which what has come after inevitably sprang.

A little while ago, George E. Foster, former Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada was asked, "What was the most potent influence for good in your boyhood?" And he answered, "The simplest answer would be, 'Pure and high ideals.' In tracing the sources of these ideals, the silken threads grow fine and widely extended. They lead back to the memory of a sainted mother, whose face I saw last when I was three years old, but whose presence has never left me; to influences in Christian homes which were open to me; to the spirit of the old pioneers of the denomination to which my father belonged, whose prayers and saintly zeal impressed me deeply; to some of the teachers of early years, whose inspiration entered into me and filled me with desire to excel; to the books I read early in life, filled with story of great men and great accomplishments; to the Bible characters, whose story I read over and over in tender and impressionable years; to the temperance orders, which I joined at an early age, and whose principles of self-denial and brotherly help I assimilated; to the encouraging words dropped by men in passing—so little a thing for them, but treasured as of immense worth by me; to the Sunday school and the preaching services of the church, which I constantly attended."

Most of these influences were exerted upon this lad unconsciously. The books did not know that they were being read. The old pioneers probably thought nothing of the boy, and the men who spoke encouraging words spoke them and forgot. But all these were seeds, small things, but seeds planted in the lad's life, and they produced their harvest in due season.

Those who associate with younger lives need to remember that whatever goes into their lives goes in forever. It may be but a small influence, but it will leave its mark. When a big boy swears in the presence of a smaller boy, and the latter takes it up at once because it seems manly, there is a quick harvest from a bad sowing. When fathers drink and smoke and their sons adopt the same habits, it is only the faithful operation of the laws which control all nature. What is sown and what is reaped are of the same character.

All the small influences of childhood and youth are productive. In our young days, we may often be cast down because they seem to move so slowly. "If only I were once grown," we say, "I would accomplish things then, and I could give shape to my life as I would." But nothing could be wider of the truth. These are the very days when we are giving shape to our lives. The seeds of all our future accomplishments are being sown now. We shall reap in these later years only what we plant in these earlier years.

If there is discouragement in this thought on the side of evil, there is boundless hope in it on the side of good. As Professor James, of Harvard, says in his Psychology:

"Nothing we ever do is, in strict scientific literalness, wiped out. Of course, this has its good side as well as its bad one. As we become permanent drunkards by so many separate drinks, so we become saints in the moral, and authorities and experts in the practical and scientific spheres by so many separate acts and hours of work. Let no youth have any anxiety about the upshot of his education, whatever the line of it may be. If he keep faithfully busy each hour of the working day, he may safely leave the final result to itself. He can with perfect certainty count on waking up some fine morning to find himself one of the competent ones of his generation, in whatever pursuit he may have singled out. Silently, between all the details of his business, the power of judging in all that class of matter will have built itself up within him as a possession that will never pass away. Young people should know this truth in advance. The ignorance of it has probably engendered more discouragement and faint-heartedness in youth embarking on arduous careers than all other causes put together."

Sir William Van Horn, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, was asked the same question addressed to G. E. Foster, and he replied, "Having to work." Doubtless as a boy that seemed the sorrow of life. He must have dreamed of what he would do some day when this sorrowful necessity was past. But this necessity was the seed of all his later achievements.

It is the small circumstances and influences which mould life. As we look back over our lives, we can see now how trifling were the determinative things. For some of them we are grateful, trembling as we think how nearly we missed them. For others we are filled with shame and penitence, remembering how easily we might have avoided them. If we had known so much was going to result from them, we should not have called them small.

Once sown in a life, a small seed is sown. We cannot easily root it out. To change the figure and to recall Gladstone's words: "No wave on the great ocean of time, when once it has floated past us, can be recalled. All we can do is to watch the new form and motion of the next, and launch upon it, to try, in the manner our best judgment may suggest, our strength and skill." —Forward.

HEART SUNSHINE.—We cannot change the world, taking out all its thorns, making its tasks easy and its burdens light, moulding all its discords into harmonies, transforming its ugliness into beauty; but we can have our own hearts renewed by the grace of God, and thus the world will be made over for us. A new heart makes all things new. A heart of love will find love everywhere; a soul of song will find sweet music everywhere. —J. R. Miller.

ART thou angry that others disappoint thee? Remember thou cannot depend upon thyself. —A. D. 1735.

SEKINAE.

Ark that rode the Deluge wave
Found on Ararat her grave;
All her stalwart gopher-wood
Rotted in that solitude.

Ark that held the holy things,
Shadowed by the golden wings,
Fallen into dust, is blown
Round the hills where once it shone.

Yet the Covenant is true—
God hath kept his oath with you;
In the humblest heart, behold
Something costlier than gold!
Hush! within that quivering shrine Broods the Immanent Divine!

—Selected

Science and Industry.

ICELAND'S FIRST RAILROAD.—According to the Tribune the only country without a railroad is Iceland, but one plant is about to be built there seventeen miles long, for the purpose of working some sulphur mines which at that distance from the nearest harbor.

The disastrous result of eight years drought in a region that has only a limited water supply is the most impressive lesson contained in Professional Paper No. 23, recently published by the United States Geological Survey. "Forest Conditions in the Black A Forest Reserve, Arizona" is the title of the paper.

SATURN'S NEWFOUND MOON.—About years ago Professor Pickering, of Harvard, discovered a new satellite of Saturn. In spring and summer have been devoted to taking photographs for the purpose of determining its orbit. It has been found that it revolves around Saturn, and photographs have enabled astronomers to follow it from Fourth Month 16th to Sixth Month 9th of this year.

THE UNDERGROUND WATERS OF SOUTHERN LOUISIANA.—To no State in the Union has so copious a supply of deep well water been greater boon than the State of Louisiana. The use of underground waters for the irrigation of rice fields has led to the sinking of an unusually large number of wells in the southern part of the State, especially in the region along the coast, where values in some localities have increased five to ten fold within the ten years through the reclamation of the land by irrigation. Water Supply and Irrigation Paper No. 101, of the United States Geological Survey, entitled "The Underground Water of Southern Louisiana" recently published gratuitously, contains therefore a great deal of information that may be of value to people interested. Professor Harris concludes with a chapter on well drilling and pumping.

HOW ICEBERGS ARE FORMED.—Icebergs from the Atlantic are the product of the Greenland glaciers and are formed by the thousand in the far Northern froids. As the glaciers swing into the sea they "calve" or throw off mighty blocks, and these are what we know as icebergs. Some are of stupendous dimensions. Dr. Kane's Arctic expedition saw one two-and-a-half miles long and two-and-a-half miles and in half a mile of water in Melville Bay. of course, broke up into small pieces in which sun and sea and tide molded into beautiful and fantastic forms familiar to Arctic voyager. As they drift south and un plays on their facade, it melts them shimmering cascades which leap into the while below the tide frets them into deliriacreries. Then the berg gets top-heavy, s over, and exhibits an absolutely new our, and so the process continues until disappear in the Gulf stream. The Lab-c current, which carries them on its bo-xtends from the Polar sea to the south of foundland, an oceanic river 2000 miles and one hundred wide, and generously veled with these gorgeous creations.—Lure's Magazine.

IE effectiveness of the anti-mosquito cam- in reducing malaria could hardly be more ingly illustrated than in the recent exper- of Ismailia, figures respecting which are n in the current Climate. Under the rintenance of Prof. Boyce, and following r Ross's directions, strict measures were ted for the extermination of the mosquito. formation of "Drains Brigade" and "Peum Brigade" was the first step, the duty e first being to keep all drains clear, and e second to add petroleum to all collect- of water which could not be removed at . Each brigade was headed by a European, their work was very thoroughly carried . The result was that the mosquito became carce in Ismailia as in Paris, and Prof. e slept without mosquito nets. Concur- ly, the number of cases of malaria in Is- a dropped in one year from 1,551 to 209. e deaths from malaria dropped from forty our. The work has been carried through comparatively small cost when set against great advantages secured.

ER STAMP FACTORY.—The government ting office in Washington, the Bureau of raving and Printing, keeps over twenty- hundred employees busy making stamps paper money. Crittenden Marriott, in ys and Girls," tells how stamps are made e:
 Some day or other the third assistant post-er-general decides that our existing set of ps is behind the times and that it should eplaced by one more up to date and more opriate. He calls on the chief of the au- of Engraving and Printing to furnish with designs, and the chief in turn calls his artists to make him drawings. These made very large and are reduced by phot- to the proper sizes and submitted for oval, every step in the work calling for per skill. Sometimes half a dozen sets are mitted before one is found acceptable. en the chief sends the designs to the en-ers, who are paid from two thousand five dred dollars to six thousand dollars a year. man does the portraits, another the scroll r, another the letters, and so on. Each ts on a separate piece of steel and takes ts and sometimes months for his work. t last the separate parts are done. Then e are "assembled," that is, bound together s to form one perfect die. But one die, matter how rapidly it was worked, could never begin to supply the needs of a country which uses some fifteen million stamps a year. Nor would it be possible to prepare enough single dies to supply these needs—not unless all the engravers in the world should be employed to work at them all the time.

Fortunately only one die is needed. From it an imprint is made, in reverse, on a soft steel roller, which is then hardened and applied four hundred times to a copper plate. Every time it leaves a sunken imprint, until at last we have a plate engraved with twenty rows of twenty stamps each from which the stamps are printed in sheets of four hundred.

But even this is not all. Many such plates of four hundred are made, the exact number depending on the number of stamps of that particular denomination that are needed. With a one-dollar stamp, for instance, only one or two plates are needed; for a two-cent stamp hundreds are required. It takes one man and two girls to run a stamp printing press, each having his or her own duty, such as inking, cleaning, and otherwise preparing the plate, putting in and taking out the paper, and keeping tab on the exact number of sheets run through.

Still more workers are required after the stamps are printed. They have to be gummed, with a different sort of gum for each season of the year; to be dried by artificial heat that loses no time in discharging its office; to be examined for breaks, tears and spots; to be punctured with the familiar pin-hole perforations that make it easy for you to tear them apart, and to be cut into four quarters for convenience in shipment. The various stages of this part of the work requires about half the force of the bureau; most of the other half do similar things to the banknotes.

A stamp as it comes into your hands does not look as if all this work had been done upon it; yet it has—and, more too. For instance, every sheet has been counted no less than fifty times. This means that something has been done to it by more than fifty separate workers, for it is counted each time simply because it has passed from one worker to another; because each must know how many sheets he received and how many he surrendered. Then, if one of the sheets is lost, or stolen, the one responsible can be fixed on instantly.

Altogether, not less than two hundred people have to do with the making of a single stamp, counting from the third assistant postmaster-general down to the clerk who hands it to you through his window.

Sometimes there comes an hour of calm; Grief turns to blessing, pain to balm; A Sower that works above my will Still leads me onward, upward still; And then my heart attains to this— To thank thee for the things I miss.
 —P. W. Higginson.

Items Concerning the Society.

John B. Garrett and Joel Cadbury visited Tuckerton Meeting, N. J., on First-day, the 24th ult. Of an attendance of twenty-seven persons, twenty were men.

Information is given that Thomas H. Whitson obtained a minute from Birmingham Monthly Meeting on the 27th to visit the families of Concord Quarterly Meeting and public institutions within its territory.

"The articles in THE FRIEND, under the head of 'The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting,' have interested me very much, and I trust I feel thankful not only that this work was done, but that its records are so clear, and now placed before the readers of THE FRIEND."—Correspondent.

The same correspondent asks for the poem beginning as follows, and will some reader favor us with the whole of it?

"Who can fathom the redeeming Power of universal love? Human thought though ever teeming Still must insufficient prove. Sure the Father's love was burning For poor lost and helpless man, Anxious for his safe returning Laid the meditorial plan."

Edwin Jones, the father of Rufus M. Jones (editor of the American Friend), and the youngest brother of Eli Jones, was suddenly killed at South China, Maine, Seventh Month 23d, by a locomotive on the railroad. His constant exhortation for years is said to have been, "Press on with joy in this life."

Mary P. Nicholson has completed her visits to the small meetings of Concord Quarter, Pa., with a single exception (Concord), which has been postponed for the convenience of the Friends of that meeting. She will now intermit her visits until some time in the Ninth Month, when the meetings of Western Quarter, it is expected, will be taken up.

Comment has heretofore been made in our columns on the use of the term "Quaker" to recommend articles for sale, and the protest against the use of it by certain beer bottlers of England. The outcome of this latter contention is thus given by the British Friend:

"We regret to learn that the action taken against Ellis & Co., the firm of Beer Bottlers, who have adopted the term 'Quaker Beer' as a trademark, has proved futile. It was ruled by the judge that in this case 'there was no substantial grievance, Quakers being a well known and respected body, it was absurd to suppose that the trademark complained of would cast any reflection on them.'"

Notes in General.

The publishers of the Jewish Encyclopedia have already issued seven of the twelve volumes of the great work, which, when completed, will give to the world for the first time a history of the Jewish race in all ages and countries.

In a letter to the New York Sun, Goldwin Smith says that the value of the New Testament to a rationalist does not depend on anything that modern criticism may sweep away. "It rests on the character unmistakably portrayed, and on the doctrines which unquestionably gave birth to Christendom."

Charles Ferguson, of Kansas City, Mo., in a paper written for the Christian Register, says: "We are coming to understand that a sect is not a Church; it is no more a Church than a political party is a State. The prevalence of the sectarian spirit has obscured the essential Church idea, just as party spirit obscures the true idea of the State. The history of the Church cannot be traced in the history of sects."

Representative McCall, in his Ph. B. oration at Cambridge, said: "While in our need we shall never lack brave men, so may we never lack for cravens when it shall be proposed that we ourselves trample the great principles of our government under our feet, raise our flag in mockery of our history and plunder some sister nation whose only offence against us is that she adds to the crime of weakness the more heinous crime of possessing that which tempts our avarice."

John D. Rockefeller recently offered the criticism that "there is not enough sociability in the churches." Henry C. Swentzel takes another view. He says: "There is imminent danger of Christian institutionalism being substituted for real religion. In these days it ought not to be necessary for persons to go to church to obtain social advantages. The purpose of the church is to present Jesus Christ to the thought, heart and conscience of the people. Churches are not social or matrimonial agencies, but religious institutions. The sooner Christian persons recognize the divine mission of the church the better it will be for both the church and the people." This view, however, gives us no excuse to minimize the social relations of our members, for we are a Society.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—Notices to manufacturers and heads of industrial establishments in this city have lately been sent by the Chief of the Bureau of Boiler Inspection, notifying them to comply with the smoke ordinance. Provisions of the ordinance, designed to abate the smoke nuisance, will go into effect on Third Month 1st. Fifty-one hundred letters, containing a copy of the ordinances, have been sent to manufacturers. The ordinance, imposing a fine of $20 for violation, reads:

"An ordinance to regulate the emission of smoke from chimneys, stacks, flues or open places within the city of Philadelphia, providing a color scale for the measurement of the degree and darkness of such smoke; making it unlawful to permit the escape of smoke of certain degrees of darkness, and providing a penalty for the violation of this ordinance."

It is stated that in New York City pneumonia is contributing more to the high mortality during these summer months than any other disease. The health authorities and medical men of the city are at a loss to explain its prevalence in hot weather.

Announcement has been made that the anthracite mines in Eastern Pennsylvania are to be idle for the present. Officers of the Reading Company, in explaining the cause of the shutdown, stated that a dull market existed, so that more coal has been produced than sold or ordered. It is stated that this action of the operators will throw about 100,000 miners out of work for the week, entailing a loss in wages of about $500,000. This will prove a severe blow to the business interests in the anthracite region, and if the mines are closed for a longer period the effect will be felt throughout the State.

A strike of operatives in cotton mills at Fall River, Mass., has taken place, involving about 30,000 employees and eighty-one mills. It is in consequence of a proposed reduction of 12 1/2 cent. in wages. The manufacturers maintain that they have tried every plan which they could think of to avoid a reduction in wages, and took their final step only when driven to do so to save their business.

The strike of butchers in Chicago and other centres of the meat-packing industry has continued, and teamsters and others have joined in a sympathetic strike. Workmen from outside of the city have been taken to Chicago stockyards under protection of the police. All the railroads entering Chicago are closed in this strike. Under orders of the president of the Freight Handlers' Union. Thousands of animals are, however, it is stated, slaughtered in the stockyards every twenty-four hours.

A book wagon, containing a public library, has been completed by the Wisconsin free library commission. As the wagon passes through the counties, the farmers will be invited to select their winter's reading. The wagon will be books for the old and young, and each family will be allowed to make as large a selection as desired. The following spring the wagon will make another trip through the same territory to gather up the books and return them to the central office. One part of the scheme is that neighbors reading near enough to make it possible shall share their books with one another.

FOREIGN.—The British steamship Malacca and its crew, captured by Russian volunteer vessels in the Red Sea, have been released.

The Foreign Office in Berlin has announced that Russia has agreed to furnish Germany with the arms and shell magazines for any losses sustained by the seizures of German ships and the detention of the Prinz Heinrich's mail. An inquiry is now in progress to determine what claims shall be presented. Russia also agrees to restore and forward the contents of the two seized mail packages.

The Russians have withdrawn from New Chang after destroying much government property. The Japanese troops have taken possession of the city. They have taken possession of other strongly fortified positions near Port Arthur.

The Vladivostok squadron of Russian war vessels has captured several vessels of the coast of Japan, which were used for carrying opium or other contraband to Japan held to be contraband of war. Among the vessels captured were the British steamship Knight Commander from New York, bound to Chinese and Japanese ports. This vessel was sunk by the Russians, an act which has created much excitement in England, and the British Government has made formal demands upon Russia, which include compensation to the owners of the ship and the owners of the goods on board the Knight Commander, and an apology for the action of the Russian cruisers, and an agreement that instructions be given which will prevent a repetition of such action. Count Benckendorff, the Russian Ambassador to Great Britain, has informed Lord Lansdowne that if Russia had committed a wrong she was ready and willing to make full reparation, but before any action could be taken in the Knight Commander case the Russian Government must have the opportunity of receiving the report of the commander of the Vladivostok squadron.

The Russian war vessels St. Petersburg and Smolensk, which have recently been operating in the Red Sea, have been recalled by Russia. These are part of what is called the Black Sea squadron, which passed through the Straits of Dardanelles as merchantmen, and were afterwards converted into war vessels. As men-of-war they are prohibited by treaty from passing from the Black Sea into the Mediterranean. This irregular status of these vessels has caused much discontent at London.

A despatch from London says: Russia has filed a formal protest at the Foreign Office against British shipments of contraband to Japan. The Russian Government since the beginning of the war has carefully watched the manufacture of goods intended for the use of the Japanese Government, and as soon as it was established that such goods went to the hostile destination the facts were officially communicated to the British Government, with the request that measures be taken to put a stop to it. It is further asserted that in many cases the government has not taken action, and it is understood that when the war ends Russia proposes to present a bill for damages to the British Government which will include indemnities claimed for the seizure of British steamships.

On the 28th ult. the Russian Minister of the Interior Plehve was assassinated in a street in St. Petersburg and immediately killed by the explosion of a bomb. The assassin was arrested.

The Japanese on the 29th says: It has developed in the investigation of the death of Minister of the Interior Plehve that the police for some time past have been aware a plot was maturing against the Emperor, and notified one of the Ministers that a party of fifty-one Anarchists had arrived in St. Petersburg. Several arrests were made some days before the assassination of Plehve.

The Japanese lately demanded of the Germans defending Port Arthur its surrender previously to a general assault about to be made upon this stronghold. The demand was refused. It is stated that the Japanese have made great progress in their operations around the besieged fortress.

A commercial treaty between Russia and Germany was signed on the 28th ult.

In consequence of the formal refusal of the Pope to withdraw certain orders given to two French bishops, diplomatic relations between France and the Papal Government, it is stated, are ended.

Jackon H. Ralston, of Washington, D. C., has signed his final award as umpire of the Italian-Venezuelan Commission, and this completes the labors of all the recent Venezuelan mixed commissions. About 360 claims, aggregating $6,000,000, were filed with the Italian Commission, there being more Italian claimants than of any other nationality, and the aggregate awards were about $600,000.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

Benj. Heritage, N. J.; Ann Satterthwaite for Margaret T. Engle, N. J.; Mary A. Osborne and for Mary M. Frazer, Ind.; A. L. Hoyle, N. J.; Thos. Waring, N. J.; Rebecca Morgan and Charles P. L. Thomas, Pa.; Sarah Richie, N. J., and for Hannah D. White, O.; Elizabeth H. Richie, N. J., $2.40; James F. Reid, Pa.; Mary Paxson, Phila.; Richard T. Cadbury, Phila.; Elizabeth K. Hutchinson, Phila.; Elisha Roberts, N. J., $10 for himself, David

Roberts, G'ym H. Roberts, William H. Roberts, Geo. W. R. Richie, M. J.; Geo. W. Warner, John G. Willis, N. J.; Jonathan E. Rhoads, $8 for himself, Joseph Rhoads, George A. Hill and Robert R. Tattall; Geo. S. Hutton, Phila. for himself, Phebe Hutton, Anne W. Thon and R. C. Pandrich; George Blackburn, Ag't, $10 for himself, Geo. W. Blackburn, M. D.; C. Bonsall, Martha C. Coe, Ashbel Carey, son S. French, Mary R. Fawcett, Edward C. cett, Rebecca S. Hodgins, Amy J. Morlan, Ed Stratton, Edward F. Stratton and Catharine Thomas; Samuel L. Fox, Pa.; Conly B. maker, Phila., and for Edward L. Richie; Smith, Ag't, O.; $30 for Jonathan Elroy J. J. V. Bins, William Atkinson, Tabitha D. Mary T. Hall, Nathan L. Hall, Lewis Hall, G. McGrew, Hannah Mary Matson, Edith Smith from R. Smith, B. Franklin Starbuck, Louis T. Ellwood D. Whinery and Thomas B. Whine R. Haines, G'ym; Joseph J. Coppock, Agent $18 for Sarah Armstrong, Lewis W. Ewe, Pet Dyhr, Benjamin Ellyson, Wilson C. Hirst, Nic Larson, Wilson T. Sidwell, William Thomas; Pearson Thomas; Jesse Negus, Agent, Ia.; William D. Branson, Joseph Hawley, Lyd Oliphant and Clarkson T. Penrose; Mary Jones, Pa.; Isaac Morgan and Charles P. L. Geo. W. Thorp, F'k'd; Margaret Kite, O.; E. Mott, Ia.; Thos. S. Shearman, Canada; Mar Darnell, N. J.; Hamilton Haines, N. J.; J. C. Trimble, Pa., $12 for himself, Ann Ashton, F. M. Hawley, Townsend T. Sharpless, Mar Sharpless, and Natick Morgan and Charles P. L. Geo. W. Haines, N. J.; E. H. Richie for Arthur L. Richie, I. Sarah G. Woolman, Pa.; D. S. Allen for Geo. Allen, Pa.; Eliza Yeates, Pa.; Geo. J. Foster Lydia H. Moorman, Ia.; Emma L. Wilkins, P. W. C. John for Matilda M. John, Ia.; Joshua B. White, N. J.; $34 for Rebecca Morgan, G. Satterthwaite, Wm. D. Oliphant, Alfred Brantham, Cyrus Brantingham, William Brantingham Sarah Ann Hobson, Louisa Harris, George Megrall, Jos. Masters, Walter Edgerton, G. Dewees, Chas. Gamble, Joseph C. Stratton, Wynn Stratton, Alice G. Leonard, Ann WI Chas. Perry, R. I., $14 for himself, Mary Geo. Lydia F. Nichols, George C. Foster, Martha field, Elizabeth P. Foster and Lucy W. F. Geo. A. Keely, Del.; Mabel A. McKewen, I. Wm. F. Terrell, Va.; Anna M. Shearman, O.; nah A. Webster, prof Homer J. Webster, O.; L. K. Haines, N. J.; $10 for Washington, P. George Haines, Jr., N. J.; Mary P. Nicholson, Elhanan Zook and for Rachel M. Zook, Pa.

Remittances received after Third-day noon appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., P. During the Seventh and Eighth Months the Library is open on Fifth-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

The Friends' City Home can accommodate young men, who may prefer to spend the summer in the city. Address Mary T. Widman, 1623 S. Street.

Thomas H. Whitson has been released as Agent THE FRIEND at his own request. William L. Baile has appointed Agent in his place. Address, No. 4 Church Street, West Chester, Pa.

Memorial of Debbie E. Cope is now for sale at Pr Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street.

Price, paper cover, 5 cents; by mail, 6 cents; silk 6 cents; by mail, 7 cents; per dozen, paper cover cents; by mail, 55 cents; silk cloth, 60 cents; by mail, 65 cents.

Memorial of Charles Rhoads: Price, paper cover, 5 cents; by mail, 6 cents; silk 6 cents; by mail, 7 cents; per dozen, paper cover, 50 cents; by mail, 55 cents; silk cloth, 60 cents; by mail, 71 cents.

DIED, Sixth Month 29th, 1904, at the home of mother, near Quaker City, Ohio, LOUIS E. WEBSTER of Jephtha and Hannah Ann Webster, in the thirty-year of his age; a member of Richland Particular Siltwater Monthly Meeting of Friends.

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS
No. 422 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 13, 1904.

No. 5.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

scriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

sent by mail from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

The Itching Ear as Head over Churches.

The alleged reason for the change of base in the ministry now endorsed by the larger churches under the name of Friends, from its original foundation back to that on which preaching is conducted in the other denominations, is given in these words: "We want a dependable ministry." By this is meant: We want a ministry that we can depend on hearing our ears every time we go to meeting. Thus the itching ear has been so yielded to members in the heaping up to themselves preachers, that it has rapidly and radically re-shaped the whole professing Society, so that it dominates, into quite another. Therein, in perhaps all bodies professing our faith, instances of individuals who can rest on no ministry as truly dependable, save what comes to the waiting minister or what fresh from the Fountain of life. The content that one's dependence for worship rests to depend on the Holy Spirit's immediate ministry as that which alone can be dependable, that moment his Quakerism ceases, and he is restored to that inspeaking Word from which he wavered.

The dependableness of the Spirit is not the dependableness of a clock. They who have a mechanical dependableness of stated regularity in the output of religious discourse, get a ministration of the machine produced on time as per contract,—but what will it get? Doubtless an admirable product of an talent sometimes, but put forth at the appointed time because the ears of men expected and not the anointed issue of the Lord's time and authority in a waiting worship. Spiritual dependableness has replaced spiritual independence. To the one, times and seasons at man's command; to the other comes a ship which says: "My times are in thy hand, oh Lord!" In the one case, the expectation of the people is the governing factor for the ministry; for the other, "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him."

A "dependable" ministry, in the superficial sense, thus belongs to the lecture system, and not to the worship which a Friend, to be a Friend, must come under. The rule of the stated ministry is, practically, the human ear determined to have its preaching with stated regularity. So not the waiting soul, but the itching ear has become master of the situation, dominating the character of meetings under the name of Friends far and wide, and bewildering the people as to what the principle of the Friends' ministry is. The itching ear, as the head which must be heeded, now makes and un-makes its ministers, chooses and discharges them as its own employees, rates their salaries according to its gratifications, has widely overthrown the conditions of Friends' meetings for worship and adopted the man-made series of performances from which the Society at the first came out, and despoiled the new ministry of the "new quakerism" (so-called) from ability to make any contribution to the churches as to the theory and conduct of spiritual ministry of the Gospel, save the closest imitation of their prevailing homiletics.

Much concern is now displayed over the decadence of the ministry in parts where the dominion of the arbitrary ear has been drying up its spring. It has become a disappointment,—how the growth of the ministry has not flourished over places where its exercise has been so heavily foreclosed by the one-man monopoly, or scattered by the encouragement of talk. Is it any wonder that a true ministry is killed off, where the conditions are as quoted by the Australian Friend, in four suggestions which we would here revive?

1. Where a Friends' meeting for worship is habituated to be looking for a vocal ministry, it is kept out of the true condition wherein new ministers will be brought forth.
2. The habitual looking outward for a ministry is an education not to turn inward for the worship which is in spirit and in truth.
3. A fixed alienation from that spiritual condition of worship becoming our established habit, and ministry no longer being apprehended from within, it is demanded from without as a killer of time, if for nothing better.
4. A ministry of the spirit having now no soil to grow in, a dearth in the ministry ensues, and members cast about after other expedients for vocal services, and for means of supply which belong to the lecture system of religious discourse.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 26.)

In the consideration of the situation of the Indian natives by the Committee appointed for the purpose by the Yearly Meeting in 1795, "the apparent friendly deportment of the Government" towards measures for ameliorating the condition of the Indian tribes was alluded to as favoring the prosecution of the concern then upon the minds of Friends. The country was then under the Presidency of George Washington. He was succeeded by John Adams, in 1797, who was also disposed to secure and maintain the friendship of the Indians by pacific measures. After the war with the Indians northwest of the Ohio, under Little Turtle and others, which was ended by the treaty of Greenville in 1795, peace was maintained with them for many years. John Adams in reviewing the conduct of his administration toward the Indians, wrote in 1815 the following strong testimony to the possibility and advantage of such a course: "I was engaged in the most earnest, sedulous, and I must own, expensive exertions to preserve peace with the Indians, and prepare them for agriculture and civilization, through the whole of my administration. I had the inexpressible satisfaction of complete success. Not a hatchet was lifted in my time, and the single battle of Tippecanoe [Eleventh Month 5th, 1811.] has since cost the United States a hundred times more than it cost me to maintain universal and perpetual peace."

The situation of the Friends who had gone to reside among the Seneca Indians at this time was attended with many privations and difficulties. Surrounded by those with whom they could converse but little, excepting through an interpreter, and with but few opportunities of communication with their friends by mail, they were much isolated, while their position as instructors among an observant but suspicious people, who did not always appreciate their motives, required great circumspection, strict integrity, and often much firmness in pursuing the course consistent with their religious profession and their object in coming among them. In social intercourse the remark has often been made, that it is much easier to make an Indian out of a white man, than a white man out of an Indian, and constant care was necessary by Friends thus situated to guard against the influence of those habits of uncivilized life which prevailed around them.

The improvidence, and at times the intemperance of the Indians, their need of improvement in personal cleanliness, and in their manner of living, together with certain of their customs, called for the exercise of much patience and forbearance. A frequent recurrence to the feelings of religious concern for their welfare, which prompted Friends to enter upon the work, could alone animate and strengthen them at times, under the discouragements which attended it. Under these circumstances it is not a matter of surprise that those who steadily kept to the impressions which actuated them in the beginning, and sought for Divine help and support in their labors among them, grew thereby, and found in the consolations of the gospel attending it, an ample reward for the sacrifices made.

These subjects are thus instructively referred to in the report of the Committee to the Yearly Meeting in 1800: "The settlement among the Senecas having been visited in the Ninth Month last by four of the Committee,* by their report and account since received from the two Friends resident here, we are encouraged to hope that if all engaged as instruments in this concern are preserved under that influence which qualifies in the work of righteousness, the labor will not be in vain, notwithstanding discouragements from obstructive causes, difficult to combat, whereby the progress of improvement among the natives generally is retarded; one thing especially worthy of note being, that the Friends who have given up to abide among these uncultivated people, in pursuit of the arduous service, have been preserved in a circumspect stability of conduct becoming the occasion, and religiously profited under the exercise."

In the Fifth Month, 1793, a letter was received from a settlement of Indians at Cattaraugus, soliciting some assistance in building a saw mill, and that instruction might be afforded them in farming, etc. This request was complied with so far as to furnish them with a set of irons for the saw mill, in the use of which one of the Friends, residing on the Allegheny River, was expected to instruct them.

In 1800 Red Jacket and three other chiefs of the Seneca Nation were in this city, together with Sagarissa, a chief of the Tuscarora Indians, on their way to Washington, with whom the Committee had a satisfactory interview. On this occasion Red Jacket desired that his people then living near the site of the present city of Buffalo, New York, should be supplied with a set of irons for a saw mill, and that Friends should superintend the erection of a saw mill at Buffalo Creek, and intimated also that such a present would be very acceptable to the Indians living at Tonawanda. The request of Red Jacket it was concluded should be complied with, when information was received that the Indians had made preparations to erect such a mill.

The following extracts from a letter written by one of the young Friends who was engaged as school teacher at Corn Planter's settlement, dated Second Month 28th, 1801, gives some account of the difficulties experienced in instructing Indian children entirely unaccustomed to mental application, and also gives instructive information on other subjects:

"Since winter set in I have been mostly engaged in a small school of young lads, seldom more than eight or nine, and frequently but five and six—it is at too early a period to expect much improvement from Indians thus situated, though some have advanced a little and afford encouragement to believe if they had the same opportunity of learning that white children have, their faculties are quite as capable of improvement, and some I think, more so, being blessed with very bright memories. But the unhappy way in which the Indians bring up their children renders their learning here more difficult, being for the most part entirely left to act as the rude propensities of nature dictates, and accustomed to this unsubjected condition makes it very trying on them to be confined to learning, yet I find by attending the school, though less improvement in the knowledge of letters than would be desirable, as care and moderation is exercised toward them, it has a tendency to lessen that savage ravenousness which their minds seem more or less incultured with."

"I understand by Jonathan [Thomas] and Joel [Swain] that the Indians about Genesinghuta have improved considerably this winter in conveying home fire wood, which heretofore would have been burnt by them very disgraceful for men to be employed in, as their former custom is for the women to chop and carry home on their backs, let the distance be as it may. A young man that has lived at Genesinghuta since the settlement was made there [I think about eighteen or nineteen years of age] appears the most promising for industry of any of the youth in this quarter—I will note a remark I heard him make some time ago [when down at this town] to a white man that was here on business. Amongst other things the white man asked him what success he had in hunting? He answered, 'I have almost quit hunting, or hunt but little latterly,' for" said he "the Quakers have put another mind in me and I have got so much notion of work that I pay but little attention to hunting." I don't mention this remark with any view of ostentation. Many of the Indians in this quarter are very ingenious. Several seem to have good ideas of the smith business; one young man in particular who has lately steeled several small axes pretty well; he says if a smith should come here he would be willing to learn the trade. I have but little doubt but some of them might be engaged to learn the business if a suitable smith should incline to reside here awhile with them.

"Through the course of last summer and fall we have built a commodious carpenter shop at Genesinghuta, which has been found very useful to the young Indians to work in at times through the winter.

"Some notion has lately been made by some of the Indians of this village respecting the division of their land in suitable portions for families to settle on, whether any such plan will be concluded on soon, is uncertain, though I think these ideas are growing a little with some of them."

The school above referred to was soon afterwards discontinued in consequence of the want of interest taken in it by the Indians.

(To be continued.)

True Progress.

Men praise the wonderful strides of the nineteenth century in science and invention.

Babylon and Nineveh had much mathematical knowledge, history, literature, architecture and immense structures. Egypt had astronomy, science for the few and huge structures of Edom prophecy declared; "Oh! thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock and holdest the height of the hill, that makest nest as high as the eagles." "I will bring thee down from thence: saith the Lord 'Edom shall be a desolation.' Greece never been excelled in the fine arts,—in Plato called "the splendor of the true." His philosophy and poetry had devotees of god power. They evolved a rich and beautiful language that was alone capable of enunciating Christ's gospel of love. Rome was realm of law and of military prowess. In these countries happiness and purity were undermined by covetousness and evil passions.

Kipling in his Recessional Hymn that appeared at the close of the Queen's Jubilee enumerates the downfall of past grandeur and the refrain:

"Lest we forget."

Joseph Hoag, our Quaker prophet for this nation a century ago of God's chastisements. Part of his vision has transpired, remainder may cover the twentieth century in the end people would learn to love and a better order of things would revive. His righteousness that exalteth a nation, shall be a reproach to any people." (Prov. xiv. 34) "The nation that will not serve thee shall perish." (Isaiah lx. 12.) Nations as well as individuals should build on Christ, the Rock and accept his teaching as the sum of wisdom.

Reaching the Witness.

I was once applied to by a stranger in a place where I was laboring for a few weeks only, says Thomas English, for a sight of a letter which he thought I had received intimating his character. I looked at the letter and pitied him, and coolly replied, "It would be a breach of the common principles of civility, to show confidential letters written us for the purpose of our doing people good." He retorted, "I demand a sight of it, as act of justice due to an injured man."

I replied, "How did you know I received a letter concerning you?"

"Know?" said he. "It was impossible to know it; your language and manner was so pointed."

"Do not be too positive; you have been deceived before now, I suppose; you may do so again."

"It is not possible," said he. "You scribed the sin of which I am accused in clearest language, and," looking me in the face and pointing towards me, "you said 'Sinner, be sure your sins will find you out.' I therefore expect from you, sir, as a gentleman and a Christian minister, that you will give me a sight of that letter that I may know its contents and repel its charge." I said, "do not know your name; to my knowledge never saw you before; and as you have told me in what part of the sermon it was nted, if I show you any letter I may show wrong one. I shall therefore certainly exhibit any of my letters to you, nor satisfy whether I have received any one about till you describe the case referred to."

* An account of the visit of these Friends, by Isaac Coates, was published in THE FRIEND, vol. lxii, p. 106. These Friends were Joshua Sharpless, Isaac Coates, James Cooper and Thomas Stewardson.

He hesitated, but afterwards described the of which he was accused. When he had ashed, looking him full in the eyes and asning a solemn attitude, and using a grave serious tone of voice, I said, "Can you k me full in the face, as you must your ge at the great day of God and declare you innocent of the sin laid to your charge?" He trembled, turned pale, and his voice ered; guilt and anger struggled in his ast like the fire in the bowels of Mount na. Summoning up his courage he said, "I not bound to make man my confessor, and were guilty no man has a right to hold me to public observation as you have done."

I assumed a benignity of countenance and ened my tones, saying, "Do you believe passage I cited—'be sure your sins will you out'—is the word of God?"

He said, "It may be." "Surely it is," said I. "He that made the ear, shall He not hear? that made the eye, shall He not see? Can have any difficulty in bringing your sin to t? Now I will tell you honestly, I never eived any letter of information about you atever; but I am persuaded your sin has and you out. The preaching of the Word is ethod by which God makes men's sins t them out. Let me entreat you seriously consider your state and character. Who tell? God may have intended this sermon your good; He may mean to have mercy on you. This may be the means of saving r neck from the gallows, and your soul n hell. But let me remind you, you are here yet—there still is hope."

He held down his head, clinched his hands, and bursting into tears, said, "I never met h anything like this. I am certainly ob- to you for your friendship. I am guilty o hope this conversation will be of advantage to me."

"The word of God is quick, and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, pierc- en to the dividing asunder of soul and rit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a rner of the thoughts and intents of the rt" (Heb. iv : 12).—Selected.

PARENTAL discipline should be judiciously well as effectively administered. The child o be dealt with kindly, yet firmly. He is ot to be punished in anger, but in love. He ot to be spoken to in loud, harsh, unfriend- ones, but with gentleness, sympathy and dness. He is to know that he must obey, at the same time be made to feel that it is his good to do so. He should be handled hout loss of personal dignity or self-re- ct, but with such a spirit and deportment will call forth dutiful affection and prompt ponsiveness.—Presbyterian.

All things must change
To something new, to something strange ;

Nothing that is can pause or stay ;
The moon will wax, the moon will wane,
The mist and cloud will turn to rain,
The rain to mist and cloud again,
To-morrow be to-day.

—Longfellow.

The Land of Promise in Sunshine and Shadow.

(Continued from page 28.)

Another conservative action on the part of the Turks, I believe, is to be interpreted in their favor. There are the royal sepulchres of David and the most esteemed kings of Judæa, which have never been shown to any Christian eye, except a company of some on Mt. Bethzemes in Jerusalem, who are hard on us, but fairly in with the Mohammedans, not in creed, but in practice. Had it not been for the strong forbidding position of the Turks the patriarchal remains would long ago have been dragged to different metropolises of Europe and elsewhere, but as it is, everybody has to keep hands off.

Leaving sentimental religion where and what it is, we might view the products and manufacture of the "land where milk and honey flow." The geographical situation of Palestine, being under the thirty-first to thirty-third latitude, it will be understood that the climate is semi-tropical. Oranges are raised in Jaffa only.

The Jewish home is too hilly and barren and devoid of water, the latter is also the trouble with the plain of Sharon and Philistia. In the last-named district there is a valley called "Wadi lemon" (orange valley) from which it would appear that here oranges were cultivated. Of fruit, olives do best. Figs are few. Really there is but little of everything, as the oppression of the Turkish government is so strong, that natives often yield to the temptation of chopping the tree down to release themselves from laboring exclusively for a corrupt magistrate. The law requires tithes, but as in other inferior countries, it is composed of elastic stuff. Fortunately—hamdillillah! there is a lot of wild fruit, such as the prickly-pear, called cactus, growing in abundance on the cactus hedges. Watermelons are raised where practicable. Of grain, barley is cultivated most and utilized for bread. In some parts wheat is doing well. Dura (corn) is at least known. Turnus—I have no other name—is raised on the plain. It is a not-edible bean, bigger than the lima, and exported to Europe for some manufacture. Under ordinary circumstances garden truck is doing finely. It is to be greatly lamented, that the terraces, with which the hills of Judæa and the rest of the country were furnished, were allowed to be washed away by the heavy winter rains. The winter season is not one of ice and snow in the "holy land," but of stormy rain. As is known, a season of early and late rain is spoken of. The former is due from Tenth Month on, the latter may last into Fourth or Fifth Month. In the course of time the floods have carried away the soil from the hills, with stone walls and all. The industrious Jews used to repair the breaks every year, a measure that has been utterly neglected, yea abandoned, by subsequent tribes and peoples. Great stretches are laid bare, others hold just a crumb of soil, but wherever there is some, it will produce enough to astonish one. On my first trip on the railroad from Jaffa to Jerusalem I went in company with a physician and an English minister. Not far from Jerusalem the doctor pointed to such a barren stony place, saying it was "the vegetable gardens of Jerusalem." I smiled in suspicion of a joke, but was assured by the minister that it was so. Likewise I have wondered at the great herds of stock that roam all over the country, how they keep in fair condition on what little grass there is so long as it is not too dry, and if so, no provision is made by the natives, which makes it all the more appear as if the very cattle understood to make both ends meet. And more yet, I have seen olive trees on steep hills, for want of soil sink their roots into the rock and burst it to maintain themselves. Truly wonderful things are seen there, some in smiling sunshine, others in mysterious shadow. To the last belongs the prison-like view of the one-and-a-half inch thick iron bars in windows of the first, and in some, second stories of the houses in Jerusalem. The iron bars, the iron doors and the massive stone buildings fairly resemble a fortress against the different classes of vandals; but to call this safe and feel happy in those enclosures would be a great mistake—no, far from safety and happiness is any one soever in the country of desolation. May the abounding mercy of God soon turn the page of woe to that of praise and sacrifice.

Is the produce of the soil little, the production of manufacture is less. There is nothing in Jerusalem and Jaffa, except the turning-shops of the English Episcopal Mission and the Syrian Orphanage, also those of a few Jews, of whom some engage in artistic stone cutting, imitating historical antiquities; such as the tomb of Rachel, which is shown on the way from Jerusalem to Bethlehem. (See Gen. xxv : 19-20), the tomb or pillar of Absalom. (2 Sam. xviii : 18) and others. The imitations are faithful and are endeavored to be sold in foreign that is, occidental countries. It is to be regretted that unscrupulous persons in France and likely elsewhere, have manufactured and sold such articles as from Jerusalem, in consequence of which our people are robbed of their confidence in this respect, otherwise one might be able to give those poor creatures a lift by the sale of such elegantly finished articles. And while it could be made possible to import directly from Jerusalem, as I have done, the undertaking seems elaborate and risky to most. A faithful reproduction of the sepulchre of Rachel was offered to me by a individual Jew for five francs, ($1). The pearl-tum articles of Bethlehem range from ten cents to one dollar and fifty cents.

There is a soap factory in Nablus, Samaria (Sychar) and a weaving-factory in Beyrouth, Syria. Two steam mills are known in Judæa, but the natives still grind by hand, as of old—a work that is done by the women. (See Matt. xxiv : 41).

The construction of the Jaffa-Jerusalem R. R. has bankrupted the old, well-established German banker in Jerusalem, a millionaire, to whom Turkish state money and the savings of the poor European people were entrusted, but only to lose the greater part of it. The fare is one dollar each way. Freight is said to be high, so that much is yet transported on beasts of burden, as before. The road is there, but not paying. It is now in French hands.

There is another railroad from Beyrouth to Damascus, from here to the Hauran mountain, one from Akka to the Jordan projected, now perhaps completed; one in Egypt from Port Said to Alexandria.

(To be concluded.)

Prophecy.

BY H. L. HASTINGS, in the Armory.

In this dispensation it is declared that the Holy Spirit shall be poured upon all flesh, and that both servants and handmaidens shall prophesy (Acts iv: 17). It is also declared that "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort" (1 Cor. xiv: 3); and that in the church "ye may all prophesy, one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted" (1 Cor. xiv: 31).

These prophetic utterances are, or should be, under the express direction of the Holy Spirit. They may not include the prediction of future events; and comparatively few of the utterances of the ancient prophets had reference to the future; they referred to existing commandments, existing duties, existing sins, and existing dangers; though at times they pointed to the future, and foretold things which were to come to pass hereafter. So, to-day, God sends men and women, anointed with the Holy Ghost, to declare his word—a living message to living men. "How shall they preach except they be sent?" But if they are sent of God, how can they refrain from uttering the truth which He commands?

A great error of the age consists in despising these divinely-ordained prophesying, and substituting for servants whom God has touched and anointed with the Holy Ghost, a class of men trained, educated and indorsed by men, but not always sent of God, or anointed with power from on high. The ministry of such men is necessarily without divine energy or the divine blessing, and consequently without profitable results. But the idea is widely accepted that such a ministry as this, being regularly appointed, authorized and ordained, has, in consequence, an authority which commands the confidence and obedience of men. In many instances facts warrant no such conclusion; but the assumption has so long prevailed that it has great force in the popular mind. Doubtless many believe that an "ordained" sinner has a right to do certain things which it would be exceedingly improper for an "unordained" saint to undertake. The "regular ministry," in their view, has the kind of official authority which does not depend upon personal qualifications, or upon the call of God, but rather upon certain ecclesiastical forms of induction and indorsement which they have observed.

In alluding to this matter, we make no objection whatever to general Christian culture, or special religious training. While we are certain that mere "studying for the ministry" will never make any one a faithful minister of God, we should be far from intimating that the ministry of the day has any excess of learning or culture. In fact, whatever other things they may know, we believe that they know far too little of that Bible which they profess to teach. Now while all persons, according to their ability, should be properly trained and nurtured, in Christian homes and schools and churches, so that, like Timothy, they may know the Scriptures from childhood, searching them for their own personal instruction and comfort, without special reference to the fact that they may, sometime, be called of God to public service in his vineyard; they who are thus trained, by godly mothers, and grandmothers, and preachers, and teachers, in the knowledge of the Scripture of God, are then prepared to respond to any call that may come to them from the Most High. We believe that the average Christian should know as much of the Bible as the average minister now does. And if there is a glowing, intelligent Christian life in the church, God will raise up, from among its members, servants who will serve Him faithfully, and be "mighty in the Scriptures," and "strong in the Lord." From a living church go forth workers to bless the world. But few faithful ministers are sent out from frozen and backslidden congregations. One must know Christ before he can preach Christ; and all the education in the world can never equip a man for gospel preaching unless God has sent him.

A wise principle adopted in a well-known "Pastor's College" is this: They never undertake to teach men to preach; and no man can enter that institution because he desires to preach, supposes he can preach, or is supposed by others to have the natural qualifications for a minister. They do not undertake to make ministers. [They try to help anointed preachers whose gift is manifest.] An equally judicious principle is said to govern the selection of students in one very useful missionary training-school, to which no person is admitted until he has first learned some business, trade, or handicraft, which fits him to be self-supporting if necessity requires. There are theological seminaries which do not turn out as many good tent-makers as did the school of Dr. Gamaliel; and hence we have a superabundance of men who cannot preach, and who do not know how to do anything else.

If a man be taught by the Holy Ghost the things of God, and made partaker of the rich experience of divine love, while at the same time he is qualified to earn his bread by the labor of his hands, and provide for the supply of his own modest needs, he may thus be in a position, while holding communion with God, to hear the divine call. And if the voice of the Lord should fall upon his ear, saying, "Whom shall we send? and who will go for us?" he may be able to answer, "Here am I; send me." A minister thus sent forth, and equipped with a strong heart and industrious hands, can preach as the servant of God alone, living "of the gospel" when God so ordains, laboring with his hands when necessity requires, preserving his integrity in the midst of temptation, bearing faithful witness to the truth, independently of the fear or favor of rich or poor.

Through such ministers God has often revealed his word to men; and it is the duty of the people of God to listen to the message which they bring. No class or caste has the exclusive right to instruct and uphold the church of the living God. Neither scribes nor doctors, priests nor Levites, by their education, training, or official relations, can furnish any guarantee of the genuineness of their call, or the purity of their instructions. It is the business of the people of God to listen to the messages that may come to them, but they are to take heed how they hear; and as God's servants are under the responsibility of declaring the message which He has commanded, diminishing not a word, so the hearers under responsibility to listen with caution; beware of false teachers who come to us like wolves in sheep's clothing, to try the and see whether they are of God, and t who say they are apostles, and are not, prove them to be liars.

Moreover every man sent of the Lord this ministry is subject to the guidance control of the Word of truth. No teacher the right to set himself above this; and the bouden duty of Christians to follow only as they follow Christ, and to remember that if even an angel from heaven preach other gospel than that which Paul preached he shall be accursed. But if the words clared be according to the Scriptures, we not at liberty to reject the message bec it may come to us through a fisherman publican, an herdman or a gatherer of s more fruit.

When God speaks to men he is not restricted to the tongue of the learned, which can s; a word in season to him that is weary; sometimes "with stammering lips and another tongue." He speaks to his people word everlasting truth. And while He sometimes commissions a prophet that hath a plea voice, on the other hand, his messenger may one whose bodily presence is weak, and speech contemptible. Or, again, he may u his message with the "voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of Lord, and make his paths straight." Blessed are they whose ears and hearts are open receive God's message, by whomsoever it be sent.

WORLDLY CONFORMITY.—James W. A. nder wrote to a friend: "As I grow o as a parent, my views are changing fast to the degree of conformity to the w which we should allow to our children. I horror-struck to count up the profligate ch ren of pious persons, and even ministers.

"The door at which those influences en which countervail parental instruction example, I am persuaded, is yielding to ways of good society. By dress, books, amusements, an atmosphere is formed wh is not that of Christianity. More than e do I feel that our families must stand i kind but determined opposition to the fash of the world, breasting the waves like Eddystone Lighthouse. And I have fo nothing yet which requires more courage independence than to rise a little, but de edly, above the par of the religious w around us.

"Surely, the way in which we commo go on is not the way of self-denial, and sa fice, and cross-bearing, which the New Te ment talks of. 'Then is the offence of cross ceased.' Our slender influence o circle of our friends is often to be traced our leaving so little difference between us i them."

ALL freedom which has its roots outside genuine truth is both intellectual and mo slavery.

The drop of ink, That, falling, may make thousands, even millio think.

—Selected

Theatre-Going for Children.

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

to be tragedy at the matinee in the Iroquois theatre was a veritable "slaughter of the innocents." It is pitiful to read the lists of the children and their ages: "Mary, nine," "Ethel, nine," "Harold, four," "Margaret, twelve," "Paul, two," and so on through hundreds of names, each one of which means a desolated home and a broken-hearted father and mother. In view of the fact that so large a proportion of the audience on that dreadful day were children, the question of the advisability of theatre-going as an amusement for children being widely discussed, and from different points. Much is being said both from moral and from the physiological points of view, and there is still much that may be said from the psychological; but in order to do this wisely we must investigate the problem of a psychological development in the child.

At birth the babe is blind and deaf, and may say, without a brain. True, he has nerve cells, but they are mostly embryonic, the principal business of his child-life is to build a brain out of these undeveloped cells. The brain-building begins at once through the sensations brought to it from the outer world. Light-waves strike upon the retina, and are transmitted to the brain and child begins to see. Day after day the sensations pour in, and little by little the child learns to recognize them as mother's face, or bottle; growing slowly into a complete knowledge of the objects around him. Sound-waves pelt his tympanum and are transmitted through bony chain and perilymph to the brain, and in time differentiate themselves into his mother's voice, his rattle, the bark of a dog, or the mew of a cat, until at last he has built up brain structure that recognizes all the ordinary sounds of daily life. In the same way, through a gradual unfolding or development of brain cells, he grows into an understanding of his environment, and in the same way he grows into the use of his voluntary muscles.

At first his movements are aimless and reflex, but gradually they become orderly and under control of his will. In order that his development may be symmetrical the various stimuli should be given in orderly manner. That is, there should be no forcing the process of brain building. Nature does not wish him the material for brain growth as he can use it, and makes no insistence and for attention in advance of his powers. The child left to himself in his early life will outdo the objects that claim his notice and interest him, and they present themselves to him as fast as he is able to receive them. Outdoor play he is happy hour after hour, and it is only when he is brought into the restricted limits of indoor life that he becomes restless and needs to be entertained. Parents who take their children to the theatre to be amused make the mistake of forcing the child-nature from the adult standpoint. They need occupation and opportunity for self-expression. We are quite apt to consider the play of children as their amusement, whereas it is their occupation, their serious business. By means of play they are being educated into the possession of their bodies and minds.

Let us examine theatre-going for children, bearing in mind these few fundamental psychological principles, namely, What the child needs is an opportunity for brain-building through occupation and self-expression and through the orderly presentation of the various stimuli, which, suited to his comprehension, gave him this opportunity.

The very young child, taken to the theatre, is in the first place, bewildered by the multiplicity of sights and sounds. His immature brain is not prepared for such a complexity of impressions. He is dazed, and not infrequently frightened. Many times parents are surprised that what they had imagined would give the child delight had only caused fear. They have fancied that the spectacular representation of a fairy tale or of some child's story would give the child the same pleasure that the simple home-telling of the story had given. As has been said, they judged the child from the standpoint of the adult. With their broader knowledge of life they could disentangle the multiplicity of sound, the shifting panorama of colors and movements, and make them something comprehensible; while to the child, untrained and inexperienced, all is at first a chaos of noise and motion and color.

After a time he will be able to see part of that which is portrayed before him, but much of it, being incomprehensible, is by him unseen and unheard. It is true that after a series of experiences he may become able to see and comprehend the play, but this indicates that he has been stimulated to an unnatural development of brain power, and that means a disturbing of the balance and consequent inharmonious. He has really been subjected to a species of intoxication from which there must sometime come a reaction.

The theatre-going child becomes nervous, irritable, demanding amusement, an unchild-like, and therefore an undesirable condition. The normal child finds his delight in self-expression and asks only the opportunity for that expression. By the gift of elaborate and perfectly completed toys, and by teaching him to sit still and be amused by theatrical representations, the child is educated into that most unfortunate condition of looking to outward agencies for entertainment. The result is that he loses the power of self-expression and therefore becomes blasé.

But, some may say, Why, if it is allowable to tell these tales to the children, is it not allowable for them to see them portrayed on the stage? Is it not merely another method of telling the story with effective illustrations?

In the mere telling of the story there is no forcing of the child's mind. He is left free to exercise his own imagination, to set the tale to pictures of his own making; so the story-hearing becomes to him an opportunity for self-expression. Each child illustrates the tale according to his own mental acquisitions.

In the stage presentation there is nothing for him to do. He is left simply passive. But is there not something for his imagination to work on as he recalls the various scenes? Unfortunately, yes. He has been introduced to an unreal world in such a way that it seems real, and knowing nothing of real life he is led to imagine that what he had seen is real; so false ideas may have been engendered which may eventuate later in wrong conduct. In telling a story to a child you can omit, or add, or qualify, as you see his special need would indicate, and so make the tale a medium for communicating to him some lesson.

Even the portrayal of virtues may have undesirable results. It is a well-known axiom of educators that to have the emotions of pity and generosity aroused with no opportunity for their active employment is detrimental. The child may see the fictitious woes and weep over them, with the only result that he is satisfied to see, and do nothing.

This constant arousing of emotions, even though they be desirable in themselves, tends to create an unbalanced condition, a nervous state that borders upon hysteria. This is a poor preparation for approaching adolescence, that time when, because of the endowment of new powers, the youth is brought into a world of strange emotions and when he needs all possible self-control to help him over this crisis.

If the theatre is objectionable for the child who is approaching puberty, how much more undesirable it is for the growing boy and girl who is passing through this great change! This is the period when the feelings have dominion, when emotions rule. To add to their power through the influence of the drama is to add to the dangers of this critical time. Now, if ever, should the youth be led away from thoughts of romance into the domain of facts. Now is the time for intellectual pursuits, for study of nature, for a quiet, wholesome life, free from excitement, free from all the meretricious surroundings of society life, either on the stage or off; the time for early hours, simple food, pure air, and the light of day; instead of late bedtime and late rising, unwholesome eatables at unreasonable hours, vitiated air, and the glare of artificial lights.

The theatre managers in Chicago are clamoring for permission to reopen their places of amusement, urging as a reason, not the present loss by closure, but the fact that people are learning to be entertained at home. The tide that has turned so strongly to the theatre is, through its closing, ebbing away from their doors, and will not readily be induced to return to its former channels. We sincerely trust that this opinion may prove a true prophecy, and that, for the sake of the children and youth, the home and family circle may be rediscovered as the true theatre of enjoyment.—The Congregationalist.

Free men freely work,
Whoever fears God fears to sit at ease.
And, after Christ, work turns to privilege;
And henceforth, one with our humanity,
The six-day Worker, working still in us,
Has called us freely forth to work with Him
In high companionship. So, happiest!
I count that heaven itself is only work
To a surer issue. Let us work indeed,
But not as if the only man on earth,
Responsible for all the thistles blown
And tigers couchant, struggling in amaze, Against disease and winter, snarling on Forever that the world's not paradise.

Let us be content in work
To do the thing we can, and not presume
To fret because it's little. —E. D. Browning.

FOR "THE FRIENDS."

Revival.

Friends are more or less looking forward for a revival or a gathering again in the Society. But how is it to be brought about with them? It is not by the earthly might of man, as man might suppose, because he is of the earth earthy, and doth not come out therefrom, and is, regardless of the sayings of Christ our Saviour; for He has said, come ye out from the world and follow me. Friends also seem to be regardless of this also: what the Lord showed to Joseph Hoag; because they have gone in the world in pride and wantonness. Friends, you don't require glasses to see that the Lord is whipping the Society to death, and many of them are so blind that they cannot see. With this the Lord will chastise his people, until they return to their ancient principles. What is their ancient principle, but to turn and walk in the footsteps of Christ, their risen Lord, day by day. This they don't do. But they should show forth to a dying people the power of the Lord, as Christ and the apostles did.

Now a Holy Spirit revival must first take place in each individual heart. Then when that takes place you will witness a gathering to Christ the Lord, instead of a gathering to the world in pride and wantonness. See how it was with the children of Israel. When they had wandered away from their Lord, they got whipped to death by their enemies. When they began to open their eyes to see why it was that their enemies had beaten them so sore, they saw that it was their own fault that was the reason of their overthrow. So it is with Friends, the fault is their own and not of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, that we are so few in numbers.

Now I beg of Friends to let the world alone, and walk no more with it in pride and wantonness, but with Jesus kept to day by day in your own spirits, which is his kingdom, a revival will take place in your hearts by the power of the Holy Ghost, that will be a holy gathering to the Lord. But just as long as you keep out of the kingdom of God, you will not witness a gathering again or growth in grace in your own hearts.

Dear George Fox and his friends walked with the Lord Jesus and the Lord Jesus walked with them, and there was unity one with the other, and there was power one with the other, and that brought about a Holy Ghost revival or gathering, which is a thing unknown and very much needed in this day of darkness. So if Friends expect a gathering again, they must return to the Lord and renew their covenants with the Lord, so as to regain that power, the loss of which caused them not to walk any more in power with their Lord, as they did in the beginning. No man can grow in grace unless he walks daily with the Lord and the Lord walks with him in power.

How many Friends are there this day that are following George Fox as he followed Christ? Let each one look into his or her own heart and see whether we are following Christ as did George Fox; and if we are not, then we are the betrayers of Christ and of our own Society. When a man or a woman becomes a betrayer of the way which was cast up by Christ, and doth not walk devoutly before Christ and the world, is he or she in a way to bring about with Christ "Holy Ghost revival," that the people might witness in their own hearts the power of the Holy Ghost?

S. T. HAIGHT.

NORWICH, Ont.

Science and Industry.

DISPATCHES from York, Pa., set forth that Charles Newman, a farmer living near Vineland, N. J., was seriously injured during the latter part of Fifth Month by the explosion of a hen's-egg in process of incubation; he was examining it to see if it contained a chick. The drum of Newman's ear was broken by the exploding egg and he suffered much pain.

THE CAUSE OF SMALLPOX.—As a result of the investigation of the smallpox epidemic in Boston in 1901, Dr. W. T. Councilman, of the Harvard medical school, announces the discovery of the smallpox germ. The disease is caused by a micro-organism representing the lowest form of animal life. This relates smallpox to malaria and distinguishes it from many infectious diseases caused by minute forms of vegetable life known as bacteria.

COLORS IN WALL PAPER.—There is really an opening for a professional wall-paper prescriber and patrons would be surprised if they know how much one can help them. A frightfully nervous man just now insisted upon a red paper when he needed green, a color that soothes the senses. Blue quiets the nerves, and violet has a tranquilizing effect. But how they all like red, and that despite the fact that it is the color of violence and passion!

HOW PRESSED GLASS WAS INVENTED.—In 1827, a carpenter of Sandwich, Massachusetts, wanting a piece of glass of a particular size and shape, conceived the idea that the molten metal could be pressed into any form, much the same as lead might be. Up to that time all glassware had been blown, either offhand or in a mold, and considerable skill was required and the process was slow. The glass manufacturers laughed at the carpenter, but he went ahead and built a press, and now the United States is the greatest pressed-glass-ware country in the world.—Cosmopolitan.

PETRIFIED MILK.—By a chemical process the casein is precipitated as a yellowish-brown powder, which is mixed with formaline. Thereby a hornlike product is formed, called milk stone. This substance, with various admixtures, forms a substitute for horn, turtle shell, ivory, celluloid, marble, amber and hard rubber. Handles for knives and forks, paper cutters, crayons, pipes, cigar holders, seals, marble stone ornaments and billiard balls are now made of skimmed milk. The insolubility of galalith, its easy working, elasticity and proof against fire make it very desirable. Already 20,000 quarts of skimmed milk are daily used for this purpose in Austria.

SEEDLESS APPLES.—Some bushels of seedless apples from Colorado are on exhibition at the World's Fair. This improved seedless apple, like the seedless orange, is the result of the scientific work of the horticulturists. The apple tree is blossomless and the fruit is free from worms and hardy enough to endure the severest frost. The blossomless feature of the new tree is one of its most striking peculiarities and will make it a favorite with growers, especially in cold climates. Already seedless apple nurseries have been started several States and seedless apple buds are great demand. John F. Spencer, the producer of the seedless apple, is experimenting with several varieties.—N. Y. Sun.

BURIED FORESTS AND BONES.—Three miles south of Lake Erie, near Amboy, O., is a gravestone from which have been taken out from time to time, as the railroads have removed materials, cedar logs and many relics of a mammoth, that monster of pre-historic times. Among these relics have been tusks eight feet in length; also a tooth weighing nine pounds and three ounces, having a length of one foot and a circumference of twenty-six inches. These were all found more than thirty-five feet below the surface.

It is reasoned that during the glacial period huge glaciers coming from the north brought with them portions of felled forests, and lodged them in the swamp territory where now is a gravel pit. The facts that cedar trees do not usually grow along Lake Erie, and that a mammoth was an inhabitant of a colder climate, give plausibility to the theory.—Ex.

HE LOVED ANIMALS.—Charles Kingsley love for everything that had life was remarkable. He spoke of all living creatures as his friends, and saw in them the handiwork of God. On his lawn lived a family of waterjacks (ringing toads) that dwelt from year to year the same hole in a green bank which a scytal was never allowed to approach.

He had two little friends in a pair of saw wasps that made their home in a crack of a window-frame in his dressing room. One of these he had saved from drowning in a ham basin, taking it tenderly out into the sunbath to dry. Every spring he would look eager for this pair of wasps or their children, waiting for them to come out from or return to the same crack.

The little flycatcher that built its nest every year under his bed-room window was a constant joy to him. He had also a favorite slow worm in the churchyard, which his parishioners were warned not to kill under the mistaken idea that slowworms were poisonous.

The same love for God's creatures was encouraged in his children. He taught them to admire and to handle gently every living thing.

Toads, frogs, beetles and worms were not repulsive things, to be killed as so often seen, but wonders from the hand of God.—Youth's Companion.

THE BAMBOO TREE.—"The world boasts suggests to most Americans a faithful fisher rod or a dainty fan. To the Japanese a Chinese, who are the most practical agriculturists in the world, and to the natives of tropical India and the Malay archipelago, it is indispensable as the white pine to the American farmer. They are not only depended upon it for much of their building material but make their ropes, mats, kitchen utensils and innumerable other articles out of it, at the same time consider it among the most nutritious of their vegetables. Varieties oo are found everywhere in Japan, even there are heavy falls of snow in winter. A popular misconception that bamboos grow only in the tropics. Japan is a land of oods, and yet where these plants grow, it is so warm in winter as it is in California. Regions where the snows are so heavy that they often break down the young stems and freeze the thermometer drops to fifteen degrees below the freezing point, the largest of the new species grows and forms large groves. Some of these varieties could be grown commercially in the United States.

The bamboo groves of Japan are not only one of the most striking features of its landscape, but one of its most profitable plantations. The largest well-kept groves in the world, except perhaps those of Burma, are found in the central provinces, and some of them are several square miles in area. These groves pay the owners good interest, often fifty per cent gold per acre annually. Japan exports millions of bamboo fishing-rods alone, the largest share of which come to the United States. There are many bamboos scattered throughout the United States in botanical gardens, where they are cultivated for ornamentation. There are also some beautiful groves of imported bamboo in California, but no serious attempt has yet been made to grow varieties having commercial value.

A bamboo stem, or culm, attains its full height—forty, sixty, or one hundred feet—in a single season. It is allowed to stand for one or two years before cutting, in order that it may harden. The shining stem is hollow and is divided into joints or knots by the sheathing of the vascular bundles of fibers. There are many varieties of the bamboo plant, and the species which is woven into mats to form tall bamboo-trees which the Chinaman uses for the mast of his large boat. One variety is cultivated as a vegetable and the young shoots are eaten like asparagus, or they may be pickled, pickled, or preserved.”—National Horticultural Magazine.

Items Concerning the Society.

At a First-day afternoon, the 31st ult., Joseph S. Stanton, accompanied by Jonathan E. Rhoads, held a special meeting for the employees of a manufactory in Malvern, Pa.

At a hearing a brief minute in which the clerk read some of its exercises, Philadelphia Quarterly being directed it sent to the several Monthly Meetings. It is much to be regretted that such exercises are mainly on behalf of absentees.

W. H. Whitson states that the minute granted by his Monthly Meeting, instead of that which is reported by us last week, gives “liberty to hold only public meetings within the limits of our Quarterly Meeting and visit some public institutions within its limits,” and “not to visit the files of the Quarterly Meeting” as stated. The matter was submitted to a relative for correction, we suppose, not in season to withdraw it.

Notes in General.

Philadelphia has more Methodists than any other on the continent of North America, and probably more than any other city in the world.

W. H. Conwell, of Philadelphia, it is said, has his church auditorium fitted up with megaphones which are connected by telephone with a hospital in the city, and by this means the patients are able to hear every part of the service.

C. B. Antisdel, of Chicago, is so greatly disturbed over the Congo atrocities in the region where he was formerly a missionary that having resigned his pastorate he will devote himself wholly to efforts for the amelioration of the people who are victims of these atrocities.

Instrumental music in church is, it seems, still strictly tabooed in the Highlands. Sir Archibald Geikie says in his volume of reminiscences just published that the first notes of an organ would probably drive the majority of the congregation out of doors and lead to years of controversy.

The Examiner (London) states that the suggestion of Fr. Aderley and others, that a great Christian mission should be undertaken in London among “society” people has obtained a good deal of notice. The Examiner thinks that “the church has been inclined to neglect the well-to-do Pagans who abound in our midst, and who are equally in need of her good offices.”

The Zulu meeting-house is made of corrugated iron, a material used in South Africa for building purposes because of the absence of wood and other cheap material. Of the church which worships in this building, E. E. Clark says it is “the most active and devoted body of Christians with which I am acquainted; and yet all its members are black Zulus.” The building, which seats about three hundred people, is filled every First-day afternoon, and a congregation of from two to six hundred is organized on a vacant lot outside.

The Duke of Norfolk, who is a very devoted Roman Catholic, recently brought before the House of Lords a resolution dealing with the royal declaration against transubstantiation—a declaration which he and his co-religionists resent as “deeply and needlessly offensive to many millions of his majesty’s loyal subjects.” The resolution was defeated. “Transubstantiation” is the doctrine that the bread and wine of the “Sacrament” is converted into the body and blood of Christ. This has to be denounced by any one who ascends the throne of England.

The funeral of Mayor Jones was the largest and most impressive ever held in Toledo. While his body lay in state at Memorial Hall it was viewed by 100,000 people. There was a general suspension of business, all public offices, stores, factories and even saloons being closed.

Thus, says Zion’s Herald, “does the general public bow in worshipful recognition and admiration before any man or woman who really succeeds in living out the Golden Rule—the essential outward manifestation of the Christian life. But why do we really see so little expression of this foundation principle among the professed disciples of Jesus Christ?”

We are in receipt of the Sixth Annual Report of the Free Hospital for Poor Consumption, established at White Haven, Pa. This institution is believed to have done very creditable work in the crusade against tuberculosis, by caring for the consumptive poor in a most practical manner, and it has been a pathfinder in some of the difficult problems connected with this work. “We save human life not only by the cases we cure, but by the cases we prevent. When we remove a consumptive from his home and work-shop and place him in a sanitarium, we break up a centre of distribution of the disease at the same time that we cure the patient.” The executive office of this Sanitarium is at 204 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

While the Czar of Russia may have Finland, the United States of America will, it is said, have the Finns. The initial decree of Nicholas II., depriving Finland of its constitutional liberty, was issued in 1899. The effect is that in 1904, 200,000 Finns are on this side of the Atlantic. In common with Scandinavia and Denmark, Finland is Lutheran, and among the 13,500,000 Lutherans of these north European regions other religious bodies have made almost no progress. Finns who come here labor in copper and iron mines, they are seamen and bridgemen, carpenters and dock builders, and farmers and fishers. Intelligent and religious, they are making the best possible citizens that any nation can be composed of. On the skyscrapers of New York, in the mines of Pennsylvania, in the ranches of Wyoming, and in salmon fisheries and fir woods of Washington and Oregon they are active, not alone in making a living, but in building churches. There is a Finnish Lutheran synod, that is strong and growing stronger. Wherever the Finn is he is a tremendous worker. He makes a living, educates his children, and goes to public worship.

THE CHAIN GANG.—So far as we are aware, Judge Speer’s decision (in Georgia) furnishes the first official presentation of the working of the chain-gang law. What it means can be best gathered from the following part of the court’s decision:

“The sufferers wear the typical striped clothing of the penitentiary convict. Iron manacles are riveted upon their legs. These can be removed only by the use of the cold chisel. The irons on each leg are connected by chains. The coarse stripes, thick with the dust and grime of the long torrid days of some tropical summer, or incrustated with the yellow mud of winter, are the flowing clothes when they throw themselves on their blankets of straw in the common stockade at night. They wake, toil, rest, eat and sleep to the never-ceasing clanking of the manacles and chains of this involuntary slavery. Their progress to and from their work is public, and from dawn to dark, with brief intermission, they toil on the public roads and before the public eye. About them, as they sleep, journey and labor, watch the convict guards, armed with rifle and shot-gun. This is to at once make escape impossible and to make sure that the swift thudding of the picks and the rapid work of shovels shall never cease. . . . More baleful and more ignominious than all, with each gang stands the whipping boss, with the badge of his authority. The evidence discloses this to be a heavy leather strap about two-and-a-half or three feet long, with solid hand grasp and with broad, heavy and flexible lash. From the evidence, we may judge that the agony inflicted by this implement of torture is not surpassed by that of the Russian knout, the synonym of the world round for merciless corporal punishment. If we may also accept the uncontradicted evidence of the witnesses, it is true that in the Bibb County chain-gang for no day is the strap wholly idle, and not infrequently it is fiercely active.”

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The Russian prize court has decided to confiscate such portion of the cargo of the Portland and Asiatic Line steamer Arabia as was consigned to Japanese ports, namely 59,000 pounds of American flour and the railroad equipment, the portion consigned to the Russian port of Vladivostok, the remainder, consisting of 142,500 pounds of flour, was consigned to Hong Kong.

It is stated at Washington that the United States Government will maintain the doctrine that foodstuffs not directly intended for the use of a belligerent army or navy, cannot be regarded as contraband. In the case of the Arabia the cargo is said to have been of American flour consigned to Japanese individuals, and not to the Government, nor intended for its use. It is reported that the State Department will proceed with the preparation of its case for the purpose of securing that protection for American trade with the Far East which it is anxious to secure under the principles of modern international law. The Bureau of Labor, after conducting an inquiry in 2500 families, has reached the conclusion that wages are higher and the cost of living lower than they were a few years ago. The inquiry covers 2567 families living in all parts of the country. The average wages earned by the head of the family is placed at $827; the average expenditure for all purposes was $768, of which $326 was for food, or 42 per cent. of all expenses. The most expensive item of cost for each family was for fresh beef, which came to $50 a year.

A despatch of the 3rd inst. from Galveston, Texas, says: The driving of negroes from their homes by whitecappers has aroused the cotton planters to action. If the exodus of negroes from the State continues, there will not be enough labor to pick the immense cotton crop, which is from two to three weeks earlier than usual this year. A meeting of prominent planters has been called to consider the problem, and an appeal has been made to the Federal authorities.

A saloon has lately been opened in New York City, called a "temperance saloon," and is "an experiment for lessening the evils of intemperance. Tea, coffee, milk and soda water are to be sold, which, it is hoped, will prevent the use of alcoholic drinks. These, however, are also sold, and an effort is made to serve food with drink as much as possible, in order to diminish the evil effects of liquor. Intoxicated persons will not be able to buy, and after a few hours of sleeping upon the sofa the laws will be strictly observed. The dedication exercises connected with its opening were under the auspices of a band of temperance advocates and reformers, and included an address by Henry C. Potter, a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church. This endorsement of the saloon has been widely condemned. Silas C. Swallow, Prohibition candidate for President, commenting, said: "The more respectable will be the class of young men it will start on their journey to dram drinking, neglect of home and Christian citizenship, and possibly to poverty, crime and an untimely death. It is the aristocratic place and not the dive that initiates our young men in their downward career."

The strike of butchers in Chicago does not appear to have seriously interfered with the operations of the stockyards in that city, while the families of many of the men who have stopped work are destitute of food.

A despatch in the 1st inst. from Chicago says: Four thousand clamoring men and children besieged the union supply station for food to-day. Three thousand others surrounded the strikers' grocery store, demanding bread and other edibles to replenish bare pantries and to feed the hungry families of the idle men.

A despatch from Zanesville, Ohio, says: There is much excitement in awaiting the results of the oil test which is believed to be a new and rich oil field. Experts declare the product to be of the first grade. An average of 90,000 barrels per day is flowing.

Alton B. Parker, the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, has resigned his office of Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals at Albany, N. Y. He has held office as a Judge for twenty-seven years.

It is stated that the lands of the Colorado desert and of Southern and Southwestern Arizona show the possibilities of irrigation in a striking manner. The land is a true desert. Yet in the small tracts near the rivers, which settlers have irrigated on their own account, the land is found to be unusually fertile and to support a cultivation unknown in the East. Seven crops of alfalfa may be garnered in one year and a like proportion of other crops.

The United States Government is engaged in extensive plans for irrigation, which are yet to be carried out, but the head of the service, which has just returned to Washington from an extensive Western trip, sounds a note of warning against numerous schemes and frauds which are being foisted upon various localities as a result of the great interest aroused through national irrigation activities.

A despatch from Topeka, Kans., of the 6th, says: "Western farmers are warning the British, who are engaged in growing crops being destroyed. The foliage on shade trees is gone, and green peaches and grapes are eaten by the pits. The army of hoppers is moving eastward. Highways are covered with the pests."

FOREIGN.—The number of Japanese in the armies around Port Arthur during the British, Russian and Chinese 300,000. Desperate attacks by the Japanese upon the fortifications are reported, resulting, as is stated, in the death of thousands, and a repulse of the Japanese after two days of fighting. Bodies of Japanese troops are reported to be within two miles of Port Arthur.

It is being stated in Melbourne that the Russian Government intends that "this decision must not, however, be interpreted as a renunciation by the Imperial Government of its intention to dispatch cruisers and warships in general to prevent the carrying of contraband for our enemy."

A despatch from St. Petersburg of the 6th says: Russia has issued instructions to her naval commanders not to sink neutral merchantmen with contraband on board in the future except in cases of direct necessity, but in cases of emergency to send prizes into neutral ports.

It is stated from Berlin that the steamship Prinz Heinrich incident is considered closed. The volunteer fleet steamship having on board the two sacks of refined mail of the Prinz Heinrich which has been instructed to put ashore at the first port for forwarding to their destination. The only question remaining is that of the Prinz Heinrich is expected to be settled amicably and without difficulty.

The British expedition under Colonel Younghusband has entered Lassa in Tibet, the capital of Buddhists, which for more than a century has been closed to Europeans. Its population is estimated at 60,000, of whom 40,000 are Buddhist monks. The head of the Buddhists called the Dalai Lama, fled to a monastery 18 miles distant.

The Finnish National Alliance of the United States has issued a public declaration concerning the attitude of Finland to Russia, in which it says: "We assure the American people and the entire civilized world that there is not a respectable man or woman in Finland who does not grieve over the downgrading of her most sacred human and civil rights, the ruin of her educational institutions and the destruction of her civil government, for which has been substituted a state of lawlessness and despotism. The Finnish people regard the Russian military ordinance, enacted through forceful methods, as illegal and unlawful. And even though a sort of a representative body might be convened by compulsory means for the purpose of approving all these violations of law, the Finnish people cannot be responsible in any manner for the actions of this prospective congress."

A despatch from Geneva says: Thus far this season it is estimated that there have been 150 deaths in the Swiss and French Alps. The largest proportion of the victims have been amateurs who have attempted ascents without guides. The Government of Switzerland contemplates a law forbidding such attempts, and the fact that a greater number of fatalities have occurred this year than in any previous year will hasten action.

A despatch from London of the 1st inst. says: The House of Lords in England awarding the entire funds and property of the Free Church of Scotland, aggregating nearly $55,000,000, to twenty-four ministers who opposed the union, effected four years ago, with the United Presbyterian Church. These twenty-four ministers were opposed to the union mainly on the ground that it would mean the giving up of some of the distinctive principles of the Free Church. The twenty-four ministers—a very small party compared with the Free Church as a whole—raised a fund to carry their views into court, claiming they were the Free Church of Scotland. The decision of the House of Lords recognizes their claim as legally just, and gives to their control an enormous property, the general funds alone, apart from the church buildings, etc., amounting to more than $5,000,000.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

Joel Bean, Cal.; M. Jennie Murray, Pa.; James W. Oliver, Mass.; Mary B. Swan, Mass.; Eunice B. Clark, R. I.; John G. Haines, Pa., $8 for himself, Levi S. Thomas, Wm. T. Zook and Wm. E. Staff; John Barclay Jones, Pa.; Wm. R. Bullock, M. Del.; Philena Y. Smedley, Pa.; Elwood Cooper, Phila.; Joseph K. Evans, N. J.; Mary E. Allen, M. D., Phila.; Charles F. Morlan, O.; Hannah E. Sheppard, Phila.; Henry B. Leeds, agent, N. J., $6 for Edith Lippincott, John B. Rhoads and Wm. E. Rhoads; Wm. J. Evans, S. J., $6 for himself, M. D., Leeds, N. J.; Charles E. Canby, agent, O., $8 for Elizabeth Bowman, Lydia Jane Bye, Edna P. Dean, Jason Fawcett, Carl Patterson, Belinda H. Schofield, David Smith, Hannah P. Smith and Susan Worstel; Samuel P. Leeds, Jr., N. J.; Henry W. Leeds, N. J.; Sarah W. Leeds, N. J.; Edna M. Leeds, N. J.; Clara E. Canby, G. T. N.; Ellen Bromley, Phila.; I. S. Frame, D. C.; Phila.; Job McCarty, Pa., $6 for himself, Abel McCarty and John S. Brown; Clarkson Moore, agent, Pa., $6 for Elizabeth C. Cooper, Elizabeth W. Moore and Wm. Wickesham; Wm. W. Hazard, M. D., $20 for himself; Hazard Library, I. P. Hazard, D. C.; Halloway, Elizabeth, M. D.; G. Cook, Elizabeth Gardner, L. P. Meaker, M. D., Martha K. Otis and Jesse M. Otis; Trumair Moore, Pa.; S. Francis Walton, Pa.; Susannah T. Ind.; Ann Gibbons, Ia.; Anna Horst, Pa.; Stey W. Savery, Pa.; Y. Stanley, agent, N. J.; P. Dewees, Frankford; William S. D., Pa.; O., $29 for Wm. Bundy, L. P. Bailey, D. C. Bu Asenath Bailey, Thomas C. Pope, James H. Benson, Charles Livezey, Friends' Boarding Sch 53, Esther S. Sears, Henry Stanton, Danie Stanton, Joseph S. B. Stanley, agent, N. H. B. Stanton, Ia.; B. Stanley, agent, N. J. for Wm. E. Bundy, Albert Beddell, Wm. Copp Joseph S. Heald, Pearson Hall, Francis Walter J. Stanley, Hannah R. Willits and W. Hodgins, Jr. to No. 27; Lloyd Balderston and George Balderston, Md.; Edward M. Jones, G. Anna W. Bailey, Pa.; Mary B. Clement, N. J. Albin Thorp, Pa.; Paschal Worth, Pa.; Robt Hulme, Pa.; Jane G. Smedley, Pa.; Joseph E. Alderson, agent, Ia., $30 for Walter Clayton, A. bald Henderson, Isabella Henderson, Lore Rockwell, Daniel E. Peckham, Christian Thon, Severst Tow, Oman K. Tow, Ole F. Tjoss, Arthur Rockwell, Lars Stangsted, Ole P. Tjoss for Sam J. Norland and Lydia Knowles for L. L. Rockwell, Roy W. Rockwell and Hugh Knowles; George Blackburn, agent, O., $12 K. Morris Ashed, Thomas F. Fawcett, Martha F. Fawcett, Lydia A. Lightfoot, John M. Stratton Joseph R. Stratton; Margaret M. Maie, Pa.; Han P. Rudolph, N. J., $6 for herself, Warner W. C. Sarah A. Longstreth, Phila.; Mary A. Shless, Pa., and for Lewis P. Sharpless; Sarah House, Pa., and for Lena H. Sharpless; E. Ha O., Thomas F. Scattergood, Herbert A. Scatterg Mary E. Forsythe and Debbie C. Spackman.

Remittances received after Third-day week will appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

WANTED, by Ninth Month 1st a Friend for matron the Barclay Home, West Chester, Pa. Apply at once ANNE J. HAYES, or ANNE T. ELDRIDGE, West Chester, Pa.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., Ph

During the Seventh and Eighth Months the Library be open on Fifth-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

The Friends' City Home can accommodate a young man, who may propose to spend the summer months in the city. Address Mary T. Wildman, 1623 Sum Street.

Thomas H. Whitson has been released as Agent THE FRIEND at his own request. William L. Bailey been appointed Agent in his place. Address, No. 422 Church Street, West Chester, Pa.

Western Quarterly Meeting of Friends The train leaving Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, 7 A. M., on the 19th instant, will be met at West Grove Station (free of charge), those desiring to attend Western Quarterly Meeting of Friends to be held London Grove, Chester County, Pa. It would assist committee if those intending to come would inform postal in advance.

TRUMAN C. MOORE, GEORGE R. CHAMBERS, } Commlth

DIED, at her home, near West Branch, Iowa, the nineteenth of Third Month, 1904, EMMA A. HADLEY, beloved wife of Edwin J. Hadley, in the sixty-sixth year of age. Her life was a beautiful exemplification of the truth: "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." Having had a severe spell of life when the babe, which left her a cripple for life seemed her best friend, she was able to receive the best care and training, which developed her into a true Christian child, woman, wife and mother. Deeply devoted her family, and to the Society of Friends, of which was a valued member, her earnest supplications on behalf, we trust, will never be forgotten. Ever zealous in the cause of the finger of God, and in helping lift up those in sin and sorrow, especially to the answer the Master's call in the cause of temperance. Her last sickness, resulting from an accident, was filled with severe suffering; yet many loving words fell from her lips of prayer and praise to God and precious words to her family and friends. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

WILLIAM H. PILLSBOS, PRINTERS No. 422 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 20, 1904.

No. 6.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

(South from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

The Gift of Shepherding Without Vocal Preaching.

Until the present summer, looking across Wizard's Bay we could see one white spot among the trees of the Mattapoisett shore. It was a neat, white Friends' Meeting-house that we saw. But this summer it was not in sight. When we asked "an elder worthy of double or more" who came over from that place to attend a Quarterly Meeting what had become of the meeting-house, that we no longer saw it on our side, he said that it was likely the trees had grown up to shut off the view. This was the silent pastor of that neighborhood who died that day, and a few days later we read of his sudden death. Many flocked, and apparently scores of old men, to take a last view of the honest, humble, unassuming, and unassuming Captain Joshua L. Macomber.

His house of worship and outward tabernacle had been cut off from the view of the shore by the living intervention of a divine Providence in this summer. But the object of that meeting-house at whatever distance had stood to our thoughts as a testimony of a true pastorate. For many years the meeting has been kept up without a resident minister. If it centered around any one person it centered around the gathering influence of an honest, straightforward loving heart, deeply imbued with the principles and doctrines of the good, old Quakerism, ever viewing with sadness, but without a trace of bitterness, the innovations that were creeping over the goodly heritage of our profession. The gathering influence of Christ in his spirit thus long held the meeting together. He could not speak publicly, but he could bear other's burdens, he could reach over the flock and every family for good, and could keep close to best wisdom for every interest of the meeting, little and great, he could at heart rejoice with those that rejoiced and weep with those that wept, he could be "a judge as at the first and a counsellor as at the beginning," he could do his part wherever else failed to carry out the Friends ideal of pastoral care, "all the members having the same care one over the other."

This elder was a living refutation of the claim that the pastoral service is inseparable from the vocal ministry of a meeting. The pastoral question among Friends would never have come up had there been many Joshua L. Macomers.

No one truly enjoys himself, unless it is a good self.

"We want our righteousness to be such a power as the world has never seen;" and "The Christian love of the United States should be the most formidable in existence." These words are not quoted exactly as two officers of "The Large-Navy Mania" recently published them. For righteousness and Christian love they put "feet" and "navy."

To give one's self to the work of the ministry, is not necessarily to quit the ordinary avocations of man, but it is to give himself to the operation of the Holy Spirit. The work of the ministry is all His. The first ministerial charge was, "whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." To this we believe nothing has ever been really added since.

What is called "the new Quakerism" has been proving to be the old anti-Quakerism.

The good old Quakerism is the newness of the Spirit ever speaking to present conditions.

To speak to modern conditions as one having authority speaks, is different from acknowledging that they are our authority.

SHALL FRIENDS LEVEL UP, OR DOWN?—We have at times referred to the excuse, that stated hymns have a right to be introduced into Friends' meetings for worship on the same basis as the vocal exercise of preaching and prayer. Were the voice of true praise as genuinely and immediately the product and requirement of the Holy Spirit, as preaching and prayer ought to be, probably its exercise would never have been challenged by the spiritually minded. But in what way shall song, prayer and preaching be uttered on the same standard? By placing the singing on the true spiritual plane that should warrant the other vocal ministry; or by bringing down that ministry to the usual level of the singing? Shall we level upward, or level downward, to get public singing, preaching and prayer all on the same level? The actual tendency has been to level the authority of preaching and praying downward toward the convenient foundation on which unspiritual (and even immoral) singers can exercise a voice.

A leader's orders to sing from a certain page of a book are just as good authority for one, similarly called out, to preach from a certain page of a sermon-book, and for another to pray vocally from a certain page of a prayer-book. What difference in principle? Off from the highway of the Spirit, "all roads lead to Rome."

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 54.)

Early in 1802 a company of Delaware and Shawnee Indians from their homes west of the Ohio, came to Philadelphia with the permission of the President, on their way home from Washington, and presented to Friends an address, in which they state their desire to get some necessary articles for their women and children, and also a school master to teach their children. They requested also the assistance of Friends in getting the place where their annuity was paid them changed to Cincinnati or Fort Hamilton, as being more convenient to their settlements.

The Committee state in reference to these Indians:

"As these people are the immediate descendants from those tribes who were very friendly and kind to our ancestors, they seemed to have a special claim upon us, and as usual it was thought right to make them some presents; accordingly upwards of four hundred dollars was collected from Friends of the city, and one hundred dollars more were added by the Committee on Indian Affairs. This amount was given in money and goods to them and their interpreters, and the following answer was prepared and interpreted to them."

This answer was couched in the figurative language to which the Indians were accustomed on such occasions, and contained the following paragraphs:

"Brothers,—We are glad to see you and bid you welcome to this our old council fire which was kindled by your grandfathers and our grandfathers in this place.

"Brothers,—This fire has been kept burning ever since, and is still burning, and hope it will long continue so to do, and we now put on some good dry wood to make it more fresh and lively.

"Brothers,—As you have come a long journey and are much fatigued, we desire you may be strengthened and refreshed among us, and made strong to return home in health and safety to your friends.

"Brothers,—It is now a long time since we have seen any of our Delaware and Shawnee brethren; there has been a great deal of war and bloodshed, which has made the hearts of us, the children of Onas, called Quakers, very sad, and we are glad to hear you say you do not intend going to war any more. We desire for you as for ourselves, that we may live in peace with and do good to all men.

"Brothers,—When our grandfathers came to this country they purchased lands of the Indians, they cleared and cultivated the ground, built good comfortable houses and barns; they got cows, horses, sheep, hogs, and poultry, and their women and children were sober and industrious, and the Great Good Spirit blessed them with peace and plenty.

"Brothers,—It sometimes happened that some of our fathers left their children good estates, and some of these children became lazy and idle and spent their time and money in gaming, frolicking and drunkenness, and so they swallowed up their lands, and they and their wives and children became poor and had to beg their bread.

"Brothers,—Many of our people now have to work hard; some have to pay heavy rents and taxes, and we have many poor to support, but you, brothers, tell us you are settled on good lands. We desire you may improve them as our forefathers did, and we, their children, continue to do; this will be for the good of yourselves, your wives and children, and what we strongly recommend to you; but if instead of this you will spend your money and skins for whiskey, and in playing cards and frolicking, the Great Spirit will be angry with you, and you will dwindle and become poor, weak and sickly.

"Brothers,—The President and the sixteen fires have those matters and things concerning the Indian nations under their care; to them you must look for advice and assistance, but if a proper opportunity should offer we mean to make use of it, to promote your request respecting your annuity. We believe the President is well disposed towards you.

"Brothers,—As you live at a great distance from us, we have no expectation at present that any of our people will be willing to go among you as a school master, but if you would send to us two of your boys, we are willing to take them and have them taught to read and write and to learn the blacksmith's or carpenter's trade, or farming.

"Brothers,—We intend to make your interpreters a present, as you desire, and we also mean to make you a present of some gold and some light goods, but we make this present that you may carry them home and distribute them, the money to be laid out in useful and necessary articles for your women and children."

To this address they made a reply in which, referring to intoxicating liquors they said truly:

"It is not an evil brothers, of our own making. We have not placed it amongst ourselves. No, it is an evil placed amongst us by the white people. We look up to them to take it out of our country. They tell us they have friendship for us; if they have they certainly will not let it continue amongst us any longer. No, brothers, this friendship is for our destruction. We tell them, Brothers bring us useful things, bring us clothes—bring us farming utensils—but all to no purpose. So may the Great Spirit above protect you for the favors you have shown us, and the presents you have given us will put us in grateful remembrance of you forever."

In 1802 an application was received by the Committee from Clear Sky, a Seneca chief, on behalf of his people settled at the Tonawanda village for some articles of husbandry and a set of saw mill irons, which was granted. In the following year a set of saw mill irons, was forwarded to the Indians at Buffalo Creek [the site of the city of Buffalo].

The attention of the Committee had been drawn from time to time to the propriety of occupying a different location than that originally selected, at Old Town, near the Allegheny River; believing there would be an advantage in owning the land that their improvements were upon, and where also a saw and grist mill could be erected. After consulting the Indians upon the subject, and obtaining their consent to remove to another spot, that the Indians hoped would not be far distant, four of the Committee, who were then visiting the Indians, viz: Isaac Coates, Isaac Bonnell, Thomas Stewardson and John Shoemaker, Jr., in 1803, selected the tract of land which is now the property of the Yearly Meeting. In reference to their choice of this location these—"On viewing a creek called Tunesassa, which falls into the Allegheny on the east side about two miles above Genesinghuta, we found sufficient water to work a saw mill and a convenient situation to build one, about half a mile from the Indian reservation, and navigable for canoes to and from the river at many seasons. The creek is bounded on the south by a mountain which it winds round the end of—On it are some fine white pine trees near where the dam is proposed to be erected; it will require a dam fifty yards long and about twelve feet high to obtain a fall of ten feet. On the north side of the creek is a body of good farming land, the bottoms abounding with white pine and other timber, among which are some sugar maples; there is a low ridge on which are many white oaks. Although the land is not generally of the first quality [and to secure the water of the creek we must include a part of the mountain] yet we believe a very good farm may be made there, and the situation for our purpose is superior to any we met with, therefore we fixed on this place."

The tract thus selected was afterwards purchased of Joseph Ellicott, the agent of the Holland Land Company, for about $900; it adjoins the Allegheny Reservation, and contained about 692 acres.

Joel Swayne and Jonathan Thomas removed from Old Town to reside upon it in 1804, and steps were soon taken to erect a saw and grist mill, which were completed and in operation early in 1805. With the view of encouraging the Indians to make use of the facilities these mills afforded, it was agreed to saw free of charge for such of them as intended to use the boards for building with, and to grind their grain without taking toll, certain time. This method of converting into meal was so much more rapid than of pounding it by hand in their wooden tars, that it elicited the remark from an Indian who had a grist of his own raising ground and bolted there "I think this will make Indians see daylight."

The Sub-Committee who made the sale of this tract afterwards went to the settlement of Indians at Cattaraugus where had a council with them, and upon their action agreed to furnish them with saw tools, and a set of plough irons [there was at this time but one plough in this settler and also agreed to take charge of and instruct two of their boys, if they were ready to go for Philadelphia at a certain time.

The Sub-Committee remark in their report—"while sitting in the chief warrior's cabin the evening, he asked us if Quakers kept slaves. We answered him, no. He said was very glad to hear it, for if they had any he could not think so well of them as now did; that he had been at the city of Washington last winter on business of nation, and found many white people blacks in slavery, and used them no better than horses."

The same friends afterwards had an interview with Red Jacket and other Indians at Buffalo Creek, about thirty-six miles distant and also with those residing at Tonawanda. At the latter place a request was made for assistance in building a saw mill, which consideration by the Committee in Philadelphia, was complied with so far as to provide to furnish them with three hundred dollars when the mill should be erected.

(To be continued.)

RESULT OF EXAMINATION.—In the middle of the eighteenth century Gilbert West and Lord Lyttleton, leaders among the learned in that of controversial age, came together to plan an assault upon Christianity. Each prepared to prepare an elaborate and exhaustive attack on what he regarded as the most important and salient event of the gospel record—West decided on the resurrection of Christ, Lord Lyttleton on the conversion of St. Paul. A year later they came together to compare notes. The former said, "My essay is finished; but I have arrived at a different conclusion from what I had anticipated. A comprehensive survey of the evidence in the case, I am forced to believe that Jesus was buried in Joseph's garden, and did not rise from the sepulchre, and thus proclaimed himself to be the very Son of God." The latter said, "I am bound to admit that my research have brought me to a similar conclusion. The evidence shows that Saul of Tarsus met Jesus an extraordinary change in his way down Damascus, that he saw the living Christ, that this Christ was the very Son of God."

Exchange.

I NEVER saw an oft-transplanted tree, yet an oft-removed family that thrive so, as those that settled here.—A. D. 1737.

Central Truth come to Bridge over Such a Time as This.

It has been said that we are living in a time that has important analogies to the days of the advent of Christ.

The civilized world nineteen hundred years ago was under the sway of Roman emperors; geographical boundaries were effaced; military empires joined countries hitherto unknown to each other. To-day geography is an uncertain quantity; steam and electricity have brought the most obscure, benighted peoples within reach with all the other races. In the latter days, says the prophet Daniel: "Many shall go to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Again as in Christ's time there is great religious unrest and a casting about for something as yet unrealized. Then, the high esthetic and philosophic culture of Greece furnished a beautiful language for the announcement of the gospel of love and self-sacrifice,—now electricity has called upon the words that express its annihilation of time and space, words that are utilized to symbolize the power of an all-pervading, generating Holy Spirit.

This third manifestation of the Deity Neander declared in the first half of last century was to evolve the fourth great era in the educational uplift of mankind.

The Jews were raised up to prepare the way for the Saviour by a clear monotheism and purging of the four institutions that were common to all of the old religions, viz: a holy caste, holy priesthood, holy sacrifices and holy wars—George Fox and the Friends sought to give the Christian sects from the foreign elements evolved under and after Constantine, during the dark ages; they would restore primitive Christianity by bringing men through light in all to the immediate and perceptible guidance of the Holy Spirit; to a ministry inspired by the Holy Spirit, and to the exercise of all of the Pauline gifts that are the inheritance of a true congregation that is gathered under the headship of Christ. This spiritual worship with its silent waitings for the mission of the Holy Spirit, upon the varied gifts, and the clear guidance of the Holy Spirit especially manifest in the sure steppings of the gifted minister when called by him to serve; these justify the conclusion that Friends are chosen to give an object lesson to the world preparatory to the opening of the era of the Holy Spirit.

Like the Jews, the Friends were given certain customs and practices which isolated them, and fitted them for their peculiar mission among the religious sects,—the inculcation of the offices of the Holy Spirit; the Spirit that Christ promised to send to lead the Christians into truth and teach them things to them.

Here is the raison d'être for the continued existence of the Friends as a separate organization, a peculiar people. Their mission is not yet fulfilled. Very few religious ministers accept in practice the power of the Holy Spirit, and many ignore Him.

H.

WHOEVER loves God with all his heart and but serve Him with all his strength, Wesley.

TO MY DOG BLANCO. By Request.

BY I. G. HOLLAND.

My poor dumb friend low lying there,
A willing vassal at my feet,
Glad partner of my home and fare
My shadow in the street.
I look into thy great brown eyes,
Where love and loyal homage shine,
And wonder where the difference lies
Between thy soul and mine!
More playful than a frolic boy,
More watchful than a sentinel,
By day and night thy constant joy
To guard and please me well.
I clasp thy head upon my breast,
While thou dost wine and lick my hand,
And thus our friendship is confessed,
And thus we understand.
Ah, Blanco, did I worship God
As truly as thou worships me,
Or follow where my Master trod
With thy humility;
Did I sit fondly at His feet
As thou, dear Blanco, dost at mine
And watch Him with a love as sweet
My life would grow divine? (Revised.)

The Land of Promise in Sunshine and Shadow.

(Concluded from page 35.)

As already stated, the language of the country is the Arabic, not the Turkish, as some presume. The pure Arabic is the classical language of the Mohammedans. The native Christians name the days of the week and the months of the year differently from the Mohammedans. The Arabic being widely spoken, its division in several dialects by different nationalities is but natural. The Jews that come there from all quarters of the globe speak the language of their respective country at home and in their own circle. The Hebrew, of which not all have sufficient knowledge, is used as a medium in conversing with the rest of their people. Twenty-seven different languages and forty-two dialects are said to be spoken in Jerusalem. That may somewhat explain the Babylonian confusion!

Forests are no more to be found on the sacred fields. It is one of the grave characteristics of the Arabs, to commit violence on all that is good and improving. There is, however, some timber on the banks of the Jordan.

Fuel is quite an object. What coal is needed for steam, is imported from France. The natives burn dried cow and camel manure, or people buy of them and use very sparingly roots of shrub and stumps. The Jewish colony Rishon utilize the pruning of the grape vine, of which they have an abundance, an example, that is certainly followed by others.

Concerning the employment of the more than one hundred thousand Jews in Palestine it remains to be stated, that about the half live a colonial life, the greater number of whom on the five greatest Rothschild colonies; and there are others, some, like the farmer, working for their sole owner at small day's wages; others struggle for themselves. To my knowledge all produce wine, which like any other product, is subject to export taxes. These, added to the import taxes at their destination, and the freight, labor, machinery, etc., elevate the cost above the amount of sale; but the philantropists will sooner employ their race in this way, than to mortify their activity by alms.

Agricultural implements are as yet primitive. On the plain of Sharon and Philistia the use of our plow is possible, not so in the mountainous Jewish country. A Hebrew, now called Arabic plow, is all the rocky condition of the Judea patches (there are few fields) will admit of. All the power for tilling the soil consists in a donkey or two, occasionally assisted by a woman.

Threshing is also just the same. There being no need of fear of rain in the summer season, the grain is stacked outside. Before rain is expected, the threshing-floor (simply a place of hard ground) sometimes paved, is got ready, on which a layer of the grain in ears is placed. The threshing gang is made up of oxen, donkeys or cows, all coupled together, which under the voice and whip of a commander march around and around, until all is thoroughly broken up. Then another layer follows just on top of the pulverized former, when the proceedings begin anew. Of course, the reader in better circumstances must not imagine that system to be hardly practicable, where a man had an extraordinary crop. The Arab is always sure of having little enough. To them it may well be applied, what some one said of the Hindoos. "They are wealthy in one respect only, that is, in time." Well, the Arab possesses lots of patience, perhaps because he needs it. A favorable wind must be waited on, which under continual throwing up of the threshed substance with a wooden fork is utilized as a winnowing mill. Thus expense is reduced to the minimum of one cipher. I have seen such a paved threshing ground in the extensive yard of the Syrian Orphanage, where evidently the same system was followed.

As is known, water is scarce in Palestine, but not so badly as often given to be understood. There are numbers of springs in the hills of Israel and Judah, but often too far from human dwellings. On the forty mile road from Jerusalem to Jaffa I have seen three, two of which were neatly walled up; besides a brook, from which I drank, calling to mind Psl. cx: 7. The people in that country must supply themselves with rain water. Knowing this, I first missed the spoutings on all houses, but found that such are but waste of money to them. The flat roof and a prepared yard, which the better classes and Europeans pave and keep clean are sufficient to gather and lead through a filter in the different cisterns all the rain water that is falling. The Syrian Orphanage has twenty-seven of these, others also in proportion to their family and stock, except in the cities, where such is impossible and therefore the rainy season is waited on with great anxiety. Jerusalem had to suffer most in this respect, until some three years ago, when at last after many suggestions and benevolent offers from English people, to remedy the calamity, the Solomon water channels were put in order after an abandonment of an age. Since that the holy city is rendered safe from water famine. During my stay I saw water being carried and sold in sheep and goat skins not inviting in appearance. On the plain of the coast around Jaffa there are wells, commonly called "hiara," from which the water is obtained by an Arabic construction, consisting of a wooden frame with wheels, chairs and a number of tin boxes of about 2x4x3 in size. A horse or other animal of the kind does the work by pulling in a circle. If much water is needed, the motor beast must be relieved often. To my knowledge there are only two with a gas motor, Bir Salem and Rishon.

Another evil in Palestine is the circumstance, that the value of legal coin is not regulated by law, as with us, but by market influence, consequently is fluctuant. Interesting it may be to learn, that the change and exchange of money is always subject to a fee. As in historical times, there are money changers every here and there on the street. A merchant will not hand out the change, it must be bought. A Turkish medjity is worth eighty-five cents, a piaster nearly five cents, our mill is their sackdood. French silver and gold is current, particularly with the merchants. In short, aside from the demoralizing influence of the Islam, Palestine is holding fast to original and aboriginal antiquities, regardless of the criticism of the ancients. Many volumes could be written on Bible Lands, information of fascinating interest on different subjects, such as the researches and excavations of the Palestine Exploration Society, which could be furnished, true as nature,—cheap as paper,—nothing will give us as thorough an understanding and vivid a view of these matters as an object-lesson in the respective places, especially if broadened and deepened by a longer living and dealing among the natives.

In closing my narratives and descriptions, I exhort the dear reader to join with me in praise to God, whom it pleased to bless us with the Word of Life, which hope we bear assuredly in this mortal vessel; who has planted us by the river of steady increasing civilization, with law of steadfastness and a well regulated government.

If the earnestness of our spiritual attitude will permit a suggestion, I move that the dissatisfied and disobedient be given a course in Palestine. I am of the strong opinion of the treatment being within the scope of the homeopathic law: "Similia similibus curantur."

As for us, let us serve the Lord our God with a pure heart fervently, remembering that Christ died also for our neighbor and fellow-men. So shall we not be ashamed before Him in His coming. "And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God."

"Now unto Him, that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Saviour, through Jesus Christ our Lord, be glory, and majesty, dominion and power, both now and evermore. Amen."

MATHIAS DENKHAUS.

NAVARRÉ, Ohio.

May we become fit vessels for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, lest the powers given us to become shining lights to the glory of God become as a consuming fire to our own destruction, through the lusts of the flesh.—Kansas Epistle.

"The trivial round, the common task,
Will furnish all we ought to ask,
Room to deny ourselves, a road
To bring us daily nearer God."

Slighting Work.

There is in these days a great lack of thoroughness; and there is in the human constitution a disposition to slight and neglect things, and to make profit by the use of inferior material and unfaithful workmanship. Doubtless, this is in many instances caused by keen competition, which results in such reduction of prices as renders an honest course one of extreme difficulty. But besides this, there is the lack of a feeling of personal responsibility to God for the faithful performance of personal duty. Men suppose that when a job of work is done—has passed the inspector, gone out of their hands, and been paid for—they have no further concern with it. And yet the results of their carelessness, neglect, and dishonesty may be disastrous and deadly.

While crossing the Atlantic, in 1882, on board the steamship Hanoverian we saw the crew one morning engaged in hoisting a sail. All at once something gave way, and the heavy boom came crashing down upon the heads of several who were sitting beneath, unconscious of danger, and who were picked up bruised, maimed, and bleeding, and were carried away. Investigation showed that the accident was due to a worthless hook, made of soft iron, which, under the strain, straightened out, and caused the accident. Thus human life was imperiled, and perhaps years of suffering, caused by the neglect, unfaithfulness, or dishonesty of some unknown person who was responsible for that worthless hook. No human tribunal may reach the offender, nor will he ever pay a penny of damages to those who were injured. But he cannot escape responsibility. The day will come when that work, with all other doings of its kind, will pass in review before the great Inspector, who judgeth according to every man's work, and who shall give reward for the deeds that men have done.

There are frequent accidents on land and sea directly traceable to the carelessness, unfaithfulness, and dishonesty of persons who are employed; and frequently to the unrighteousness and oppression of employers, who exact impossible labors, and blame men for failing to perform them. No earthly tribunal can apprehend or punish the guilty in these cases; an attempt to do it frequently results in making some poor wretch a scape-goat to bear away the sins of the wealthy and influential, who are really responsible for the calamities.

A person once slipped or fell from a window, and was only saved from inevitable death by a shutter-hook, which caught into the clothes, and held the person, suspended, but safe until assistance could arrive. The hook, of course, was intended to support no such weight, but it was well and strongly made, and securely fastened, and that faithfulness, saved a life.

Judgment will have awful revelations for some men who have slighted their work, neglected their duties, and caused calamities which no eye but the Omnipotent could trace to their real sources. The man who has been faithful in all things, who has done his work thoroughly, as in the sight of God, may find in that day that he has builded better than he knew, and that the work which he has done has been made a blessing to many whom he has never seen. The man who has slighted neglected, and "scamped" his work, may find in the great day a terrible array of woes and calamities which have come through his unfaithfulness. Whatever ye do, do all the glory of God. He who does this may leave the result with Him whose he is, and whom he serves.—The Safeguard.

To Learn Faithfulness.

Let us begin with some obscure faithfulness and be faithful in that. Many a fail less boy, who has been living carelessly a ungoverned, who now wants to begin a solid and dependable life, will find his first test, and therefore his first opportunity of great strengthening and development, presented to him in the chance to conquer some private infidelity. Let him blow the dust of his Bible, and be watchful and pray to the God whom he has been forgetting.

But to conceal and equivocate is a poor way to begin a new life of fidelity. The new faithfulness must show itself from the outset in faithful loyalty. Fly the right colors from the start of the new life.

Soon the chance for some heroic and testing fidelity will come. Seize it. The work that has been strengthening by unseen difficulties and by quiet, open commitment to the right, will be given its opportunity; when that time comes let us obey hard and fearless. We may be trembling under the test, a hardly knowing whether to stand or fall, if we are true now we shall leap upward by a year's growth. The great instances glorious faithfulnesses in crises which history records were prepared for in the main by the struggle after faithfulness in obscurity. He and there, doubtless, it was not so, the emergency suddenly striking loose some deep, unused forces, which had not been given place in life before. But the law of faithfulness the great thing is the law of faithfulness the small. When, having lived faithfully small things, the opportunity comes and seized for acting faithfully without flinching in great things, the struggling life is; therefore immovably in the glory of perfect dependableness.

Always let us follow and obey the faithful Saviour. As we think of Him and trust Him, a higher conception of the glory of faithfulness girds our hearts, and we see that it is possible for a man to be faithful. I more than this happens. For such trust Christ as this lays our life open to his incurring, and though we may not be conscious of it, and may think that our memory of Him is nothing more than our memory of His mothers, yet as we believe on Him He presents himself in us, and his ability to succor them that are tempted to faithlessness lays down and resistless hold upon our lives, and makes us no longer faithless men and women but believing, faithful.—Forward.

We realize that the condition of our country is such that it should claim our serious consideration. If we would be a living church, we must not fear to bear our testimony of the administration of the affairs of government in accord with the principles of Christianity.—Kansas Epistle.

Quakerism and the Scholar.*

BY WILLIAM WESTAR COMFORT.

the dangers of the student's life are peculiarly inevitable. I say the dangers, for though they exist, they may be survived. These dangers are frequently insisted upon; yet it is not worth while to recall them at this time. Perhaps the primary danger, the danger which strikes us most quickly in our relation to those about us, is that of selfishness. Selfishness on a grand scale, for the true scholar is generous and broad-minded toward the appeal of truth from whencesoever it may come; but selfishness on a small, petty, mean scale, which views itself in self-absorption and forgetfulness of the rights and pleasures of others. One is not like to be disturbed while engaged in a general research; one chafes under the daily exactions of a material existence when his thoughts are wandering upon some fascinating plane of intellectual activity. How we have hated ourselves afterwards, when a hasty word or act of assistance grudgingly rendered has betrayed our frailty, our subjection to the petty weaknesses of humanity, we who feel forsooth so free to soar in the pure ether of intellectual exaltation!

The sense of the all-to-likely incompatibility of the scholar's life with the life of society, mainly accounts for the mediæval dividing line between the world and the scholar. The scholar felt with good reason that he had no business with a family or with any social interests. And he retired to a cell where he might be alone with God and his books. But he showed an open withdrawal from society; the part of the scholar is too cowardly an one to harmonize with the requirements of modern social responsibility. No one can live in selfishness alone, even if it were right for him to do so. Thus, in our day, the most unworldly scholar, the most zealous student, must have a host of duties toward others, which he must poorly execute, all because he is too selfish of self, and too regardless of the rights of others.

Is it, then, our position so despairing? Are we inevitably bound by the shackles of our own selfishness? Is there no remedy for this wretched self-centralization,—no enfranchisement from the merciless tyranny of a too congenial satisfaction? There certainly is such a remedy which will go far to save us, a remedy of a purely human and practical character. I think the remedy lies in the practice of what the Apostle to the Gentiles called charity, a love, yet definite love of humanity. This condition is not altogether the private property of the Aristotelian. I apprehend that many generations of pagan knew this interest in his own mortals. But the passionate yearning for the welfare of others is properly a Christian sentiment, a sentiment which has taken on an unprecedented development and importance in our own times. We who are teachers are especially well placed to feel this sentiment and to give it free play in our daily work. A teacher who has no sense of responsibility for the welfare of the minds and hearts of those committed to his charge makes but a poor use of his possibilities. So true is this that in most of our private schools you will find teachers are chosen rather with a view to their character and personal influence than on account of their intellectual attainments. It is quite right it should be so, provided that under the head of influence there be included an insistence upon a high grade of execution of the task imposed. Any slipshod methods of instruction are but partially compensated for by the influence of a Christian character outside the class room. No one is quicker than a bright student to detect weakness of intellect or imperfection of preparation in his teacher. Just criticism of our methods as teachers will form a stumbling block to our influence as guides and friends.

* By request of some members this article is offered to periodicals under the name of Friend.

To put the excellent counteracting influence of charity upon a broader plane, I mean that as scholars we should never think of ourselves as belonging to a fraternity apart from the common responsibilities of modern society. Our very enviable relation to the youth of this country should forbid us to enclose our treasure, whatever it is, in a tightly-sealed vase. The sharing of our benefits with others becomes an imperative duty. But let us see to it that our activity and our sympathies are not confined even within the border of our school or college. Our communities stand in need of our help, in politics, in charitable organizations, in religious manifestations, in all the activities of society where intellectual leadership is required. Though it may seem temporarily detrimental to extreme forms of individual scholarship, let us be thankful that the heads of our great American educational institutions are one and all taking the lead in a thousand movements that will make of our country a fairer land. Often at great personal sacrifice the leaders of our intellectual world are crossing the country in all directions to assist with their personal advice in undertakings of vast import to our national welfare. In a smaller measure, as the opportunity offers, we, as educators, should always feel a sympathetic interest in all good works. If we do so, it will prove a powerful check upon the besetting sin of selfishness which lies ever in wait, with seductive proposals, to wreck the higher purposes of our God-given existence.

But, needless to say, in the course of these remarks upon that personal selfishness, which, after all, is the common inheritance of mortals, I have been thinking of a vastly more serious obstacle to our best interests which assails us as scholars. I refer to the very real temptations of the scholar to dispense with the forms of public worship. You probably know what is the case, that an extraordinary number of men in our universities and colleges, brought up in a religious atmosphere, have ceased to join with the people in worshipping God. I take it, however, that a very small portion of these men would claim to have reached such a point of self-sufficiency as to be able to dispense with all religious belief of any kind. No, they are not unbelievers. They are respectful, God-fearing men, fully alive to their moral and social responsibilities, profoundly true to their convictions of what is right. But they are men, endowed with powerful and fearless intellects, who are accustomed to think for themselves, at the dictates of no one. Such men are extremely wary of accepting any formulated doctrine, and still more unwilling to assist at any religious rites with which they feel no sympathy. Above all else, they are true to themselves, and shun the idea of becoming a party to any action with which they have not entire unity. I have known such men in several countries, but in our own universities they may be met by the hundred. They are not noisy. They interfere with no one's practices; but conversation with them reveals their distrust of religious emotion, their lack of sympathy with what are called high church forms.

Now it seems to me that this attitude of mind is altogether comprehensible, given the sort of men who are its victims. The Roman Catholic Church, by a series of evolutions, adapted its forms and in part its creed, to the intelligence of the illiterate masses in the middle ages. The balance between symbol and reality is so nicely maintained in the worship of the Roman Church that even a good Catholic is embarrassed to explain where one ceases and the other remains. If we remember that most of the Protestant sects, and especially the Episcopal Church, are simply less extreme forms of the symbolic, one-man system of worship, we can understand why a man of the twentieth century finds himself hampered in expressing his worship in twelfth century phraseology. A great deal of water has flowed through the mill since the mediæval church councils undertook to decide upon a universal creed and form of worship. A man who knows what Jesus' practice was, and who has twenty centuries of Christian knowledge within his head, is apt to feel his heart repulsed by the service of many of our churches. Such a man is generally above all characterized by his honesty, his sincerity. The expression of his worship by proxy strikes him as being a sham. He wants a genuine worship into which he can fully enter, or none at all. He is in addition apt to be highly cultivated, with æsthetic and artistic tastes, hence quick to criticise any service which is not perfectly executed. How often such a man can be heard to exclaim against those services to which people of fashion in our cities flock once a week. The comparatively small amount of spiritual nutriment contained in these spectacular services revolts him and drives him back to his own study and meditation. For, after all, is there not something uplifting, something enabling, in this constant personal search for some new manifestation of the truth, whether it be in the written word or in the handiwork of nature? Is it any wonder that many a scientist, many a student of the world's best books, finds more virile nutriment, more spiritual aid at his laboratory table, or on his library shelves, than he does in the perfunctory services of a minister whose superior in intellect he well knows himself to be? If you ask such a man what his attitude is toward his family church, he will likely say: "I used to go, but the choir has run down hill very much, and they have got a young man there now about whom the ladies are very enthusiastic, but he is not my style." Or perchance he blames his coolness on some poor old rector, whose inspiration has run out long since, and who has got in the habit of dispensing the same spiritual nourishment week by week to a congregation whose demands are not very exacting.

To sum it up, we should find that the majority of professional men who stay from public worship do so, not because they have lost their faith and have no sympathy with worship, but because they feel sincerely that it is a waste of time for them to go to the church which they once attended regularly. They are often busy men, used to counting the minutes, and they are unwilling to spend a couple of hours at a service from which they can only return to find fault.

If I have ventured to speak at some length of this class of persons, it is because I know a goodly number who belong to it, and because I feel that they have much reason on their side. The class is already a very numerous one in our city communities, and will surely become more so, as higher education develops and becomes more generally diffused. There is just one consideration which is an encouraging fact, and which is in line with what I said about the remedy for selfishness being found in a constant solicitude for the welfare of those committed to our charge. It is this: presidents, deans and in general those instructors who come most intimately into touch with the student body as counsellors and as friends, are almost without exception found to be in their seats at public worship. I believe they are thus found faithful, not in order that they may give a decent example to those who look up to them, but because they sincerely believe in the availing help of public worship in the development of the young Christian character. Their attitude on this matter suggests, what I take to be the truth, that a more personal contact with one's students goes far to warm that coolness toward public worship which is so apt to develop in the individual scholar who tries to live to himself alone.

If I have chosen to touch upon this phenomenon in the intellectual life of our day, it is because it has seemed to me for some time that as Friends there is a very great opportunity for our beliefs and practices to appeal to this class of intellectually-estranged Christians. It is certain that neither high church terms nor revival methods will stir them. They are impervious to any of the externals of religion. It must be the appeal of simplicity and of genuineness that is to touch them. The simplicity of our creed, the sincerity of our worship is in itself a great charm to men who want for themselves the genuine expression of religion, or nothing at all. In an ideal Friends' meeting there is very little for the most cultivated mind to criticise, if only the throbbing of spiritual life is communicated to all present. We are all aware of the truth that in a Friends' meeting, each one present is blessed in proportion to his surrender of self to the leadings of the divine Spirit. In plainer terms, our spiritual profit depend upon the spiritual contribution that we have put into this hour of worship. Nevertheless, it is undeniable that the first time a stranger visits a Friends' meeting he feels himself to be a spectator, waiting to be led by the spoken word. This attitude continues until by frequent attendance he has penetrated the spirit in which the meeting is held, and is himself penetrated by it. In the matter of vocal expression, our members have a great advantage. The stranger at once feels, upon seeing a Friend arise, that here is no professional speaker upon religious topics, but a simple citizen in the commonwealth of faith.

Hostile criticism is paralyzed. No forms, no dress, no phraseology sets the speaker apart from the listener. The ministry is unpaid, sincere, voluntary, and though often crude, yet it is heartfelt.

The Friends' meeting is a form of worship which may be well adapted to the poor and humble of spirit whose faith is their main asset. But I believe that if Friends allow the light of their fundamental principles to shine forth in blameless lives, that their meetings will attract in the future considerable numbers of just that class of highly-educated men who crave simplicity and sincerity. Our personal devotion to uprightness and truth in the daily walk of life will count for much in extending the influence of our Society over those who own to no other influence. But an intelligent, God-inspired ministry will be necessary to satisfy the unexpressed yearnings of those who from afar are looking for an occasion to worship in spirit and in truth. We are told that God seeketh such to worship Him. And who is more able to render such acceptable worship than the man who has made the highest use of the intellectual talents bestowed upon him and then turns towards their Giver with a child-like desire to share with the still better and more ineffable joys of spiritual communion? Every mature man knows that his own philosophy will not comfort him in the storm and stress of life's crises. Such men, in spite of their stand-off attitude, are ready to join in a service which jars upon no personal prejudice, and which rings true to their souls. Let us as Friends remember our duty to such as have been described in this paper, and see to it that our Quakerism reposes upon the essentials, not upon the idiosyncrasies, and that it expresses itself in terms intelligible to the modern world of thought. Our simplicity and our modesty will then be something more than an end in themselves. They will be a guarantee of a larger-mindedness.

LEARNING OBEDIENCE. — Henry Havelock attributed much of his success in his line of life to the training which he received from his father and mother. On one occasion his father told his son to meet him on London Bridge at noon; but he forgot all about the appointment, and when he got home in the evening, was surprised to find the lad was not there.

"Where is Henry?" he asked his wife.

She replied that the boy had gone to meet his father early in the day and had not been back yet.

"Why," said the father "he must be waiting for me on London Bridge! I promised to meet him there at 12 o'clock. I told him to wait for me if I was not there at that hour, but I forgot all about it."

It was now late in the evening. The father at once put his overcoat on to go in search of the lad. He lived a long way from London, and it was past midnight when he reached the bridge.

Sure enough there stood the brave boy, shivering with the cold. He would not move away, although cold and tired, because his father's last words on parting had been, "Wait there for me, my boy, till I come."

To "Pray without ceasing," is habitually to refer everything to the will of God.

Science and Industry.

HOW TO EDUCATE FARM BOYS.—One of the Western agricultural colleges sends out this question: "To what studies would you advise a young man from the country to give special attention in his college course, if he desires to go back to the farm?" Agriculture has come to the front with remarkable strides, and is assuming its place once more at the head of the industries. Such a question as the above is pertinent to the age. It is no longer possible to farm in a general way, without special knowledge of that branch which is to be pursued. No industry is more specialized or will be hereafter more specialized than that of farming. There will be dairymen, pomologist, truck gardeners, and others engaged with apiaries, and others with small fruit-growing. While these departments will overlap each other, yet each one will require very special training for success, under the laws of competition.

This does not mean that intensive farming has not come in to displace extensive farming, while the future farm will grow a large number of crops rather than be devoted to one or two. Besides its special hobby the new farm is certain to divide its efforts between half a dozen crops or more. In other words, the farmer will not have all his eggs in one basket. There will be less of one sort raised, so that the loss of a single crop by drought, or a failure to realize because of a glutted market, will still leave the farmer in good shape for the year. In fact, a specific knowledge of one department of culture, as, for instance, of small fruit growing, will require and involve special knowledge of bees. There will be fewer bankrupts on wheat, or on corn, or on potatoes, or on strawberries.

The young man who proposes to go back to the farm from his college training will have to consider, therefore, not only his specific work, but in a general way he must understand correlated sciences. A thorough knowledge of entomology must enter into his curriculum, whether he devote himself to cereal to fruit, or to truck gardening. Every farmer must know his friends from his enemies among bugs or beetles, or he will surely be whipped from the field. It will be an unpeakable blunder if he be allowed to go through a large course and come out with a very general and loose knowledge about his chief rivals. It is a recognized fact that these minute creatures are the real competitors with human beings for the possession of the land and the crops. It has been said that not a plant exists without an insect enemy. This is not quite true, for they are no more the enemies of the plants they infest than we are. Many of them are beneficent associates of vegetable growth and contribute to the health and the wealth of the trees they inhabit. It is man's business to find out which of these insects he can compel to co-operate with him in fruit or grain production, and which of them are inhospitable to his purposes. The farm boy who leaves college without entomology will be left behind in the race.

It is equally important that the student who is preparing himself for farm work shall enter into a very intimate acquaintance with his life. We are just beginning to grasp the fact that the farmer has no ally to compare with se friends on the wing. Assent to this fact strongly as you may, it will be a long while before it is so fully felt that our rural population will have entered into a systematic scheme for making the birds joyously at home on the farm. One of our ablest ornithologists writes that without the birds human beings could not possibly sustain life. However this may be, we are certainly dependent in orchard, garden and upon the robin and his companions, more than upon all other appliances, our battle with the insects. We have yet to learn how to count them into our families, to make our homesteads their safe and delightful resort. Yet while we believe in special studies and industrialism for the farm boy—it is, for specific studies directly fitting him in his specific work—we are very far from believing that he will be well equipped for his work unless his curriculum is broadened to take in more or less of what are called humanitarian studies. He should certainly be a good student of American history and of social economics. The time is now at hand when the farmer must and will emancipate himself from the leadership of professional politicians. Independent voters increase in number and influence. We are moving back to the day when our Presidents and Governors were selected from rural life, as were Washington and Jefferson.

Bear in mind, however, that there is less danger of isolated thinking and intellectual re-tracking in agriculture than in any other of the pursuits. No other industry so reaches toward collateral science and arts, and readily co-laborers with them. To study agriculture is, in fact, to study nearly every modern science—geology, geography, entomology, botany, chemistry. The farmer must also comprehend the laws of supply and demand. In fact, the educated young man, the wisely educated young man, we mean, will go back to the farm from his college training a statesman. If our diagnosis of the situation is anywhere near correct, the young man from the country will carry back to the farm, from his college course, a very distinctive, but fully as good an education as that which is taken by a lawyer or by the minister into professional life.

We look to see the time, and not so far away, when no single class of men will be so thoroughly, yet specifically, educated as farmers. A great deal may be eliminated from the present college curriculum. Agricultural colleges cannot be loaded down with complex courses in philology, pedagogics, psychology and ancient languages. Physics, however, will place with biology. Perhaps we have not answered the question of our interlocutor as fully as we might, yet it is certain that the young man is going to be made after a different ideal than that which has heretofore ruled in collegiate life; nor have we the slightest doubt that education simply to make gentlemen will gradually be eliminated in favor of an education that will glorify work and express the full co-operation of the hands with the brain.

The holiest of all holidays are those kept by ourselves in silence and apart; The secret anniversaries of the heart, When the full river of feeling overflows.

—Longfellow.

Items Concerning the Society.

We are in receipt of a card from Canada, "In Loving Memory of Margaret Jane Jones, of Bloomfield, who passed away on the seventh of Eighth Month, 1904, aged seventy-three years." This precious Friend will be sadly missed.

The recently established Lansdowne Monthly Meeting (Penna.) has, with the concurrence of Concord Quarterly Meeting of Ministers and Elders, appointed two Friends to the station of elder, and thereby completed its organization. It has now a membership of about ninety persons, besides which families and individuals, numbering in all between twenty and thirty Friends, reside in Lansdowne, whose membership has not yet been transferred to the meeting. An addition is being built to the school-house on the meeting-house premises, at a cost of about three thousand dollars, to meet a pressing demand for admission. It is expected to be ready for use at the re-opening of the school next month.

BUELL'S LIFE OF PENN.—Amelia M. Gummere, of Haverford, has written as follows in the Philadelphia Public Ledger of 9th instant concerning Buell's Life of Penn as inaccurate and misleading:

Some of us have been waiting patiently for an adequate review of the recent "biography" of William Penn, by A. C. Duell, which shall express the sentiments felt by the average cultivated person upon its perusal. The Literary Digest, the New York Times Book Review and the Philadelphia Press have all had more or less favorable notices of a book which, posing as history, and accepted as authoritative by those unfamiliar with the facts, can easily do an infinite amount of harm. The historical scholars of the country have already given it its proper place among the catch-penny books of temporary fame and no value; but for the average reader and for young people this so-called biography should be at once condemned.

The book professes to be written for "popular information"—save the mark! One review even states that Colonel Buell presents "all that is known" of Penn! Even if one could forgive the cheap, "smart Alec" tone of the book, which at once places it upon another shelf than that designed for literature, its hopeless inaccuracy and total want of the historic sense make one bewail this sort of thing passing as history. We gather from his reference to the "good Book," by which he means the Bible, that Colonel Buell's understanding of any deep religious movement, whether led by Luther, Calvin, Wesley or Fox, would necessarily be slight, since it is never the scholar who fails to recognize the importance of such movements, or who would adopt the phraseology of the bodacious rascal.

Pennsylvania history can no more be written without some sympathy for religious convictions than can that of New England, or Holland, or Switzerland. It is impossible to write a "political biography" of William Penn. His acts were, from the beginning of his "holy experiment," the result of his religious convictions, and if Morley's great biography of W. E. Gladstone did not attempt to separate the man's mind into two divisions, still less can it be done with Penn. Whatever may be the world's final verdict as to Quaker government in Pennsylvania, and however much the Quakers may have been idealists, no one would dare to say of Penn that he "might be a Quaker to-day and a statesman to-morrow, (but) he could never be both the same day." (P. 96.)

No one claims for George Fox the original discovery of his doctrine. Least of all, does the sane historian attribute it to Saltmarsh! "When water comes from the skies there is no need of piping it to Fox from Saltmarsh as its source." Unfortunately, too, Fox was not the scholar that Colonel Buell would try to make out that the "yoke" became. He did not "master Greek and Latin in the first three years of his ministry," nor could he write "Hebrew with more facility than the average scholar of the universities." Those of us who have struggled to decipher Fox's manuscripts know to our sorrow that he never boasted such attainments, nor, after he began his wonderful ministry, had he time for their acquirement.

There is both vulgarity, innuendo and false statement in saying that Quaker marriage was like "the cognate ceremony among the North American Indians of primitive times, or of the Mormons of Navoo, according to the gospel of Joseph Smith." (P. 47.) The Quaker ceremony "was exactly the Mormon ceremony of Navoo and Deseret, alike for wives and concubines; and it differed from aboriginal rites only in the fact that the Indians did not keep records in books." (P. 48.) "There was not much spiritual, or moral, or legal difference between the George Foxism of the seventeenth century and the Joseph Smithism of the nineteenth." (P. 64.) Colonel Buell cannot be better answered than by referring him to the exhaustive and scholarly work of Professor Howard, of Chicago, "A History of Matrimonial Institutions," which has been published within the past few weeks.

In his reference to the Keith controversy Colonel Buell is equally unjust to the Quakers and to Keith. "That," he says, "Keith could jump from such a platform (of Antinomianism) to an Episcopal pulpit argues that he was an adventurer without character or principle, faith or fidelity of any kind."

Whatever criticism, moreover, may be made of certain small details of Quaker Indian policy, no one with any knowledge of the facts can question the humane treatment of the aborigines by the Quakers, whose record shows none of the dark shadows that dull the page of New England history. Bancroft could say that Penn "did not despair of humanity, and, though all history and experience denied the sovereignty of the people, he cared to cherish the nobler idea of man's capacity for self-government." We regret that Penn's "holy experiment" should have at the hands of historical illibusters such treatment as it has suffered in the present case.

Notes in General.

"Wife-beating," says the N. Bedford Standard, "is a brutal practice; but there is considerable reason to believe that the most poignant brand of unhappiness is caused by more subtle means than a lash wielded by a strong arm."

Edward Robie, who for sixty years has been pastor, and the only pastor of the Congregational Church in Greenland, N. H., is spending his vacation in Cambridge, attending, at the age of eighty-three, the Summer School of Divinity.

THE RAGE FOR RISKS.—"There still exists, we are sorry to believe," says Leslie's Weekly, "a considerable fraction of people, even in this enlightened land, who are but little above the level of the Romans of ancient days in their taste for vulgar and brutal shows."

Since the organization of a Y. M. C. A. at Treadwell Island, Alaska, a year ago the saloons and gambling places have lost their business. Two hundred men on the payroll of the mining company have become members of the association, and the jail has only one or two occupants.

JAPANESE CHRISTIANS AND THE WAR.—Christianity has an influence and a position in Japan vastly disproportionate to the number of Japanese who adhere to the several denominations of Christians in that country. It is not so long since the Christian missionary to Japan literally courted martyrdom, but that has all been changed, and no non-Christian country in the world to-day presents such a fair and, indeed, friendly field for Christian missionary endeavor as the Island Empire. So well recognized is this that the cry raised for Russia that she is a Christian at war with a Pagan nation appears to have fallen most decidedly flat. The people of the civilized world seem to have sensed the actual state of affairs, and the attempt to paint Japan as aggressively Pagan and anti-Christian has failed.

As a matter of fact Japanese Paganism seems at present to be in a perfectly passive phase of its existence. It is still adhered to by the vast majority of the people, and must possess a vast influence in many ways, yet this influence does not appear to be exerted, at least actively, against Christianity. Indeed, many members of the various Christian bodies occupy leading positions in the State. Several eminent Protestant missionaries and their converts are said to be very close to the imperial household, and the number of Christians who have seats in Japan's Parliament shows a favorable disproportion to the number of Christians altogether in the country. The Christian heaven is found in all departments of the State service, and at least two of Japan's battleships are commanded by officers professing Christianity.

There seems little reason to doubt that Japanese Christians, whether Catholic or Protestant, are thoroughly loyal to their native land. They do not look upon themselves as being citizens of non-Christian countries, but take pride in being part and parcel of a nation whose manifest destiny is evidently to be great.—Boston Transcript.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—Judge Alton B. Parker has lately been officially notified of his nomination to the Presidency by the Democratic Convention. In an address upon the occasion he stated his views upon several subjects of public interest, among which are the following: "If we would have our government continue during the ages to come, for the benefit of those who shall succeed us, we must ever be on our guard against the danger of usurpation of that authority which resides in the whole people, whether the usurpation be by officials, representing one of the three great departments of government, or by a body of men acting without a commission from the people.

"The present tariff law is unjust in its operation, excessive in many of its rates and so framed in particular instances as to exact inordinate profits from the people.

"The combinations, popularly called trusts, which aim to monopolize trade in the necessary articles of life, as well as in those things that are employed upon the farm, in the factory and in many other fields of industry, have been encouraged and stimulated by excessive tariff duties.

"It is difficult to understand how any citizen of the United States, much less a descendant of Revolutionary stock, can tolerate the thought of permanently denying the right of self-government to the people.

"I protest against the feeling, now far too prevalent, that by reason of the commanding position we have assumed in the world, we must take part in the disputes and broils of foreign countries, and that because we have grown great we should intervene in every important question that arises in the necessary world. I also protest against the erection of any such military establishments as would be required to maintain the country in that attitude. We should confine our international activities solely to matters in which the rights of the country or of our citizens are directly involved."

A despatch of the 13th from Rochester, N. Y., says: A grand display of the fireworks was seen this evening at the Weston Wetherby Observatory. One hundred and fifty-four were counted in less than three hours. Similar observations are reported from Washington, D. C. At Meadowville, Pa., a meteor exploded with such force as to produce a jarring effect 20 miles distant.

The relations of the United States with Turkey have been the subject of meetings of the Cabinet officials in Washington. It is stated that the matters in controversy include the grant to American educational, charitable and religious institutions of the same rights, privileges and immunities that have been or may be granted to similar institutions of other countries; permission to American scientists to make excavations; emigration of wives and children of naturalized American citizens of Ottoman origin, and a number of prohibitions that have arisen within the last twelve months.

Arrangements are being made by the Department of Agriculture for testing the healthfulness of meats which have been kept in cold storage for many days or weeks.

It is said that a quarter of beef will furnish steaks at the beginning of the month and then be kept until thirty or sixty days, or a year later and then tried. Expert chemists will pass on every morsel of food consumed by the class of twelve young men who are to be the subjects of the experiments. Dr. Geddings, of the Public Health Service, will be in attendance on the class from day to day. Experts in blood examinations will be employed and chemical analysis will be applied to every portion of the foods used, and the results given to the young men. This involves an amount of work which is of the greatest importance in the determination of results.

The first telegraphic message from Nome, Alaska, was received at Seattle on the 9th instant. The total distance traversed was about 3500 miles, 107 miles of which was by telegraph.

A company of 500 Porto Rican school teachers has lately arrived in this country, having been brought by government vessels for a visit of several weeks. It is believed that a trip of this kind will greatly assist in the development of educational interests in Porto Rico.

FOURTEEN.—Numerous conflicts between the Japanese and Russians in the vicinity of Port Arthur have taken place. The total number of Japanese killed and wounded from Third Month 28th to Eighth Month 1st is stated officially to have been about 12,065. Several Russian war vessels have been sunk or disabled. Of eighteen effective battleships and cruisers which Russia had at the beginning of the war, only four remain. It is stated, only four, one or more of which are partly disabled.

Two Japanese war vessels entered the harbor of Chifu, attacked the Russian destroyer Ryschiteini and captured and carried her off a prize. This action of the Japanese naval officers is regarded at the State Department at Washington as one that is certain to lead to complications of a serious character, unless there shall be prompt condemnation of it by Japan, and full satisfaction given China for the violation of its sovereignty.

The protest of Great Britain to Russia in the case of the British steamship Knight Commander, desies the right to destroy a neutral ship in advance of the judgment of a court of law, and is not in conformity with the doctrine that it was optional for a belligerent to decide on what articles should be dealt with as contraband, regardless of well-established rights and usages, and had informed Russia that it refused to consider itself bound to regard as valid the decision of any prize court violating these rights, or which in any act of conformity with recognized principles of international law.

A despatch from Brussels states that the Congo Free State has decided to have an inquiry made into the condition of the natives by a special commission consisting of three persons, who will be particularly charged to inquire into the condition of the natives living in the rubber and ivory regions. It is reported that a number of whom by the whites serious charges have lately been made by missionaries. The investigation is to be in public, and foreign governments and philanthropic associations are to be allowed to have delegates present at all the sittings of the commission.

The census of 1901 shows that the population of Scotland is 4,458,775. It is reported that of Ireland, which is given as 4,458,775. In 1841 the population of Ireland it is stated was three-fold that of Scotland. Great Britain and Ireland have together a population of 41,458,721. That of the British Empire is about 400,000,000.

In 1901 its area was nearly 12,000,000 square miles, or over 100 times that of the island of Great Britain.

The British Government has announced that Germany, Austria and Italy, as well as Russia, had given their assent to the Egyptian clauses of the Anglo-French agreement, and had undertaken not to obstruct British action in Egypt in asking that a limit of time shall be fixed for the British occupation or in any other manner. Great Britain, in return, had given assurances that they would receive the most favored national treatment for their commerce for thirty years, and had promised to respect their treaty rights in Egypt and to give their schools the same liberties as heretofore, and to allow the officials of those nationalities in the Egyptian service the same advantage as they enjoyed in their own countries.

A despatch of the 7th inst. from New Zealand says: The heaviest earthquake which New Zealand has experienced in many years occurred this morning. Several public buildings were seriously damaged and some private buildings suffered heavy losses.

The House of Representatives of Australia has approved of a bill for the purchase of the country at Dalgety, which is 296 miles south of Sydney, New South Wales, and is thirty-two miles from the nearest railroad station. The population is under 300.

It is announced by a German publication that there are 520,955 miles of railway in the world. The North American continent has 233,185 miles. Europe follows with 183,907. South America has only 28,822; Asia, 44,88 Africa, 14,554; Australia, 16,038. The mileage of United States alone is about 297,000, or 40 per cent. of the entire railroad mileage of the world.

An arbitration convention between Sweden and Norway and Great Britain was signed at Stockholm on the 12th inst.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

Wm. L. Bailey, agent, Pa., $6 for Edward I Hall, Roland Smedley and M. Eleanor Magill John E. Darnell, N. J.; Elizabeth D. Meredith W. W. Downing, Pa.; Rachel F. Parker, Pa.; W. C. Churchill, Wyo. Scotia S. A. Arrar, Pa. Wm. L. Meloney, Pa.; James C. Chappell, N. J. and $1 for Margaret S. Ward; Miriam L. Va Calif.; H. B. Abbott for Ruth S. Abbott, Phila Dulau & Co., England; William L. Bailey, agent, Pa., $12 for Nathan Cope, Hannah F. Fell, Susan F. Sharpless, Wm. T. Sharpless, M. D., Thomas Sharpless and Isaac Sharpless, J. A. Holloway agent, $10 for Thomas H. Conroy, Mary French, A. G. Holloway, George W. Stratton at Charles Stratton; John Stamp Keeling, Ireland to s.; Jack Cook, Ia.; M. A. Forsythe, Pa.; Clayton Haines, N. J.; Deborah L. Mendenthal, Pa.; M. J. Josiah A. Phila.; Joseph S. Middel Hannah Elmour, Ashley Johnson and Nancy Hadley; Milton Stanton, agent, Ind., $16 Richard S. Ashton, Albert Maxwell, Arthur Maxwell, Edward Maxwell, Edmund Osborn Addison Hadley, Joel Newlin and Phineas Pickett Thomas H. W. Collier, Pa.; Joseph S. Middel Wm. L. Bailey, agent, Pa.; Elizabeth Darnell, N. J.; Nathaniel B. Jones, N. J.; Anne Lippincott, G'n.; J. W. Garwood, agent, for Ge Standing, Ia.; Edwin A. Hoopes, Pa.; Benjamin Vail, Pa.; Annie J. Jones, Del.; William Marti M. D., Pa.; John W. Hilyard, N. J.; John Marsh Gest, Pa.; Susan Pearson, Pa.

Remittances received for Third-day moon will appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

WANTED, by Ninth Month 21st Friend for matron the Barclay Home, West Chester, Pa. Apply at once ANNIE J. HAYES, or ANNE T. ELBRIDGE, West Chester, Pa.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., Phila. During the Seventh and Eighth Months the Library is open on Fifth-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

The Friends' City Home can accommodate a fr young men, who may propose to spend the summer month in the city. Address Mary T. Wildman, 1623 Summ Street.

Thos. H. Whitson, with a minute of Birmingham Month Meeting to appoint meetings and visit public institute within the limits of Concord Quarterly Meeting, has a pointed a public meeting for worship to be held in Friends Meeting-house, Lansdowne, Penna., on First-day evening Eighth Month 21st, at 7.30 o'clock.

DIED, at the home of her son, George Foster R. I., on the eleven day of Fifth Month, 1904, ELIZA HOOPER BROWN, wife of Christopher Browning, aged eighty-six years one month and twenty-six days. She was all her life member of South Kingston Monthly Meeting of Friend R. I., and was a firm believer in the principles and testimonies of our religious Society. A fall, sixteen months before her death, fractured a leg, causing much suffering which was borne with great fortitude. Her life was of self-sacrifice, and her family feel that their loss was her eternal gain.

—, on the first of Sixth Month, 1904, after a brilliant illness, at his home, near Barnesville, Belmont County Ohio, DAVID EGGERTSON, in the eighty-seventh year of his age, an extensive member of the Barnesville Particular Association Monthly Meetings of Friends. We believe was an abiding concern of this dear Friend, that he might diligently maintain that careful watch over his own spirit so forcibly enjoined by our Divine Master. That I Lord, when he came, found him so, we may not doubt.

—, near Marlton, N. J., on Eighth Month 6th, 190 ANNA COOPER, in the sixty-seventh year of her age, member of the Marlton Monthly Meeting and Haddonfield Monthly Meetings of Friends, New Jersey.

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS
No. 42 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 27, 1904.

No. 7.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

South from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 42.)

In the year 1804, John Pennock, a Friend London Grove Monthly Meeting, Chester County, Penna., a blacksmith, spent several months very acceptably to the Committee in instructing some of the Indians in the smith's business on the Allegheny Reservation.

In the Fifth Month, 1805, Benjamin Cope, residing near West Chester, Pennsylvania, with wife Rachel Cope, and Hannah Jackson, a wife of New Garden Monthly Meeting, Pennsylvania, left their homes under an apprehension of duty to assist in carrying out the conduct of the Yearly Meeting, and to reside for the time at Tunesassa.

With a view of spreading information respecting their labors, the Committee published in 1805 an edition of five thousand copies of a pamphlet of over forty pages, entitled "An Account of the Proceedings of the Committee Appointed in the Year 1795 by the Yearly Meeting of Friends, etc., for promoting the improvement and gradual civilization of the Indian Natives." In a minute made on this occasion it was desired that subscriptions should be encouraged in the Quarterly and Monthly Meetings in aid of the funds under the control of the Committee.

The efforts of Friends who resided at Tunesassa were not confined to instructing the men in better methods of cultivating their grounds and raising crops, as a means of obtaining a livelihood, instead of depending upon the chase; they were also directed towards helping the men in making their homes more comfortable, assisting them in the preparation of articles made of flax or wool to take the place of skins of animals for clothing, bedding, etc., and in instructing them in the manufacture and use of soap. The condition in which many of the natives were then living is thus described by John Phillips, who with Isaac Bonsall and Halliday Jackson, visited them in the Ninth Month, 1806:

"Many of their houses have earthen floors and some boards along each side, with some deer skins spread over them, which serve for beds and seats to sit on. When they eat they set a dirty looking bowl made of bark in the middle of the floor; each one comes and cuts a piece and takes it in his hands and sits down again with pigs and dogs (of which they have abundance) running about the floor. These eat up the bones or scraps which are thrown down on the floor, by which means the house is kept cleaner. I think I scarcely saw a table." The same Friend remarks: "I find that there has been about sixty new houses built further up the river (by Indians) within three years past, many of them two stories high, and neatly hewed. Here and there as we traveled about we saw and were in divers of their old bark cabins. It is wonderful to think how anybody could live in them through the winter without being frozen."

It may scarcely be necessary to add that it is believed not a single bark cabin or house with an earthen floor could have been found on the Allegheny Reservation within many years past.

Although there was much room for improvement among the Indians in many respects, yet the Committee was often much encouraged by the results which had followed the prosecution of the religious concern of the Yearly Meeting towards these Indians.

On writing to the Friends at Tunesassa Ninth Month 20th, 1805, the Committee says:—"The labors in which we have been mutually engaged have been owned in a remarkable manner, no doubt the circumspect walking of those resident among the Indians has been a means of drawing down a blessing."

Another cause of encouragement at this time was the decided stand which had been taken for some years by the Indians against the use of intoxicating drinks. One of the Friends at Tunesassa writing Fourth Month 25th, 1806, states: "The Indians belonging to this river continue opposed to the use of spirituous liquors. Hardly a general council without some animadversions on its baneful effects; nothing has excited more wonder amongst the surrounding white people than to find these Indians entirely refuse liquor when offered to them. The Indians tell us when the whites urge them to drink whiskey, they ask for bread or provisions in its place."

In 1806 the destitute situation of some of the Shawnee Indians residing near the western boundary of Ohio was brought to the view of the Committee by John Simpson, who had recently been engaged in a visit to Friends in that State, its sympathy was excited, and it was concluded to forward to them one hundred blankets and twenty-four axes, and to make further inquiry respecting them. In Ninth Month 15th, 1808, information was received that these Indians had removed their residence to a great distance from the settled parts of the country, and that the interference of the Committee did not appear necessary.

The Indians residing on the Cattaraugus Reservation had at different times desired the assistance of Friends, in compliance with which some of the Friends living near the Allegheny Reservation occasionally visited them, as also members of the Committee. The distance, however (about forty miles), rendered it difficult to make frequent visits, and it was believed that if some Friends were willing to reside near the Cattaraugus Indians, their labors would be likely to be more effective.

These considerations received the attention of the Committee at different times, and resulted, in 1808, in the purchase of a tract of land adjoining their reservation, containing upwards of five hundred acres on the Clear Creek, a tributary of the Cattaraugus. It was bought of the Holland Land Co. through their agent Joseph Ellicott, then residing at Batavia, N. Y., at a cost of $1.56 per acre. This purchase was not made until the approbation of the Indians had been obtained, in a council held with them on the subject. The chiefs appeared well satisfied with the prospect, but in order to obtain a more general sentiment, stated they would council with the warriors and women, which was done, and Friends were informed that they were at liberty to purchase land anywhere adjoining their reservation, which they thought would suit them, and that it was believed there was not a man or woman belonging to their village, but was pleased with the prospect, and hoped it might be a means of preventing bad white people from imposing on them, etc.

A beginning was made during the summer of this year in clearing this tract and erecting a house for the accommodation of those who might reside there, and on the fourteenth of Sixth Month, 1809, Benjamin Cope, Jacob Taylor, Stephen Twining and Hannah Jackson addressed a letter to the Committee mentioning their arrival at Cattaraugus; and that Thomas Dutton, his wife Sarah, Joel Swain, Jonathan Thomas, and Agnes Cadwallader remained at Tunesassa.

In this year Thomas Stewardson, William Allinson, John Brown and Amos Lee, visited the two settlements, and held councils with the Indians at both places. In one of these, two subjects of much importance to their welfare, were thus alluded to:

"Brothers:—We are aware that it hath been a custom among your Nation for husbands and wives to separate when one is dissatisfied with the other; and for the husband to take another wife, and the wife another husband. We desire you to consider this subject for we believe it is displeasing to the Great Spirit for a man to put away his wife, or wife her husband, in practice often leaves your children in poverty and distress.

"Brothers:—We also desire you to think very seriously indeed before you condemn and kill any for supposing them guilty of witchcraft. We have an account that above an hundred years since such a practice prevailed in one neighborhood among white people, and before it was put a stop to, some of those who had been judges of others were themselves charged with the same offences and executed." In reply Complanter, one of their principal chiefs, said:

"Brothers:—We are very sensible that it is displeasing to the Great Spirit for husbands and wives to separate, and am very happy that you have now mentioned it when so many of our young warriors are present, who have the opportunity of hearing, and I hope they will attend to the good counsel you have given."

At this time there were probably none of these Indians who made a profession of Christianity, and it is therefore well worthy of observation as a testimony to the universality of the operation of Divine Grace in the heart, that a principal chief, speaking on behalf of his people, could make the above acknowledgment.

In reply to the observations made respecting witchcraft, he said:

"Brothers:—I hope we shall be careful in future how we take the lives of any for witchcraft, without being sure that they are guilty, and he thought it very difficult to prove it."

(To be continued.)

PENN ON SPIRITUAL LIBERTY.—Story and Wilkinson had claimed liberty for pronounced individualism under the plea of what Buell calls, "The absolute autocracy of the Inward Light." William Penn with true Christian statesmanship dwells on the inherent right of the Christian Church to maintain good order and discipline in defence of the Church from the anarchy of individual caprice. He shows how liberty is often "little understood and frequently abused." He defends the faithful and the simple-hearted, and reproves the arrogant and high-minded. "The root of rantism is to assert that nothing is a duty incumbent upon thee but what thou art persuaded is thy duty" irrespective of the united judgment of the community. "Thou art seriously to consider why thou art ignorant." It cannot be the fault of God, "it must needs be in thyself." "By means of opposing the Spirit in thyself to the Spirit in others thou art working for disunity, under the name of liberty." Diversity of gifts is right, says William Penn, "but there cannot be a falser reasoning than to conclude discord from diversity, contrariety from variety." God is not the God of confusion but of order. Seldom have we had a finer syllogism than William Penn utters when he adds, A doctrine may be true, but our application of it false. The experiences of early Friends gave them an amount of large-hearted common-sense that we should do well to cultivate in the church government of our own day.—London Friend.

OUR best rule is, to give God the same place in our hearts that he holds in the universe.—Payson.

THERE are many false ambitions. Men think they are climbing upward, when in reality they are creeping downward.

Sarah Jones.

Selected.

Sarah Jones, wife of George Jones, of Stockport, in Cheshire, England, was born in the borough of Southwark the fifteenth of the Third Month, 1768, and died at the age of forty-three. Her parents, James and Sarah Hargrave, were members of our religious Society. * When about fourteen years of age her mind was in a remarkable degree favored with a gracious manifestation of the light of Christ; and by following its discoveries, experienced true peace, by which she was encouraged to seek after a closer communion with the Lord. As she advanced in years, she was strengthened increasingly to give up her natural will, and to walk in the path of Christian simplicity and self-denial; and as her dependence continued to be placed on the Almighty for preservation and support, she attained to a good degree of stability in the Truth.

Her humble circumspect life and conversation, preached loudly to those in early life; and it tended not only to the encouragement of such as had a birth-right in our Society, but also of others who were favorably impressed with our religious principles; some of whom have thankfully acknowledged that her example had an animating effect on their minds. After her marriage, in the year 1793, she further manifested her love to the cause of religion, in many ways. She was exemplary in a diligent attendance of our meetings for worship and discipline and in making way for the attendance of those under her care. She frequently went herself, when in a poor state of health; and her reverent, patient waiting therein, as well as in opportunities of retirement at home, was very instructive. Through a watchful care to maintain the Christian warfare, and by submission to the necessary baptisms of spirit, she was fitted and became willing, though naturally of a diffident disposition, to support the good order and discipline of our Society; and her services in her own Monthly and Quarterly Meetings were very acceptable to her friends. For many years she experienced at times great poverty of spirit; yet she was very cautious of expressing to others what she was passing through, or of receiving consolation from them; being anxiously concerned to feel after the evidence of the love of God to her own soul, preferring this to all other enjoyments. During her last illness she was favored with resignation and Christian fortitude; and in the course of her confinement of sixteen weeks, was not heard to utter an impatient expression. At one time her husband remarked to her that he had been greatly comforted in thinking of her; in the belief that a language like the following might be applied to her: "Her secret prayers and aims-deeds are accepted by me; they are come up as a sweet memorial before me." She replied that it was encouraging to her to understand that he had thus felt, but she should be glad to feel it for herself; and though she had often been under great discouragement, yet within a day or two, she had been at times favored with a little glimmering of light, and the saying of Jonah had come feelingly before her view: "Though I am cast out of thy sight, yet will I look again towards thy holy temple." Further saying, "I do not feel any uneasiness or distress of mind, but I fear it may be for want of sensibility." The following morning on seeing her in tears he inquired if she wished to say anything to him, when she replied: "No; I have been thinking how much I favored many ways; I am afraid I shall not be thankful enough."

A few days subsequent to this, after receiving a visit, she remarked how comforting it to have Friends call and see her, and was different effect their quiet sitting together and the feelings they were sometimes favored with, had on the minds of the visited, compared with the more formal visits that she saw; observing also upon the hurtful tendency of the light conversation, which under the pretence of raising the drooping spirits of the sick often on these occasions promoted. Once more she expressed great thankfulness for many favors she enjoyed, adding that she could not always feel her mind in such a thankful state; and she had been thinking that, be it at that time favored therewith, afforded some ground to hope and trust in divine goodness and mercy. On another occasion she said, "I have at times been permitted to have a hope of eternal salvation, and I count it unspeakable favor—an unmerited mercy. Have thought for a long time past, though mourned all my days, if at last I could but have a hope, I should be very thankful."

A few weeks before her death, on retracing her early life, she spoke of the time when entered into covenant with the Almighty; of her love for faithful friends, and their knowledge of her; and alluding to one occasion when a friend in the line of ministry addressing her, had said, "If there was but a keep on the Lord's side, He would provide for her, remarking, that this had been abundantly verified and the covenant of the Almighty had been fulfilled by Him. During the evening before her death, the conflict appeared to be severe, yet those around did not apprehend she suffered so much pain as on some former occasions, she remarked how gently she had been delivered. She passed quietly away from time eternity; and her surrounding friends had comfortable persuasion, that having served Lord in her generation, she fell asleep in Jesus her Saviour.

It has been said that, in general, the parents receive the most reverence who do not deserve it; but that may well be doubted. The total sacrifice which parents make of inculcates an absorbing selfishness in the children, who take the homage and love and devotion of their parents quite as a matter of course, forgetting or omitting to render the all return which would bring comfort and joy to those whose happiness is centred in the happiness of their children. Often, through forgetfulness or procrastination, the young who are sound at heart defer too late the rendering of that affection and homage which the parents have a right to expect,

"And that which should accompany old age,
As honor, love, obedience."

—Legend.

But ever on the bleakest rock
We bid the brightest beacon glow,
And still upon the thorniest stock
The sweetest roses love to blow.

—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

BEHOLD, THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS WITHIN YOU."

Pilgrim to the Heavenly City,
 Groping wildered on thy way,
 Seek not to the outward landmark,
 List not what the blind guides say.

For long years hast thou been seeking
 Some new idol found each day;
 All that dazzled, all that glittered
 Lured thee from the truth away.

On the outward world relying Earthly treasures thou wouldst keep;
 Titled friends and lofty honors
 Lull thy higher hopes to sleep.

Thou art stored with worldly wisdom,
 All the love of books is thine,
 And within thy stately mansion
 Brightly sparkles wit and wine.

Richly droop the silken curtains
 Round those high and mirrored walls,
 And on mossy Persian carpets
 Silently thy proud step falls.

Not the gentlest winds of heaven
 Dare to roughly fan thy brow,
 Nor the morning's blessed sunbeams
 Tinge thy cheek with ruddy glow.

Yet with all these outward riches
 Has thy heart no void confessed?
 Whispering tho' each wish be granted,
 "Still, oh! still, I am not blessed."

And when thy happy, careless children
 Lure thee with their winning ways,
 Thou hast sighed in vain contrition,
 "Give me back those golden days!"

Hast thou stooped to learn this lesson
 Faithful preachers long have told:
 Thou thy kingdom hast forsaken,
 Thou hast thine own birthright sold?

Thou art heir to vast possessions
 Up! and boldly claim thine own;
 Seize thy crown that waits thy wearing,
 Leap at once into thy throne!

Look not to some cloudy mansion
 'Midst the planets far away—
 Trust not to the distant future,
 Let thy heaven begin to-day.

When the struggling soul has conquered,
 When the path lies fair and clear,
 When thou art prepared for Heaven
 Thou wilt find that Heaven is near.

—H. W.

It was reserved for Christianity to pretend to the world an ideal character, which through all the changes of eighteen centuries inspired the hearts of men with an impass-ionate love, has shown itself capable of acting on ages, nations, temperaments and conditions, and has been not only the highest pattern virtue, but the strongest incentive to its imitation; and has exercised so deep an influence that it may be truly said that the simple life of three short years of active life has more to regenerate and to soften mankind than all the disquisitions of philosophers and the exhortations of the moralists. This ideal deed being the wellspring of whatever is pure and best in the Christian life. Amid all its ups and fallings, amid all the priestcraft and persecution and fanaticism that have destroyed the church, it has preserved in the center and example of its Founder an energy principle of regeneration.— Lecky's History of European Morals."

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Vain Compliments.

I read with interest a communication by M. in THE FRIEND for Sixth Month 18th, and noticed that he avoided using the form "Wife of _____," as a lowering of the testimony of Truth.

It has not struck me hitherto, that such a form did involve this lowering; it is not inconsistent with Truth, and therefore not in itself, wrong. But perhaps M.'s remarks were intended to apply to cases where the first name or initials are known, and where the most direct and simple style would be to use such name or initials. Where these are not known, what else is to be done, but say Wife of _____?

There comes the further question, a more serious and comprehensive one. Can any community or church retain their character as spiritual worshippers, while the use of these compliments is usual among the membership?
 At first sight there seems no connection between the faith which leads men and women to seek to be so wholly open to the Divine influences as to come into the silence of all flesh, where those influences are necessarily uppermost, and the faith which makes them oddities in respect of language before their fellow men, by using styles of address to which current opinion scarcely ascribes bare civility, and which undoubtedly act more or less as barriers against free intercourse.

We are certainly not called upon to say that no one who does not dissent from the world in these particulars, can experience the blessings of spiritual worship, but that is not the question, which might be put in this way:—Will not the usual liberties of language, be found in the long run to stand in the way of that abstraction and entire uprightness of soul which is a necessary condition of spiritual worship, and of hearing the "Law" or Word of the Lord which goeth "forth out of Zion?"

We are bound to answer this question in the affirmative, if it can be shown either that the language of the world is any barrier to the free dominion of the Spirit of Christ in the same way as the plain language is a barrier to the free scope of the spirit of the world, or if it can be shown that the Master himself has chosen these things not merely for our fathers, but in our age as accompaniments of a profession of His name which shall be in all respects agreeable to His mind and will, as a standard for His church and for individuals brought into unity with the church.

Speaking from my own experience, I may say that the language of the world, is one of those things which must be given up, by those who would be led into all Truth; and it is my faith that what we call the plain language, when spoken from the basis of religious conviction, really belongs to the coming of the kingdom of God upon earth; while the language of the world does not belong to that blessed kingdom, but is more or less at variance with it, and will disappear as growth and true progress therein is witnessed.

After nearly thirty years, it is a cross to day to have to keep to the plain language at all times; but I do not know that any sacrifice affecting conduct before men has yielded more solid substantial peace, the origin of which could not be for a moment doubted.

Many years ago I was employed in an office where the senior partner, (who took in THE FRIEND) had retired from the management, and it fell to my lot to direct many, if not most of the envelopes. I felt it would be dangerous to my future course to familiarize myself with the "Mr." and "Esq." used by the firm, and I was allowed to direct in plain style while some one else made what they considered the necessary additions afterwards. A man who constantly uses Mr., Mrs. and Esq. as servant to others will surely find it difficult to bear a clear testimony himself.

It is no doubt a much greater trial to go through life with this testimony as an individual than as a member of a Society which openly incorporates it in their principles, as was the case fifty years ago in the Society of Friends.
 At the present time it would, I believe, be under the mark to say that ninety-nine per cent. of London Yearly Meeting use the ordinary language of the world, probably ninety-nine and one-half per cent. would be nearer, while in the schools belonging to that Society the plain language would be frowned down and discouraged.

This change is one thing among many others that has had a marked effect upon worship, and has paved the way for the gradual giving up of the meeting based on silence on first day evenings, which is accompanied by some signs of a similar change as regards the morning meetings.

The considerations involved in this subject are weighty, and the difficulties which may be presented to the mind are solved much better by faithfulness to all the light afforded in the different stages of Christian experience than by argument.

JOHN E. SOUTHALL.

NEWPORT, Mon., Eng.

HIS OWN MASTER.—"I am my own master!" said a lad, proudly, when a friend tried to dissuade him from something which he had on hand: "I am my own master!"

"Did you ever consider what a responsible post that is?" asked his friend.

"Responsible—is it?"

"A master must lay out the work which he wants done, and see that it is done right.
 He should try to secure the best ends by the best means. He must keep on the lookout against accidents, and watch that everything goes straight, or else he must fail."

"Well?"

"To be sure of yourself, you have your conscience to keep clear, your heart to cultivate, your temper to govern, your will to direct, and your judgment to instruct. You are master over a hard lot, and, if you don't master them, they will master you."

"That is so," said the lad.

"Now, I could undertake no such thing," said his friend. "I should fail if I did.
 Saul wanted to be his own master, and failed.
 So did Herod, and so did Judas. No man is fit for it. 'One is my Master, even Christ.'
 Work under his direction; and where He is Master, all goes right."—Selected.

One by one thy duties wait thee,
 Let thy whole heart go to each,
 Let no future dream elate thee,
 Learn thou first what these can teach.

—Adelaide A. Procter.

SECRETS.

What wealth I have in store,
It increase more and more,
In the alcove of the palace of the mind,
And the gold is rich and rare
In the treasure none may share,
Tho' you search I do not think you'll ever find.

What riches all untold,
And the jewels rare and old,
In this wondrous palace built in days of yore,
And I correspond with truth,
In the flush and bloom of youth,
And the prospect seems to brighten evermore.

'Tis not a selfish joy,
Where the gold without alloy
Is poured in untold fulness at his feet;
The mystery is great,
The patient soul must wait
Before the gladsome service is complete.

I cannot now reveal,
I must perform conceal
The sacred love of heart-songs in the night,
How the mystic scroll unrolled
And revealed me in the fold
Protected by the bastions clothed with light.

The best my heart can say,
Is to wait another day,
When things in part shall gently roll away,
And from this heart shall flow
Great secrets all aglow,
To the praise of Him who reigns for aye and aye.

—H. T. Miller.

BEAMSVILLE, Ont.

The Slough of Despond.

(Phil. iii, 13-16; Col. ii, 18, R. V.)

Despondency is an experience which can flourish only in the eclipse of hope. This remark may appear to be self-evident; but it becomes necessary to insist upon it from the fact that reputable and measurably useful persons may be victims of despondency without being aware of that blighting weakness. All persons who may have been constrained to confess to a despair of the attainment which has been inculcated by the precept and verified by the experience of the past are assuredly self-convicted of undue despondency. They must be more or less of strangers to the necessary salvation of hope. This does not necessarily imply that such persons are outwardly morose, or consciously sorrowful. But it does imply that they are more or less closely identified with "those who," as Bacon has written, "delight in giddiness, and account it bondage to fix a belief." For "hope," it must be observed is based and wholly dependent upon the possibility of progress in doctrine and practice; and progress, in any wide and social sense, implies a progressive settlement of doctrine and practice,—in other words, a progressive "oneness of mind." It is the same illuminated apostle who wrote that "our hope is in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe," and that the believers "are saved by hope," who also exhorts as the condition of true unity, that those who had "already attained?" to the assurance of faith should "walk by the same rule" whereby they had so attained, trusting that if in any thing they be differently minded, "God shall reveal even this" unto them. That "pressing forward to the mark," "in the unity of the faith unto a perfect man, the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" clearly leaves no room for a contented resting in the infantile distinction between "things essential" and "things non-essential," and for the resulting failure of Christian professors to wrestle together for the blessing of being so "agreed" as to be able to "walk together," both in their controversy with "the world, the flesh and the devil," and in a progressive testimony to "the true, the beautiful, and the good." They will be immune at once from the recklessness and giddiness which constitute "the anarchy of the ranters," and from that fear of originality which fosters "the lethargy of the canters." They will be too happy in a substantial serving, to be either giddy or despondent.

"The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge" was the chronic complaint of the church under the imperfect Mosaic dispensation. By the metaphor of sour grapes there can have been designated nothing more nor less baneful than unripe or imperfect knowledge and instruction.

The then prophesied day of deliverance from their floundering "slough of despond" was assuredly one with the still imperfectly realized "day of Christ," and of a perfected common sense of religion. That is an attainment which can only ensue upon the humble and hopeful aspiration of entire self-prostration. But not otherwise shall be fully and finally remedied the alienation of man from his fellowman, and from the gracious Creator who is ever seeking to do him good.

POCONO MANOR, Eighth Month 1st, 1904.

FOUR GOOD RULES ABOUT SPEECH.—Never say about people what you will not say to them. Apply this rule before you say anything harsh or condemnatory. Perhaps you will still feel it to be your duty to speak, but you will probably change your phraseology. In writing letters about people, it is a good thing to stop and ask, "Would I be willing to have this letter read by the person of whom I am writing?"

Never say evil of anyone of whom you can say something good. "You can't be caught, can you?" said a friend to another who was obeying this rule. "You will persist in seeing some good in everyone." There is some good in everyone, and if we have to talk about persons rather than about principles or events, let us discover the good and speak about it.

Be generous and large-hearted in your soul, and you will speak generously and nobly about others. If we simply try to reform our speech, we shall not succeed. We must first purify the fountain, and then the stream will be pure. When we are filled with love and charity, we shall talk honorably of all men.

Speak in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that is, in his spirit, as one would speak who stands in his character and represents him.

Ambassadors speak in the name of their sovereign, and they strive to say only what would be worthy of him. We do or ought to do the same. Would Christ say this? No! Then we must not say it. "He was reviled, and he reviled not again." Even provocation did not tempt him to unkindness or bitter words. We are to talk as he talked.—Selected.

Speaking to the Point.

An addition was made some years ago to the jail in Paterson, N. J., at a cost of $7000. When it was completed, the county officers and contractor celebrated the event by a banquet in the building. There were liquors in great abundance. After a number of toasts had been drunk, the gentleman presiding, a judge, proposed "the temperance cause." It was probably done because they were getting pretty drunk. — Brantram temperance man, was called on to respond and did so in the following stinging speech which some of them, perhaps, will never forget. He said:

"I thank you for this invitation, and recognize its fitness. You have assembled to celebrate the enlargement of this jail, a deed necessary by the use of strong drink in which you are so freely indulging this day. Down stairs the cells and corridors are crowded with criminals who have but chance places. A few years ago they were respectable citizens, some of them occupying as responsible positions as those now occupied by yourselves; but they commenced as you have commenced, and they continued as many of you are continuing, and to-day they are reaping the harvest in a career of crime, and paying the penalty with a period of punishment."

At this moment another bottle was opened and — Brantram said:

"I hear the popping of the corks. I listen to the merry voices, and the praises you singing to the infernal spirit of wine; there comes to me the refrain, from the prisoner's cell, who is shedding penitential tears over his folly, and accompanied by the sadder wail of anguish uttered by the broiled hearted wife, worse than widowed thro' the traffic in strong drink, which, as a justice in your courts said, 'is the great promoter of traffic licensed by your votes, sustained by the patronage you are this giving it. It is with inexpressible sadness that I discover that there can be found Passaic County so many men with heart hardened, feelings so calloused, sensibility so blunted, that in a place like this, under circumstances like these, they dare raise their lips that which depraves the citizen endangers the state. Thanking you, gentlemen, for this unexpected privilege, I take seat, fully conscious that you will never call on me under similar circumstances. The Safeguard."

DIOGENES, the old Greek philosopher, opening to pass a market place where new wares were exposed for sale, exclaimed, "fully," "How many things there are in the world of which Diogenes has no need!" "cultivate such a habit of mind would I marvelously good thing for some of us." "Is the richest man?" asked the wise Socrates. "He who is content with the least." Following on this plan, we can all be as rich as multi-millionaires, who, by the way, are discontented people.

TINDER is not apter to take fire, nor is the impression of the seal, nor paper ink, than youth is to follow the example of Brooks.

The Half-Discovered Words of Jesus.

was in 1897 that two English scholars had been delving among the ruins of rhynchus, at the edge of the Lybian desert, e upon a buried treasure. They unearthed agment of inscribed papyrus, older than known manuscript of the Gospels. The ring consisted of half a dozen sayings at- uted to our Lord, some of which bore a xing appearance of genuineness, though had no precise parallel in the New Testa- t. Among Christians generally, the pub- lition of these Logia created a thrill of ex- ement, tinged in some quarters with alarm. y again another similar group of Logia has een given to the world from the same ce. In this second collection of sayings e sentences can only be read by the aid of e lecture; while the subject matter, although y curious and suggestive, will hardly ee the keen interest which welcomed its ecessor. It is possible enough that more ese Logia will be exhumed from the buried e. Their form may shed light on the prob- e of the structure of the Gospels and may e to illustrate the fashion in which the ngelists handled the materials on which y worked. Yet from the nature of the e we can hardly expect to recover materials hich the Evangelists were altogether igitant. And it is not conceivable that the nitive church forgot any vital features in e portraiture of her Redeemer. To admit e we have no sure grasp of Christ's actual ds and words is fatal to Christianity itself. ur Gospels, or nowhere, we trace the real aments of the Lord's character, we catch e authentic tones of His voice. And what- e fresh details may emerge, claiming to e to Him, they can only be tested and claud- ed by their conformity to what we know ut our Lord already. Newly discovered ings, which were ascribed to Jesus at some y date, will always have immense interest e attraction. But we need not rush to the clusion that they must all be equally genu- e. And whatever record leaps to light, we e love Him and trust Him know that He e holds faithful. He cannot deny Himself. s often as Charles Lamb heard the praises e new book, he would go home and read e old books over again. And the discovery e these stray, new Logia may turn our thoughts ck to the manifold sayings of Christ which e possess already in the New Testament, but hich we have never yet properly fathomed e mastered and made our own. It is true, eed, that we could not be Christians at all e had no understanding of Jesus Christ. e believe the gospel of His redemption and e correction. We accept the apostolic doc- e of His place in the unseen order. We e enter into the modern sympathy with His call e heavy-laden and the poor. Yet he has e many things to say unto us which we have e received as yet. There are words in e heart-searching commandments which we e only ignore. There are points in His plain- e teaching which we hear absently and pass e, or reflect on in a kind of bewilderment. e many of His precepts and promises have e really found us, and laid hold of us, and e He their abode with us. We confess that eist uttered these strange sayings, but "we e not tell what He saith." It is easy to put the matter to a practical test. A cheap little book is published which contains nothing except our Lord's own words, collected from the Gospels and arranged in something like order. Altogether, they take up less type than a daily newspaper. And when we read them through with honest, patient scrutiny, we discover with astonishment that we are moving in worlds only half realized. How many of Christ's own sentences have never penetrated into our minds at all. They seem to be written in an unintelligible language, which we cannot construe by the vocabulary and grammar of experience. Even where we do apprehend some glorious promise or obey some solemn precept, we become aware that the word reaches beyond all our obedience and our apprehension. When he spoke it, Christ must have meant far more than we have conceived or imagined hitherto.

Consider, for instance, our Lord's overwhelming words, over and over again repeated, about the duty of being endlessly merciful. He commands us to forgive from our hearts those who do us wrong, until seventy times seven. He lays on us the absolute charge that we love our enemies—not just tolerate them, but love them. Have we fathomed the force of those words? Do they not point to a miraculous virtue in tenderness like Christ's own tenderness, which never gives up and never grows tired, which can subdue even the unthankful and the evil at last? Surely He is telling us of a latent spiritual energy which resides in sheer, persistent affection, such as we have hardly dreamed of yet. Consider again our Lord's astonishing precepts as to the duty of peaceableness. He absolutely forbids us to avenge our personal wrongs. The Christian church, as a whole, has never fairly faced these words, or put them into practice. But surely they imply a Divine power in gentleness and meekness and resignation which can quell and conquer the violence of men. The meek shall inherit the earth by the irresistible might of meekness. Count Tolstoy may have cast off the livery of faith, but that remarkable manifesto of his which the Times printed lately gave voice to one great neglected article in the Christian creed: "The deliverance of man, not only from the calamities of war, but from all the calamities which men inflict upon themselves, will take place . . . only by there being more and more of those simple men who, having placed as their object not external alterations of life, but the closest fulfilment in themselves of the will of Him who has sent them into life, will direct all their powers to this realization." Remember, again, our Lord's explicit teaching about purity, and the redemption of the impure. With His crystalline goodness, which makes our whitest thoughts ashamed, He yet declares that Love can reclaim the fallen, however darkly their souls and bodies are defiled. Christ tells us that Magdalene herself may be restored to holiness and her vile past be washed out and made as though it had never been. Can we bear such a hard saying? Dare we believe in that supreme miracle of the grace of God? Recall, once more, our Lord's oft-repeated words of warning against wealth and in praise of poverty. Do we exhaust them, when we limit their meaning to poverty of spirit? Is there not something beyond, to which He is pointing—a real beatitude in literal detachment and renunciation and denial? The most Christ-like Christians have always had a glimpse of the spiritual riches which co-exist with material poverty. And that obscured and despised truth, so contrary to the modern spirit, is part of the lesson which God has brought home afresh to English Christians through the life and labours of the founder of the Salvation Army. Consider, once again, our Lord's solemn words, spoken so often and so emphatically, about judgment. How many of us grasp their obvious implications? Do we expect to meet His awful scrutiny at last sifting and searching the fibres of our nature? Do we believe, as He declared again and again, that the destiny of all human souls lies in the hollow of His wounded hand?

Such Logia as we have referred to are no doubtful, fragmentary utterances, dug up from an Egyptian cemetery. They belong to the very core of Christ's teaching; and whether we accept them or not, we cannot possibly remove them from the Gospels or explain them away as apocryphal traditions. They convict us that Christ has many things to say to us, which we have not yet been able to receive. From the nature of the case it is only little by little that the elemental mysteries of faith can come home to our experience. Gradually fresh truth dawns on the mind, as the inner sense wakes up to perceive its reality and its coherence with the real order of things. We only come to understand each other by slow degrees. A genuine friendship always means the ripening of intimacy which reveals those secrets of kindred characters which kindred experience alone can interpret. Few of us ever appreciated our own parents, while we lived with them; their unspeakable devotion was half-hidden from us, until we began to understand it when we had children of our own. And by the same sort of necessity there must be a genuine development in Christian doctrine as it is apprehended by Christian experience. To grow in grace requires that we grow also in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour. This idea of progress in theology in no way conflicts with the finality of revelation. Progress in science does not mean that the facts of nature are fluctuating; it only means that students are slowly learning how to read her secrets and to utilize her mysterious potential energies. And so progress in theology does not imply that the facts of grace are altered or alterable. It only means that Christians are learning to read the gospel more profoundly and to enter more intimately into the mind of Christ. In each new age the church has to decipher and appropriate some new truth which the Spirit of Truth will unfold. Christ is teaching His disciples to-day what they had not learnt yesterday. All the words He ever spoke, still to us He speaketh. And His messages fail to reach us only because we fancy we have heard them all before, and so we forget to listen for that Voice which is never silent. There are still many missing links in the chain of our experience, there are gaps and blanks in our circle of spiritual knowledge. And those sayings of His which Christ is setting us to discover to-day contain precisely the truths which belong to our peace, without which we cannot be made perfect. The believer's growth in truth is no mere flux of changing opinions, but a living, organic development of the first principles of the Gospel. Throughout life's experience the Holy Spirit interprets and unfolds to us more and more completely the words and the heart of our Lord.—British Weekly.

AT EVEN-TIDE.

At even-tide, O Lord, I bring thee back
Tired hands and weary feet;
Attempts that failed, of these alas! no lack
And efforts incomplete.

No sheaves of ripened grain my garments fill,
No barns with bursting store,
No happy herds contented roam at will
My empty pastures o'er.

And yet, O Lord, I have not shirked Thy task,
Nor path of dalliance trod,
A life set free from pain I do not ask
Nor shrink beneath thy rod.

Too well, alas! I know I have not gained
The ends for which I toiled,
I bring thee nothing but a life unstained,
Hands empty, tho' unsoiled.

Not mine perchance to join the conquering song
Of thy white-robed host;
Not mine to move amid the happy throng
Who earn where I have lost.

But is there not some lowly nook, I pray,
Where I, unseen of them
As Thou dost pass on Thy triumphant way,
May kiss Thy garment's hem?

—Lewis Redner Dalrymple.

Science and Industry.

THE SIMPLER LIFE.—"Liberty and a Living" is the title of a book by P. G. Hubert, Jr., recently re-issued, in which he says: "Life to the average man means hard, anxious work, with disappointment at the end, whereas it ought to mean pleasant work, with plenty of time for books and talk. There is something wrong about a system which condemns ninety-nine hundredths of the race to an existence as bare of intellectual activity and enjoyment as that of a horse, and with the added anxiety concerning the next month's rent. Is there no escape? Throughout years of hard toil supposed that there might be such an escape. Now, having escaped, I am sure of it. So long as I can get a house and garden for three dollars a week, so long as oatmeal is less than three cents a pound, so long as the fish bite and the cabbages grow, I shall keep out of the slavery of modern city existence. I shall live in God's sunshine and enjoy my children's prattle, my books and papers.

THE DISLIKES OF ANIMALS.—Not only is it true that animals, both domestic and wild, show decided preferences for certain persons, and a strong dislike to other individuals, but whole races of creatures often show an universal hatred toward other species.

Perhaps the most interesting cases of dislikes are those which are inherited, fear of the natural enemies of a certain weaker species being so strong that even the young just born may experience it. All herds of cattle hate dogs instinctively. Can we not trace this to the time, long centuries ago, when the wild herds were always in danger of being attacked by wild dogs or wolves, which slunk about on the outskirts of the herd, and watched with hungry eyes every chance to cut out and pull down a helpless calf?

To fight like "cats and dogs" has become a proverb, and we must admit that there is abundant basis for its truth. In domestic cats this is doubtless an inherited instinct, which in one of its larger relatives we can verify to-day. In India the tiger is king, almost. Deep in the jungles the tigress makes her lair, and the cubs have few enemies indeed. Bear or tiger-cat, when they inadvertently come across the lair trail of the great striped one, back-trail, and rapidly, too. It is doubtful if even the great python would disturb one of the little furry kittens. But the packs of wild dogs are without fear, and would kill and eat the cubs and defy the parent when she returned. Well she knows this, and also that although she might slay a dozen, yet the others would pin her down, careless if they died or no. So a tiger in captivity will scrutinize a wolf without much show of anger, but pity the dog which ever comes within reach, and if she cannot get at him, her wrath of memory will vent itself in howls and fierce endeavors on the bars of her cage.

A leopard which lives so much among the trees and could so easily escape the attacks of wild dogs, has no instinctive hate, although a dog is a tidbit which would be by no means despised. This fact is well known to dogs, which show their fear of these arboreal felines, while they will mob tigers and other terrestrial cats. Pumas come under the same head as leopards, and are held in as great respect by dogs.

In zoos the animals generally show a dislike to children and cripples; in the first instance, doubtless, because they are teased by the youngsters, and in the second place because of the strange horror and hate which many animals show of the abnormal or conditions out of the usual, for discriminating between which they have remarkable ability.

Monkeys hate negroes, but this dislike of dark-skinned men is not confined to the above mentioned class of animals. It is said that when Hagenbeck's Somalis were at the Crystal Palace they were invited one day to see the zoo. There was nothing to which the most sensitive European could object to in the appearance of these free, half-Arab tribesmen, but when the dark men entered the lion house there was an uproar. The animals were furious; they roared with rage. The apes and monkeys were frightened and angry, the antelopes were alarmed, and even the phlegmatic wild cattle were excited. They recognized their natural enemies, the dark-skinned men who had hunted them for centuries in the jungles and the bush, and with whom their own parents did battle when they were captured and carried off captive in the Nubian deserts.

Animals, such as cats, dogs, birds, and even bees, seem to know what persons are in sympathy with them. Some persons will be attacked even by pigeons and doves, and it is impossible for some to have anything to do with horses and other animals.—N. Y. Evening Post.

INOCULATING THE GROUND.—It is less than half a century ago that Hellriegel, a German agricultural chemist, discovered that leguminous plants enrich the ground by supplying nitrogen which they assimilate from the atmosphere by means of their root-tubercles, a that myriads of a peculiar bacterium we present in these tubercles. This strange instance of symbiosis stimulated investigation and now modern science is able to utilize the action of bacteria for the purpose of enriching soil from which the nitrogen, so necessary for plant life, has been removed by too severe cropping. The following brief article from the National Geographic Magazine will be read with interest in this connection:

"To inoculate sterile ground and make it bring forth fruit in abundance is one of the latest achievements of American science. Son of man's most dread diseases—smallpox, diphtheria, plague, rabies—have been vanquished by inoculation, and now inoculation is to cure soil that has been worn out and make it fertile and productive again.

"The germs that bring fertility are mailed by the Department of Agriculture in a small package like yeast cake. The cake contains millions of dried germs. The farmer who receives the cake drops it into a barrel of clean water; the germs are revived and soon turn the water to a milky white. Seeds of clover, peas, alfalfa, or other leguminous plants that are soaked in this milky preparation are endowed with marvelous strength. Land which, for instance, the farmer with constant toil has obtained alfalfa only a few inches high, when planted with these inoculated seeds will produce alfalfa several feet high and rich that the farmer does not recognize his crop.

"It has been long known that repeated crops of wheat and grain gradually exhaust the nitrogen in the soil. Now, as all plants must have nitrogen, which in normal condition they absorb through their roots, this constant drain of nitrogen from the soil has so alarmed some persons that they have predicted a 'nitrogen famine' to occur in forty or fifty years, and they have very graphically portrayed the possibilities of such a catastrophe. This view of the situation is greatly exaggerated, but the fact remains, nevertheless, that the main reason of once fertile lands becoming unproductive is loss of nitrogen in the soil.

"The difficulty has been to get the nitrogen back into the ground. Fertilizers are expensive and not satisfactory; but there is an inexhaustible supply of free nitrogen in the air—it can be captured. The problem of how to utilize this free nitrogen has now been solved.

"It was discovered some time ago that leguminous plants—clover, alfalfa, peas, etc.—were able to put back nitrogen into the soil and thus fertilize it. This is the reason why a wheat field after a crop of alfalfa will yield a much heavier harvest. The plants absorb the free nitrogen by means of bacteria tubercles growing on their roots, the tubercles varying in size from a pinhead in the case of the clover, to large clusters. Clover and bean possessing these tubercles will flourish in quartz sand after it has been heated to a red heat in order to drive out all the nitrogen while these plants without tubercles will not grow unless there is some nitrate in the soil.

"It was Dr. George T. Moore, of the office of Pathological and Physiological Investigations of the Department of Agriculture, who used the method by which these bacteria had been cultivated artificially in such form; their nitrogen-fixing power should be increased and be permanent and not evaporate. The process has been patented by him, and he has been by him generously deeded to the American people.

It must be clearly understood that only soils of leguminous plants can be benefited by nitrogen-fixing bacteria. Where the soil is rich and fertile, the crop is not appreciably increased by the use of the inoculating bacteria, but where the soil is poor, the harvest is increased many times."

"She is really dead. I learned it on my way home to dinner."

Overwhelmed with shame, the little group realized for the first time the solemnity of such sinful conversation. Let us take warning, and speak of those about us as we shall wish we had done when

"Death sweeps their faults with heavy hand,
As sweeps the sea the trampled sand."

The Only way of getting to heaven that I know of is to walk there,—that is, to walk with God.—Charles Cullis.

WHEN you read this paper try to take to yourself what belongs to you. Do not think it is all for you or all for others. You would not find fault with the merchant because every shoe in his store was not your size.—Pentecost.

Notes in General.

Edward Everett Hale says: "I wish we might have some arrangement by which laymen who had something to say might say it to our congregations on Sunday, just as they do on anniversary occasions, to inspire and teach and lead those who are fortunate enough to hear them."

Four or five thousand dollars a year will keep a professor of Greek or quaternions, but President Eliot wisely proposes to pay instructors in the Lawrence Scientific School under the Gordon McKay bequest something like the salaries they could earn in the employ of industrial concerns.

The 300th anniversary of the birth of John Eliot, "Apostle to the Indians" and translator of the Bible into their language, occurs this month, and will probably be commemorated in Massachusetts, where he rendered faithful service as a minister of the gospel for nearly half a century.

"The teacher who can make the subject matter of the school, what it may be, material for real culture is the teacher that is needed. Men and women who can do this have come to their spiritual heritage. It is possible to develop the religious life right in school."—Edwin Starbuck.

A petition is said to be in circulation asking the legislature of Massachusetts to rescind the order banishing Roger Williams from the Massachusetts colony in 1635. The leaders of the movement hope to obtain, it is said, a thousand names in Massachusetts alone, and many more from all sections of the country.

The Japanese war department has given permission for distribution of scriptures among the soldiers as they embark for the seat of war. A special edition of thin paper-covered copies of separate gospels is prepared and given to the soldiers, and a bound copy of the New Testament is given to each officer.

Lyman Abbott is frank enough to say: "We ministers find fault with our choirs; that they are ill-behaved during the sermon; the choirs would have a right to find fault with us ministers, that we are ill-behaved during the singing. We add to the notes of our sermon, or look them over, or study the faces of our congregation, or do anything but join in the praise of God."

Dr. Edgar J. Banks, of the University of Chicago, has, with his force of 140 men, unearthed at Bismya, near the Euphrates, the remains of four temples, the lowest of which dates back not far from 5000 B. C. Bricks which have been found in this lowest ruin have inscriptions which show the temple to have been a part of the ancient city of Adab, now accounted the oldest in the world.

On the cover of the Lend a Hand Record for Seventh Month is a picture of the statue of Christ which was unveiled Third Month 13th, 1904, on a pinnacle of the Andes Mountains, 14,000 feet above the sea, and on the very demarcation of the boundary line between Argentina and Chile. The statue is twenty-six feet high, and stands on a pedestal of granite, symbolizing the world. The inscription, which is in Spanish, reads: "These mountains will crumble to dust ere Argentinians and Chileans break the peace which at the feet of Christ the Redeemer they have sworn to keep."

Columbia University has just received a valuable addition to its library—a book printed by Benjamin Franklin in Philadelphia in 1744. It was written by James Logan, Chief Justice of the Province of Pennsylvania in the early part of the eighteenth century, and bears the autograph of Thomas Heyward, Jr., one of the South Carolina signers of the Declaration of Independence. It is a translation of Cicero's "Cato Major, or De Senectute." In the opinion of Franklin it was the earliest translation of a classic in the Western Hemisphere, and it has an introduction by Franklin, entitled "The Printer to the Reader."

The following is published as a prophecy given by Abraham Lincoln in 1865:—"I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me, and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its right by working upon the prejudices of the people, until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxious for the safety of the country than ever before, even in the midst of war."

Bishop Rowe, of Alaska, has written from Sitka, Seventh Month 19th, telling of the epidemic of diphtheria among the Indians at Fort Yukon, and of the heroism of a Boston woman, Nurse Woods, at one of the Alaska missions. One hundred and twenty-five natives had already been seized with diphtheria, among whom twenty-five had died. Nurse Woods, on receiving the news, started to the rescue, making a journey of one hundred miles by canoe. Her presence at Fort Yukon, the bishop writes, has been spoken of as that of an angel. There are no physicians at Fort Yukon, and very little in the way of food, medicines, etc. The heroic conduct of this Boston woman, reminding one of the mission of Sister Dora, will stir many a heart to noble impulses, not only among Nurse Woods's friends in Massachusetts, but generally throughout the country.

SECTS AS EMPHASIZERS.—Matthew T. Hughes, lately speaking on Denominational schools, said that: "Every religious denomination came into being by emphasis, by laying emphasis on some special or neglected truth of our Lord.

- "Luther taught, the Just shall live by faith.
- "Unitarians laid emphasis on unity of God.
- "Universalists laid emphasis on love of God.
- "Presbyterians laid emphasis on the Almightyness of God.
- "Methodists laid emphasis on the experimental method in religion.
- "Quakers laid emphasis on the Inner Life and leading of Spirit.
- "Now, we believe no one denomination has all the truth, but each one emphasizes a truth that all the rest must not forget."
- Why should not the "Quakers' emphasis on the leading of the Spirit" comprehend all the truth of the others?" He shall lead you into all the

The Schoolboy's Treasure.

The contents of schoolboys' desks are sometimes surprising. I lately read an account on by a master at a boarding-school of what he saw on one occasion when he had to print the opening and searching of a forty or fifty desks in connection with a posed theft.

When I came to the desk of nearly the best boy in the room," says the master, small parcel fell from the owner's hand. A queer, whity-brown paper parcel it was, and round with string in the most intricate evolutions and series of knots. Of course, I had to examine that parcel. As I put out my hand for it, the boy hesitated. The other boys exchanged glances, as much as to say, "We had run the fox to earth at last." In older and wiser heads thought the same. They stood the frightened, anxious boy, his gray eyes filled with tears, his fair face marred with terror, and his soft, wavy, brown hair, which gentle hands had doubtless combed many a day at home, was all tangled

"Please don't open it, sir," pleaded the boy—"for such he was—"pray do not open it before the boys."

Had I followed my own inclinations I should have given back the parcel unopened, that could not be. With my penknife I cut through the string, undid the many wraps of paper, and disclosed to view a little pill-box which might well have contained the money. I opened the box. Nestled in the web of wool was a dainty locket, and with small scrap of paper on which was written "For my dear Percy, with his mother's love." That locket inclosed a piece of loving mother's hair, and the little boy had been an orphan only a few weeks."—Selected.

The Last Bitter Word.

The writer in the Advocate and Guardian repeats an instance, as follows:—"One day the conversation at dinner, in a well known to the writer, turned upon a lady who was so unfortunate as to have invited the dislike of certain members of the household, because of some little peculiarities. After several had expressed their views in gentle terms, the married sister added: "I can't endure her; and I believe I will return her call if she comes here again." Her husband who had hitherto remained silent, replied: "She will not trouble you again, my dear; she died an hour ago."

You do not mean it? Surely you are only trying us for our uncharitableness?"

truth." It is our mutual denials that separate, and not our common truths.

DANISH AND NORWEGIAN BIBLE.—Our English Bible became so the standard that the English language has become one single thing the whole world over, on all continents and islands. The Bible made one language out of what was a variety of dialects. The same was done for the German language by Luther's Version, and yet a reverse situation occurs in some other countries, as, for example, in Scandinavia. Several revised versions have been made during the last century in Norway, and now the revised Version of the New Testament has been received within a few months with general satisfaction by laymen and clergy, and the Version was necessary because the Danish used in Norway, which is sometimes called the "Norwegian," has developed more and more away from the mother tongue, both in lexicon and grammar. The Dano-Norwegian is a distinct form from Danish proper that the whole Version of the Bible has acquired a markedly unnatural as well as archaic coloring in Norway. The present great undertaking of the complete Version of the Bible, which began over half a century ago, may now be regarded as marking a period in the development of the national and religious life of Norway, and also of its language. It seems unfortunate, however, that the three countries of Scandinavia cannot manage to have and maintain one and the same language.—The Independent.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A despatch from Boston of the 21st says: In pursuance of his campaign against imperialism, Dr. Edward Atkinson has just issued a statement, in which he declares that the war expenditure of the United States for war and armaments during the past eight years has been $1,200,000,000. He quotes from annual reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, showing that in eight years of the administrations of Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt the expenditures for war and over-sea expansion will be $1,925,000,000, while the expenditures under the administrations of Arthur and Cleveland from 1882 to 1889, for army and navy and for beginning the construction of the new navy were only $462,000,000.

A descendant of William Penn, and of his son, Thomas Penn, who bears the title of Earl of Banbury, has lately been in this city inspecting the records relating to his ancestor in the records of the United States here. At the close of his visit he is reported to have said: "It is a splendid collection, and I am especially impressed by the immense value and interest of the manuscript letters and books, of which there are such a quantity. It is a pleasure to view a collection as complete as this, which includes almost everything of value." According to recent reports of an unexpected shortage of the wheat crop in North Dakota, Minnesota and Manitoba, the wheat market in Chicago has recently been much excited, and prices have advanced to $1.12 and $1.14 per bushel.

A despatch from Washington says: Wireless telegraphy is to be employed in saving the forests of the West. Plans are being made in the Bureau of Forestry to establish stations at intervals in the large forests throughout the Rocky Mountains, where fires occur in the dry season every year, destroying vast areas of magnificent timber. At these stations expert observers will be kept who will give warning whenever a fire breaks out. The first of the stations to be set in operation will be in the Black Hills.

In an official report to the Government from Frank H. Mason, the American Consul-General at Berlin, he says: "Germany yields the first place in beer production to the United States. According to the statistics of the German Brewers' Association, their product in 1903 declined to 1,787,615,000 gallons, or 132,085,230 gallons less than the output of the United States."

The striking butchers in Chicago have published an appeal to the public for aid, in which they assert that the wages of the laborers were 18 cents an hour, but that the employment was so irregular that their actual weekly earnings amounted to not more than $7. It is declared that the packers attempted to lower the wages, and the skilled workmen, believing this would be followed with a reduction of their own pay, decided to strike in support of the unskilled men. The attitude of the packers in refusing to confer with the men is criticized, and the resolution comes with the statement that if the strikers fail, the community will suffer.

A committee of the National Fire Protective Association in a report quotes the following as the order in which various kinds of trees are susceptible to lightning: Oaks, 100; elms, 77; pines, 33; fir, 10; fir trees in general, 27; and beeches, 2.

A sea-wall has lately been constructed at Galveston, Texas, intended to protect that city from the overflow of water from the Gulf of Mexico, which three years ago caused great destruction. The wall is nearly three-and-a-half miles long, and cost a million dollars.

Many visiting foreigners have lately been in this city from London, Manchester, Milan, Liverpool, Vienna and Rome to study the factory conditions and report to their respective governments.

In Venango County, Pa., oil wells are now being drilled in territory which formerly produced oil, but had been abandoned with the result that one or more wells have begun to yield oil in paying quantities.

A despatch from Denver, Colo., says: Ore yielding radium has been discovered at three different places in the Cripple Creek district. At two places the ore is in a well defined vein, from six to eight inches wide, to two feet in thickness. Thousands of dollars worth of the precious ore has been thrown over the dumps as worthless by the miners.

The lynching of negroes in Russia has caused an exodus of negroes from portions of the State and has threatened a shortage in the labor supply in the cotton fields. It has been suggested that the United States should elect to President Roosevelt, Silas C. Swallow, the Prohibition candidate for the Presidency, attributes much of the lawlessness throughout the country to the use of alcoholic drink, and says: "It has been pretty clearly demonstrated that a large proportion of the unmentionable crimes committed against the women of the country by both negroes and whites were the product of lust, inflamed by this beverage drug. And an equal proportion of the lynching and burning of human beings, North and South, East and West, has reported its promptings in this same beverage drug."

FOREIGN.—A general land and naval attack upon Port Arthur. It is reported, began on the 15th inst. On the 16th a demand was made for the surrender of the fortress, which was refused, upon which the attack upon the fortress was resumed with increased violence, and great slaughter of the besieging Japanese is reported.

The Japanese fleet lately, after sinking the Russian cruiser Rurik in the Straits of Korea, rescued six hundred of her crew.

A despatch of the 18th from St. Petersburg says: Russia will meet the views of the United States and Great Britain regarding foodstuffs as contraband of war, agreeing that foodstuffs bound to a belligerent's unblockaded ports and consigned to private firms or individuals, when the shipping papers leave no room for suspicion, be not regarded as contraband.

Extensive forest fires have occurred in Western Siberia and in Hungary in consequence of the prolonged drought. In the latter country it is stated that hundreds of houses have been destroyed in various villages during the past few weeks, in which from fifteen to twenty persons have been killed.

The report of a British Commission on physical deterioration states that for such deterioration as is patent and indisputable the Commission finds the causes to be, first of all, alcohol and tobacco. One of the authorities on the subject consulted, Dr. Scott, mentions the significant fact that the number of children born to mothers who used only 2 per cent. had not been materially besides stunting the user, tobacco is said to cause, especially in youth, shortness of breath, loss of vitality, weak heart and general inefficiency. The opinion is an unanimous one against the habit of cigarette smoking among boys.

The President of the republic of Salvador, and Honduras and Nicaragua, have each signed a joint agreement to maintain peace in the republics of Central America.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

George L. Smedley, Phila.; Nathaniel Barton, N. J.; Geo. Lippincott, N. J.; Ellis Smedley, Pa.; Thomas A. Crawford, agent, O., $12 for Edwin Fogg; David Ellsion, Lydia Warrington, Edgar Washington, Eliza Ann Fogg and Abner Woolman; Wm. L. Bailey, agent, Pa., $10 for George O. Hibberd, Mary E. Webb, Deborah J. Windle, David J. Scott and Mary Scott Kay; Mercy A. Roberts, Pa., $4 for herself and Elizabeth L. Roberts; Josiah W. Leeds, Pa., $6 for herself, John B. Leeds, N. J., and B. Frank Leeds, N. J.;

Samuel T. Haight, agent, Canada, $22 for M. Ann Treffry, Joseph G. Pollard, Anna H. Mox George Pollard, Joshua Warrington, John Pollard, ward Pollard, Henry S. Moore, Wm. H. Bell Joseph H. Clayton and Hanna Bell; Bes Palmer and for T. Chalkley Palmer, Pa.; Catha Jacob, Phila., for Mary Lownes Levis, Pa.; K. Roberts, N. J.; Arthur Peacock, Kans., $1; Su H. Sharpless, Pa.; William E. Mekeel, agent, V., $10 for Elizabeth Mekeel, Edward W. Joseph, Wm. E. Wood, and H. F. O'Connell; Margaret Ward, Canada; Eli Hadley, Jr. Reece L. Thomas, Pa.; Richard Haines, N. Anna Pancoast, Pa.; Abram Stratton, Phila.; F. Saunders, Phila.; Pelatiah Goe, Vt.; Will Sianton, agent, $12 for Wm. Pickett, Thos Dewees, J. M. Gaber, Hannah P. Carter, M. H. Hoopes, N. J., $6 for himself, Charles D. Balger and Edward H. Jones; Clarkson Moore, ag. Pa., $10 for George R. Chambers, Pennock Cop Joseph T. Whitson, Anna M. Webster and V. P. Mercer; Richard H. Reeve, N. J.; Milton M. Lila; Wm. L. Bailey, agent, Pa., $20 for Gill Cope, Ralston M. Cope, David M. Cope, Ruth A. Hoopes, Jane M. Hoopes, E. Malin, Ohio; H. T. Clarkson Eldridge, Phebe J. Walter, Dev. C. Smedley and Edward Savary; Jacob L. Ebo N. J.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Young woman Friend student wishes work out of school in Philadelphia for the winter, by which she can board and lodging.

Address "L."

Office of THE FRIEND.

A woman Friend, who attended the late Quarterly Meeting at Media, Pa., reports the loss of a black union parasol, with loop handle and black tassel on handle. If found, please send to The Matron, Barclay H. West Chester, Pa.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., Ph

On and after Ninth Month 1st, 1904, the Library be open on week-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from P. M. to 6 P. M.

The Friends' City Home can accommodate a young man, who may propose to spend the summer months in the city. Address Mary T. Wildman, 1623 Sun Street.

Westtown Boarding School.—The school opens on Third-day, Ninth Month 13th, 1904. Newcomers should arrive at the school before noon, or as late in the afternoon as possible. Trains leave Broad St. Station, Philadelphia, for Westtown, at 7.16, 8.15, 1 A. M., 1.32, 2.50, 3.46, 4.32 P. M. Friends who will kindly send word to the school beforehand, if child are obliged to take a train later than the 4.32 P. M.

WM. F. WICKERSHAM, Principal,
Westtown, Pa.

DIED, at his residence in Wenatchee, Washington the seventh of Fifth Month, 1904, LOUIS P. HAMPTON, of William and Charity Hampton, and formerly of Co., Iowa, in the thirty ninth year of his age; a man of Fallington Monthly Meeting. Though surprised informed of the serious nature of his malady, his statement was found to be one of prayer and praise, especially in such expressions as, "O Lord, bring me nearer nearer unto Thee." "O what marvellous love and mercy thou hast for me!" Almost at the last his wife bled him whisper, "Nearer to Thee, nearer to Thee!" He was crowned a character of integrity, honesty and piety.

At his late residence, at Winona, Ohio, 25th Month 4th, 1904, ALFRED BENVENISTE, in the forty fourth year of his age; a member of New Garden Mo and Particular Meeting. The composure of his mind patience during a lingering illness, and the calmness which he viewed the approach of death, impressed it about him, with the truth of the Scripture language "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee."

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

DL. LXXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 3, 1904.

No. 8.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,

PHILADELPHIA.

(Publishing office at Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,

No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Published as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Organization Complete Only in the Spirit.

Our item concerning the appointment of elders for a new monthly meeting, we fear from consenting to imply that the organization of a monthly meeting is not complete until some elders are appointed. The title to be conveyed was that the several offerings provided for in the discipline, are a representation.

A true organization of a Friends' meeting must be complete by mechanism. The department of its frame-work may be with-registered tenant, and the organization complete as it can be in the Truth. The action of an occupant there might be a subtraction from completeness. The insertion of it introduced into and by the Spirit would be an impairment of the organization, because much foreign matter.

Military Reflexion on Military Life.

Generals who plead for the restoration of the canteen are giving soldiers a bad name. They are saying the soldier is sure to make a man of himself unless the government supplies him with official drinking places.

To compare this with the claim also sounded in official quarters, that military life is the best of schools of manly virtues. Now shall we believe? Whether the military movement that self-control, which is the life of all virtues, grows weak in military life is a temptation to vice; or the other argument that it is the tendency of military life to promote virtue? By this they seem to mean but one virtue,—obedience to orders, and no questions for conscience's sake, and the neglect of consequences to one's self. This is the expense of other virtues generally.

Advocates of the canteen are saying soldiers cannot be expected to keep sober, and the government, instead of private enterprise, provides drinking places for them; that their virtue has not generally the power of resistance that is expected in unmilitary people. These generals ought to know.

For it is a soldier's business to surrender to his commander in warfare all his private scruples of right and wrong, and have no conscience of his own when commanders order things to be done which he had hitherto been taught were immoral and criminal. Now a system which makes sin necessary must be in itself sinful, and cannot breed the root of virtue. The reign of the Holy Spirit as the law of conduct is not there wanted. The pre-eminence of the spirit of Christ is in warfare an inconvenience and impracticable. Where the foundation of moral virtue is thus destroyed, or kept secondary to military convenience, what shall the righteous do? How shall they remain righteous in the control of their lusts?

And where now a church-general dogologizes a saloon into the semblance of an ecclesiastically endorsed canteen for the people, so as to make the imbibing of intoxicants seem respectable through a "religious and guarded education" for future inebriates, we are impressed with a sense of the futility of the ministrations of "means of grace" for forty years, to minister grace itself; and also of the blinding effect of cares of church or state on the discernment of the pure witness for truth in a ruler's own heart.

The Energetic Passivity.

Passivity to God means activity to Him. This passiveness or subjection to His will and Spirit may often be a most strenuous exertion. It is a submission to be moved and affected in every part as his power moves and affects us.

The passiveness of all the parts of an engine to the movings of the power upon them is what puts mighty ships across the Atlantic. We commit our lives to locomotive engines only in a trust that they are wholly passive. Christ wants to pass "from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth" in and by human engines that are passive to his inworking and living power. Standing or going, laboring or waiting, any human constitution is his missionary only on terms of passivity,—and truly energetic terms they are,—the surrender of our wills to do or suffer in our lot according to his manifested will.

This is not moping. This passivity of sons and daughters of God is not lethargy. It is not sluggishness. As many as are led by the Spirit of God, "they are sons of God." The true Christian passiveness is simply obedience, whether in waiting for orders or in fulfilling them.

There may be a waiting which is rebellion. It feels more comfortable to wait than to work. There may be an unpassive, that is, an impatient activity, self-made and self-sprung. It seeks good ends on the impulse of "nevertheless-let-me-run." This also is a rebellion. It gratifies self better to run to one's own ways and times, than to be submissive to the witness of the Spirit. The end though just does not justify the unbidden process. Obedience, and to hearken to the voice of the Lord is better than all assumed sacrifice.

Passivity for its own sake is, of course, laziness. Even to bask in the light of the Lord is not, for any long indulgence, what the light is for. Its purpose soon is sounded. "Arise and shine! for thy light is come." "They that sleep, sleep in the night." The light is to walk in. "If ye walk in the light as He is in the light, ye have fellowship and cleansing." But passivity to God is conformity to the work of his hand, as clay to the potter's; it is compliance with the operation of his Holy Spirit, it is the yielding of the service of our active powers and talents to the touch of his word. Thus shall we do those "greater works," because He went to the Father and gives gifts unto men.

Reading War News.

The following concern expressed by R. Barclay Spicer in the columns of the Intelligencer, is worthy of the serious attention of our readers:

One cannot help wondering how many Friends and others who class themselves on one ground or another among those who are for peace, are making of themselves lukewarm peace advocates by industriously reading the war chronicles with which the papers are now filled; how many are making of themselves out-and-out war advocates.

Is there any good reason why we should read these newspaper accounts? Is there any reason why we should keep posted as to every move in this great world struggle? or even that we should keep the run of the principal gains and losses on the one side and the other? One reason we read them is that they are interesting. Every one of us is more or less interested in a fight, especially if the ugly features of it are not brought into too great prominence. We are all descended from warriors, and war is in our blood. It shows most in childhood; but it is liable to crop out also later in life. That we feel an intense interest in the newspaper accounts of battles and marching and the blowing up of vessels and all sorts of excitement in the East means no more than that these things filled an important part of the lives of the ancestors whose blood is in our veins. It does not mean that they are a legitimate part of the civilized life of to-day. The thing for us is not to feed this war interest that is in us, but to let it lie dormant as far as possible, that it may finally disappear entirely.

The affair in the East is a great world struggle. Questions of the greatest importance are at stake there. It is of great moment to us how they are decided. But this barbaric display that is going on has no more to do with deciding them than have the dog fights and drunken brawls in the street to do with an up-to-date citizen's interest in civic reform. When these two peoples have killed a goodly number of one another, have destroyed a gigantic amount of property, and inestimable harm has been done, and when it has been decided which is the mightier; then the economic and political questions will come in for settlement. Had the Russians and Japanese gotten the war out of their blood, they would have proceeded at once to an enlightened consideration of the question at issue without the preliminary but irrelevant brute force struggle. Fortunately for us, we are not mixed up in this barbaric tangle, and we do not have to stir up our out-of-date fighting propensities by keeping up with the newspaper accounts of the details of it. This is going to mean a tremendous setback in the growth toward peaceableness for the parties directly concerned; just as recent wars have meant a temporary setback among peace people in England and America. It is for us to take advantage of our present opportunity to grow in peaceableness, and we ought not to let wars and rumors of wars in other parts of the world interfere with our improving the opportunity.

R. BARCLAY SPICER.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

I was deeply interested in the article published in THE FRIEND, Seventh Month 30th, on "Teachers convinced of our Principles," by Samuel Emlen, especially the two parts. First, where he says: "I would add Friends from Conviction entering upon and pursuing their calling with hearts loving the Truth and loving children." Second, "There seems to be special need just now, for asking the Lord that He would send into this teaching field labors of His own choosing," etc.

The older I grow and the more I look backward on the past and forward to the future of our beloved Society, the more deeply and earnestly do I feel concerned for the best welfare of the children and young people. The influence of teachers is great, therefore like our beloved friend, I would gladly, if I could, impress upon committees the great importance of this subject. I once knew a teacher appointed principal in a Friends' School which was so strictly select, that none but members and the children of members were admitted; yet this principal set at naught our testimony to plainness every day. He had a plain coat which he wore in school, but when school was out the plain coat was hung up on a hat pin, and a fashionable coat worn back and forth to school and to his home. He was a bright, young man, highly educated and well calculated to teach; but that made his influence and example upon the scholars so much the more injurious in regard to our testimonies. It has often seemed to me that inconsistent and unconverted members may often have a more injurious effect than some others who make no profession with us. Children and young people are very close observers and where they see inconsistencies in those placed over them, there is great danger of their copying the evil and being gradually little by little led away from that which the Truth would lead them into. I have written the above after a good deal of serious thoughtfulness, and from a religious concern for the present and everlasting welfare of the beloved children.

ISAAC MORGAN.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 50.)

The concern that influenced Friends to devote a portion of their time to living near and instructing these Indians in the habits of civilized life was deeply felt by many of those who relinquished the comforts and endearments of home, to thus isolate themselves in a comparative wilderness; and it could only have been a sense of Divine approval which reconciled them to the separation from their families and friends, and supported them in the responsible positions, and often trying circumstances in which they were placed. Those who were thus laboring, received the cordial sympathy of their friends at home, which is thus tenderly expressed in one of the letters addressed to Benjamin Cope and others in 1809. The wife of Benjamin Cope had died at Tusnessa Eighth Month 10th, 1807.

"Our minds are often drawn into tender sympathy with you, our absent friends, and desires are frequently experienced for your encouragement, patience and perseverance, in the benevolent work assigned you; not doubting but that your reward will be sure, agreeably to the scripture testimony—let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

The great trial Benjamin Cope met with in the death of his wife elicited the warm sympathy of some of the natives. In a letter written by Benjamin Cope to his father, dated Ninth Month 11th, 1807, he says: "This afternoon there came to our house a number of the principal chief men residing on this river, and three of the Wyandots, and after they had sat awhile, Canadea said: they were thankful to the Great Spirit that we were all well at this time, and that they had come to sympathize with us in the great loss our family had met with by the death of my wife; and wished us to make our minds strong; seeing it was the will of the Great Spirit it should be so, and was what must happen to us all; and they had come to wipe away our tears, that we might sorrow anymore; with much more to the same import. Several of the Indians have expressed a very great sympathy for me under my present trial. One old man came to the mill where I was grinding his grist, he came to me and asked me how many days it was since my wife died; I told him it was eight; he said it was very hard but he believed she was gone to God Spirit, then taking me by the hand and pressing it hard, said try to do thy very best and when these dies thee will go to the Great Spirit to her; with much more which I cannot understand for want of being more perfect in the language; the great animation, which he spoke and the concern that I believe he felt for me, touched my feelings very much."

The following circumstance related by Benjamin Cope illustrates the blood-thirsty spirit which actuated some of the natives among whom he lived at this time. An Indian had been engaged in what is known as the French war of 1755-1759, had been shot such a way that the bullet had passed through both his arms. He recovered from his wound but in advancing years his arms became weak and his use of them somewhat impaired. Relying upon this fact, he came to the conclusion that he should have revenge for loss of physical power resulting from this injury, and he determined to seek it. Arriving himself he started on a journey, and as supposed by the account he gave on his return of the size and number of large streams crossed, he went as far south as the State of Virginia. Here he saw a woman and ten children at work in a field. He killed her in cold blood and returned home. No punctures appeared to have troubled him the retrospect of his bloody deed.

An incident which occurred during the residence of Benjamin Cope among these Indians illustrates the care which was necessary in dealing with them.

Many applications had been made from time to time by individuals for the loan of tools, other articles which the Friends at Tusnessa kept for their own use, and the Committee finally concluded it would be proper to distinguish the practice of loaning such things to the Indians, many of whom were able at times to provide some of them for themselves. On one occasion an Indian visitor desired Benjamin Cope to loan him an axe. His request was declined. Shortly afterward the same Indian met another Friend and applied to him, stating that he wanted it only a little time. The Friend declined also, but the Indian renewed his request with such import that the Friend yielded, when to his chagrin the Indian replied he did not want the axe and the Friend discovered that he had merely the subject of an experiment in order to ascertain whether he really meant what he said.

In 1810, four chiefs of the Six Nations of whom was Red Jacket, were in Philadelphia on their way home from Washington, and on an interview on the twenty-eighth of September with several Friends, in the course of which a request they had made was allowed, that two of their young men should be provided with suitable homes in the neighborhood of Philadelphia and instructed in some ic art, by the knowledge of which their on would be likely to derive some benefit. ply Friends agreed to endeavor to procure able places for two young men, as prod, upon which Red Jacket acknowledged kindness of Friends and among other things ioned his desire that one of the young a nephew of his, should be taught the art speaking on paper or making paper k."

ed Jacket further said he "well remem being in this city several years ago, at en when there were deputations from six- nations of Indians here, and that they informed by Government that their man- of life had reduced them to great poverty insignificant, and that unless they alter- their mode of living and adopted that of white people, particularly in tilling the nd, they would in time dwindle to noth- and strongly advised them to make the ration. That the Indians communicated advice to a very large council of Friends, asked their opinion respecting it; that nds informed them they approved of the ce, and told them that although their es were small, they would be willing to urage them to make the trial by affording some small assistance therein. Since time, said he, several of the black-coated ole have come amongst us, and offered services to preach to us, but on consid- the subject we were not able to discover benefit to be derived from that mode of ruction, but in preference we highly ap- of the measures adopted by you in the of cultivating the land, etc., in which I am joy to inform you, many of our people have e a considerable improvement, both in ivating the land and some of the mechanical s. I am unable to express the thankful- I feel for the many acts of kindness you ety have shown to us, particularly when old gentleman (pointing to John Elliott) many others now no more, attended at our ties, I am happy in observing your disposi- to pursue the same track of conduct your ers observed toward Indians, now they are oved to the world of spirits."

(To be continued.)

r is said that at one time Daniel Webster visited by a fellow-senator where he was nding his vacation in New Hampshire. friend said to him one day, "Mr. Web- , I am surprised that you go twice a Sun- to hear a plain country preacher, when ay little attention to far abler sermons Washington." Webster replied, "In shington they preach to Daniel Webster, statesman; but this man has been telling iel Webster, the sinner, of Jesus of Naz- h, and it has been helping him."

"TRUE to name." The florist thus cata- nes certain varieties of seeds that can be sted to produce the color and form speci- . Such seeds are always at a premium. how many Christians can it be said, to-day, t they are "true to name," producing the s, the joy, the peace, the long-suffering, gentleness, the goodness, the faith, the eakness, the self-control of the Bible cata- e? Such Christians are needed. Are we ong them?

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Gambling on Ocean Steamers.

In an issue of the Public Ledger last month there appeared an editorial upon the above subject, of which the following are the opening and the closing paragraphs: "The repeated scandals growing out of gambling on shipboard are a disgrace to the transatlantic steamship lines. The smoking room of an ocean liner ought not to be, as it very commonly is, a public gambling house, a place where known criminals and 'crooks' are allowed to ply their infamous trade with the knowledge of the steamship authorities, who thus become responsible partners in crime."

"It is quite time that the powerful sentiment, which has suppressed public gambling ashore should insist that it be put equally under the ban at sea. It has no place on any passenger steamship that invites the patronage of decent people, and its suppression is entirely within the power of the steamship companies and their officers. Above all, the undisguised tolerance of professional gamblers and sharpers who prey upon inexperienced tourists, is nothing short of criminal, and those who could put a stop to it and do not should themselves suffer public condemnation."

Two years ago the writer of this addressed the general managers of several of the principal steamship companies, desiring to know what measures they adopted to discourage the gambling evil on their respective lines. One reply was: "The rules of this company do prohibit the practice of gambling on the steamers, but it is exceedingly difficult to enforce the rule, and this we may say is the experience of all the transatlantic steamship companies. If the playing of cards for money is prohibited in the smoking room, the passengers simply adjoin to their state-rooms. Whenever the officials on the steamers have reason to believe that there are any professional gamblers on board, the following notice is posted in the smoking room: 'The attention of the managers has been called to the fact that certain individuals, believed to be professional gamblers, have recently been traveling to and fro in the Atlantic steamships, and it is deemed right, in the interest of the passengers to bring it to their notice. If the passengers choose to play for money with strangers, they assume all the risks of meeting sharpers.'"

A second response—it came from the "American Line" which so many residents of Philadelphia and its vicinity have patronized—was: "I enclose you a copy of the notice which we have posted in our smoking-rooms on the subject of gambling. (Passengers are requested to refrain from gambling, and from objectionable language, and from any practice that may interfere with the comfort of those for whose use this room is provided.) In addition to this, our employes on shipboard have instructions to watch and stop anything in the nature of professional gambling. Further than this it is impossible to go. My own experience is that gambling on ocean steamships is much less frequent and for less amount than at any time in the past."

Unhappily for the worth of the foregoing conclusion, however, it was publicly stated by very nearly the time it was written that "the Atlantic liners are hotbeds of gambling," "an instance in point being given concerning part of a saloon company who "played 'bridge' for six days for seven or eight hours, as the weather permitted. They rarely went outside of the saloon, and the moment the tables were cleared after a meal they sat down until they had to make way for the next repast."

Whether it be common "poker" or "crap" in the smoking room, or "bridge whist," "progressive euchre," or pools on the ship's run, in the saloon, the gambling feature is all the same, and all are alike morally dangerous. The New York correspondent of the Public Ledger, referring the other day to the somewhat belated arrival of one of the largest of the great liners, alluded to the fact that "interest in the progress of the liner was unusually great and the pools on the run were very large. On one day five hundred dollars was in the pool." I know not whether it was in the smoking-room or the saloon, that an emigrant, going back to Europe after a few years with several hundred dollars in his pocket, where-with to bring his wife and children to the home he had made for them here, ventured all his hard earnings at the card table, and, losing them all, threw himself into the sea.

The Episcopal bishop of Manchester last year, referring to his experience in Australia, as well as in England, said: "One great evil was increasing rapidly—the horrible curse of gambling; and the increase appeared to be especially among women—a most terrible symptom." A lady in the Midlands, who had a very large sabbath-school class in the hat-making district, after a time discovered that the one subject of interest among the girls themselves was horse-racing. In individual talks she found that every young woman in her class above twenty years of age, and most of those below it, betted continually.

Let us felicitate ourselves with the thought that we are no such betters and gamblers as are the people of Britain, let us look very briefly at the facts. In Waltham, Massachusetts, some time ago, the scandal of the public whist parties became so great, that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union implored the Mayor to use his authority to protect their homes from the scourge. That official, having declared that the offense of the boy who bets ten cents in a pool room, and is arrested for gambling, is no greater than that of the whist dealer of "society," said that "the thing must stop." Similarly, in Memphis, only last month, pursuant to the stirring request of the Committee of Public Safety upon this very evil, the Mayor was moved to make the following sober statement and appeal to the women of that Southern city:

"It has been the experience of the police that most defalcations are not the result of gambling in regular gaming places, but of the 'gentlemen games.' These gentlemen can help the authorities by refraining from this habit, and thus set an example to the ignorant, who play for nickels and dimes, where the gentlemen play for dollars.

"The ladies, too, can help. Let them desist from offering valuable prizes on games of chance.

"The gambler often says to the police that it is hollow mockery to arrest him for risking a nickel, while 'society' is permitted to play for cut-glass and other articles worth many dollars. These ladies have it in their power to make or mar the life of the male child of the family."

The subject I leave in quoting, with feelings of exceeding sorrow, the following item of news from my daily paper of to-day, concerning a prize list at a near-by summer resort—the long party of the women participants being given: "Another large progressive euchre party was given this morning by guests at ———, handsome prizes being awarded from the proceeds." Was Christosom wrong when he said—"Not God, but the devil, found out play"—the play of chancing for prizes. Is the Christian religion we profess rightly recognized and honored in any house, public or private, where playing for prizes is permitted?

JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

ROOUNCY, Eighth Month 12th, 1904.

Putting Heart In It.

The customer was a prudent matron from the country, careful in her shopping.

"It's a pretty piece of goods," she said, "and just the color I want; but I am afraid it will not wash."

One of the shoppings behind the counter bowed indifferently and turned away. The other said, eagerly, "Are you going to another part of the store? For it is my lunch hour, and I will take a sample to the basement and wash and dry it for you before you come back."

The color of the fabric proved to be fast, and the customer bought it and asked the name of the obliging shoppings. A year afterward she was again in the same store, and on inquiry learned that the girl was at the head of the department.

"She put as much life into her work as ten other women," said the manager.

One of the most prominent business men of New York said once, "I have always kept a close watch on my employees, and availed myself of any hint which would show me which of them possessed the qualities requisite for success for themselves and usefulness to me."

"One day, when I was passing the window of the counting room, I observed that the moment the clock struck six all of the clerks, with but one exception, laid down their pens, though in the middle of a sentence, and took up their hats. One man alone continued writing. The others soon passed out of the door. "Petit," said one, "has waited to finish his paper, as usual."

"Yes. I called to him to come on, but he said that if this was his own business he would finish the paper before he stopped work."

"The more fool he! I would not work for a company as for myself."

"The men caught sight of me and stopped talking, but after that I kept my eye on Petit, who worked after hours on my business," because he would have done it on his own, and he is now my junior partner."—Youth's Companion.

Few mercies call for more thankfulness than a friend safe in Heaven. It is not every-one that overcometh.—J. Hamilton.

ARE there any bitters for the Christian? Doubtless there are, but these spring not from religion but self.

FOR "THE FRIEND" Faithfulness in Early Rudiments the Basis of the Larger Spiritual Life.

BY MORTON F. COGGESHALL.*

"And he said unto him, if they bear not Moses and the prophets neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." Luke xvi-31.

There are fundamental truths under the power of which the world has always moved and lived and had its being. Their influence upon the destiny of man has been and is as irresistible as the flood that pours over the edge of Niagara. Man having for so many ages been subjected to the moulding processes of these truths is almost unconscious of the tone given thereby to his thoughts, fears, and hopes. Even when tempted to deny them he cannot but recognize their firm hold on the moral nature and the conviction irritates him to a more open rejection of the fact. In these words of Father Abraham will be found one of these great truths. It has always dominated the human judgment and no appeal from its decisions has ever been attempted without failure. So profound and solemn is the truth embodied in these words that it would not be strange if one questioned the wisdom of a layman's attempting its analysis. Yet I believe it is good for us at times to ponder and endeavor to work out some great question even though the answer to it be fraught with momentous consequences. We discover here a law as permanent and far reaching in its effects as the law of gravitation. It touches every phase of life. It influences the character of the child as it does that of the old man. No condition is exempt from its power. Rich and poor, learned and ignorant, the weak-minded and those of vigorous intellect are all subject to its control. It is the law that affects particularly the development of the conscience. It deals with the vision of the soul, the purity of the heart, the firmness of the will, the clearness of the intellect.

The desire for self indulgence wages a continual and malignant warfare against its authority but can in no wise escape its penalties. It is the law of growth in godness through obedience to God's revealed will. It never permits the obliteration of the past history of a man's life. His spiritual tendencies depend very largely upon the record of his thoughts and purposes in days that are gone.

There is no such thing as an sudden fall from holiness to gross sin, it is always a gradual process. Only a step at a time is permitted for progress in virtue or vice. In the tenth verse of this chapter we will find the same truth, "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much, and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much."

The solemn lesson that these words would teach is that of our responsibility for the use of opportunities given us. The degree of faithfulness to known duties is the measure of capacity for greater ones. It is a sad truth that the demand for more light is too often but an effort to conceal the disobedience to light already possessed. The attitude of the mind that refuses to acknowledge divine truth as voiced by Moses and the prophets is one to welcome the grace of Jesus Christ. "Then he said unto them O fools and a of heart to believe all that the prophets h spoken. Ought not Christ to have suffe these things and to enter into His glory? beginning at Moses and all the prophets expounded unto them in all the scriptures things concerning himself."

"Then the Spirit said unto Philip, go on and join thyself to this chariot. And Ph ran thither to him and heard him read prophet Esaias, and said, understandest t what thou readest? And he said, How c except some man should guide me? And desired Philip that he would come up and with him. The place of the scripture wh he read was this: He was led as a shee the slaughter and like a lamb dumb be his shearers so opened he not his mouth. his humiliation his judgment was taken a and who shall declare his generation? fo life is taken from the earth. And the en answered Philip and said I pray thee of w speakest the prophet this? of himself or some other man? Then Philip opened mouth and began at the same scripture preached unto him Jesus."

"God, who at sundry times and in di manners spake in time past unto the fat by the prophets, hath in these last days spo unto us by his Son, whom He hath appoin heir of all things, by whom also He made worlds."

If we cannot hold in our hearts the t that God moves in a mysterious way his v ders to perform, we will soon drift into habit of questioning all his dealings with and refuse to accept His simple word of c mand.

From this doubting habit of the mind t naturally follows the presumption of deming more light when we have not faith used that already given. The soul grou in the faith that God knows far bette we possibly could what is necessary for true happiness, our prosperity and our dis line, will ever have an open ear for his v as he speaks through Moses and the prof Then the glorious triumph of the resurree of Christ will be but a natural sequenc to earlier manifestations of His power.

It is impossible that a child not taught in his earliest years to obey its parents grow up naturally into the habit of obedi to God's voice and a love for His comm ments. That temper of insubordination childhood is productive of the spirit of u lief in maturer years. This weakness lie the root of most of the discontent of life. insistence upon changed outward conditi before the Holy Spirit shall be made welc in the heart, is thoroughly destructive of simplicity necessary to the reception of truth of Christ. The dangers that the soul from this childish, peevish discor are as insidious as they are lamentable in the consequences. The loss of faith in a ger by an army is fatal to any success and banis all hope of victory. If the boy at schoo the young man at college has only cont for the learning of his instructors no adv in the acquirement of knowledge in that rection is possible.

(To be concluded.)

* A grandson of the eminent minister in our religions Society, Elizabeth Coggeshall, and one remaining in unity with our leading principles.

TEMPERANCE.

the matter under this heading is furnished by THE FRIEND on behalf of the "Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia," by Annie F. Whitson, 401 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

give us men!
 We like this demands of good minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands; whom the lust of office does not kill;
 whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
 who possess opinions and a will;
 who have honor; men who will not lie;
 who can stand before a demagogue scorn his treacherous flatteries without winking; men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog of public duty and in private thinking;
 while the rabble with their thumb-worn creeds,
 of large profession and their little deeds;
 who are in selfish strife, lo! freedom weeps,
 and the rules the land, and waiting justice sleeps.
 —J. G. Holland.

ANTI-PROHIBITION LITERATURE.—At the re-meeting of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York it is said, that the report of the Commission on the Protective Bureau received more attention than any other division of the work. It is plainly stated that "the object of the Bureau is to combat the prohibition idea." In carrying out this object the Bureau had during the year taken part in 290 elections and had successful in 214 of them; $23,000 had been spent in disseminating anti-prohibition literature, and the sentiment of the meeting was that this work should be pushed with redoubled energy the coming year. The liquor fraternity is aware that prohibition injures their business as does nothing else and they put forth their strongest efforts to combat it. They are keen enough to know that people are influenced by what they read, and accordingly they give them an abundance of anti-prohibition literature. If we are "children of light" we shall see to it that total abstinence and prohibition literature is freely distributed.—The Union Signal.

DESIRED PUBLICITY.—"Public records need not a monopoly," according to Judges Hart and Bittinger, of York City, Pa. The temperance people of the town have been fighting for the right to procure and publish the names of the signers to liquor license applications. Clerk of courts Weaver refused to allow copies of the names of the signers to be taken out of his office unless he was paid therefor. Judge Stewart demolished the argument that the name should not be furnished because it is intended to publish them in the newspapers and that the publication would injure the signers. With that proposition the clerk has nothing to do. "Who has constituted the clerk of the courts the guardian of the reputations of people who sign applications for liquor license?" asks Judge Stewart.

LOCAL OPTION AND DIRECT PRIMARIES IN OREGON.—In accordance with the Constitution of the State of Oregon, which provides for election by popular vote, known as initiative election, two bills were submitted to the voters of the State on the sixth of Sixth Month, and both were carried. They now have the force of law exactly as bills have which pass the Legislature. One law provides for a system of local option with regard to the sale of liquor. In any county or district composed of contiguous precincts, or in any precinct, by petition of ten per cent of the voters (in no case more than five hundred signatures being required), an election to decide for or against prohibition within the territory included in the petition shall be ordered. If the election results for prohibition, no change can be made within two years thereafter. If a county as a whole gives a majority against license no subdivision of the county, no town within the county, for instance, has the liberty of deciding in favor of license. On the other hand, if a county as a whole votes against prohibition, every subdivision voting for prohibition is entitled to have its vote enforced by the county court within the limits of that subdivision. The law goes so far even as to provide that "when prohibition has been carried at an election held for the entire county, no election on the question of prohibition shall be thereafter held in any subdivision or precinct thereof until after prohibition has been defeated at a subsequent election for the same purpose, held for the entire county." Similarly, prohibition carried in any subdivision cannot be abandoned by any included precinct without the vote of the subdivision as a whole. Although this law is called a local option law, it is really a combination of local option and prohibition. The Outlook advocates local option for two reasons: first, because no community has the moral right to force its own will upon another community in matters which concern the community alone; second, because in a self-governing community only those laws will be enforced which express the community's will. In certain respects this new law of Oregon violates both the principle and the policy of local option, for it enables a country community to force its will on a town or city, and it puts obstacles in the way of the community's reversal of its own judgment. Nevertheless, the law is in general a local option law, and promises to work in the interest of real temperance.—The Outlook.

IN MASSACHUSETTS, under the local option law, fifty-five per cent. of the population is under license and forty-five per cent. under prohibition. The fifty-five per cent. furnishes eighty per cent. of all the crime committed in the State. Of crimes other than drunkenness, the license cities and towns furnish eighty-five per cent. and the no-license fifteen per cent.—Christian Statesman.

KANSAS.—Out of the one hundred and five counties in the State, forty-four are without a pauper, and in thirty-seven counties there is not a criminal case on the court docket, while in twenty-five counties there are not enough poor to even attempt the maintenance of a poorhouse. Is there any license State that can show such a record?—Church Advocate.

NOTE: Situations similar to the above can be cited all over the country. Pennsylvania needs local option.

TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION IN THE PUBLIC

SCHOOLS.—"There is no disinterested person who has watched during the past twenty years the steady growth of public sentiment against the use of liquor and tobacco who has not been convinced that the right course was taken in introducing teaching on these subjects into elementary school work. Such an experiment takes time. For eight or ten years after this teaching began it had no apparent effect. Nothing is more noticeable in the last decade than the decrease in drinking. High license has come in. Legislation has done much. But these are only outer signs of a change of habit. As every observant man knows, there is far less drinking in American life than there was ten, twenty or thirty years ago. There is less drinking in business, less in politics, less at public dinners, less in social life and less treating. 'Soft drinks' have multiplied. Their use has increased.

"In every great city there are trolley parks and public resorts, such as encircle Philadelphia, where a vast concourse of people meet with all spirituous liquors wholly excluded. This would have been impossible twenty years ago.

"These changes are a great national advance. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has a right jealously to defend this teaching, after these widely visible marks of its success."—Phila. Press.

All these results are powerfully promoted by the scientific temperance instruction which is now given according to the laws of every State in the public schools. The report of the "Committee of Fifty" on the "Physiological Aspects of the Liquor Problem," which was published in Seventh Mo. of last year, and was briefly reviewed in the Third Mo., was adverse to the total abstinence views which are being inculcated in the schools. This report, however, has made small impression on the public mind, and the reply to it by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been regarded as an adequate answer. Of this reply 50,000 copies have been printed by the W. C. T. U. and it has been issued by Congress as a Government document, which will greatly assist its circulation.

THE SUBWAY TAVERN opened in the city of New York on Eighth Month 2nd, 1904, and formally dedicated by Bishop Henry C. Potter bids fair to be popular. Even a pretense of respectability, or the slightest degree of recognition from the church, gives magnified prestige to the saloon. It is encouraging, however, to note the overwhelming expression of condemnation, voiced by the press generally and by influential men throughout the land, of the act by which a professing minister of the gospel gave approval to an institution that is second to none as an obstacle to the growth of Christ's kingdom in the earth.

THE BISHOP OF NEW YORK.—Some years ago, Bishop Potter of the Episcopal church was an abstainer. He wrote pamphlets for the National Temperance Society, but like some other good men, he took to the bottle—and began to defend its use. A few years ago, returning from one of his trips to England, he brought a large quantity of whiskey. He tried to smuggle it through the custom house. The customs officers seized it and compelled the Bishop to pay $40 duty on the stuff. At that time, Potter was President of the Church Temperance Society. But the spectacle of their president attempting to smuggle in his own whiskey without paying duty on it was so distasteful to the brethren that they selected a new president at the first opportunity.

Bishop Potter has at last found his level—singing the doxology at the opening of saloons.—The New Voice.

"And they call Bishop Potter courageous. Why is it when a man goes out of the way to do things he should not do they call it courageous?"

"There is nothing behind the Subway Tavern but the dividend for the money invested. From the writing of a newspaper man who visited the saloon I learn that many young girls go there and drink intoxicating liquor for the first time in their lives. Any system of reform that means simply changing the conditions of sin is an ineffectual method."

So said Dr. Chas. Wood before an audience of several thousand people convened in open-air service at Lemon Hill, Philadelphia, Eighth Month 14th, 1904.

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"The conduct of Bishop Potter must give a distinct shock to the moral sense of all Christians."

The Indianapolis News says:

"Bishop Potter, or as he would rather have it, the Rt. Rev. Henry C. Potter, of New York City, and also of the Episcopal church, dedicated a saloon yesterday in New York.

"It is hardly worth while to follow the gentleman in his talk about 'old village taverns,' which he seeks to revive in this saloon. If he does not know that the 'old village tavern' of a century ago created and harbored more drunkenness than any modern saloon, he knows very little of history.

"Here is a case like the abolition of slavery. If the law did not forbid it so much the worse for the law. If the church does not set its face against drinking and the saloon so much the worse for the church."

The New York Sun says:

"The Bishop wants to do the poor man good; but, naturally enough, he is ignorant of the liquor saloon business. Actually, its least need is of such attractiveness to custom as he imagines is required. The saloon is too attractive already, in view of its enemies, for the seductions it offers are increased the more inviting it is made."

The following mention of a sermon delivered by Thomas Scattergood at Ratcliff Meeting, England, is copied from a letter received from a Friend whose mother was a member of that meeting and heard the sermon:

"Open all the doors, dear Friends, I've a message for you!"

And the people poured in.

"A great calamity is close upon you," he continued; and exhorted them to be prepared.

On that very night, the writer thinks, a fire at Ratcliff broke out, burning street after street, 700 houses and their's among them, and she and her sister were carried away in a cart to a safe place.

John Glaisyer.

John Glaisyer was born near Kye, in Sussex, in the year 1739, and was educated by his parents as a member of the Church of England.

About the twentieth year of his age, he became dissatisfied with the forms and ceremonies to which he had been accustomed; and, after attending the meetings of several other religious societies, without finding that solid comfort which his soul longed for, he and a few others separated themselves from all forms of worship, and met on First-days on the rocks by the seaside. In these secluded approaches before the throne of grace, they were frequently refreshed by the presence of Him who has declared, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

He was admitted as a member of the Society of Friends in the year 1769. At this time, the discipline in the parts where he resided, was in a very low state; but he soon found it to be his place to endeavor to put in practice our salutary rules for the promotion and establishment of good order. He manifested a fervent concern, both by his example, and exhortations to his friends, that the important business of our meetings for discipline should be transacted under the influence of the Holy Spirit. When about forty-seven years of age, he first spoke as a minister in our religious meetings. His communications were not frequent, and he was very cautious of interrupting the solemnity of true silent worship; indeed his friends were ready to apprehend that his diffident mind sometimes gave way to too much discouragement, and that this commendable care was carried too far. But when he was strengthened to impart counsel, he was clear and sound; his words few and impressive, inviting others to come and taste, and see for themselves that the Lord is good. He was often concerned that all might experience a secret exercise of mind, and in true, inward silence, become worshippers of the Father in Spirit and in truth. He endeavored to discharge his religious and relative duties as becometh a true Christian; and, at a period of life when he was necessarily engaged in the cares of business, it was his practice frequently to call his family together to wait upon the Almighty. In these opportunities, he was often enabled to impart sweet counsel; and there is reason to believe that his faithfulness, in this respect, was blessed to himself and others. He was a striking example of circumspection of conduct, and watchfulness over his words and actions, jealous of himself, and tender of exposing the failings or weaknesses of others; yet faithful in offering private reproof or counsel, when duty required it of him. And although but little known beyond the limits of the Quarterly Meeting to which he belonged it may be truly said that his light shone with brightness in his own neighborhood.

Some time before his decease, he had several paralytic attacks, which affected both his bodily and mental faculties; yet, at intervals, his judgment was clear and sound. At these times he was often engaged in fervent supplication, that he might be preserved both in word and deed, from any thing that would cause the way of Truth to be lightly spoken of; manifesting that his hope and trust were in redeeming love. The love of God in Christ

Jesus was a subject on which he delighted dwell from his youth; and when he had free use of his faculties, this seemed to be anchor of his soul, and that of which he was desirous that others should become partakers.

He died the eighteenth of the Fourth Month 1813, at the age of seventy-three.

Science and Industry.

Santa Rosa, Cal., has a Baptist meeting house which is built entirely of timber sawed out of a single redwood tree. No plaster, bricks or mortar were used in the construction of the building. The roofing was made of shingles sawed from the same tree. The building seats two hundred people.

A boy watched a large building as the workmen from day to day carried up brick and mortar. "My son," said his father, "seem much interested in the bricklayers. You think of learning the trade?"

"No," he replied, "I was thinking how little thing a brick is, and what houses built by laying one brick upon another."

GROUPING OF ANIMALS.—An exchange of the generally-accepted terms of the various groups of animals and birds as follows:

"A herd of swine, a skulk of foxes, a pack of wolves, a drove of oxen or cattle, a pound of hogs, a troop of monkeys, a pride of lions, a sleuth of bears, a band of horses, a herd of ponies, a covey of partridges, a nide of pheasants, a wisp of snipe, a school of whales, a shoal of herrings, a run of fish, a figh dover, a muster of peacocks, a siege of herds, a building of rooks, a brood of grouse, a sw of bees, gnats, flies, etc., a stand of plow, a watch of nightingales, a cast of hawk, a flock of geese, sheep, goats, etc., a bev, girls, a galaxy of stars, and a crowd of or boys.

EATING IN OLDEN TIMES.—The Romans their meals while lying upon very low couches and not until the time of Charlemagne were stand around which guests were seated on cushions, while the table did not make appearance till the Middle Ages, bringing it benches with backs. The Greeks and Romans ate from a kind of porringer. During a tion of the Middle Ages, however, slice bread cut round took the place of plates. spoon is of great antiquity, and many s mens are in existence that were used by Egyptians as early as the seventeenth century B. C. The knife, though very old, did come into common use as a table utensil after the tenth century. The fork was lutely unknown to both Greeks and Romans appeared only as a curiosity in the Middle Ages, and was first used at the table by E III. Drinking cups—in the Middle Ages from metal more or less precious, according to the owner's means—date from the rem ages.

It is not generally known that the science world is indebted to Japan for three new discoveries for the saving of human life. Japanese bacteriologist, Kitasato, discovered the bacillus of lockjaw, which fact led to discovery of antitoxin, which is regularly as a preventive of the disease. Another scientist, Shiga, has isolated the bacillus sentry. It is hoped that this will result antioxin which will be to this disease vaccination is to smallpox. The third virus is the most remarkable of the three, as that there are in the human body or-called the adrenal glands. A Japanese list, Takamine, extracted from these glands ular substance known as adrenalin, now used in the practice of medicine. It is most powerful of all chemical agents for ting hemorrhages of any kind, no matter located, and frequently saves lives where al bleeding takes place which can be ed in no other manner.

SEA BIRDS GET A DRINK.—“When I a cabin boy,” said an elderly sailor, “I used to wonder, seeing birds thousands les out to sea, what they did for fresh when they got thirsty.

One day a squall answered that question. It was a hot and glittering day in tropics, and in the clear sky overhead a rain cloud appeared all of a sudden. Then the empty space, over a hundred sea came darting from every direction, got under the rain cloud and they waited for about ten minutes, circling round and, and when the rain began to fall, they to their fill.

In the tropics, where the great sea birds thousands of miles away from shore, they drinking water in that way. They out a storm a long way off; they travel dreds miles, maybe, to get under it, and swallow enough raindrops to keep them.”—Portland Oregonian.

THE SIZE AND MOVEMENTS OF GLACIERS.—x of sections bigger than Rhode Island torn from a glacier and swept off in the to be ferried three thousand miles on osom of the Labrador current until the ed waters of the Gulf Stream cause them ish from human ken! Then can one form idea of the immensity of the ice area arged from the Greenland seas each year. sands of miles of valley are constantly ying their contents into the bays and of the north waters whence the tides y the detachments southward to cumber ide Atlantic.

The disposition of icebergs to turn turtle is of their most dangerous propensities. It is from several causes. When they start from Greenland their bottoms are heavy the detritus gathered in their glacial pend this drops off at intervals as they move , causing their center of gravity to change the berg to assume new positions. The tific theory of the formation of the vast marine plateaus which extend from Labrao Fundy is that they are the deposits of rgs.

SUBSTITUTE FOR MEAT.—Since the Japanese, tically vegetarians, are to-day giving to world a striking demonstration of what be done by a singularly abstemious people isting on non-flesh diet.

Meat eating is a fashion—not very cleanly, very human, not very safe, unbecomful, nsive. But it is very much a fashion, and the painstaking housewife will feel most un-comfortable when she finds all the butchers in town keeping closed doors, and will wonder what she can possibly get in place of meat.

The legumes, peas, beans and lentils contain all the elements of food that are found in meat, but are free from the uric acid, zathins, creatin and other poisonous substances with which each morsel of meat is loaded. A dish of peas or beans used in place of the inveterate steak or chop will satisfy the appetite, feed bones, muscles and nerve, and leave one entirely free from the heavy, full feeling, perhaps accompanied by slight dizziness, that so often follows the free eating of flesh.

Then there are also milk, cream, cheese and eggs, all thorough substitutes for meat, all capable of being prepared in many pleasing and palatable forms, all convenient and cheap. Lastly, there are the nuts; although they, of course, are now out of season. Yet prepared nut foods can be obtained which are attractive, palatable and excellent foods.

Beans, with baked potato, spinach, salad of plain lettuce; or an omelet, boiled rice, potatoes hashed and browned with cheese salad, lentil soup, macaroni with cream, mixed salad (lettuce, cucumber, tomato, pepper, perhaps onion—all raw), boiled beets—all of these and many others will occur to one; and any one of them with fruit and some sort of breadstuff, Graham, whole wheat, gluten or ordinary bread with butter, will make a meal that is at once palatable, wholesome and not difficult of preparation.

Many people, especially among men, will at first find such a meal rather light. They will at first miss the stimulant effect of meat. But a few repetitions of this will determine its superiority, especially in warm weather. For heavy foods generally, and especially meat, are heating and discomforting to a degree which custom allows us to tolerate. Let the perplexed housewife pluck up courage. A week or two of vegetarianism in summer is a very salutary and educational experience.—Health Culture.

Items Concerning the Society.

On First-day, Eighth Month 21st, Job S. Gidley was accompanied by J. H. Dillingham and wife to North Dartmouth Meeting, Massachusetts, and in the afternoon to an appointed meeting held at the old “bicentennial” meeting-house at Apponegan-sett; and afterwards they visited Job S. Gidley’s mother, near by, who became one hundred years old on the day before. Some particulars will be given in our next.

By a letter of Joseph James Neave, not seen by the editor till now, we are informed of the passing away of his mother, Jane Davy, at Sydney, Australia, on the twenty-seventh of Eleventh Month, in her eighty-eighth year. “THE FRIEND was her favorite periodical, and up to about a month of her close, I believe, she read nearly all its contents regularly as it came to hand. A Friend by conviction, though never enjoying much intercourse with them, she was much shut up within herself, and very few, if any, really understood the inner depths of her soul. As Whittier puts it, “She loved the good old ways; and had great faith in the future of our principles. This was practically shown in the building of our new meeting-house, which was opened last Ninth Month. She urged that we should make it large enough, as she believed we should want it, (giving us 700 pounds towards it) and advising Friends not to sell an unused piece of an old buying ground ten miles from the city, as we might need it for a meeting-house.”

Notes in General.

A little more than fifty years ago the following was an official warning in Japan: “So long as the sun shall continue to warm the earth let no Christian be so bold as to come to Japan, and let it be known that if the King of Spain himself . . . shall violate this law, he shall pay for it with his head.” To-day there is in that country a Christian church membership of 50,000.

Every letter from Japan brings assurance that the commotion caused by the war with Russia, so far from closing avenues of approach by Christian missionaries to the people, only makes those avenues more open. The people are listening as never before to Christian truth. Naturally they are sobered by the fearful slaughter of their soldiers, but this makes them more ready to respond to spiritual appeals, and the way is open to impart the message of the gospel through many new channels.

Elihu Root, recently Secretary of War, who has returned to the practice of law in New York City, has engaged a new office boy. On inquiring of the boy what had become of certain things, the boy would reply that “Mr. Reilly” or “Mr. Lantz” had put them away, Elihu Root wheeled about and looked at the boy. “See here, James,” he said, “we call men by their first names here. We don’t “muster” them in this office. Do you understand?” “Yes, sir.” In ten minutes the door opened and a small, shrill voice said: “There’s a man here as wants to see you, Elihu?”—Nashville Banner.

“The pulpit is no place to parade one’s doubts,” says the Presbyterian. “People come to it for certitude. They get enough of doubts outside of it. All through the week they find them in books, newspapers, magazines and conversation. When they cross the threshold of the sanctuary, they want something that will confirm faith, inspire hope, give comfort, help in the battle of life and fit for heaven. A positive, assured faith is one of the great needs of the hour. Preachers should be the known exponents of it in their teaching, as well as the best representatives of it in their everyday lives.”

“The change that has been going on for many years in the religious thought and life in Japan has been particularly marked during the past year. In a recent address to young men, Count Okuma (who was at one time prime minister, and is still one of the leading statesmen of the country) said: “It is a question whether we have not lost moral fibre as the result of the many new influences to which we have been subjected. Development has been intellectual and not moral. The efforts which Christians are making to supply to the country a high standard of conduct are welcomed by all right-thinking people. As you read the Bible you may think it is antiquated, out of date. The words it contains may so appear, but the noble life which it holds up to admiration is something that will never be out of date, however much the world may progress. Live and preach this life and you will supply to the nation just what it needs at the present juncture.” In an address at Tokio, Baron Maje-jima (a former member of the cabinet) said: “I firmly believe we must have religion as the basis of our national and personal welfare. No matter how large an army or navy we may have, unless we have righteousness as the foundation of our national existence we shall fall short of the highest success. I do not hesitate to say that we must have religion for our highest welfare. And when I look about me to see what religion we may best rely upon, I am convinced that the religion of Christ is the one most full of strength and promise for the nation."

TEMPTATIONS OF DRESS.—There is in the city of New York an institution called the Alliance Employment Bureau, affiliated with the New York Association of Working Girls' Societies. The lady who is its superintendent ought in the nature of the case to know a good deal about country girls who come to New York to support themselves by work. Certainly she has contributed a very interesting statement to the New York Tribune. But that to which we specially call attention is a judgment as to the temptation which comes in the way of such girls:

The most insidious form of temptation to such girls, as to all working girls in New York, is the display of luxury. They get glimpses of a style, a grade of living and expenditure of money that are almost overwhelming. It makes them restless, dissatisfied and pessimistic. Especially is this true with regard to dress. I believe the excessive dressing of New York women is responsible for many, many downfalls among working girls. In no city that I have ever seen do the women dress as they do in New York. Nobody has a "Sunday dress" any more, content to go in plain clothes when they don't have it on. Everybody wears the best she has every time she goes down town. There is a spick and spanness, a style, a trimness, about the dress of the women of New York, as a whole, that you don't see elsewhere, and it all means expense. I have friends who live much in Florence. That is the most fashionable city in Italy, with large American and English contingents. Yet they tell me they wear all the time their clothes in which they would not dare appear in New York.

And then rich women constantly sweep through the shopping district, gowned like queens, dwarfing and beggaring the appearance of all ordinarily dressed women. All these effects can be got in cheaper materials, but the cheaper materials themselves are beyond the means of the working girls.

I believe it requires more character for girls in stores to keep straight than for any other class of workers. They are brought in contact with every change in style. They are all the time handling the beautiful fabrics and seeing the magnificently gowned women. This seems a very petty and sordid reason, no doubt. But when we see how women are judged by their clothes and treated according to their dress, it is not surprising that weak minds are affected by it. If you don't think so, follow some regally gowned woman through a big store some day and see what attention you get compared with her.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A recent despatch says the Connecticut Peace Congress adopted resolutions requesting President Roosevelt to use his good offices to induce Russia and Japan to refer their differences to the Hague Court of Arbitration and urging President Roosevelt "to take decisive steps to put a stop to the lawless and warlike conditions existing in Colorado with the connivance of Governor Peabody and the military authorities."

In a recent address Secretary Taft stated that in the Philippines upward of 200,000 children are enrolled in the schools, with about 75,000 in the higher schools. The plan is to prepare 10,000 Filipino teachers to teach in English all the necessary branches, and if the plan is not departed from this object will be accomplished in less than ten years.

A despatch from Washington of the 23rd ult. says: Reports received by the Department of Labor of the receipt of live stock from Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis and St. Joseph, the five principal markets, show the effect of the packing house strike. Comparing the Seventh Month, 1904, with the same month of last year, there was a decrease in the number of live cattle received at the five points named of more than 1,000,000. The receipts in Seventh Month, 1903, were 2,620,046 head, and in Seventh Month of this year 1,554,451 head. Cattle receipts fell off 42 per cent; calves, 54; hogs, 39; sheep, 40, and horses and mules, 9.

A recently published article by the Health Department of Chicago says that "no such healthful summer as this of 1904 appears on record in the history of Chicago." Absolutely pure water is the principal factor contributing to this result.

The Reading Railway Co. has lately put into service a new trolley on electric locomotives to the Cape May, Delaware and Seaside Ferry Road. It is intended for freight trains, and if successful in operation it is said that others will follow.

The Agricultural Department at Washington has issued a circular in which it is explained that cold storage at a proper temperature improves certain products up to a certain point. Such is the case with fresh meat, poultry and fruits. There are other food products which are not improved by cold storage of any temperature, such as fish,ysters and eggs. The Department is desirous of obtaining information as to how long bodies of this kind can be kept in cold storage without materially lessening their nutritive value, or impairing to any appreciable extent their wholesomeness.

A despatch from New York of the 28th ult. says: Professor W. P. Dunbar has produced a serum for the cure of hay fever. He says that in the United States hay fever is chiefly spread by an albuminous poison in the pollen of golden rod, ragweed and rye grass. Only certain persons are subject and they are usually brain workers. There is some nervous connection, not yet fully understood, between brain fatigue and the weakening of the membranes which hay fever attacks. Americans are especially subject to it—the high pressure of American life, I suppose. My remedy is a toxin, prepared like other toxins, by injecting the poisonous matter into horses.

FOREIGN.—Desperate fighting has continued at Port Arthur. It is stated that 28,000 Japanese troops have been killed since the beginning of the siege. On the 22nd ult. the Japanese discontinued their attacks and the bombardment of Port Arthur was suspended.

Two Russian warships, the Askold and Grozovi lately entered the port of Shanghai to complete repairs. Japan vigorously objected to such use of a neutral port, and was reported to have ordered a fleet to proceed to Shanghai, enter the harbor and capture both vessels unless China enforced a demand that both ships should be allowed to leave the harbor. The czar to disarm the Russian vessels was received in time to prevent serious results which might have involved China.

In a recent discussion of the crisis in cotton before the British Association meeting in Cambridge, Eng. it was stated that according to estimates no less than 1,000,000 pecks of that country were more or less dependent upon the cotton trade.

Emperor Nicholas has issued a manifesto on the birth of an heir to the throne, which abolishes corporal punishment among the rural classes and for first offenses among the sea and land forces; remits arrears owing to the State for the purchases of land and other objects; imposes; sets apart $1,500,000 from the State funds for the purpose of forming an inalienable fund for the landless people of Finland; grants amnesty to those Finlanders who have emigrated without authorization; remits the fines imposed upon the rural and urban communities of Finland, and is referred to admit to military conscription in 1902 and 1903, and also remit the fines imposed upon the Jewish communities in the cases of Jews avoiding military service. The manifesto provides for a general reduction in sentences for common law offenses, while a general amnesty is accorded in the case of all political offenses, with the exception of those in which blood has been shed.

The British Premier Balfour lately stated to a deputation of the London Chamber of Commerce that he had been informed by Ambassador Benckendorff that the Russian Government had ascertained that the Russian war vessels, Smolensk and St. Petersburg had not received the orders sent in accordance with the recent agreement concerning the treatment of neutral ships. Therefore, in accordance with the suggestion of the British Government, the Russian Government had authorized Great Britain to assist in locating and notifying the cruisers. In consequence the British Government had received two cruisers from the Cape of Hope to proceed immediately to the Cape and locate the Smolensk and her consort, the St. Petersburg, and convey to them the instructions from the Russian Government to desist from further interference with neutral commerce.

Snow is reported to have fallen in the Alps and also on the plains of Lombardy on the 25th ult.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

Hannah Hoyle, O.; Ann Eliza W. Doudna, F; Frances Garrett, G't'n; Barclay R. Leeds, P $10 for himself; 2 copies Wm. E. Feltus, Dan Leeds and Wm. H. Leeds; Nathan Pearson, J; Annah Stanton, Ind.; Jos. J. Hopkins, Pa.; an Susanna Brinton; Lucy R. Tatum, Del.; Benj Coppelock, Agt., Iowa, $17.30, for Lydia Ham $1.30, David Sears, Ruth Edmundson, Elma Heald, Benj. Briggs, Admah Spencer, David Lowrey, James E. Hodge, James H. Hodge; Beardsley for Mary C. Beardsley, N. Y.; Sui T. Haight, Agt., Canada, for Stephen Rogers, Isaac Kiteley; Newlin Carter, Ind.; William A. Neb, J.; Mary W. Carslake, N. J.; Thomas Douglas, Florida, $4; R. Nicholson, New Jersey for Sarah Nichol, Rebecca N. Taylor, H. Read, Hannah J. Prickett and Louisa W. Heac Isaiah Pemberton, Ohio, to No. 13, V. 79; W. W. Trimble, Penna.; Elizabeth S. Brinton, F; George Forsythe, Pa.; Margaret J. Scott, Pa.; C. Wright, N. J.; Wm. L. Bailey, Agt., Pa.; $10 Lydia C. Emce, Phillips S. Yarnall, Geo. B. McEnos E. McPherran, Edward Brinton; Seth S. Agt., O., $18 for Phoebe Ellyson, J. K. Black J. H. Edgerton, Abner I. Hall, W. M. Hall, I. nah Blackburn, N. M.; Blackburn, Charles Bl. burn and Gulehna Neill; Jess Negus, Agt., $12 for Elias Crew, Mary M. Edmondson, Fete Peterson to New York, Ind.; James H. Wood, M. Knudson and Archibald Crosbie; Ole T. 5, yer, Ia., $13 for himself, John Knudson, Iver O. Sigbjorn T. Rosdale, Anna T. Tostenson and H. Bryngleson, 53; Clinton E. Hampton, F; Kans., for Elizabeth Hoyle and William D. Sn Isaac Hancock, Pa.; Margaret A. Masters, Pa. No. 14; Mary Kneeland, Ind.; James H. Wood, $5 for himself, Everett Moon and W. M. M. D.; Charles Lippincott, G't'n; H. M. S. Jor, Pa.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Young woman Friend student wishes work out of $6 hours in Philadelphia for the winter, by which she earns board and lodging.

Address "L."

Office of THE FRIEND

William B. Harvey has been appointed Agent for FRIEND, in the place of Clarkson Moore, released a own request. Address, West Grove, Pa.

A woman Friend, who attended the late Quarterly Meeting at Media, Pa., reports the loss of a black union parasol, with loop handle and black tassel on handle. Information may be sent to The Matron, Barclay H West Chester, Pa.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Ninth Street, P. O.

On and after Ninth Month 1st, 1904, the Library be open on week-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 7 P. M. to 6 P. M.

Westtown Boarding School.—The school opens on Third-day, Ninth Month 13th, 1904. News letters should arrive at the school before noon, or at the afternoon as possible. Trains leave Broad St. Station, Philadelphia, for Westtown, at 7.16, 8.18, 1 A. M.; 1.32, 2.50, 3.46, 4.32 P. M., and later. Part will kindly send word to the school beforehand, if child are obliged to take a train later than the 4.32 P. M. W. P. WICKENZAK, Principal, Westtown, P.

Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting will be at Haddonfield, N. J., Ninth Month 15th, 1904. Train leave Market St. for Ferry at 9 o'clock; Haddon Avenue, 9.28; Haddonfield, 9.28; Marlton, 9.40, arrive Medford at 9.50. Returning, leave Medford at 2.05 5.10 P. M.

The Meeting of Ministers and Elders of this Quarterly Meeting will be held on Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 10th, 1904, at Haddonfield in the Third and Ninth Months, and at Moers in the Sixth and Twelfth Months.

DIED, on the twenty-second of Seventh Month, at Haddonfield, JOHN BELL, of San Jose, California, passed away peacefully in his seventy-fifth year, after short but painful illness.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

DL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 10, 1904.

No. 9.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.
Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.
Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by
EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.
The office is at Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.
Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to
JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.
Published as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"A Sensation-Ridden People."
This book on "Success among Nations," by Dr. Reich points out as chief among the causes of American peril the mental and moral degeneracy of American men and women. The American woman, as he observes her, is going down through over-mentalization, through the cultivation of a "fierce energy," that "culminates finally in her absolute physical breakdown." The American man, in his eagerness for "natural completeness." His development is far too rapid. He lacks a well-ordered emotional life, and this renders him incapable of applying all his heart or all his strength to any one thing for any considerable period of time. He is, indeed, sensation-ridden to an extreme, and his individuality is not well developed.

In support of Dr. Reich's view the Independence instances "such horrors of savagery as recent Georgia lynchings," and asks if such could occur in a community emotionally unbalanced, calmly rational, clear visioned; it takes notice that in the Northern states the wide regions are populated by nominally civilized beings that are capable upon the slightest provocation of giving themselves over to a murderous frenzy."

"The millions of dollars that pour into the street promotion offices, in response to the advertisements," that one could "see in a moment if he were not too sensation-ridden to think." Also the "scare-heads of American newspapers" though no one best them to be truthful; the theatres that are crowded night after night, where "true drama" is debased by spectacular shows, overdone melodrama and the vaudeville. Further America has the credit of being "the center of sensational preaching in the churches, and of the most artistic religious experiments, of absurd tricks of political campaigning," and of a development of advertising which does not comport with sound emotional and intellectual conditions. And this sentence concludes the arraignment: "In the increasing disregard of law, in the disorders accompanying the struggles between labor and capital, in the indifference to a corruption of politics and justice by an unscrupulous commercialism, we are perhaps reaping fruits of sensationalism more deadly than foreign war or domestic rebellion."

Yet in making this last comparison the writer could not have estimated the deadliness of the fruits our "domestic rebellion, or foreign war" manifesting themselves in this very sensationalism which is our disease. It is usual to bear the period of the civil war given as the date of the uprising of quickly gotten wealth and of unscrupulous speculation; and of the latter day beginning of the sensationalism of blood spilling, which became thirsty for a Spanish war, and then hungry for empire and for domination over peoples of darker skin; and now our daily feeding on the horrors and slaughters of the awful tragedy in the East enhances the sensationalism of blood shedding which finds expression in almost any available pretext for lynching. The war-spirit is naturally prolific of all these things, in a people already prone enough to emotional life through climatic conditions and the enthusiasms incident to a new and free country.

When the religious nature is involved in these same conditions of American excitability and liberty, sometimes astounding havoc is made of what is called the liberty of the Spirit. Within the ranks of Quakerism,—which would be by being still, know the Lord, and so discriminate between being drunk with the wine of sensation and being filled with the Spirit,—we should expect if anywhere the nation to behold an example of Christ-controlled sanity. But in sections of country where an enthusiasm for liberty and progress has overcome the patience of waiting on the Lord for the secret witness for Truth to make free indeed, the "liberty of the Spirit" has not always been patiently distinguished from the "license of the creature." On this very week of our present writing, scenes occurred at a so-called Friends' camp-meeting, within a mile of where we were, where what had seemed to some the sublime effect of the sermons delivered, was turned to the ridiculous at last by a preacher prostrating himself on the floor of the platform, so that the aspect of a crawling animal broke the spell in which some had been held. But there might be junctures when some single exhibition of an extravagance would operate at once as a red-flag, to startle the already surcharged emotions of a crowd into explosive demonstrations. "Ministers" have in this way set mobs on fire to perform the mad work of lynchings. We desire true and earnest revivals, but let managers under our name well consider what is the difference between a crowd being "drunk with wine" and being "filled with the Spirit."

The deepening and composing effect of waiting in the silence of the flesh for "the true and holy witness" of the Spirit, has given Friends a name for stability, repose and balance of powers, fortitude and firmness in distracting situations, control of emotions that should not be our masters, deliverance from wildness of demeanor, and steadiness of authority under true enthusiasm from God. This attitude must remain our safeguard and remedy,—something deeper than the solution which our reviewer proposes when he says: "What this country needs above all things is a more patient and thorough-going intellectual life," and "to cultivate by means of all the resources of our educational organization a calmer, a more persistent, a more substantial rationality." But this control of well-ordered intellect must be from above itself, and by an indwelling with the spirit of the living Christ, "the word of faith which we preach."

JOHN ROBINSON, in his last sermon to the departing pilgrims at Leyden, said:

"I charge you before God and his blessed angels to follow me no further than I have followed Christ. And if God should reveal anything to you by any other instrument of his, may you be as ready to receive it as ever you were to receive any truth by my ministry. For I am very confident that the Lord has more truth and light yet to break forth out of his holy word."

But withal he exhorted us to take heed what we received for truth, and well to examine and compare and weigh it with other scriptures of truth, before we received it; for, saith he, it is not possible the Christian world should come so lately out of such thick anti-Christian darkness, and that full perfection of knowledge should break forth at once.—Brown's Pilgrim Fathers of New England.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 58.)

This conference was alluded to by the Committee in their report to the Yearly Meeting in 1810, and a portion of Red Jacket's speech was quoted.

The following notice of the character of this remarkable man, who for many years subsequent to this period continued to exert a great influence among his people, may be inserted here. It is the testimony of one who was well acquainted with him:

"Red Jacket was a perfect Indian in every respect, in costume, in his contempt of the white men, in his hatred and opposition to the missionaries, and in his attachments to, and veneration for, the ancient customs and traditions of his tribe. He had a contempt for the English language, and disdained to use any other than his own. He was the finest specimen of the Indian character I ever knew, and sustained it with more dignity than any other chief. He was the second in authority in his tribe. As an orator he was unequalled by any Indian I ever saw. His language was beautiful and figurative, as the Indian language always is, and delivered with the greatest ease and fluency. His gesticulation was easy, graceful and natural. His voice was distinct and clear, and he always spoke with great animation. His memory was very strong. I have acted as interpreter to most of his speeches, to which no translation could do adequate justice."

Notwithstanding his well-known opposition to the missionaries, there is reason to believe that his heart was secretly touched by the power of religion and the truths of Christianity. In an account published in the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser of James Stevenson, a worthy Christian Indian, who died on the Cataragus Reservation Twelfth Month 22nd, 1846, it is stated of him that "he was an intimate friend of Red Jacket, and it was to him that the celebrated chief, during the last journey which he ever made to the Genesee Reservation, communicated his intention of renouncing paganism, and embracing Christianity; and to him also, he reiterated on his death bed his convictions of the falseness and absurdity of the pagan system, and of the truth of the gospel." Red Jacket died First Month 20th, 1830, aged about seventy-eight years.

It may be interesting to note the condition at this time of the Brothertown, Stockbridge and Onondaga tribes in the central part of New York State. The following account of them is taken from a letter written by John Murray, Jr., of New York city, one of the Committee of New York Yearly Meeting who was interested in their welfare and who visited them in the summer of 1809. The letter is dated First Month 18th, 1810:

"We first called to see the Brothertown tribe, among whom our friend John Dean and family reside, whose endeavors to promote the concern of the Society, touching the civilization and welfare of the Indians, we think has been measurably successful, and we trust they are in a state of improvement—from thence we made an attempt to visit the Stockbridge tribe, but were prevented by the badness of the roads, which induced us to move on towards Oneida—here we tarried two nights, lodging with our Friends, Absalom and Ruth Hatfield, who are fixed among this tribe with a view to the promotion of their welfare. Although I have made three visits to this tribe in the course of fifteen years, yet I do not discover that improvement which might have been contemplated, from the labor bestowed upon them, both by your Yearly Meeting and ours. There are a number of them who refrain pretty much from the use of strong drink, and have made advancements in the cultivation of their lands, but generally speaking they are averse to labor, and do not seem much inclined to assume the habits of civilized life; though they possess a tract of country, which if improved might afford them a comfortable subsistence. We proceeded on to visit the Onondaga Indians, a small tribe, who have not claimed that attention on the part of Friends, that appeared to us, they had merited. They consist of about one hundred and sixty persons, men, women and children, they reside on a tract of land lying off about three miles from the turnpike road, consisting of twelve thousand acres—their countenances bespoken greater innocence and simplicity, than either of the other tribes, and no marvel when we were informed by the interpreter (who had resided twenty years among them) that for the nine years past, they had refrained from the use of ardent spirits, and that no temptations or arts used by their neighbors would prevail with them to deviate from a resolution which they had formed relative to the subject. They told us that it was the Great Spirit which had enabled them to take up that resolution, and he alone could inspire them with strength to keep it. This account of their sobriety appears to be confirmed by the corroborating testimony of their neighbors, so as to leave no doubts in our minds as to its correctness. Although this tribe has taken one great step towards a state of civilization, yet we did not find they were any further advanced than either of the others, in agriculture, or the arts of civilized life, they appeared to live very poor, though in the midst of a fine country. We were, however, very much prepossessed in favor of these Indians, and our visit to them, was not only a great deal more satisfactory than to either of the other tribes, but opened to a prospect of greater advantage, likely to result from the labor of Friends among them, than to those who have already had a good deal done for them, which appeared so to the Committee when we made our report—although I cannot undertake to relate all that we met with interesting among that people, (as it would exceed the usual limits prescribed to an epistolary correspondence) yet there is one circumstance connected with the remarkable change in the Onondagas that I cannot well forbear relating—it seems they have been ranked among the most fierce and intemperate of the savage tribes—insomuch, that without an exception, these were given up to a state of intoxication. Such being the character and conduct of this people, there appeared no encouragement to attempt to labor among them. They were, however, wonderfully aroused by the instrumentality of an Indian, said to be of the Seneca tribe, but who was also a great drunkard. Smoking his pipe, he suddenly back apparently dead, and in that situation remained some hours; on recovering from he related some extraordinary discoveries a supernatural nature—such as the appearance of angels reasoning with him on the wickedness of his life, particularly on account of his taciturnity to rum—that unless he left it ruin awaited him, as well as all his people were in that habit; he called a council of nation, and communicated to them what he termed a message from the Great Spirit. "I received it as such, and it made a deep impression on them. The Seneca himself: that time became a sober man, afterward religious character, and a preacher. His high estimation as to be called the prophet, the effect on the Onondagas wonderful, who immediately quit the use of spirituous liquors, and have kept to their integrity in that respect, so that there see prospect of usefulness from the extension of care towards that tribe."

(To be continued.)

Growing Idolatry of Military Glory.

Dr. H. van Dyke, Professor of Liter at Princeton University, U. S. A., in an address to the recent Pan-Presbyterian Convention "Christianity and Current Literature" described "three mischievous and tendencies in our modern world, of which the spirit of Christianity embodied sane and virile and lovable literature as much to guard us."

"The first is the growing idolatry of military glory and conquest. It is one thing to admit that there are certain causes for a Christian may lawfully take the sword is another thing to claim, as some do, war in itself is better for a nation than peace and to look chiefly to mighty armaments land and sea as the great instruments of spread of civilization and Christianity. Forerunner of Christ was not Samson, but the Baptist. The kingdom of heaven is not with observation, nor with acquisition nor with subjugation. If all the territories of the globe were subject to one conqueror to-day, no matter though the cross blazoned on his banner and his throne kingdom of heaven would be no whit more so. 'Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord.' That is the message of Christianity. A literature that is Christ must exalt love, not only as the greatest as the strongest thing in the world. I hold fast the truth bravely spoken by America's foremost soldiers, General Grant, that 'war is hell.' It must chide and reprove the lust of conquest and the desire of brute force. It must firmly cate and commend righteousness, and dealing, and kindness, and the simple proclamation of the truth, as the means by alone a better age can be brought in; all the tribes of earth taught to dwell in peace. It must repeat Wordsworth's message:

"By the soul
Only the nations shall be great and free."

"DON'T go to the doctor with every disorder to the lawyer with every quarrel, nor the pot for every thirst.—A. D. 1787."

LIVE LOVE COMMEMORATED.

a poem, which was inquired for on page 31, is fur-by H. W. Webster, of Westerly, R. I., and by an-subscriber.—Ed.]

Who can fathom the redeeming
Act of universal love?
Human thought, though ever teeming,
Yet will insufficient prove.

Holy angels, ever lauding
Of the great and wondrous scheme,
Seraphs, hymning and applauding,
Never can exhaust the theme.

Oh! the height and depth! surprising
Oh! the length and breadth, how great?
Generations past, and rising
Will the bliss participate.

Sure the Father's love was burning
To poor lost and helpless man,
Anxious for his safe returning
Laid the meditational plan.

Nor less was our Saviour's merit,
Who severs obedience paid,
Died, to obtain the Holy Spirit,
For his creatures' help and aid.

Now above makes intercession,
That the penitential mind,
Who makes unreserved confession,
And reforms, may pardon find.

Wretched man, if such caressing
Work not on thy brutal heart,
If thou spurst the heav'nly blessing,
Thou in it will have no part.

Blame thy conduct, charge not heaven;
On thy head thy blood will lie,
Every help to thee is given
Suting man's free agency.

Do not, for a moment's pleasure,
Forfeit this thy dear-bought right
To the joy and endless treasure,
Which the Gospel brought to light.

Use thy reason, grace assisting
Every faculty within;
Thou shalt know a brave resisting
All the deadly powers of sin.

Taste religion's chaste embraces,
Faith with genuine works adorn;
Virtue has eternal graces,
Fresh and blooming every morn.

All her joys beyond expressing
Peace that yields a golden crop;
She's in life the choicest blessing,
And in death the grateful drop.

Wing thy soul, and qualify her
For the converse held above;
Tip thy tongue, to join the choir
In melodious strains of love.

Utterly disclaiming merit;
Praise the Father and the Son,
Jointly with the Holy Spirit,
An eternal Three in One!

—Author unknown.

THOUGHT COST, NOT A SACRIFICE.—We have respective allotments and fields of service, our offerings will not avail much without to ourselves, whether it be in the sacrifitime with exercise of spirit, and some-with sacrifice of some of our substance, experiencing those plunges and conflicts irit that may be essential to prepare for ce amongst some who are under particu-lptions.—A Correspondent.

Faithfulness in Early Rudiments the Basis of the Larger Spiritual Life.

BY MORTON C. COGGESHALL.
(Continued from page 66.)

So to a soul without a deep abiding faith in God's knowledge and wisdom and a sense of reverence for His character there can be nothing to create hunger and thirst after righteousness.

When there is no recognition of the majesty of the divine law there can exist no craving for a revelation of grace.

When you find a man who spends his life from one year's end to another, careless as to a sense of gratitude for the mercies of each day, with no desire in his heart to return thanks for all the benefits he has received from his maker, look not for his recognition of God's hand in the great events of life.

Some sudden, overwhelming catastrophe may startle him for a few moments, but there is little chance that it will persuade him of the truth of God if he has persistently pushed it away from his thoughts in the quiet hours of each day's experience.

When a young man enters business life true and honorable success depends upon his acceptance at the outset of his career of the principle found in the passage suggestive of these thoughts. His promotion to positions of greater trust will depend on the spirit which animated him in the work already performed.

His ability to respond to a call for increased value of service is the result of patient, painstaking, perhaps laborious work. The dry, hard solitude tasks that come under the definition of drudgery may be the Moses and the prophets of business life. Only as they have received honest and faithful attention can there be an entrance into larger fields of usefulness commanding satisfactory recognition of merit.

But of all illustrations of the irresistible force of this law none are more terribly sad than that of broken promises in the marriage relation. When there stealthily creeps over husband or wife the fascinating power of some other man or woman paralyzing the will, blinding them as to duty and creating an eagerness to sacrifice all that they have held sacred for years, to a passion as temporary as it is absurd, we see most vividly the power of this truth.

Thousands have been deluded by the belief that if they could but free themselves from the bonds that bind them together and choose another more congenial companion with whom to share the ills and joys of life, they would realize perfect bliss. Through divorce this wild visionary design is constantly being carried out. But if we could only see into such hearts we would often discover that bitterness of disappointment the end of which is an unutterable despair. If a husband or a wife fails to comprehend the sacredness of marriage and the solemnity of the command "what therefore God hath joined together let not man put asunder," they have no solid foundation for happiness, and a change in the superstructure does not rebuild the foundation.

If they have not appreciated the joy of a union that has received God's sanction and blessing, neither will they desire that blessing in any future alliances that either of them may make; and without the Divine approval there can be no hope of a permanent love.

A relationship, to perfect which the most delicate and wise adjustment is required and which can be used by the Holy Spirit as a fitting illustration of the union between Christ and His church, is so sacred a theme that it should never be approached except in the spirit of reverence.

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" St. John here bears his testimony to the truth that the condition of heart necessary for the reception of a sublime revelation is the same in character as that which makes manifest the simplest duty of life, and that failure to respond to the Divine call to love our brother renders impossible any intimate loving relations with God.

When our Lord gave His disciples the prayer we so love to repeat, He added these solemn words, "For if ye forgive men their trespasses your heavenly Father will also forgive you.
But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

If love has not taken such possession of our hearts as to create therein an atmosphere that is Divine, there exists no medium through which God can speak to us his words of forgiveness so that they can be understood.

The great and wonderful truth of God's forgiveness of sin can never persuade that heart of His love, that is a stranger to compassion for another's transgression.

"And whither I ye know and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest, and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me. If ye had known me ye should have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know Him and have seen Him. Philip saith unto Him: Lord, show us the Father and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me Philip?"

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

"He was in the world and the world was made by Him and the world knew Him not.
He came unto His own and His own received Him not. But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name."

This is very strong and plain teaching. God can reveal Himself in many ways, but it is possible that He can walk close beside us, that we can see the revelation of His power in lives all around us, and yet these words that He addressed to Philip can be with equal truth spoken to us, "have I been so long time with you and yet hast thou not known me Philip?"

"Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant how that all our fathers were under the cloud and all passed through the sea, and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea. And did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them, and that rock was Christ."

Dives certainly showed a most commendable spirit in desiring the welfare of those he had left behind. His solicitude for his brethren is shown in these words: "I pray thee therefore, father, that thou would'st send him to my father's house. For I have five brethren, that he may testify unto them lest they also come into this place of torment." Abraham saith unto him, "they have Moses and the prophets, let them hear them." And he said, "Nay, father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead they will repent." And he said unto him, "if they hear not Moses and the prophets neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

Of the souls in this world who have deliberately refused to take Christ as their Master, rejected His claims to divinity, his power to rise from the dead, how many have reached this strange and unnatural condition of mind and heart through a wrong estimate of the Divine revelation through Moses and the prophets!

As we stand face to face with the eternal wisdom, we are awed by the Divine majesty of God's law. Jesus Christ, our elder brother, our Lord, our Redeemer has fulfilled the whole law. Hear His loving invitation, "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with me."

The hand that on earth relieved human distress, raised the dead, and rested in blessing on the head of a little child, that was nailed to the cross for the sin of the world, cannot open that door a hair breadth. For the heart must be a free glad gift to Him. "Son, daughter give me thy heart."

Shall we not hasten to open the door and welcome His presence within; and if we do, what will be the result? "To as many as received Him gave He power to become the sons of God."

WHAT IS FINISHED?—"It is finished." We are ever taking leave of something that will not come back again. We let go, with a pang, portion after portion of our existence. However dreary we may have felt life to be here, yet when that hour comes—the winding up of all things, the last grand rush of darkness on our spirits, the hour of that awful sudden wrench from all we have known or loved, the long farewell to sun, moon, stars, and light—what will then be finished? When it is finished, what will it be? Will it be the butterfly existence of pleasure, the mere life of science, a life of uninterrupted sin and selfish gratification; or will it be, "Father, I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do?"—Robertson.

A CHILD's definition of a lady is given in the following clipping, taken from the Youth's Companion:—

A little girl from a crowded tenement house was delightedly telling a friend in the College Settlement about her new teacher. "She's just a perfect lady. That's what she is," said the child.

"Fuh! How do you know she's a perfect lady?" questioned her friend. "You've known her only two days."

"It's easy enough telling," was the indignant answer. "I know she's a perfect lady because she makes me feel polite all the time."

THROUGH SECOND TO FIRST.*

"The second is like unto it."

II.

Be what you seem! What human creature could Expect to please or help the brotherhood

If each must needs first plant

New rules of seeming in the public thought?

God's truth in such confusion were not sought,

Virtue would sink to want,

Society to herding, thought to dream.

I.

Seem what you be! There is one law supreme,

Eternally extant,

Exalting every rule of common thought

More nearly to itself, through virtue wrought

In souls which for God pant.

Not less than by such inward grace prepared,
God's glory shall by man be shown and shared.

Selected.

Christiana Hustler.

Christiana Hustler, of Undercliff, in Yorkshire, was the widow of John Hustler of the same place, whom she survived many years; and daughter of William and Sarah Hird of the same county. Under a grateful remembrance of the blessing she had derived through her parents, she repeatedly spoke of the religious care and instructions which they had bestowed upon her. Her attention having in childhood been turned to the light of Christ in her own soul, she was, through obedience to its manifestations, preserved from many allurements that abound in the world, and enabled to walk in the narrow way, which leads to life.

She had, however, to endure various besetments and trials, which to her diffident mind, were rendered peculiarly poignant, from an apprehension that she should be required to bear a public testimony to the Truth; but having in her own experience witnessed the sanctifying virtue of divine grace, she became willing to declare unto others the goodness of her Heavenly Father.

When about twenty-eight years of age, she was strengthened to surrender herself to the service of her Lord, and first spoke as a minister. She visited in this character most, if not all, of the meetings of Friends in this country, and in Ireland. In the exercise of her gift, she was sound in doctrine, and clear in discernment.

Her ministry was marked by an earnest and persuasive simplicity, and attended with an affectionate solicitude, that her friends might in no respect be inactive or superficial in the pursuit of the one thing needful but really be what they professed to be, a spiritually minded people, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets; Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.

In private life her conversation was interesting and instructive; and her manners were affable and engaging, particularly to the young, even such as were remotely wandering from the fold of rest. To these she frequently imparted counsel, in so attractive a manner, that they seldom quitted her company without feeling desires after those Christian virtues, which in her they could but admire and love. Her hospitality to her friends, and more especially to those who were traveling as messengers of the gospel, was well known. The most experienced ministers of Christ are often greatly cast down and stand in need of the consolation and succour of those who have trodden the same path with themselves. Her dwelling a place where these comforts were often met with, and where such found rest, both body and mind.

* By the above lines a contributor demurs at a sentiment quoted on page 22 of the present volume, which says: "You will generally suffer if you appear other than you are. The mask soon becomes an instrument of torture." For the word appear he would more properly have the words "assume to be."—Ed.

The recollection of her own happy experience, of the effects produced by the early religious care of her parents, induced her to particular stress upon a timely subjection of the will in children, and, when opportunity offered, earnestly to urge attention thereto, contributing very materially to prepare the way of the Lord; and to diminish in the life, the hardships of self-denial and the cross. In the early part of the year 1 her strength had so far declined, that she confined up-stairs. Yet whilst the power of nature were sensibly giving way, it was instructive to witness the liveliness of her religious feelings, and her earnest concern for the spiritual welfare of her friends. She encouraged them with a clearness and energy which were striking to those who knew her feeble state, to persevere in the path of probation by the animating assurance that, in viewing the various trials of a life protracted to a late period, she could thankfully acknowledge, that goodness and mercy had followed her all the days of her life. Her weakness continued to increase. On the seventh of Sixth Month she seemed much alive to a poignant feelings for her children and attendants, and appeared sensible of her own situation; and after an interval of silence, reverent awfulness broke forth in these words: "Oh! that I were safely gathered . . . into that country that knows no change; oh that I may keep the word of His promise, and then He will keep me in the hour of temptation, and what a favor will that be; more than ten thousand worlds: adding a pause, "I think I may say, blessed and praise his holy name forever." She endured last sinkings of nature with great meekness and patience, and without much apparent suffering, continued to grow weaker the twenty-seventh of the Sixth Month, when at the age of seventy-nine, her was released from the conflicts of mortality prepared, we cannot doubt, to partake of joys of God's salvation.

The "living epistle" never needs a relation or a commentary. It is in plain flesh, that a child can understand. An skeptic once spent a day or two with Fanny and on leaving he said to him, "If I stay much longer I shall become a Christian in spite of myself." Stanley also commented that when he left London for Africa in 1837 for Livingstone he was "as much prejudiced against religion as the worst infidel." A few weeks of companionship with the heroic missionary so impressed him that said, "I was converted by him, although had not tried to do it."

CHILDREN always turn to the high that grown-up men would do likewise!—Hare.

A Century and a Day Old.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

the oldest Friend in New England known is as living (since the decease of Phebe R. Ford at Providence, R. I., on Eleventh Month 1, 1903, at the age of one hundred years, months and eleven days) is EUNICE (KELLOGG) GIDLEY, whom the present writer visited upon Ganansett in Dartmouth, Mass., on the fifty-first of Eighth Month, the day after had reached the age of one hundred years. Some months before, while in Philadelphia, the writer had felt a concern to sit, some time this summer season, with the few remaining members who meet in the ancient meetings, now two hundred and five years old, at Ganansett. Without knowing of this, a friend asked him recently if he felt like being at that meeting-house on the 21st. He was glad for our attendance there at an appointed time in the afternoon of that day, and from the presence of our friend, Job S. Gidley, conducted us to his mother's residence near by. There, in the presence of some burning sticks in an open fire, sat the aged Eunice Gidley. She recalled her son, who also with his family had lived her day before and found her busily engaged. When being presented with a gift of the years "1804-1904," she called the difference as her present age; and a grand-daughter asked her if she liked her good reading as much as she used to, answered, "Much more, because I am old enough to understand it better." When asked, on being asked by her son to repeat verses which she might remember, she replied and with hearty animation began, "The praises of my tongue, I offer to thee, O Lord," and so on through the six stanzas; then she repeated the twenty-third Psalm, afterwards eight stanzas from the old Friend's Spelling Book of 1809, beginning:

"I sing the Almighty power of God
That made the mountains rise,
That spread the flowing seas abroad,
And built the lofty skies."

She will present the selection entire in our numbers in the near future.

The manuscript was now read to her, which she signed in-law, the late Daniel Ricketson, of Bedford, had formerly written out as a tribute heard from her own lips of her journey in 1823 from her early home in South Cape to Cape Cod to Friends' Boarding School Providence, R. I. On account of a snow-storm it was nearly a week before she reached school. As the names of Moses Brown, John Breed and wife, and several other of our worthies were read to her from the original, her memory of them, and how they died, revived. The chronicle continued into times of her own teaching in schools on Cape Cod, at a salary of one dollar a week, out board.

When being asked if she enjoyed life less as she grew so aged, she promptly replied, "I enjoyed life more in all my days!" Then question put to her, was: "And what hast thou to live for at such an age?" Immediately came the language:—

"Here I can read and learn How Christ the Son of God
Proclaimed the covenant of thy grace,
And sealed it with his blood.

"The Lord who reigns above
Hath sent his Spirit down
To show the wonders of his love
And make his gospel known.

"O may that gospel teach,
And may my heart receive
Those truths which all thy servants preach,
And all thy saints believe.

"Then shall I praise the Lord
In a more cheerful strain
That I was taught to read these words,
And have not learnt in vain."

Thereupon it was suggested, "Then the sum of all this to thy mind is, 'For me to live is Christ!' " "And to die is gain," she added. The concluding stanza of one poem which she recited was this:—

His hand is my perpetual guard,
He keeps me with his eye;
Why should I forget the Lord,
Who is forever nigh?

"What does that mean, mother?" said a daughter,—"He keeps me with his eye?" She replied, "Why, if thou saw a son or daughter going the wrong way, wouldn't thou look after them and inform them of the right path?" The daughter told us afterwards that she had expected by her question to draw out the short answer which her mother had given a few months since: "A look is enough for some."

Eunice Gidley had been thus particular throughout her past life to use the word "thou" in its right place, instead of "thee," as a nominative. A North Carolina minister, who two months before visited her, will not object to our saying that she faithfully corrected him on that point, as she might many of us. This observance is but a part of that accuracy of speech and statement which she habitually cultivated, so that a grand-daughter could tell us, "I never heard grandmother say anything wrong." The witness for truth in practice had ordered her life, appetite, and conversation aright in a sweet simplicity that has extended her life beyond the century mark. It made her ministry, at times when she had opportunities in public worship, clear, concise, and lively.

An elder in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, who had for some years taken an interest in her life and spiritual overcoming, in a letter encouraging this gathering together for our columns of what her testimony might be through preservation for one hundred years, added that she was not in a condition to be puffed up by anything that might now be written concerning her, and our own opinion was that she would not be likely herself to be a reader of this; and that in the legacy of her past life she is now profitably a debtor both to the wise and the unwise.

And so we may conclude the more spiritual gleanings of an hour from her life of a century and a day, after reproducing two poems which she repeated applicable to both extremes of her life; the first for the benefit of grandchildren as instruction, which is the explanation of her long preservation. It is the first poem that she ever committed to memory.

Preserve me, Lord, amidst the crowd,
From every thought that's vain and proud,
And raise my wondrous mind to see
How good it is to trust in thee.

From all the enemies of truth
Do thou, O God, preserve my youth;
And free my mind from worldly cares,
From youthful sins and youthful snares.

Lord, in my heart, tho' hard as stone,
Let seeds of early grace be sown;
Still watered by thy heavenly love,
Till they shall spring to joys above!

And now the second, which we felt as her farewell to some of us, while she uttered it near the time of the setting sun of that day, as in the evening twilight of her well-crowned century:—

The day is past and gone,
The evening shades appear,
Oh may we all remember well
The night of death draws near.

We lay our garments by
Upon our beds to rest;
So death will soon disturb us all
Of what we here possess.

And when our days on earth are past,
And we from time remove,
Oh may we in thy bosom rest,
The bosom of thy love!

The Dying Coal.

A coal of fire when laid by itself soon loses its brightness and its heat; and there are come lessons to be learned from an expiring coal. A writer tells the story of a minister who "called upon a member who had been neglecting the week-night service, and went straight up to the fire-place in the sitting-room, and with the tongs removed a live coal from off the fire, and placed it on the hearth, then watched it while it turned from the red glow of heat to a black mass. The member in question carefully observed the proceeding, and then said, 'You need not say a single word, sir; I'll be there on Wednesday night.'"

There are multitudes of Christians who today are like this dying coal. They are alone. They have forsaken the assembling of themselves together. They have lost the interest they once had, and the power they once possessed. Let such take heed to their ways and turn their feet into the Lord's testimonies. He bids his people exhort one another, and so much the more as they see the day approaching. They that fear the Lord are to speak often one to another; and though it is within the power of God to keep alive the flame of Christian love in the hearts of those who are lonely and desolate, yet when persons deliberately disobey the divine commands, and neglect the privileges and opportunities of Christian fellowship and mutual encouragement, it is not strange that the light of the lonely ones grows dim, and the fires of love die out from within their hearts.—Hastings.

THE EXAMPLE OF THOMAS STORY.—The remarkable, precious visitation in the beginning of his spiritual career, his manner of getting amongst Friends, his ability to write so as to afford him means of subsistence, and (what has appeared the great characteristic) how he waited for and speedily recognized the Divine power in which was reserved the secret of his strength, he waiting until all that which was simply of his natural gifts was silenced, to know the life and power of Truth to be in the ascendancy.—Correspondent.

COMPLETE IN HIM.

(Col. 2: 10.)

Composed by Tacy M. Jewett, twelve hours before her death. She was a beloved member and elder of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, departed this life Eleventh Month 1st, 1894, at her home in Lincoln, Virginia.

He is able to keep you from falling. Jude 24. Able all things to subdue. Phil. 3: 21. To bind up that which is broken. Ez. 34: 16. And save to the uttermost, too. Heb. 7: 25. He is able to open the blind eyes. Isa. 42: 7. He is able to save and destroy. Jas. 4: 12. To make crooked things straight before us. Isa. 42: 16.

And fill us with gladness and joy. Rom. 14: 17. He is able to heal our diseases. Jer. 30: 17. To make our maimed bodies whole. Acts 3: 16. Able to keep us from sinning. Rom. 6: 14. And make perfect his life in the soul. Col. 4: 12. He is able to carry our burdens. Matt. 11: 28. To rid us of anxious care. 1 Pet. 5: 7. Able to rest us when weary. Ex. 23: 14. Willing our crosses to share. God's thoughts toward his children are precious. Psalm 139: 17.

All this and much more will He give. 2 Chron. 25: 9.

Through faith in the dear name of Jesus; Whatsoever we ask we receive. Matt. 21: 22.

Losing Faith When Things Go Well.

People say, "It is easy to trust God when things are going well with us." That is quite true. But let us not forget that it is a great deal easier to stop trusting God or thinking about Him when things are going well with us, and we do not seem to need Him so much as in the hours of darkness. There is danger of losing faith when things go well. And it is this danger from uninterrupted prosperity, the Psalmist is referring to when he says: "Because they have no changes, therefore, they fear not God." Certainly prosperity and untroubled lives have their own most searching trials of faith.

There are disadvantages of having things go well. One, as we have mentioned, is forgetfulness of God. It is a strange perversity of human nature that we are so likely to leave God out of mind when things are going well with us, while we call upon Him most quickly when in trouble. Another is pride and self-sufficiency. It does not take uninterrupted prosperity long to engender these feelings in most of men. It takes a large measure of grace to successfully resist the tendency. There are diseases that are common to the north, the dark, ice-bound regions of the earth; but let us not forget that there are a great many more that belong to the tropics. It is not well for us to live always in the sunshine. At least, it takes more grace to live well there amid the added, though unseen, dangers. "Because they have no changes, therefore, they fear not God."

There are advantages of having things tested. The Edomite saint must have looked into birds' nests when he used the comparison, "I said, I shall die in my nest." This is what a good many people say. They build each a nest for himself, and not for a summer, but for a life. They say that they shall die in it after many years of enjoyment of it. But they need the treatment the mother bird gives her young. Her first step is to make the nest uncomfortable. "As an eagle stirreth up her nest," she mixeth the thorny outside with the downy inside. So God, by His testing providences, makes the place of rest one of unrest to us, and thus lures us out to trust ourselves to His care and guidance over untried ways. And so he brings us to a stronger, maturer, more useful life. The wind roots the tree deeper in the soil. The stormy waves cause the anchor to take a deeper grip. There are advantages in disadvantages. Disappointments have proven God's best appointments. Financial ruin has proven a man's salvation. Sickness has brought to many people their highest health. The uses of faith testing have been corrective, instructive, sanctifying, satisfying. The trial of faith is often "found unto praise and honor and glory."—G. B. F. Hallock.

Illiterate Knowledge.

An acquaintance once expressed surprise that Thomas B. Reed, who had had appreciations for the niceties of learning, should devote much of his time to a man who was famously deficient in diction and grammar. The remark was repeated to Reed, and his reply was characteristic. He declared that his illiterate friend was, in reality, one of the most intelligent men he had ever known; that his knowledge, though unlettered, was broad, clear, sane and human. He added that some of the best educated men he knew were men without book education.

We find these men of natural and acquired knowledge in every walk of life. It is the habit of the frivolous to ridicule their lapses, and the thoughtless constantly express wonder that they should amount to anything in the life and business of the times. As a matter of fact, many of the men who have given money for educational institutions and whose ideals have contributed much to the development of education itself could not at any time of their lives have passed the examinations of the primary department of a public school. But their intelligence was larger than mere rules.

We have unconsciously brought the distinction into our terms of speech. The ready man we accept as one who has the common-sense and information in his head. He has it as his fingers' tips, we say. He knows what's what, we add. He is at home in any situation, we add again, and so on through all the synonyms of plain knowledge. At the same time we look upon the finely trained man, the man of learning, as one who can grind out ideas, who can cram, catch an idea, catch on, get up a subject, and all the variations of the ability to use the education which he has acquired. We need not underestimate either kind of knowledge in order to appreciate both.

The difference is simply a recognition of conditions. We laughed when, in reply to congratulations upon a signal duty nobly performed in a crisis, an American governor replied: "I seen my duty and I done it," but we never thought, even amid our smiles, that there was a real ignorance in the man who performed the public service.

And truly, in these days of educational skim milk in fancy vessels it is a delight to wander into a solid farmhouse and get honest cream from the old stone crock.—Saturday Evening Post.

Science and Industry.

LEARN TO SWIM.—The past few weeks have been marked by two steamship disasters. In one case more than five hundred, in the other more than nine hundred lives were lost. In the latter case all the lives were lost within a few hundred feet of land, where the ability to swim, even a few minutes, would have brought one to safety.

All children, both boys and girls, should learn to swim. Out of all the hundreds of passengers on a great ocean steamer wrecked a few years ago, not one woman was saved—they could not swim. Women are as liable to be drowned as men. They should learn to swim, and be prepared for danger.

It is not hard to acquire the art of swimming. Select a quiet, smooth place, where the bottom descends gradually; wade out until the water is up to your chin, then turn your face toward the shore, lean forward, and try to swim. There you will be in no danger of drowning. If you go down the bottom will catch you, and you can paddle for the shore, making just such motion as a frog makes when swimming.

Perhaps the best way to swim at first is to shut the eyes and plunge under the water, swimming as long as you can hold your breath, then coming to the surface to try it again. So long as your head is under water, it will be impossible for you to sink, and you will find yourself making progress. When you have learned thus to swim under water, like a frog, the next thing is to bend the neck backward and thus raise the head,—not the shoulder,—out of the water. Some have suggested a little board put under the chin, or a necklace of big cork. By taking off one cork each day as confidence is gained, one will soon learn the art.

One method is to have a bandage around the chest, just under the arms, with a few feet of strong cord attached to the band, and fasten the other end to a light pole. With this strong person standing on the land can help learner, and keep him from being frightened. Two or three pounds lifting will keep a person above water; and if he can keep his whole body except his nose, under water, he can sink. The chief danger is in raising the head and the shoulders out of water. This sinks the nose under. This people do when they are frightened. They bob up and down, struggle, inhale water, and sink. If they would keep their hands down in the water, and move their feet slowly, as if climbing stairs, would not be easy for them to sink while treading water.

We hope all our young friends will learn to swim, and then they may not only save their own lives in danger, but also rescue others who are in danger of drowning. And if a person who cannot swim gets beyond his depth or sinks in a place near the shore, if he would keep his wits about him he can easily walk, crawl and reach dry land. Many a man has lain in the water thinking over his past life and drowning, when a little quick common sense would have said to him, "crawl ashore and creep a rod or two he would have reached shoal water and been out of danger."—Common People.

A CHRIST likeness can be attained only by Christ-like devotion.

For "THE FRIEND"

Presence of Mind.

story is related by a dressmaker who every year in a certain Friend's family in Philadelphia. The writer has the story from the dressmaker, who in turn had it from the niece of the hour," the old lady who saved household from perhaps serious robbery, evil men from crime, by her courage and presence of mind. Her name is still known among Philadelphia Friends, but will not be here.

large home, one child (a daughter) and several servants were her portion in the night her cool courage was called for. She opened the room with her daughter in room; the servants slept in a separate room. On the night named the daughter opened with some indisposition. The mother entered to go to the kitchen and make her a hot or medicinal drink. She donned her cap and took a small night light and went down stairs. As she reaches the lower landing there stood staring at her from the parlor a very large, rough, ill-visaged stranger.

Instead of screaming or fainting, or dropping her light and running, the little old lady held up a warning finger and whispered, "they had been 'pals' all their lives, but how did these get in?"

When by surprise the person addressed responded obediently, "Through the basement window."

"Hush, no so loud," said his gifted adviser. "Somebody sick up stairs! 'Any body there?' Still in guarded whispers.

There's a fellow at the front door I was going to let in," replied her dupe, sheep-

"Hush! softly," using the finger. "Now I'll make any noise and I'll let thee out. I'll do softly," and thus marshalled before her candle, the huge burglar passed through the vestibule and there, sure enough, as the front door was opened, stood his evil companion ready to come in. Guilt-stricken he stepped in surprise in effort to hide from the light, the other passed out.

"Don't make a noise." Said the social owner of the home—"Farewell."

"Good night,"—gruffly replied her late guest, hurriedly going down the step and off into the darkness.

She did not faint then. She went to her room in the basement. Closed the window through which the robber had entered, made tea or hot drink, and told her daughter the day and the dressmaker the next season. 'Tis years ago, but ever fresh as an instance of cool courage and remarkable presence of mind. Another instance of presence of mind is given,—in an old Friend who showed great presence under fiery trial. She sat, one winter evening, by a table which held a lamp. By a mishap it fell to the floor and instantly lit and a rug and the edge of her dress on to burn quite merrily. She did not jump in alarm or fan the flame, but said briskly to her brother who was providentially near,—"Alert, thee sees I am on fire, put me out."

Thus appealed to, Evert, yet with a strong sense of the ludicrous, ran with a rug and smothered the flames while the calm Quakeress sat him by sitting still.

A QUIET MIND.

By Request.

"My peace I give unto you"—(John 14: 27.)

I have a treasure which I prize;
It's like I cannot find;
'Tis far beyond what earth can give;
'Tis this—a quiet mind.

But 'tis not that I'm stupefied,
Or senseless, dull or blind;
'Tis God's own peace that reigns within,
Which forms my quiet mind.

I found this treasure at the Cross;
And there to every kind
Of weary, heavy-laden souls,
Christ gives a quiet mind.

My Saviour's death and risen life,
To give it were designed;
His love's the never-failing spring
Of this my quiet mind.

The love of God within my breast
My heart to Him doth bind;
This is the peace of heaven on earth;
This is my quiet mind.

I've many a cross to take up now,
And many left behind;
But present troubles move me not,
Nor shake my quiet mind.

And what may be to-morrow's cross,
I never seek to find;
My Saviour says, "Leave that to me,
And keep a quiet mind."

And well I know the Lord hath said,
To make my heart resigned,
That mercy still shall follow those
Who have this quiet mind.

I meet with pride and wit and wealth,
And scorn, and looks unkind;
It matters not—I envy none
While I've a quiet mind.

I'm waiting now to see my Lord,
Who's been to me so kind;
I want to thank Him face to face,
For this my quiet mind.

Tenth Month 6th, 1856.

The Passing of Summer.

BY THOMAS F. COPE.

(Written at Haverford School in 1839, and now preserved by a surviving schoolmate.)

Summer is soon past, and then comes Autumn's melancholy reign, bringing to my mind a train of sad reflections in the decay of things mortal. The falling leaves and the blighted flowers present images of the decay of beauty; and the naked branches of the trees from among which glad voices of the woodland songsters are no longer heard, remind me of the desolateness of old age, the Autumn of life, when all we love has fallen away one by one, till all are gone, like the beautiful flowers, to lie in the cold ground for a season.

But as we mourn over the flowers we have loved to look upon, when the hand of winter has withered their bloom, although we know they will return to us with renewed beauty, so grief for the loss of those we love,—over whose welfare we have long kept watch with anxious tenderness,—although we know they are not lost to us forever. There is a hope reserved for us of joining those loved beings in the heavenly choir, never again to feel the pang of separation. And if it be not true that the spirits of the departed are permitted to revisit and administer the healing balm of consolation to those they have left desolate, yet it seems as though we were permitted to enjoy though unseen the company of those we have loved on earth.

But death to ourselves is a fearful thing; dreadful is the thought of standing in the presence of Eternal Justice. Yet we must all die, whether in infancy ere the soul is tainted or guilt has set his mark upon the sinless brow in the spring-time of life, when the thoughts are full of glad hopes and bright dreams of the future, when the pulse beats quick and high at the voice of ambition, when care is a thing unknown and the spirit delights to soar on the wings of fancy and imagination;—in the prime of manhood when we have lived long enough to see hopes blighted and fair prospects destroyed—or whether in old age we lay our silver temples in their last repose. The verdant turf shall be our covering and the fair flowers shall spring up and bloom upon our graves, and among them the soft zephyrs shall gently ply. There is a melancholy delight in such reflections. They wean our thoughts from earth to heaven, and teach us to live always prepared for another state of existence.

PERFUNCTORY SERVICE.—The deadening effect which professionalism may have upon the soul of the Christian was once illustrated by B. W. Moody in an incident illustrating how he was first led to realize this danger. One of his Sunday School pupils had been accidentally drowned, and the child's mother sent for him. He went to the house and talked to the woman, told her he would see about the coffin and conduct the funeral. Then accompanied by his little daughter he started for home. They walked in silence for a time, when the child said, "Papa, suppose we were very, very poor, and I had to go to the river every day to get wood, and suppose I should slip in and get drowned, wouldn't you be awful sorry?" Moody says then and there he awoke to the fact that he was getting professional. Folding his darling to his bosom, and in that moment of inspiration lifting his heart in prayer to God, he returned, grasped the weeping mother's hand, wept as if his child had been drowned, and not hers, and out of the fulness of his heart poured out his soul in prayer. Professionalism was gone and he had a fellowship in her suffering.

KNOW, O child of God, that it is not the form of godliness without the spirit that is demanded of you, but the form and spirit so firmly united that they can never be divorced. The virtue is not in the form of dress but in the spirit that leads the Christian to attire himself in modest apparel for Christ's sake. This is the highest ideal of Christian dressing, and in it is to be found the very germ from which comes all the good of modest attire.

There is but one way to get religion into dress and that is to get it into the heart, and then it will be made manifest in all we think and do. It will find expression in our words, in our actions, in our dealings just as it will in our attire.—Evangelical Visitor.

THERE is only one real failure in life possible, and that is not to be true to the best one knows.—Farrar.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

"A little bird sat on a tree Happy as little bird could be."

A story is told of a small Quaker lad who went shooting after birds. A little fellow perched on a high branch outland against the sky attracted him and he took aim, and in a moment more would have had him in hand; but at that instant out fluffed the tiny throat feathers, open came the beak, out poured a little joyous song. That song of praise saved him. The little hunter lowered his weapon, avowed a vow he kept until old and gray headed, never to kill a bird for sport. Innocent, happy, helpless, praising its Creator with "the best member that it had." Its life was secure by the Providence that taught it to sing.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES—By the recent death of William Weightman, of the firm of Poter & Weightman of this city, manufacturing chemist, the ownership and management of the business devolves upon his widowed daughter, Anna M. Weightman Walker, the surviving partner. She is also the heir to all his property, estimated to be worth fifty millions of dollars.

A bakery in New York City has for several years been in the practice of giving away stale bread to those persons who called for it at certain hours. Until lately not over two hundred such persons presented themselves daily for this relief. They now number four hundred or more. There is also noted an increase of patients at the hospitals whose maladies are due to privation and debilitation rather than to organic causes. The prevalence of this disease will be undertaken for the first time in the Western Hemisphere. Directions for the administration of the serum have already been received from the Maragliano laboratories in Italy, and patients have been selected for the experiment. Dr. Maragliano advises that in addition to the ingestion of a quart of milk a mile of cat's paw has rendered immune by the same method to be used as a diet. Physicians throughout America, it is said, will watch the progress of the experiments.

The Butchers' National Organization, in order to bring the packing-houses in Chicago and elsewhere to an agreement with their employees, has announced its intention to force a meat famine and that no member of the Meat Cutters' and Butcher Workmen's Union will be allowed to dress any animal until the strike is settled.

A despatch from Washington of the 29th ultimo says: The infection with typhoid germs of the water taken from the Potomac into the reservoirs that supply Washington had led to the determination on the part of the District of Columbia authorities to make use of the remedy discovered by Dr. George T. Moore and Karl F. Kellerman, bacteriologists of the Department of Agriculture, for the destruction of algae and disease germs in water by the copper sulphate solution. Dr. Moore, in speaking of the method which he has given to the world says: "It is entirely practicable, cheaply and quickly to destroy objectionable algae in all lakes, ponds, storage reservoirs and other similar bodies of water by the use of extremely dilute solutions of copper sulphate or of metallic copper. The fact that an extremely dilute solution (one to one hundred thousandth) will practically destroy the most objectionable typhoid germs at ordinary temperatures in three hours is of great importance and significance. Solutions of copper as dilute as this are not considered injurious to man or other animals. The value of copper, especially in typhoid and other related diseases, should be carefully investigated by competent pathologists." He concludes by saying: "The danger from typhoid fever in any community may be greatly lessened by the use of copper as a germicide.

A Lick Observatory bulletin deals with the results of recent astronomical work at Mount Hamilton. The distance of Alpha Centauri has been determined spectroscopically. So far as known the nearest star to us. The result is in harmony with observations by means of the ordinary telescope, to the effect that light, traveling with a speed of 186,000 miles per second, requires four and one-fourth years to reach us from that star.

The Minnesota, the largest vessel ever built in the United States, has lately visited Philadelphia. In capacity she is exceeded only by the White Star Liner Baltic. She has her enormous carrying power chiefly through her great depth. From the keel to the upper navigating bridge is nearly ninety feet. She is 630 feet long and has an extreme breadth of 73½ feet. The Minnesota and her sister ship, the Dakota, were built on no commission, but for large carriers; but they also have accommodations for 218 first cabin and sixty-eight second cabin passengers. Below decks about 2400 stowage passengers, consisting almost exclusively of Chinese, may be carried. The vessel belongs to the Great Northern Steamship Company.

A reflecting telescope, five feet in diameter, built by Dr. A. A. Common, a distinguished English astronomer, has lately come into the possession of the Harvard Observatory, by gift. It is spoken of as the largest "effective" telescope in the world.

FOREIGN.—Severe fighting is reported to have been resumed at Port Arthur on the 27th ult.

In the neighborhood of Liao-yang, perhaps forty miles from Port Arthur, a terrible slaughter has occurred both of Russians and Japanese, over 400,000 men having met in battles which have continued several days in succession. It is stated that the whole history of warfare has never been so bloody as this, and that there is no such persistence. Day after day the fight was resumed at day-break and kept up with hardly a moment's intermission until after nightfall. The Russians finally retreated upon a caputur of Liao-yang by the Japanese.

A census has recently been taken in London of the number of persons who attend religious meetings on the first day of the week, by which it appears that of 1,000 possible attenders about 474 are actually present. This is regarded as a favorable showing.

In a recent speech the French Premier Combes stated his intention of carrying out his policy for national sovereignty, independent of the clergy.

An Imperial edict has been issued in Russia making provisional amendments pending a general revision of the whole legislation concerning Jews. The amendments grant greatly extended residential privileges to the higher class of the educated Jews, and permit certain indicated Jews, or those who have served in the army to reside in any part of the empire.

The American company has struck oil on its property at El Cuguas, State of Vera Cruz. While recent strikes here have been made of liquid asphalt, a very low grade oil, the El Cuguas well, it is said, is the first commercial well to spout in the southern republic.

The iron deposits of Norway are declared to be the richest in the world, and to be of three mountain ranges, which are 60 per cent pure iron. The mines are producing 10,000 tons a day. The company owning the mines has built a line to the Norwegian coast, which is open all the year.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

Allen T. Leeds, Phila.; R. Satterthwaite, Del.; Mary T. Evans, Phila.; Wm. L. Bailey, Agt. Pa.; for James David Lindley M. Bracklin, Agt. O.; Esp. H. Miller, R. M. R. Binns, Edmund Bundy, Deborah Hall, Jacob Maule, Oliver S. Negus, Nathan Steer, Israel Steer, Lindley B. Steer, Elisha B. Steer, Wilson J. Steer, Louis C. Steer, Sarah Starbuck, Susan M. Thomas and Oscar J. Bailey; C. Anna Kirk, Pa.; David G. Alsop, Phila.; Ruth K. Borton Hayes, N. J.; Rebecca W. Havery, G't'n.; W. C. Reeve, N. J.; L. O. Stanley, Agt. Ind., $6 for Joel W. Hodson, Irene J. Pickett and Wm. C. Stanley; Wm. H. Cook, Ia.; B. C. Reeve, N. J.; Walter E. Vail, Calif.; Jesse Dewees, Agt. for Martha Llewellyn, O.; J. W. Garwood, Agt. for Ruth K. Borton Hayes, N. J.; Rebecca W. Havery, G't'n.; Edward Comfort, G't'n.; Caroline Cope, Calif.; Ella T. Gansse, Pa., to No. 13, 7; Ezra Stokes, N. J.; A. J. Smith, Agt., Kans. for Joshua P. Smith, N. J.; Wm. Stanton, Agt., O., $6 for John G. Hall, R. M. R. Binns and Allen E. Vail, for Joshua Brantingham, Agt., O., $12 for Mary H. Brown, [Jonathan Brown, J. E. Bailey, Rachel G. Cope, Hannah P. Oliphant and Lindley Hall; Wm. L. Bailey, Agt., Pa., $6 for Jane B. Jacobs, Anna Webb and A. L. Entrikin; Richard W. Hutton, Pa.; S. Moore, Kans.; Robert H. Russell for Anna P. S. Moore, Wm. L. Bailey, Agt., Pa.; for Sidney Temple.

Remittances received after Third-day moon will not appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Young women Friend societies wish work out of schools hours in Philadelphia for the winter, by which they earn board and lodging.

Address "L."

OFFICE OF THE FRIEND

CORRECTION.—The name of the author of the article Faithfulness in Early Rudiments the Basis of the Last Spiritual Life, is Morton C. Coggeshall, instead of Morton P., as printed in last issue.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., Phila. On and after Ninth Month 1st, 1904, the Library will be open on week-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from P. M. to 6 P. M.

Westown Boarding School.—The school year opens on Third-day, Ninth Month 13th, 1904. New scholars should arrive at the school before noon, or as early in the afternoon as possible. Trains leave Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, for Westtown, at 7, 8, 11, 8, 11 A. M.; 1:32, 2:50, 3:46, 4:32 P. M. and later. Parents will kindly send word to the school beforehand, if children are obliged to take a train later than the 4:32 P. M. train. W. F. WICKESHAM, Principal, Westtown, Pa.

Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting will be held at Medford, N. J., Ninth Month 15th, 1904. Train leaves Market Street Ferry, at 9 o'clock; Haddon Avenue, G. Eden, 9:12; Haddonfield, 9:28; Marlton, 9:40, arriving Medford at 9:50. Returning, leave Medford at 2:05, 5:10 P. M.

The Meeting of Ministers and Elders of this Quarterly Meeting will in future be held on Fourth-day, the preceding the Quarterly Meeting at 10 A. M., at Haddonfield in the Third and Ninth Months, and at Moorestown in the Sixth and Twelfth Months.

DIED, at Penedas, Lycoming Co., Pa., on the first Sixth Month, 1904, JOHN S. KIRK, an esteemed member and overseer of Muncy Monthly and Particular Meetings in the seventeenth year of his age. The testimony of life was in the words of the apostle, "What things I gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ." I know whom I have suffered the loss of all things, that I know Him and the power of his resurrection.

ANN M. WAY, wife of Henry O. Way (deceased), member of Earlimont Monthly Meeting at El Modena, at the age of eighty-seven years, one month and twenty-five days. She passed away at the home of her daughter Mindie L. Frazier, in Pasadena, Cal. She was the eldest daughter of Henry C. Frazier, and was born Mary New Garden in Guilford Co., N. Carolina. Her mother beloved in Israel.

—, after an illness of two weeks at the home of parents at Emporia, Kansas, the twenty-sixth of Eighth Month, 1904, ELIZABETH B. SMITH, daughter of Joseph P. and Mary M. Smith, in the thirtieth year of her age. She was a careful child, thoughtful and sympathetic. Though of a lively turn, it seemed to her duty and obedience to her parents' wishes to conform to the testimonies of our Society. She expressed during her illness the satisfaction and comfort it then was to her that had endeavored to adhere to the plain language, in which she was educated, and she expressed a desire to her great sufferings. Though so young in years she was a good example, and beloved by old and young. She passed quietly away, and we doubt not that through the mercies of her Redeemer, whom she loved, her peaceful spirit has been gathered with the redeemed beyond the reach of the trials and temptations of the world.

—, at his late residence in Malvern, Chester Co., Eighth Month 6th, 1904, HIRSH ROBERTS, in the eight eighth year of his age; a member of Gwynedd Monthly Meeting of Friends, Pa.

— on Fifth Month 26th, 1904, at the home of daughter, Ruth B. Doodna, Barnesville, Ohio, a member of the late John Bundy, aged eighty years and twelve days. A member of Stillwater Monthly and Barnesville Particular Meeting of Friends. She a faithful attender of meeting until prevented by infirmities of age; a diligent reader of the Scriptures, a consistent example of a simple Christian life. She continued to a bed of suffering for almost two years; dear mother in Israel maintained a childlike faith resignation, trusting in the Lord her Shepherd, and as we mourn she was led into the valley and shadow, far from evil, leaning on the Everlasting Arm.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

DL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 17, 1904.

No. 10.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,

PHILADELPHIA.

107 North Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,

No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Published as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Who Says "Hiring?"

Commenting on an article in its columns entitled "Should Ministers Strike?" an editorial in the Episcopal Recorder remarks:

Churches sometimes "hire" ministers—to a term favorite in some quarters—and from them such manifold service as of the "leading members" would dream of rendering to any employer for a much less stipend than they pay the poor minister, when he is "hired," he is often expected to "raise" his own pay by his ingenuity in managing and managing numerous catch-penny ser. If he can do this he is a popular teacher. But if he fails, if he rebels, if he strictly to his Divine call to minister to the critical things only, and refuses to assume management of temporalities, he quickly becomes unpopular, and soon becomes aware some other man would be acceptable in his place. Logically the business-manager, money-raising minister hires himself and pays for himself by means of his own financial skill, places his people in the unenviable position of recipients of his bounty and charity, though he is too blind to see it.

He does not hesitate to answer Mr. Huntington's question, and say, ministers ought to strike against such bondage and servitude to illness and selfishness. Such a strike would bring the greatest blessing to parishes and the noble spirit and small of grace. It would place Christ to the foreground and drive the world out at the back door. But such a strike is likely to occur. There are too many ministers who are willing to cater; and by catering they hold in bondage other poor men who long for freedom to do the Lord's work. Our ministers would save their churches and Christ, they should insist upon the open book and the generous free-will offering according to the full measure of the Lord's blessing; and should banish catchpenny, mercenary worldliness.

It is an unfair impression, especially of the attitude of the poor ministers, should be left by our stopping with the above editorial, we will here supply the cardinal paragraph of George W. Huntington's article, on which it is based:

Reliable statistics prove that, in the largest and wealthiest, as well as in the smaller and poorer denominations, the average remuneration of the majority of ministers is less than two dollars a day. How long would artisans of any class submit to these conditions? The columns of the daily journals supply the answer. Carpenters, bricklayers, painters, plumbers, etc., do not toil on without protest, year after year, for such a scanty wage. Rather than accept it, miners and engineers, butchers and mill operatives, conductors and motormen, give up their positions and refuse to work. Not so is it, as a class, with those for whom I am now speaking. They do not organize "unions," in which they plan and toil unceasingly that the hours of labor may be shortened and wages increased. The grand army of Christ's ministers continue patiently and persistently to perform the duties of their sacred office, even when it is a daily battle to "keep the wolf from the door."

For want of adequate support, a far greater number than is generally supposed, together with their noble wives, are enduring severe privations without a murmur. Their willingness to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ is most creditable to them.

These industrious ministers have indeed our sympathy for their deprivations. But the position above assumed that preaching is to be exercised and paid for on the basis of being a human product and a human exercise, has not our sympathy, because that is a wrong basis to put it on. If it be a human work of human parts, talents and industry, let it honestly, like other artificial products, be paid for. It is only the works of man that have exchangeable value, to be paid for between man and man. But the works of God, as such, are not paid for by man's money. The offer of money for a value at once degrades it to the level of human. The above extracts go on that assumption, and clearly place the preacher, as conducting a wage-earning work, on the principle of the "carpenters', bricklayers', painters', plumbers'" work.

Ranked as a human engagement that association with artisan's work does not lower the profession of the ministry—for we wish all artisans would regard their work as a ministry. But it is the ranking it as essentially human that lowers it. Thus lowered to the human plane, we do not wonder that it is subject to pay—yes, sometimes far too subject to its payments.

But of the prophetic or God-inspired ministration which gospel preaching was intended to be, God alone is the employer, and to Him it must be looked for the pay of his own men. His Spirit is their base of supplies and the treasury of their reward. Of his anointing and gospel, "Freely have ye received, freely give." The swift Witness for Truth in a spiritual minister's heart, authorizing all required utterances amidst living worship is far too swift to take up much time away from the carpenter, bricklayer, painter, plumber, tent-maker, fisherman, so as to hinder these honest occupations. Many of these operatives have made full proof of their ministry of the Spirit, and understand human conditions better than such as are socially and academically separated from the experiences of the day-laborer. Daily drudgery may be very fruitful of experimental openings in divine truth, and of messages to daily life.

One great trouble is, there are so many things usually exacted of a preacher by religious clubs, which a really living church would do for itself " . . . the members having the same care one over another." Whatever else is reducible to a money payment, let it not be the spiritual word.

We feel under obligations to acknowledge that our Heavenly Father has bestowed of his bountiful gifts upon us, not only temporal, but also his spiritual blessings. Unspeakingly precious above all others is that of his dear Son, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, sent to seek and save all mankind if they will come to Him and with full purpose of heart, deny self, take up the cross daily and follow Him. By this means the sinner will be freed from sin, and by continuing to faithfully follow, will be led away from the kingdom and dominion of sin and darkness into the glorious light and liberty of the children of God, thereby becoming citizens of the Heavenly Kingdom, which our blessed Lord told his disciples "is within you."

All such then will realize his keeping power to preserve them as Jesus prayed the Father, "not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." Thus the high and sacred privilege is witnessed that God's tabernacle is with men, dwelling and walking with them: they his people and He their God.—Epistle of Western Yearly Meeting.

FOR "THE FRIEND,"
The Realization of an Ideal.

BY HANNAH W. CADBURY.

Nineteen hundred years ago angelic voices sang a new song to some lonely shepherds on the Galilean hills; its burden was "peace on earth." At the same time there came, under a mysterious guidance, some representatives of the deepest thought and profoundest learning of the far countries of the East, to seek a new King who was born. This King they found not in a palace but in a stable. Centuries before, some far-sighted seer had prophesied that there should come a new kind of Prince—not a prince of armies nor of nations, but a Prince of Peace. This was a new kind of king and a novel kingdom, surely! This King lived on earth, and for three short years he talked about his kingdom, but when the people wanted to make him king, he would not permit it. Then they killed him. He had lived not as a king, but as the simplest peasant of the land, and yet his enemies feared that he might become a king and establish his kingdom after all. Hence they killed him. But while he had lived he constantly taught his followers about his kingdom, which was to be a very strange one. It was to exist not in the outward primarily, but in the inward. It was to be established not by force, but was to grow imperceptibly. Its power was to lie not in fear but in love. In this kingdom the legal code of the world's kingdoms was to be exactly reversed. If a man took your coat, you were not to send him to prison for theft, you were to give him your cloak also. If a man struck you on the cheek, you were not to bring suit against him; you were to turn the other cheek and let him strike that—if he would. In this kingdom, again, the very laws of the material world were to be reversed. He who was first was to be last; the greatest was to be the least; he who kept a thing would lose it, while he who gave it away would really possess it. In the realm of nature one animal progresses at the expense of another, one gains only by another's loss, the stronger lives upon the weaker, and the life of each is maintained only by the sacrifice of the life of another. But in the new kingdom what benefited one was to benefit all; what harmed one was to harm all; for no one could live or die to himself alone. When one laid down his own life he was to find it again; and what one gave one was to receive. Instead of the law of destruction there should be the law of salvation; instead of hatred there should be love. Here the worth of the human being was to be first recognized; every man was nothing less than a possible son of God; and he must be treated as such, and worked for, to win him to fulfil his high destiny. Here giving is getting, and the more you give away the more you have to give, losing is finding, the more you get for yourself, the more there is for others. The whole law of competition is reversed, and the struggle for one's own existence is changed into the struggle for the life of others. This was an ideal that Jesus of Nazareth put before his people.

The ideals of Christ's kingdom have been working; men have begun to realize them if only in part, and they will continue to work for them and live by them till their fulfilment is complete. Let us take one of these ideals—just one—and see how it is being realized up to the present time. We will take an ideal that is not the easiest of realization, one that strikes at a very fundamental element in man's nature, the instinct to strike back when struck, to defend one's self when threatened, and to seek gain for one's self even at the expense of the life of another, though a weaker one. These instincts are all antagonistic to Christ's ideal of the value of a human soul, and they all result in war. Let us see then, how war has been combated in order that Christ's ideal may be realized.

Wars are contemporary with the first beginnings of history, whenever man met man and uncontrolled passions came into collision, there war was inevitable. It is as old as the race. The most primitive form was that of private war. If one man injured or killed another, the injured man's family and friends bound themselves together to wreak vengeance upon him. It was their method, and their only method of doing justice between man and man, but it was unregulated and without control. The avengers might go at any hour of day or night, might take their enemy as treacherously or in as unprepared a state as possible, and the direr the vengeance they could inflict upon him, the better were they satisfied. But after a time men began to see that this was not quite fair play; and here entered the idea of control of private war. Old statute books show us how carefully the balance of justice came to be adjusted; the avengers must not go in the night, they must go in the day-time. Or even this we find—that if a man falls from a tree and kills a man, the offender may be brought to justice only by a friend of the injured man falling from the same tree and killing him in the same way. Then, as the state began to grow stronger, courts were set up as an alternative to private vengeance; they were an alternative, not a substitute, one did not have to appeal to them. The courts were not permanent either, and they moved about from place to place. Not till the time of Henry II was a permanent Court of Appeal established. Thus in the course of time private war came to be abolished. The course of public war has been very similar, as I shall try to show. In the earliest times tribe went to war with tribe; in later times nation with nation. Through the Middle Ages all Europe was distracted with wars, both private and international. By the seventeenth century private war had given way to the civil courts and civil law; but public wars more than filled the breach, and international and civil wars were incessant through the whole following century. In the very midst of this tumult of war, like a light shining in the darkness, arose the Society of Friends, with their watchword the return to primitive christianity, and their insistence on the Christian principles of love and brotherhood. It was a strange anomaly in the midst of all that strife and chaos and artificiality; but it was a sign of the times. And time has brought to fruit the seed that they sowed.

The Friends bore their testimony against war as such, against its spirit and its deeds. George Fox refused to enter the army of the commonwealth. Many Friends suffered severely through their refusal to bear arms. William Penn in the darkness of imprisonment worked out a plan for an imperial Diet or Parliaments which is a striking precursor of the idea the Hague Tribunal, and very practical. It was William Penn too, who demonstrated that untraced and treacherous people could be controlled by love rather than by force; for policy with the Indians was marvelously successful. A whole century more, however passed by, and not till the nineteenth century did peace sentiment become so strongly developed as to form permanent and powerful organizations.

It is this organization for peace work that is the most encouraging sign of our times, after all it is organization that counts most strongly.

To do peace work single handed is to be one's hands upon the air. It is surely duty of every lover of peace to acquaint himself with the history of the organization of work, and with what it has accomplished, to join hands with its workers with all earnestness of his soul.

This organization has taken form in various ways. There are national and local arbitration conferences; there are four hundred and fifty peace associations doing unceasing work in many countries; there is a permanent International Peace Union, there is the Universal Peace Congress, the Interparliamentary Union, the Hague Conference and Tribunal, to nothing of many treaties for arbitration between some of the chief nations.

The Universal Peace Congress met at Rouen in France, last Fall, when the attendance was larger and more enthusiastic than ever. Next year it will meet in America. At its meetings are found representatives of the best thought for Peace from all nations.

The Interparliamentary Union was originated in '88 by Wm. R. Cremer, a member of the English Parliament. His plan was to bring together the members of the various parliaments of the nations, for furtherance of mutual understanding and good-will. The plan succeeded splendidly. Its membership is very large. Its annual meeting is to be held this year at the St. Louis Exposition, and surely be a most important addition to the interest of that great Exposition. The Union has devoted itself chiefly to arbitration, its influence was of great weight in the calling of the Hague Conference.

This conference, as we remember, was called by Nicolas II of Russia, in '98, and met in '99 at the Hague. The result of it was the establishment of the Permanent International Court of Arbitration, which was formally opened in 1901, and is composed of representatives of nineteen powers—practically the whole civilized world. The court did no business some time—the Supreme Court of the United States did none for two-and-a-half years—in 1902 it gave its first decision in the case of the Pious Fund. After that, came the Vuelzela case, where eleven nations were concerned, the importance of which it would be difficult to over-estimate.

Beside all this organized work that makes for peace, there are also many signs of national and individual interest in the subject. During the past year there have been a dozen or more boundary disputes settled by arbitration. Looking through the nineteenth century there were also hundred disputes settled by arbitration, of that number occurring in the last decade. These were all made by temporary trials, and now that we have the permanent one at the Hague we may hope for an increase in the number.

(To be continued.)

Earned Her Diploma.

An inspiring story of courageous perseverance and determination to make one's self self in the world despite all discouragements, was told by Booker Washington in a recent speech at Carnegie Hall. Some years ago there had been a student at Tuskegee—Miss Davis. She could not meet the requirements for graduation. She accepted her failure as an excuse for relaxation of effort, and as an incentive to make the most of what she had. "I have some education," she said rhetorically; "I will go where it may be useful." Then, said Booker Washington, "we sought of her for a while. She went into the black belt of Alabama, and picked out the poorest, the most hopeless, degraded community in which to do her work. She found the wreck of a schoolhouse as a schoolhouse. She found the men ignorant, stricken and illiterate, and unable to do any advantage what little they had. They neglected their crops every year to pay the taxes on their hives. First she installed her school in the tumble-down log schoolhouse, and then she won the interest and sympathy of the children. She induced all the parents to come to a meeting. She taught them enough arithmetic to know the value of their scanty earnings, and to appreciate the folly of their extravagance and improvidence. She had learned something of agriculture at Tuskegee, and she taught them that. She went from cabin to cabin to teach by example a better way of living. Now what was the result of that one woman's courage and readiness to tackle an apparently hopeless case? In three or four years there was a frame school-house on the site of the old log wreck, and all the children were going to school eight months a year, instead of practically not at all. The crops had increased, the community was out of debt. Little cottages had taken the places of the miserable shanties, and they were owned by the occupants. When I went there a year ago and found our old pupil who didn't graduate, I asked her how she had done it all through the school, principally," she told me. "And besides this," the young woman said, "we had a little cotton plantation of our own. The scholars cleared a piece of ground back of the school, and worked on it every day after school was out. The children earned two bales of cotton a year, and that was our going." I want to add," said Booker Washington, "that Tuskegee has since done what it should have had the wisdom to do long ago. We gave that young woman her diploma."—Selected.

INSPIRATION has no explanation; it touches the soul and moves the hand like unsuspected senses, and we cannot tell how we did it. I mine the life whose reason is swallowed up by a higher reason, which I have come to know as the mysterious name, Inspiration!—Joseph Parker.

NOTHING WITHOUT LOVE.

(1 Cor. xiii.)

Though I possess the gift of tongues, And every language speak, And with an angel's eloquence Tell men the Lord to seek— And still no love in me is found, I'm like the clanking cymbal's sound.

Might I possess the prophet's gift, And coming scenes foreshow; And understand all mysteries That only God doth know; Yet, if His love fills not my heart, With Christ and His I have no part.

Though knowledge infinite I had— Be wise as Deity; And had the faith to move all mountains Into the boundless sea, Yet not the grace of love possess, I'm void of saving righteousness.

If I should give my wealth away To those in poverty, And die a martyr at the stake, For Christ and verity, And still no love is found at all, I am nothing nothing withal.

For love to God and love to man All other things transcend, Fulfills all laws and all commands, And never more shall end. Ah! then, dear Lord, to me impart This love divine, and fill my heart. —E. B. Arnold.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 66.)

About the year 1811 there was much settlement among the Indians in consequence of efforts made to induce them to sell their lands. In one of the letters written to the Committee from the Cattaraugus settlement, the Friends there stated that "We apprehend this commotion has had a tendency to revive some doubts and enquiries in the minds of divers among them, particularly the Cattaraugus Indians, respecting what may be the final event for the help and favors they have been and are receiving from our Society. The chiefs of Cattaraugus have lately made request that the Committee would furnish them with a writing to show that no demand or claim would ever be made against them or their posterity by the Society of Friends or their descendants. They say they are not afraid of the present generation of Quakers, but seeing mankind are liable to change, whether it might not be possible that the descendants of Friends would produce a charge against their posterity. The chiefs say if they had such a writing it would help their influence to advise and govern their young men, and they would keep this writing for the use of posterity, to prevent all suspicions."

In accordance with the suggestion, the Committee prepared a communication addressed to these Indians, disclaiming any intention of ever bringing a charge against them for the help which they had rendered them. This was engrossed on parchment and signed by the Friends present at the meeting held Ninth Month 11th, 1811, and directed to be forwarded to the Friends at Cattaraugus.

During the war of 1812, the Indians in Western New York became much unsettled in consequence of efforts which were made to engage them in hostilities against the British. The Friends at Tunesassa writing Tenth Month 25th, 1813, state "The present unhappy commotions have very much diverted their attention from their domestic concerns, they having been several times requested to assist in the invasion of Canada. The last time such request was made about twenty went from this settlement."

The Friends at Cattaraugus mentioned under date of Third Month 4th, 1814, that a number of Indians through the course of last summer had taken an active part in the war, and been on several expeditions into Canada, yet remark, "We are not yet apprehensive that invasion will extend thus far, and consider it a favor that through the recent calamities experienced by many of our fellow citizens on the frontier, we have been permitted to remain unmolested in this neighborhood."

During this period of anxiety, some members of the Committee felt willing to visit the Indians and the Friends living near them, which was cordially united with and encouraged by the Committee at their meeting held Seventh month 21st, 1814, and Isaac Bonsall, Joseph Wain, Haldiday Jackson and Benjamin Cope set out shortly afterwards. They were the bearers of an address to the Indians, both to those residing on the Allegheny River and to those at Cattaraugus; that addressed to the former concluded with the following paragraph relating to the efforts then made to engage them in the war.

"Brothers:—We are also disposed again to recommend a diligent attention to the cultivation of your lands, and that you may endeavor to live in peace and love with all mankind. Remembering often that all mankind are brethren and all the workmanship of the one Good Spirit, who created us all that we might love and serve Him and who on his part will love us and make us happy both in this world and the next, if we are thus daily endeavoring to please Him."

In the course of this visit the deputation met the Indians in council at different places, and endeavored to encourage them in habits of industry—the disuse of intoxicating liquors, the proper observance of the marriage covenant and in doing that which would conduce to their eternal welfare as well as their present happiness.

The evil effects of leaving their homes to join in the war were adverted to, and in reply the Indians at Cattaraugus, while expressing their hopes that the troubles would subside, mentioned the fact that a number of their warriors were than about leaving home, in consequence of an express having arrived from the lines, summoning them, yet several had staid, having learned that the Friends had come, in order to hear them.

Near the conclusion of this interview, an old chief named Joseph Tequanuy "expressed the great satisfaction they had that the Friends who lived beside them had remained so steady with them through their difficulties—that although the great guns had roared so loud as to shake the ground whereon they stood, yet they remained quiet, which convinced them that our Friends must be under the protection of the Great Spirit. 'We feel thankful to them" said he "for staying by us; if they go away we shall feel alarmed and fly also."

The four Friends state in their report "By reason of the wet weather and high waters our stay was continued at Cattaraugus several days longer than was intended, during which time divers of the Indians came to Friends' settlement, with whom we had satisfactory interviews. On First day the 18th we sat with the family in their time of religious retirement, which was a comfortable and edifying season, and we hope some evidence afforded of our Friends feeling Divine support in their secluded situation and being usefully engaged in promoting the welfare of the Indians."

Halliday Jackson, one of the Friends visiting the Cattaraugus settlement in 1814, mentions that "our Friends inform us they have almost daily heard the roaring of cannon from the British lines near Fort Erie, for several weeks past until within a few days." "At the time when Buffalo was burnt the alarm was distressing here, people were flying in every direction from the enemy. In consequence of which the Indians at Cattaraugus became very uneasy and moved much of their property to the south side of the river, in readiness to fly to Allegheny in case of an attack. They seemed to put great confidence in Friends judgment and often consulted them on account of their safety, stating that if Friends removed from them they would fly also."

He says of the Indians at Cattaraugus "Their farms are generally under good fence, and it appears several hundred acres have been enclosed and cultivated within three or four years."

In a council held at Cold Spring during this visit, the Indians through their chief, Jacob Snow made the following reply to an address which Friends had made to them: "Brothers we are happy to see you, you have come a great way to visit us, which we consider is a proof of your regard for us, several of you have been here before and we remember you. When you first came amongst us you saw our situation then was miserable, we were almost naked and lived in very bad houses, and were all in the habit of drinking strong liquor, you then advised us to habits of sobriety and industry, you placed some of your people amongst us to instruct us, you furnished us with tools to work with. In a short time some of us became industrious and made considerable advancement in useful things, but after some time, strong drink was again introduced amongst us, notwithstanding we endeavored to prevent it, we advised our young warriors not to bring it, this is all we could do, for our fore fathers never left us any other laws, white people have laws to restrain them, and if they fall into error their laws will bring them back again, we cannot do so. But as the Great Spirit is never tired of his care over us, we hope you will not be discouraged in advising us and we on our part will continue to advise our people, but many of them drink and will not listen to us."

(To be continued.)

A SMALL BOY'S LOGIC.—A story is told of a small lad, which shows that calmness and philosophy are not always reserved for age. The little boy had been spending the afternoon with neighbors. Upon returning home an early New England twilight had fallen and it was almost dark when the home lights met his view. Upon a fence which he must pass to reach his door lay—something—strange and fearful. He was a young and little boy, and was appalled at the weird object. It was white and unusual and in the dusk filled him with natural fear. He stood and tried to make it out, but failed. There were but two things to do. To go back meant cowardness and to have his parents anxious and send for him; to go forward appeared to his juvenile faculties certain death. "Well, it can't more 'nd kill me, and I can't die but once," reasoned the small philosopher, and closing his eyes he shot by.

It was a white buffalo carriage robe laid on the fence to dry and air. But his reasoning and courage remain the same.

MY SERVICE.

I asked the Lord to let me do

Some mighty work for Him;

To fight amidst his battle hosts,

Then sing the victor's hymn.

I longed my ardent love to show,

But Jesus would not have it so.

He placed me in a quiet home,

Whose life was calm and still,

And gave me little things to do,

My daily rounds to fill.

I could not think it good to be

Just put aside so silently.

Small duties gathered round my way

That seemed of earth alone;

I, who had longed for conquests bright

To lay before his throne,

Had common things to do and bear,

To watch and strive with daily care.

So then I thought my prayer unheard,

And asked the Lord once more

That He would give me work for Him,

And open wide the door,

Forgetting that my Master knew

Just what was best for me to do.

Then quietly the answer came:

"My child, I hear thee cry;

Think not that mighty deeds alone

Will bring thee victory;

The battle has been planned by Me,

Let daily life thy conquests see."

—Journal and Messenger.

THE DIVINE SPEAKING IN MAN.—God having spoken unto the fathers "in" the prophets, hath spoken to us "in" a son.* This is in truth a great and emancipating thought that God speaks "in" men. He speaks to men not as a voice from without, but as a voice from within. The revelation is within the man himself, and therefore necessarily adapted to, as it is related to his capacities. In the impulse to pray, is the thirst for righteousness, man is drawing near to God, but it is just as true to say that God is drawing near to him. Thus God speaks to men through their experience, and He does so now as really as He ever did. All experience would be to us a revelation if only we had the open eye.

JOHN E. MCFADYEN.

* While we cannot deny that this is the literal rendering of the word for "his" not appearing in the original, (Heb. i: 1) yet that this son is pre-eminently the Christ is made clear in the texts immediately following. We are glad, however, that the omission of the word "his" extends the revelation, of the inspeaking Word to any son according to his measure of sinship.—Ed.

The Stolen Locket.

Of all Mildred Arkell's beautiful ornaments and jewelry there was nothing of so much value as a gold locket and chain which her father had given her; at least, that was Gen. Apel's opinion. Oh, that splendid gold locket! Such a beauty! and just the ornament that Gertie longed for.

The time passed by, and every time Gen. went to visit Mildred, she said: "Oh, I wish it belonged to me."

As Gertie was going up the garden path after tea to neighbor Arkell's house to Millie to come out and play with her, she should she see hanging on a curtain but under the parlor window but the locket chain. Gertie peered around, and looked to every window and door; there was no light; so she picked up the locket and chain and hid them in her bosom. When she rang the bell at the front door a servant told that Mildred was away from home. Then ran back home with the stolen locket chain.

"I did not steal them, I found them," kept repeating to herself; "there is harm in that—I found them!"

Gertie went upstairs to her room; she took the locket from its hiding place, held it up to the light, and admired it to her heart's content. Oh! what a great beauty it was! Then she put the chain around her neck. But woe she heard footsteps on the staircase she quickly pulled the chain over her head and hid it in her pocket. Her mother entered the room but dearly as she loved her mamma, the ornament which she admired so much she did not show her. Oh, no! and Gertie stole out the house and went into the garden.

At night she was at a loss to know how to hide the locket. Her mother might feel her pocket, so it was not safe there; neither could she be sure that it would not be seen in a drawer or closet. Somehow or other, every place she tried to hide it in seemed exposed and open to view. At last she put it under her pillow, and there it disturbed her sleep for she kept waking and feeling under her pillow all through the night.

"Oh, dear!" she exclaimed in the morning not going as was her custom to her mother's room.

"Oh, dear!" she repeated, as she looked Mildred's look when they entered the school room, at the same time feeling for the hidden locket in her bosom. "Oh, dear!" she repeated at recess, afraid to run about with the locket should fall from its hiding place and worse than all, Mildred came, and put her arms around her waist in her loving way told her how the house and garden had been searched to find the missing locket and chain and how her mamma had scolded her for carelessness. "If I could only find the locket Mildred, the tears starting from her eyes.

After school Gertie lagged behind the other girls and walked home alone; there was a weight upon her heart which became heavier and she scarcely knew what to do. Her mother saw that something was the matter, when she asked what it was Gertie answered "Nothing!" at the same time the tears were trickling down her cheeks. Every way she went and every place she looked into a locket chain hung before her mind's eye. After ut out the light and got into bed, if she d her eyes, there were the locket and

; and if she closed them they were there
Up to the present time all her sorrows ares, as well as her joys, her mother had
; now, the child had to bear her burden and this was the worst thing of all.
h, will not God help me?" she cried as she tossed around on the bed. She to pray, but her lips seemed to be glued ner, and her throat parched. Rising on bows she heard distant footsteps on the or.
mamma!" shouted the little girl. Her r heard the cry and hastened to the ly child, my dear Gertie, what is the r?" she asked as she went to the bedside ok Gertie's hot hands in her own.

h, mamma, I more than found them; I hem?" Gertie exclaimed, putting one of ands under the pillow and taking out the and chain. "Mamma, it is Mildred
's locket. Oh, Mamma, will God for-me? Shall I ever be happy again?" and tle one sobbed bitterly on her mother's
r. "Yes, mamma," she continued, "I that I was a thief when I was afraid to them to you, and I knew it more when I not tell you how I felt. Now I have you all; I feel better. Do you think God forgive me?"

Gertie's mamma took her in her arms, and melted at the bedside to ask God's forgive-ly next morning the mother and the sad girl went over to neighbor Arkell's Gertie carrying the locket and chain.

mamma," she said, as they walked along, presn't matter so much what Mildred or he else thinks of me, if God forgives
I feel a great deal happier already."
er mother thanked God for this sign of ble and repentant spirit.

ired Arkell and her parents willingly for-the penitent little girl, and the secret ept in the two families.

"I exclaimed Gertrude, many and many afterwards, and always with tears in her
"I am sure that anything is a sin which y to hide from your mamma and from you cannot smooth it over by any name."—Advance.

TIVE ORDERS.—"I've got my orders, e orders, not to go there—orders that not disobey," said a youth who was tempted to enter a gambling saloon.
ome, don't be womanish; come along man," shouted the youths, who were to tempt him.

"No, I can't disobey orders," said John.
hat special orders have you got? Come, am to us if you can; show us your or-took out a neat wallet from his pocket, lling out a neatly-folded paper, "It is he said, unfolding the paper and show-g the boys. They looked and one of ead aloud: "Enter not into the path of cked."

the silent and passive resistance that down evils of long standing.—John

NOTHING BETWEEN.

Nothing between, Lord, nothing between;
Let me Thy glory see,
Draw my soul close to Thee,
Then speak in love to me—
Nothing between.

Nothing between, Lord, nothing between;
Let not earth's din and noise
Stifle Thy still small voice,
In it let me rejoice—
Nothing between.

Nothing between, Lord, nothing between;
Nothing of earthly care,
Nothing of tear or prayer,
No robe that self may wear—
Nothing between.

Nothing between, Lord, nothing between;
Shine with unclouded ray,
Chasing each mist away,
O'er my whole heart bear sway—
Nothing between.

Nothing between, Lord, nothing between;
Thus may I walk with Thee,
Thee only may I see,
Thine only let me be—
Nothing between.

Nothing between, Lord, nothing between;
Till Thine eternal light,
Rising on earth's dark night,
Bursts on my open sight—
Nothing between.

—J. Mountain.

A TRIBUTE TO A GOOD WIFE.—The following comprehensive inscription recording the virtues of an ancient Countess of Westmoreland, and written by her husband, was formerly to be seen in a large room at Budstone Place, in the County of Kent, once a seat belonging to that noble family.

Says the memorial in the quaint style of another century.

"Shee feared God and knewe how to serve him: Shee assyned tymes for her devotions and kept them: Shee was a perfect Wife and a trewe Frende. Shee joyed most to oblige those nearest and dearest to her: Shee was still the same ever kynde and never troublesome: Often preventyng (anticipating) my desires: Disputing none: Proventille mon-aging all that was myne: Lvyng in Appearance above myne estate while shee advanced it: Shee was of a grete spirit; sweettie temperd; of a sharp wit without offense: of excellent speeche blest with silence; of a brave Fashion to winne respect and to daunt Boldness: plesseyng to alle of her sxx, entyre with Fewe, delytng in the best: ever avoyding all persons and places if their honor blemyshed, and was as free from doing ille as giving the occasion: Shee dyed as shee lvyed
—well."

"Is it not strange that God should conde-scend to notice such trifles as dress, gold, pearls, costly array and such like things?"
Well, whether it seems strange or not, He does it, which shows that He does not consider them as trifles. Neither will you, if you are God-like.—Christian Standard.

So long as the enemy can keep us reasoning, he can buffet us to and fro, but into the true solemn silence of the soul before God, he cannot follow us.—John Bellows.

The Robin that Remembered.

There was trouble in Robintown, in the Apple Orchard country. Father and Mother Robin were flying from tree to tree in great distress, and all their friends were hurrying to see what had happened. I knew the secret the two had guarded so carefully—of the nest in the old Sweet-William apple tree, with its three tiny, wide-mouthed babies. I thought of Neighbor Browne's black cat and left my work to hasten out to see what was the matter.

As I stood in the old orchard listening, I heard a faint cry from the grass under the tree, and after careful search, found one of the baby robins lying helpless on the ground.
I suppose it must have fallen over the edge of the nest, for it was not yet strong enough to fly. Somehow, too, it had broken a leg, either in its fall or in its struggles after it reached the ground.

Tenderly taking it in my hand and speaking a soothing word to Father and Mother Robin, who ceased their plaintive cries when they saw their little one in my hands, I took the little sufferer to the house, lined a box with cotton for a resting-place and set the broken leg as well as its restlessness would allow. Such a hungry baby! It was always ready to be fed and never seemed to have too much. Would it be possible for a growing robin to over-eat,
I wonder?

The days passed by, and Tony—as I named my little charge—soon grew large, and he and I became the best of friends. The broken leg was strong again, and before long Tony was hopping around the room and following me from place to place about my work. But I knew I must not keep my little pet a prisoner.
So one sunshiny morning, I opened the window and let him look out upon the beautiful free world.

He turned his head from side to side, studying the strange, new country, but soon he heard the happy notes of other birds not far away, and giving me a bright look from the corner of his eye, away he flew—to freedom. But every morning Tony appeared at my window for his breakfast, and often he would come into the tree in front of the house and sing me one of his most joyous songs. If I went to the door and called "Tony!" he would give a quick, short cry and stretch out his wounded leg, now entirely well, in a peculiar way, seeming to remind me of the accident which had brought us together.

When autumn came and the robins flocked together, ready to escape the cold by flying South, I expected to say good-by to my little friend forever. I often wondered where he spent the snowy days, and if he ever thought of me. Imagine my surprise, then, one bright spring morning, to hear outside my window that peculiar call which I knew only Tony would make.

I hastened to the door, and, sure enough, there was my little friend. The spots on his breast had given place to an even red, and the mate that he had brought with him told me that he was now a full-grown robin, ready to face the responsibilities of life. What his mate thought of such unusual proceedings I would like to know; but Tony had not forgotten, and had come to tell me their happy secret: "Mrs. Tony and I are looking for a nice, shady place in Robin Town to make our home this summer."

I am sure they found it, but I wonder whether Tony ever told his children of strange adventures, "when I was a boy," in the giant's castle, and how the giants proved a kind friend and helper in his need.—Alice B. Fletcher in The Congregationalist.

Science and Industry.

Wages in Russian factories are two cents an hour and upward. There are thousands who work for a cent an hour, and tens of thousands who do not receive thirty cents a day for ten, eleven and more hours' work.

When Mauritius was ceded to Great Britain in 1810 there was a gigantic turtle in a court at the artillery barracks at Port Louis, which is still there, although almost blind. It weighs 330 pounds, and stands two feet high when walking. Its shell is eight and one-half feet long, and it can carry two men on its back with ease.

Back to the shop, the factory and the mill,
Thy workers go, O Lord! and it may be
That some have sorrows pressing heavily,
And some are burdened with foreboding ill;
And some, unmindful of thy holy will,
Gained not the rest provided yesterday;
And into sin some feet have gone astray,
And some hold labor in derision still.

Grant, therefore, Lord, that as we buyers go Through factory or store or busy street,
With thoughtful words these laborers we may greet,— Mindful of grace for sin, of balm for woe;
Helping in kindness sluggard souls to see
The worth of labor and the dignity.

—Anna Temple, in S. S. Times.

ELECTRIC FILTERING.—For generations, now, it has been known that oxygen, in its peculiar form of ozone, was a powerful disinfectant. Ozone may be regarded as oxygen, with an extra atom in each molecule—three instead of two. On the principle, apparently, that "two are company, three are none," the ozone molecule is always most ready to give up this extra atom. Disinfecting, deodorizing and decolorizing are largely caused by oxidizing. Hence this loose atom seizes its chance, where evil odor, bright color or microbes are present for destruction. For years, now, electric production of ozone has been possible on a large scale. The Siemens and Halske firm have lately applied their apparatus to the waterworks of Wiesbaden and Martinikensfeld with unqualified success. The purity is absolute, and the cost, including the pumping, is less than a penny per thousand gallons, capital expenditure included.—London Friend.

HALF-DONE WORK IS ALWAYS WASTEFUL.—The extravagance and waste of doing work badly are most lamentable. We can never over-estimate the value, in a successful life, of an early formed habit of doing everything to a finish, and thus relieving ourselves of the necessity of doing things more than once. Oh, the waste in half-done, careless, patched work! The extravagance and loss resulting from a slipshod education are almost beyond computation. To be under the necessity, all through one's life, of patching up, of having to do over again, half-done and botched work is not only a source of terrible waste, but the subsequent loss of self-respect and life is also very great.

There is great economy in putting the highest personal investment in everything we do. Any thoroughness of effort which raises personal power to a higher value is a judicious expenditure of individual effort. Do not be afraid to show thoroughness in whatever you undertake. Thoroughness is a great quality when once mastered. It makes all work easier, and brings to life more sunshine.—Success.

HOW WE GROW.—If the Census Bureau hasn't guessed wide of the mark, the American people, exclusive of the residents of Alaska and our island possessions, now number nearly eighty millions, the exact figures given being 79,900,398. This is an estimated increase of 3,905,814 for the three years since the census of 1900 was taken. If this rate shall be maintained the population in 1910 will reach nearly 90,000,000.

While these figures lack the accuracy of an actual count, the probability is that they are not very far from the truth, and they are of interest as indicating that the United States still leads the list of growing nations. In spite of the fact that the average American family is not as large as a half century ago, immigration makes good any possible decline from this source, and our population still increases at the rate of about one and one-third millions a year.

Besides verifying the general impression that the limit of growth in the population of the country is still a long way in the future, the census bulletin from which the above figures are taken shows that the ratio of town and city growth, as compared with that of the country, still continues high. There were 438 towns and cities containing a population of 10,000 and upwards, with a total enumeration of 24,047,367 in 1900. This town population, it is estimated, has increased in three years 1,759,000. It is plain that the country boys are still migrating from farm to town, and that the majority of the new immigrants remain in the cities instead of being distributed throughout the country.

The estimate is of local interest in showing that Philadelphia still holds third place in point of population among American cities, with no immediate prospect of being overtaken by any competitor. Its present population is placed at 1,367,716, while St. Louis, the next in order, is credited with only 612,273, or less than one-half of this city. New York and Chicago lead, of course, but their great preponderance is partly the effect of recent territorial additions, a process of growth which Philadelphia has not employed for more than half a century.—Bulletin.

VOCAL LAZINESS.—Scientific explanation is offered for the bad pronunciation of English lords and ladies, which Sir Henry Irving recently deplored. All his life, Sir Henry asserted, he has spoken good English, only to hear in his old age, his titled pupils saying, "goin'," "comin'," and "fishin'," like bad boys. Science, it must be confessed, is not at all certain but that soon we shall be permitted the joy of saying "fishin'".

A clever bit of apparatus explains this orthodox theory. The contrivance, made one piece of chalk and a fine wire, draws out the sounds necessary to produce words. For certain sounds the ingenious paratus draws actual bills, which prove beyond a doubt that those sounds require an muscular effort from the man who would utter them correctly.

The contrivance in question, invented Prof. Weeks, now of Missouri, is a circle of wire, which fits around the teeth, so while it is in the mouth that organ is closed or used for speaking without inconvenience. In front of the mouth a single projects from the loop, and inside a corresponding wire, fastened to the circle, projects toward the soft palate. A bit of cotton wire serves to stick the soft palate to the wire. When a scientist, with this paratus in his mouth, begins to talk, the motion of his palate is communicated to the wire to its outside end. This end contact with a sheet of lamplacked paper moving uniformly, so that every motion of wire makes a character in the soot. For sounds in the wire draws a wavy line, but parts of the sound "n" the wire draws a hillock, corresponding with an extra movement of the vocal organ on the other side of the wire. It is vocal laziness which the titled Englishman to leave out this e. But instead of condemning laziness, so prophetically points to the law by which follow the line of least resistance.

The particular mistakes in orthoepy of fish noise is attributed more to the tongue than to the palate. To say "fishin'" must raise the middle portion of the tongue to the roof of the mouth, whereas to pronounce "fishin'" only the tip of the tongue touches. This, again, is a case of least and least resistance, which is proving stronger than the dictionaries.—Philo. Ledger.

A MINISTRY OF DESTRUCTION.—A ministry indeed. But does such a ministry exist? And who represents it?

The Waldenses made the following contrast the Roman Catholic Antichrist of the fourteenth century: "His eighth work is to hate, and persecute, and search out, and rob, and destroy the members of Christ. History confirms the truth of the above and informs us that over fifty million people have been put to death by this church. Following is the testimony of Father G. who for thirty-six years was a Roman Catholic, but is now a Christian minister, defense before his inquisitors, "Far church of my youth; Farewell, company my ministry! Alas, alas! it has been a ministry of destruction! O, if my word had weight, I beseech you to open your eyes light, to abandon that system of darkness which you are groping, and accept the light which Jesus offers to you."

(Copied) WOODLAND, Seventh Month 26th, 1900.

WHITTIER compares death to a cross-bridge, soon past, and coming out into light again.

QUAKER PARROT."—A comical but true story told of a Parrot owned by a Philadelphia Friend. He was a physician and poly sometimes kept in his office. One day a old Friend in a plain coat and broad primed the office alone and sat down to wait a doctor. He was barely seated, when a size voice called out—"Ho: Quaker," and a gentleman much offended at the tone of words, looked about indignantly to reprove such disrespect of his cloth and his only to hear the mocking words repeated of the offender in all her feathered awing near the ceiling.

tame parrot was extravagantly fond of to visit. In course of time the babe it wept sore and bitterly, and poly, excited, stormed about her cage shrill-gerly and insistently, "Give it coffee, coffee!" Unconsciously she was carrying the "golden rule" and showing every human solicitude.

was a very correct parrot for Friends, was gray, and was particular to use the language.

en with the Lord to hear them when speak to Him, they must be ready to listen when He speaks to them. If the Lord not our attention we can get his. His not heavy that He cannot hear, and it is our iniquities which separate between us and, and our iniquities which hide his from us.

us turn unto the Lord, listen to his what the leadings of his Spirit, and wrkings of his providence, and we shall find "The eyes of the Lord are over the pious, and his ears are open to their pray-oh S. Elkinton, at times in company with an E. Rhoads, has been holding some meetings around Easton and Bethlehem, as way for them. On the 28th ult. they held two meetings in Easton for the colored people, and also the prison.

Items Concerning the Society.

delphia Monthly Meeting for the Northern on the twenty-third of last month granted leave to Benjamin Vail to attend the approaching Yearly Meeting, and to appoint one or meetings by the way.

er Monthly Meeting, held at Media, Pa., on the 15th, also granted a minute to Rebecca Smed attend the same Yearly Meeting.

rring to the "Quaker Beer" trade-mark, M. Jones says: "In this country we have our Oats and 'Friends' Oats; the 'George' Oats; 'Quaker Salve,' and a periodical called 'The Quaker.' These things are an-tious to us, of course, and we dislike to see these and trade-marks, but in a way it is a public good of appreciation. The name is chosen and it is believed to stand for purity and honor and is free from any injury which can come to us. It signifies to the public good quality. Now we are to lose the reality for which the name is so long as we preserve the substance and in the quality which have made the genuine known, we can endure the dislike of seeing one used for advertising schemes. The real would be to arrive at such a condition when we had no such significance."

First Printed utterance of Philadelphia

Yearly Meeting was "A General Epistle Given forth by the People of the Lord, called QUAKERS," and subscribed "From the Church of Philadelphia in Pennsylvania." Its preface is given as follows, in the first Supplement of the Journal of Friends' Historical Society, entitled "The First Publishers of Truth," edited by Norman Penney, London:—

"That all may know, we own none to be our fellowship, or to be reckoned or numbered with us, but such as fear the Lord and keep faithfully to his heavenly power, that with a holy conversation they may adorn that Truth they profess, otherwise, what experience soever they have had of the Truth, and are fallen from it, we account them as so many Judasses or Demasses, and own such no more than the primitive Christians owned them; but we testify against them, and say, such go into Perdition through Transgression, and fall under Darkness into a state of Damnation, twice dead, plucked up by the Roots, reserved in everlasting Chains, until the Judgment of the great Day, except it be possible they yet can find a place of Repentance through God's great unlimited Mercy. Read the general Epistle of Jude."

Printed and sold by William Bradford at Philadelphia in Pennsylvania, 1686.

The following account has been sent for our information:

Eastern Quarterly Meeting of Friends, held at Woodland, N. C., has just concluded. The last meeting was for the young people, held on the evening of Eighth Month 28th.

It was favored all through. The meetings for worship were solid. Those held for business were distinguished for harmony and unity. A Yearly Meeting was appointed to be held in Cedar Grove Meeting-house, Woodland, Northampton County, N. C., and a committee appointed to have care of the first, a General Meeting to commence on Fifth-day, the twenty-seventh of next Tenth Month, at 11 o'clock, to be followed by the Yearly Meeting on Sixth and Seventh-days the 28th and 29th for business, and on the 30th, First-day for Divine worship, and representatives were appointed to attend all. There was a cordial invitation extended to all Friends to attend.

Jessie Edgerton and companion, James Walton, from Ohio, were in acceptable attendance; also present seven ministers from this Quarter. The truths of the everlasting gospel were set forth, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever, in whom it pleased God the Father that all fullness should dwell, who is the wisdom of God and the power of God, who has come to teach people himself and to whom all are to harken, and who is head over all things to his church and people.

WOODLAND, Eighth Month 29th, 1904.

THE "NAME QUAKER."—To the Editor of The London Friend.—DEAR FRIEND:—I notice that some of thy correspondents more or less strongly object to any endorsement of the above term. About its use in the present day, I do not wish to say much here, but it has a history which it is unwise to ignore; when we appreciate that history, I don't think we shall be so anxious to get rid of the word itself.

It is true that "quaker" was first used toward George Fox and his friends in scorn in 1650, because he bade the court at Derby to tremble at the word of the Lord, and it was never appropriated by Friends as an internal password; but on the other hand we should recollect that it was almost the only term made use of by the gathered Church or its representatives when it became necessary to speak of themselves to outsiders by some distinctive appellation. Thus in 1674 George Fox begins an address to the King: "The principle of the Quaker is the Spirit of Christ." In 1680, George Fox issued a paper called "The Protestant Christian Quaker a sufferer by the reliques of popery." This is without qualification, but sometimes such a phrase as this was used, "The people of God in scorn called Quakers;" and then the antiquity of the Quaker was proved by bringing Moses and Habakkuk, who trembled at the word, into the unity of those who held the same faith.

I cannot find that Isaac Penington repudiated the term, though he does not often use it, frequently saying "we" and "our," without a denominational name. Samuel Fothergill, one of the most eminent and active of eighteenth century Friends, says, "I freely and thus publicly acknowledge that notwithstanding the contempt poured upon the name of a Quaker, I would rather sustain it with propriety than any of the most dignified titles amongst the sons of men."

I think it can hardly be denied that the early Friends felt that though Quaker was not the name they would have chosen to be known by, it had a certain applicability to those who accepted and lived up to the doctrine they preached, and that they had no right to be ashamed of it.

JOHN E. SOUTHALL.
Dock Street, Newport (Mon.)

The following account, which will evoke widespread sympathy with the afflicted families, has been sent for publication in our columns:

Probably never in the memory of Friends in the north of Ireland has there been a feeling of such deep and widespread sympathy as has been evoked by the sad boating disaster on Lough Neagh on the 23rd ultimo, whereby four members of Ulster Quarterly Meeting and two of their friends lost their lives. Of these, John F. and Herbert Green, were the only children of Isaac and Rebecca Green, who are both valued members of Belfast Meeting.

John F. Green had just attained his twenty-first birthday, and his brother was two years younger. Both had been educated at Lisburn and Sidcot Schools, and Herbert Green was afterwards at Bootham. At Sidcot School, he formed the acquaintance of Hugh and Frank Catchpole from Guernsey, and it was while the latter were spending their holidays with their former schoolmates that the sad occurrence took place. Before leaving their home, to which they were destined never to return, J. F. and H. Green and their two visitors agreed that they should all return from Lakeside (Lurgan) next day and attend a Bible reading in the afternoon, which had been arranged for Arthur Midgley, of Saffron Walden, who was engaged in a mission under the auspices of Friends' Adult School.

Alas! when Friends were assembling for that Bible reading some of them heard for the first time the sad tidings. Many feel it to be a personal loss, for John F. and Herbert Green had endeared themselves to those who knew them; and perhaps still wider is the feeling of the loss to the meeting, as they had given promise of being useful members of our little section of the church. They both took a great interest in Lisburn School Old Scholars' Association, and John F. Green had just been appointed treasurer.

The other occupants of the boat were their cousins, Winifred, Frank and Dorothy Green, children of Wm. J. and Susan E. Green, of Lakeside (both of whom are elders in Lurgan Meeting). All three had been educated at Lisburn School, where they were much loved. Frank Green distinguished himself for his scientific and mechanical ability, while his sisters, Winifred and Dorothy, were winners of exhibitions. The latter was continuing her studies at Denbigh, and had just passed the Oxford senior examination, gaining first-class honors, with distinction in Scripture, though she was only sixteen-and-a-half years old. Her success in that examination she knew before setting out on the fateful excursion, but a post card, from the head mistress in which she spoke of her as a credit to her school and country, arrived too late for Dorothy to see.

Winifred Green, the only survivor of the disaster, has, latterly, been studying at Westfield College, London, and intended presenting herself for the London B. Sc. degree in the autumn. Happily she is making favorable progress towards recovery, after the wonderful mental and bodily strain to which she was subjected.

"Most American Friends," says another correspondent, "who have travelled in religious service in Ireland in recent years, became acquainted with William John Green and his wife, as they were particularly hospitable; also with his brother Isaac and his wife. This stroke deprives the latter of their only children."

Notes in General.

George Muller's great work, which since his death has been carried on by his son-in-law, James Wright, on the very same lines in which it was conducted for sixty-four years.

The authoritative statement that the command of the Salvation Army in the United States is to be relinquished this coming fall by Commander Booth-Tucker has started conjecture as to his successor.

The Churchman laments "that after all the manifold religious activities of the last fifty or sixty years have had full scope in London, four-fifths of the whole population remains out of touch with any form of religion."

The 100th anniversary of the death of Barbara Heck, the founder of Methodism in America, was commemorated by a large gathering of Methodists from the United States and Canada, at her grave in Blue Church Cemetery, three miles from Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The Universalist Leader says: "We are witnessing to-day the pitiable spectacle of the Church of God trying to compete with endowed colleges, highly capitalized theatres, great business corporations, scientific institutions, and all the attractions of a brilliant society."

At Hyde Park, London, on First-day afternoons the utmost freedom is given to anyone who wishes to make a speech upon or discuss any theme, and hundreds take advantage of it. The Salvation Army always has its representatives on the ground, also the West London Mission. The temperance orator enforces his views, and the Society for the Protection of Animals declaims against cruelty to them, while all sorts and kinds of harangues on all kinds of subjects are listened to by the crowds.

THE DRESSMAKER'S SLAVE.—What mockery to prate of the freedom of the sexes when one sex possesses the freedom of uniform, and the other is the slave of ever-varying costume! Think of the great portion of a lifetime we women are condemned to spend merely on keeping our sleeves in style! Talk of our playing with scholarship or politics when we are all our days panting dishevelled after scrambling Dame Fashion, who, all our broken-minded lives, is just a little ahead!—Transcript.

Randall Thomas Davidson, as Archbishop of Canterbury, is now on a visit to America (the first of the ninety-five English archbishops to visit this country) bears as his official title the following language: "The Most Reverend the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England and Metropolitan." The archbishop is styled "Your Grace," and is addressed in formal conversation as "My Lord Archbishop." "But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ,—Matt. 23: 8. "Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock."—1 Pet. v: 3.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The Interparliamentary Union, composed of 226 delegates from America, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, England, France, Germany, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Rumania, Sweden and Switzerland, have lately arrived in St. Louis to hold their twelfth annual session. This body is composed of members of different national legislatures. The organization was perfected at Paris in 1888, having grown out of the conference of ten English and thirty French parliamentarians, who had assembled to discuss the execution of an arbitration treaty between England and France. It has been decided that the Executive Council of this body should adopt a resolution advocating mediation between Russia and Japan. It was also decided that President Roosevelt should be asked to call a second session of the Hague conference.

Director Martin of the Bureau of Health in this city, after very satisfactory tests of the effect of sulphate of copper upon polluted water, has recommended, "Not only has the Bureau of Health, through its bacteriologists, made practical tests with copper, both metallic and in sulphate form, to determine its germicidal potency against typhoid-fever and cholera germs in drinking water, but has obtained results that ought to be highly encouraging to everybody who wishes the general hygiene of the city by the use of a pure water supply."

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has lately given employment to about 20,000 men in various cities along its line in this State, which with other evidences point towards a general increase in different kinds of business.

The strike of the butcher workmen, which has demoralized the meat packing industry throughout the country for the last two months, has been ended.

In some streets in Baltimore it is stated that out of a superstitious dislike to the number 13, half numbers, as 12 1/2, etc., have been used in numbering the houses. After a conference the mayor and other city officials have determined not to permit the use of half-numbers, but will require that they be marked on their regular order and address. Owners of and tenants of "13" houses may sell or leave if they are unduly troubled with superstitious fears.

A despatch from Baltimore says: Health authorities here are deeply interested in the tests being made with copper sulphate for the purification of large bodies of water. In this city pigmentation added to the offensiveness of the city's water supply during periods of algal pollution. Experiments showed that the algae, which caused the trouble, would yield to a dilution of one part copper sulphate in 5,000,000 parts of water. Treatment was begun on Seventh Month 28th last, and continued until Eighth Month 17th, when it was reported to have been effective.

On the 5th instant wireless telegraph messages were sent from St. Louis to Springfield, Ill., 105 miles, which it is said is the greatest distance wireless messages have ever been dispatched in the United States. The operator did not even know where the receiving station at Springfield was. He was simply told to send a message to Springfield, and he dispatched it from the tower. It was caught at Springfield and the answer came back. After that message flew back and forth rapidly.

A despatch from Los Angeles, Cal., of the 7th says: From many points along the southern coast to-day came reports of damage by great billows which are rolling from the sea, occasioned by some phenomenon, possibly volcanic disturbances far out in the ocean. While there is scarcely a cupful of wind, enormous waves, in some instances forty feet high, roll ceaselessly against the shores. These phenomenal sea disturbances have been accompanied by unprecedentedly high temperature throughout the State.

During a late meeting of the International Geographic Congress in Washington the midnight time signal on one occasion was sent on its journey in two directions, one via the Pacific cable and the other via the Atlantic. A class despatch from Adelaide, Australia, contained the interesting information that the two signals had met there, exactly fourteen seconds after being sent from Washington.

In consequence of the low rate of passage money between Europe and this country, $7.75 for each steerage passenger, a large increase is reported of an undesirable class of emigrants who lately brought 2162 steerage passengers to New York.

FOREIGN.—The Russians have retreated northward since the late series of battles near Liaoyang, closely followed by the Japanese. A despatch from Mukden states that the Russians are preparing to evacuate that city. Mukden, 350 miles northward, is the next Russian stronghold.

It is stated that about 600 Japanese soldiers were recently blown up by a land mine near Port A. The besiegers began a general attack and seven were seen engaged in a fight in the harbor.

A despatch from St. Petersburg says that the information of the War Office indicates that G. Kurpatov lost about 17,000 men during the terrible battle at Liaoyang. It is believed that the Japs have lost 30,000 men.

M. de Lanesme, the French peace advocate, is in mediation between Russia and Japan, and calls either America or Germany to take the initiative.

The British expedition into Tibet under Col. J. has resulted in procuring a treaty with Tibetan officials which was signed in the apartment of the Dalai Lama in his palace at Lasa, the capital. Dalai Lama, the ecclesiastical head of the country upon the approach of the British, has established British influence in Tibet it is supposed has been up by this treaty.

The Simpson tunnel, which is being cut through plain Mountain, is to be 21,374 yards long. It is already been pierced for a distance of 21,142 yards work upon it has recently been stopped by the explosion of a spring of hot water flowing 1500 gallons per minute. It is said that the temperature in the tunnel has risen 112 degrees, and that refrigerators will be installed which the work be resumed.

A telegram of the 6th from Zanzibar says: The Russian Force early this morning found the Russian Force steamer St. Petersburg and Smolen at the three mile limit and communicated to the orders of the Russian Government to desist from interference with neutral shipping. The command the Russian vessels said they would forthwith pursue Europe.

An earthquake shock was felt at Gayquik, E.

The organization has been formed in England the Highways' Protection League; the object of it to protect pedestrians against reckless users of automobiles. It proposes to investigate cases of danger July—whether to life, health or property—or of annoyance or discomfort, caused by highways being in a manner inconsistent with the rights of the pedestrian.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each contributor on the following list:

Sarah A. Wilkins, N. J.; Anne W. Leeds, B. V. Stanley, Agt., Ia.; for Barclay Smith, N. V. Nail, Calif.; Mary Branson, M. D., Phila.; for Isabella McWilliam, N. J.; to No. 17, Hugh Foulke for Morton C. Coggeshall, I. Lydia S. Thomas, Phila., Wm. Bailey, Agt. $4 for Sybilla S. Cope and Lydia H. Darlin Wesley Haldeman, Pa.; Barclay Penrose, O. W. Bacon, N. J.; Thos. E. Smith, Ia.; George bott, N. J.; Elizabeth Taylor, Pa.; Henry A. pincoff, Phila.; W. D. Satterthwaite, O.; Philip J. Cal.; George Abbott, Jr., N. J.; Ellis H. N. J.; Edward G. Smedley, Pa.; John B. H. N. J.; B. H. Adams, Pa.; Wm. H. Morris Jones, N. Y. Harry Moore, Zebedee H. Pemberton Moore and Priscilla H. Hughes, 7th and 78.

Remittances received after Third-day noon appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Friends' Select School, Philadelphia, will Ninth Month 19th, 1904.

J. HENRY BARTLETT, Secy.

Young woman Friend student wishes work out of hours in Philadelphia for the winter, by which she earn board and lodging.

Address "L," Office of THE FRIEND.

Westtown Boarding School.—For copy of terms coming Westtown Boarding School, the student may write to Philadelphia, Pa., 16 and S. E. 2.50 and 4.32 cts. M. Other trains are met when near Stage fare, fifteen cents; after 7.30 P. M., two cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph West Chester, Pa. 1114.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY, Prop.

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS, No. 422 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

OL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 24, 1904.

No. 11.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications

received by

EDWIN P. SELLEN, PUBLISHER,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,

PHILADELPHIA.

Orders from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,

No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Before Christ.

literary advertisement is abroad which "Now consider the absurdity of applying this term pagan to the old Greek philosophers, Socrates, Plato and Aristotle, three of the greatest minds in the history of religion, ethics and philosophy. These men were not justly or barbarians and not godless, but only godly, and represented the highest culture. In their works will be found most exalted conceptions of God, the Soul, and life of virtue. In the words of Socrates, a hundred years before the New Testament was written, will be found a clearer statement of the doctrine of the immortal soul and its future states of probation, reward and punishment than can be found in any of the Bible. And in Plato's Dialogues will be found a perfect statement of the Golden Rule, 400 B. C."

able to affirm or deny every claim in the extract, we regard its last two letters perhaps its unsoundest part. No B. C. can be attached to any echo of Christ's name to be found in Plato, Socrates, Confucius, the sages of India, or the Old Testament.

If we want an abbreviation for "Before Christ" we might as well try B. B. if it is possible to say Before the Beginning. "In the Beginning was the Word," who was Christ, and "through whom all things were made," and who still "upholdeth all things by the word of his power." Christ did not begin with his flesh nor cease with his appearance. As spirit He is from the beginning, the Word of the Divine Communication.

From the beginning, "He was in the world, and the world was made through Him, and the world knew Him not. But to as many received Him"—and Plato's writings are without mention of the revealing Word, Socrates who said he was guided by the reproofs of instruction of an inward divinity or Witness for Truth, was called a Christian by one of the early Christian writers,—"to as many as received Him, gave He authority to become sons of God."

Many apparent parallels in religious truths between sayings of writers called pagan and texts of the New Testament are culled with diligent search, as for an occasional needle in a haystack, to puncture Christ's claims to originality for his doctrine. The motive with some of these discoverers is scarcely concealed, even almost aired with triumph, as inspired by a desire to cheapen the authority of Christianity as a revelation from above man,—to expose it as a borrowed religion. But to our mind, however much these sayings like Christ's, discoverable as uttered before the days of his flesh, may be multiplied, they in no wise impeach his own authorship of them, in whatsoever minds they were conceived, or through whatsoever mouths or pens delivered. Their origin was the Word, Christ, "written them in their heart and in their mouth." We care not how universal the Light which lighteth every man that has ever come into the world, is made to appear. Christian truth caught at by Confucius is none the less attributable to Christ; conceived by Cicero, it is still an inspiration of the inexpressible Word; wrestled with by Plato in the twilight of opening Truth, it was to that extent a quickening of Christ in him the hope of glory; a discernor to Socrates of the thoughts and intents of the heart, Christ was finding in him some obedient response; noble purposes and sublime endeavors everywhere, forgiveness of injuries, magnanimous self-sacrifice, spiritual treasures of wisdom and knowledge shining forth from any genius or prophet, have had their initiative in Christ in whom they have been hid, as the storage of Truth from the beginning, to be given forth to men as they were able and faithful to bear it. The humiliation to man is that these sentences of Truth declared before the lip of Truth was incarnate, have been so few. The glory is Christ's more and more, as more and more of gospel truth is unearthed from remoter antiquity. Arise and shine, ye ancients or pagans, wheresoever your light of Christ has come, for Christ antedates you all, "He is before all things, and in Him all things consist."

"Under the Law to Christ."

We have a fashion of thinking and speaking of law as though it was a humiliation—as though to be under the law were a badge of serfdom. "Under the Law to Christ" is Paul's description of the freest Christian life.

Law to a transgressor acts as a constraint from without. We have this guarantee about God's law—let the transgressor take it into his heart and love it, and it will move him as blessedly as the sun-quickened sap in the veins of a plant stirs the buds to bursting, and presses out with soft compulsion, the leaves, the branches, the flowers, and the fruit. Nothing which God ordains can be of the nature of a despotic command, the only reason for which is the despot's will; the doing of which may lift us into his favor, but which adds no blessing to the inner life. Every word which God speaks man can live by. Let him take the word into his heart, and its fruit must be concord: it must bring the life into harmony with God.

This is the point which the Jews quite missed. They lost the key to their dispensation, and turned it into a yoke which neither they nor their sons were able to bear. Instead of realizing that there was a grand reality in it, and that living it would make exquisite order in their hearts and homes, they set themselves wearily to do it, as you would do a despot's will, seeing no reason in it and having no hope, save that you might win the despot's favor.

And thus it became a bondage, a yoke of serfdom; not because of its own pure nature, but because of the nature of which it had to bring forth its fruits.

Imagine, if you can, the processes of life suspended, and that we were commanded to expand and contract the heart, distend and exhaust the lungs by a distinct volition; what a fearful bondage would our existence become! Life carries on these operations; it halts not, it wearies not; it is conscious of no stress or strain. So the Jews made to themselves a yoke of bondage out of the living and loving commandments of the Lord. They lost the vital principle of fulfillment; the life within, becoming cold and feeble, refused to work out the complete idea of God. Then having it as a mere commandment, having lost the reason and love of it, they made spasmodic efforts to fulfill it, and became the most lifeless formalists.—J. BALDWIN BROWN,

In "The Soul's Exodus and Pilgrimage."

WITHOUT repentance and forsaking of past sins, and walking in obedience to the heavenly voice which would guide into all truth, remission of sin and eternal life can never be obtained; but they that fear his name and keep his commandments, and they only, shall have a right unto the tree of life.—William Penn, 1668.

FOR "THE FRIEND."
The Realization of an Ideal.

BY HANNAH W. CADBURY.

(Concluded from page 75.)

Besides the encouragement of cases arbitrated, we have also high hopes of good results from the various treaties for arbitration that are either complete or on hand. Best and most triumphant of these are the treaties between England and France and England and Germany, the latter being most unexpected, and signed on Seventh Month 12th. These stipulate that all questions of a judicial order and those relating to the interpretation of treaties shall be referred to the Hague Court unless capable of adjustment by diplomatic means. They unfortunately reserve questions of vital interest and those affecting the independence or honor of the two nations, but we may hope that the term "judicial order" will be given a very wide scope. In like manner France and Italy have made an arbitration treaty, as also have England and Italy, Holland and Denmark, England and Spain, France and Spain, France and Holland. These have all been signed within the last nine months. Our own government is now negotiating treaties with England and France.

The most wonderful triumph for Peace, which seems almost too good to be true, is the settlement of the bitter and long-standing controversies between Chile and Argentine, republics between whom war seemed inevitable four years ago. Through the noble influence of two men, the tide of opinion was turned from the grim determination for war, into a wise determination for mutual understanding, arbitration and disarmament! Chile sold her two war ships, and with the money is improving the docks of her seaports; by reason of the great decrease in her annual expenditures, having no army and navy to maintain, she will be able by the end of this year to redeem her paper money; and next year it is estimated that the receipts will surpass the expenditures by twenty-two million piastres. Why should not our own Republic follow such a beneficial economy? Instead of that, however, we are increasing our military expenditures, till that for the navy alone now amounts to one hundred millions annually. In celebration of the new relations between Chile and Argentine a colossal statue of the Christ has been erected on the boundary line between the two; and from his lofty mountain height, thus imaged, the Prince of Peace looks down upon the two nations who have accepted his teachings and acknowledged them as their own. May they be kept loyal to that which they have declared; and may their example not be lost upon the other nations!

That there is much popular interest in Peace is shown by such events as Carnegie's gift of the Peace Palace at the Hague, by the noble price of $39,150, which is awarded annually to whoever has done most successful work in advancing the cause of Peace; or by the Peace and War Museum at Lucerne, where is shown all the art of war-making together with realistic representations of its horrors and sickening events.

And now, my friends, what are we to do? Nineteen hundred years have passed since Christ set this new ideal before mankind.

Nearly nineteen hundred years have passed since the first Christian martyrs were doomed to fight wild beasts in the arena because they would not fight against the human enemies of Rome. Two hundred and fifty years have passed since the founders of our little Society of Friends made it their principle to follow in their purity the teachings of Jesus, come what might; and so, because they loved all men, and saw them as their brothers in God, they could not go out to kill them. Through these two hundred and fifty years they have stood for the principle of non resistance; they have resignedly accepted the suffering that came to them in consequence of their refusal to inflict suffering on others; and they have felt that this passive resistance was testimony enough. But in the course of these two hundred and fifty years other voices have been raised beside their own. They have been strong voices too, from deep earnest natures who also saw this needless suffering of mankind. There has been growing a strong sentiment against war among the nations, and it has expressed itself not passively but very actively. Something of its expression we have just reviewed.

You ask what are we to do? In the first place, it seems to me we must lay aside our inertia. We must again join with the spirit of Christ in this movement, in which perhaps we were the first, as an organization; and we must keep pace with it, not lest others outstrip us, but lest we be found following afar off the Master and his cross. Because the cause is dear to our hearts and to the mind of our Master, we must not lag behind in its fulfillment.

People say: "What's the use? This is a wholly impracticable ideal, we can't possibly realize it in this stage of the world's development; when the Millennium comes, then perhaps we may." But is it impracticable? When Colzog shot our President there was heard an outcry against him for immediate and personal vengeance; "to the stake! to the lamp post, with him!" was the cry. The cries for vengeance then were no louder than the cries that lead to war are now. Yet there the strong arm of the civil law came in, performed its duty as prescribed by the law, and settled the fate of the man according to legal reason and justice.

In like manner may it not soon be possible that the arm of international law, and the power of international justice shall settle disputes among the nations as surely and as quietly as the civil law works, in spite of the frenzied cries of revengeful men? If, as we saw, private war yielded to civil law, may not, in its turn, public war yield to international law? [In saying this we are not commending either war or capital punishment as a method.]

And if again insidious voices whisper to us: "This thing for which you are working, this is merely an ideal, delightful to contemplate to be sure, but never meant to be realized; a goal, but never meant to be attained;" then we may answer—an ideal is not set up to be ignored; in a race one does not run away from the goal; an ideal must be believed in if it is to be striven for, and the goal is not won but by him who keeps it always before his eyes. It has been said: "All things are possible to him that believeth;" and again, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see." Hence, if we do desire the coming of the Kingdom we must believe that its ideals are attainable; and just, in so far we strive and labor for its realization, in far shall it be realized.

So let us work, and live too. Let us labor to make widely known our reasons for peace and to show the irrationality of war; let us educate public opinion; let us labor to initiate and forward all legislation that makes peace, and to demand such legislation from our government; and let us send definite words of encouragement to the government departments that have control of peace measures and to our fellow workers in the cause of Peace.

Let us live too; let us live as George E. lived, "in virtue of that life and power it does away with the occasion for all war." Then, and then alone, do rivalry, jealousy, greed, the lust of power and of dominion, all from which war arises, become impossible to a man. Then he shall, in himself, have realized this ideal of the Kingdom of Christ for it must exist within before it can exist without. But as, having entered into the Kingdom within himself, there comes the call to be the number of those who seek earnestly to establish it without, let us be found valiant the cause of peace on earth. This we must do; nor yet leave the other undone.

The Bible a Language Maker.

The Bible Societies by no means rest contented with their present horizons of conquest. Both the London and New York Societies very much engaged upon translations and visions, and missionaries throughout the world are busy with similar tasks. In scores of instances the Bible is the only literature language. Often a language is first reduced to literary form in order to produce a Bible. Often, also, the Bible actually creates a language, in the proper sense of that term. Ideas, the topics of thought, the point of view are not in the local speech. Take, as an example, the translation just made for the Sheetswa tribe in East Africa. They had word for Supreme Being, or home, father, heaven, house and other ideas equally fundamental. "Our Father which art in heaven" was absolutely unintelligible to them. A little by little, the missionaries persevered they have now compiled a dictionary of 18,000 words, a grammar and a translation of the New Testament that can be used by 3,000, people.

Other recent translations have been in Mare (one of the French Loyalty Islands), Uganda, Persian, Labrador-Eskimo, Koo Baldo, Murray Island (Torres Straits), West (New Guinea), Pang, Madrese (South Malasia), Nogogu (New Hebrides), etc. Much work still remains to be done, however, appears from the statement that in the borders of the Indian Empire alone 108 languages in use by 74,000,000 souls, have as yet version of the Scriptures. Translations revisions are now going forward in over hundred languages.—The Century.

Ah! the little acts that make Up each day—
Do they bless or will they wreck
Any? Say!
Will the record we shall view
Up above
Be of blighting frost, or dew,
Joy or love?

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 76.)

In the year 1815 the Committee sold to Job Taylor, one of the Friends who had resided at Cattaraugus for several years, a part of the tract there, containing 364 acres, together with the mill erected thereon, for $36.24, upon the condition that the grain the Indians should be ground at the mill, free, for one year.

On several years previous to this period, the Seneca Indians had at different times been enticed to part with portions of their lands; and under the pressure brought to bear upon them, had been induced on several occasions to sell larger or smaller amounts, until in the year 1810 there was left to them only the Buffalo Creek Reservation (where the city of Buffalo now stands), the Tonawanda, Cattaraugus and Allegheny Reservations, and six small tracts along the Genesee River. Unremitting efforts were made to obtain possession of these by those parties who held the preemption right to their lands; and during the preceding thirty years these efforts, the attempts of the Indians to resist them, and the acquisition by the whites of portions of their territory by fraudulent and disgraceful methods, furnish many sad illustrations of the wrong-reaching on the part of the whites, and a disregard of the interests of their people by the prominent chiefs, under the influence of avarice, and forms a very eventful and important period in their history.

The right to purchase lands of the Indians belongs, under the laws of the United States, to the United States Government itself, yet in many cases, owing to events which occurred before the union of the States, the preemption right was held by private parties, acquired by purchase originally from the State of Massachusetts. This State claimed an interest in parts of the territory now included within the limits of New York State, by reason of a grant of King James I of England to the Dutch Company in 1628-9. New York also claimed the same area under a grant from Charles II to the Duke of York in 1664. These conflicting claims were brought under the cognizance of Congress, and were finally settled by a convention held at Hartford, Conn., in 1786, by which it was agreed that New York should have the right of government and jurisdiction, and Massachusetts the right of property to the disputed territory. By virtue of this agreement, two tracts in New York State, nearly equal in extent to one-fourth its area, were ceded to Massachusetts, one of which comprised the "Genesee Country" in Western New York, in which these reservations of the Senecas were situated.

This agreement further stipulated that Massachusetts may grant the right of preemption to the whole or any part of the said lands and territories to any person or persons, who by the purchase of said grant shall have good right to distinguish by purchase the claims of the native Indians. In accordance with this proviso Massachusetts sold her interest in these tracts to certain parties. The Indian title to the Senesee tract, except the title to certain of their reservations, was extinguished by a contract entered into Ninth Month 15, 1797, between the Seneca Nation and Robert Morris, under the sanction of the United States. The preemption right to six of these reservations, viz., the Cattaraugus, Tuscarora, Allegheny, Buffalo, Creek, Canadae and Tonawanda Reservations, was finally acquired Ninth Month 12, 1810 by David A. Ogden, who afterwards associated others with him under the name of the Ogden Land Company. This company, after obtaining possession of many thousands of acres of their best lands, still holds the preemption right to the Cattaraugus and Allegheny Reservations. The right which the Indians have to their lands is assumed by the people of this country to be not a fee simple title, but only that of occupancy. Thus, as defined by the Supreme Court of the United States, "Indians have rights of occupancy to their lands as sacred as the fee simple, absolute title of the whites, but they are only rights of occupancy, incapable of alienation or being held by any other than common right without permission from the government."

The fee simple title to their land in this country is asserted by our laws to reside in the whites because derived from discovery and conquest—a claim, the justice of which is not apparent to the Seneca Indians of this generation. The character of the preemption right to the Reservations of the Indians in Western New York was thus defined by DeWitt Clinton, Governor of New York State in 1820, in reply to a memorial by the Senecas, at a time when they were harassed by efforts to induce them to part with more of their territory to the preemption holders: "All the right that Ogden and his company have (to your reservations), is the right of purchasing them when you think it expedient to sell them—that is, they can buy your lands, but no other person can. You may retain them as long as you please, and you may sell them to Ogden as soon as you please. You are the owners of these lands in the same way that your brethren, the Oneidas, are of their reservations. They are all that is left of what the Great Spirit gave to your ancestors. No man shall deprive you of them without your consent. The State will protect you in the full enjoyment of your property. We are strong and willing to shield you from oppression. The Great Spirit looks down on the conduct of mankind, and will punish us if we permit the remnant of the Indian Nations which is with us to be injured. We feel for you, brethren: we shall watch over your interests. We know that in a future world we shall be called upon to answer for our conduct to our fellow creatures." However harmless this preemption right as thus explained appears to be, the parties owning it, in urging their claims [under it], have brought great trouble, anxiety and loss to the Senecas. In quoting this language of DeW. Clinton, William L. Stone, in his "Life and Times of Red Jacket," remarks: "Would that the elevated morality of that great philanthropist had governed every American negotiation with the children of the forest." A history of this claim and of proceedings under it was published in THE FRIEND, Vol. LXIX, page 364, &c.

As early as 1809, Thomas L. Ogden, of New York city, one of the company owning the preemption rights to the reservations in New York belonging to the Seneca Nation, took measures to ascertain the views of Indians in regard to selling their Allegheny Reservation, or exchanging it for land elsewhere.

The subject of parting with their lands had been considered by the Indians at a council held at Buffalo Creek, just previous to a visit to them by four members of the Committee in 1809, and the feeling against it was so strong, that Corn Planter informed the Friends in public interview, that some of their young warriors had said they would kill any chief who should sell any more of their lands, and for his part he thought it would be right. On enquiring whether the Quakers would approve of such a measure, and receiving the reply that he did not approve of taking life on any occasion, Corn Planter said he "thought it would be better to take life for this than witchcraft, because it could be proved, and the other he had his doubts about."

The Friends residing at Cattaraugus, under date of Seventh Month 20, 1811, mention that "great commotion has prevailed among the Seneca Nation on account of certain persons having purchased of the Holland Land Company the preemption right of their lands; considerable exertions have been used to induce the Indians to sell and move to the westward. They appear generally opposed to parting with their possessions at present."

The resolution of the Indians not to dispose of their lands was commended by the Committee, who also, towards the close of this year, laid before William Eustis, the Secretary of War, to whose official supervision the matters relating to the Indians was then referred, the disadvantages which would follow a removal of the Senecas to the West, in breaking up the habits of civilized life, which they had thus far embraced. The Committee expressed the hope that if anything remained on the part of the Administration proper to be done to avert the consequences they apprehended, that the Government will be disposed to act therein as the circumstances of the case may require.

The presence of the Friends at Cattaraugus and their advice to the Indians located at Buffalo Creek to remain firm in their decision not to sell their lands, were felt by the preemption holders to be in their way, and early in 1812, the agent of this Company paid Friends a visit in their settlement at Cattaraugus, and desired them to desist from their operations in aiding the natives on the lands they then held, and join him and others in procuring for them a more permanent home elsewhere, to which Friends might move their establishment, offering at the same time an ample reward to such as should be active in bringing such measures about.

Notwithstanding the repeated refusal of the Indians, the efforts of the preemption holders were earnestly continued to induce the Indians to part with one or more of their Reservations.

In 1817 the representatives of a number of the Western tribes met at Sandusky, Ohio, to consider the sale of their lands or the exchange of them for other lands to the westward, and strong efforts were made to induce the Indians of New York to attend it and take part in the proposed movement. Several of the prominent chiefs of the Senecas were present at this conference, but returned home dissatisfied with the proposals which had been made to them.

The danger, however, that the Indians might become unsettled at this time, seemed so great that the Committee thought it proper to express their feelings on the subject to them in a letter of advice, and also to represent their case to the authorities in Washington. A Memorial to James Monroe, President of the United States was accordingly prepared, recounting the motives which had induced Friends to engage in labors for the benefit of these Indians, the success which had thus far attended these labors, and the attempts that were then being made to influence the natives to part with their reservations and to remove therefrom, concluding as follows—
 "With a view therefore to secure to these Indians the possession of the comparative small portion of the land they retain; by its improvement now become valuable; we respectfully request the President to discourage the alienation of this land, and suggest our desire of promoting among them a division thereof in such a manner that it may be put out of their power to transfer it in whole or in part, to white people; in order that it may descend to their children, and their posterity, and remain a monument of the disposition of the Government to fulfill the Christian injunction of 'Whatever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them.'

"That the President may be favored with the true spirit of wisdom, to guide and direct him in the discharge of the important and arduous duties devolved upon him is our sincere desire."

Thomas Stewardson, William Newbold and Thomas Wistar were appointed to present this Memorial, who reported in the Sixth Month, 1817, that they had "obtained an interview with the President and presented him the Memorial, which he appeared to read with attention, and opened a way for a full communication of sentiment on the subject, and gave an assurance of his attentively perusing and considering the various documents which were presented with the Memorial, and that they believed the application was seasonable."

(To be continued.)

GO STRAIGHT AND KEEP STEADY—While walking in the country with several relatives, a little girl came to a deep ditch which could be crossed only by a narrow plank. Though for a time she feared to cross, she suddenly looked round and exclaimed, "Grandfather, see you first; you are the heaviest, and I want to see how you do it." After watching her grandparent safely over the plank, the child said, "Oh, I can do that; you have only to go straight and keep steady." May we not learn that if we would go the way that God has opened we have but to follow his word, go straight and keep your faith steady. The Lord will to-day divide the waters for his servants, even as he did for the Israelites when they passed over on dry ground, until all the nation were passed clean over Jordan (Josh. 3: 17). Our difficulties may be overcome if we will but allow God to clear the way, instead of attempting to do so in our own strength.—The Baptist Commonwealth.

KEEP US FROM DIVIDING thy commandments into great and small, according to our own blind estimate.—Rosetti.

The Orioles' Nest-building.

The following little story is told by a writer in Primary Education:

Do you want to know just the cunningest thing that ever two little birds did? Let me tell you—because it's true.

The birds were orioles; and you know the curious, pretty nests that orioles make, swinging like a soft, gray, silken bag from the high branch of some elm tree.

Just four springs ago, the orioles had come to this grand old elm tree that shaded the porch of a quiet farmhouse.

They had picked out the very branch they wanted; and now they must hunt for material to build their pretty home.

So they flew about, chirping and calling, and busily gathering stray threads and moss, when—oh, joy!—what was that beautiful, long, white silky stuff on the porch just under their elm-tree home? They flew down very cautiously. They fitted this way and that. Dare they take some of it for their airy home? One more peep—yes—grandfather was sound asleep. There was no doubt about it. But how should the orioles know that the long, white whiskers belonged to him? They ventured nearer. They pulled one hair. They grew bolder, and pulled another. Two long, beautiful silky threads for their nest!

They flew off to the tree, and then back for more. Grandfather still slept. The little rogues were having such a good time, when Aunt Lucy happened to spy them. She laughed aloud, and, of course, that frightened the birds, and grandfather woke.

But wait—just hear the rest. Aunt Lucy was so pleased at what the cute little orioles had done that she determined they should have all the pretty threads of hair they wanted. So that very afternoon she took some of Mary's golden locks, a few more of grandfather's, and some of her own glossy black hair, and spread them on a bright cloth on the porch. Then she warned the family to keep very quiet and see what happened. In less than an hour the orioles had taken every hair and carried it to their tree. Before many days the pretty nest was done, and the birds were enjoying their new home.

In the fall, after the orioles had left their elm-tree home, Aunt Lucy had some one climb the tree and get the nest; and there, so curiously woven into the lining, were the soft white, golden, and black hairs.

Aunt Lucy keeps the nest in her parlor, and counts it as one of her greatest treasures.

TESTIMONY OF A FRIEND WHO IS GROWING BLIND.—Still I cannot regret it, for I have wonderful openings in my quiet hours, both by day and by night, when the things of the Everlasting Kingdom come home to me with freshness and power, and life seems just one refreshing stream of love, peace and joy.

Why do not those who pray continually, "Thy kingdom come," exercise faith and enter the kingdom, and acknowledge and obey the King? For both are assuredly here, and none need wait till they cross the river.

Christ said nothing and did nothing whereby to disappoint the seeking soul, but "all things" are now ours, if we believe in Him, receive, and obey Him.

The Message to the Church of Ephesus.

"These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil; and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast labored, and hast not fainted." (Rev. ii. 1: 3.) What more from this could we expect of any church? Nothing more, so far as good works are concerned; yet from what follows in the same message, that church was in a very dangerous condition. Works do not justify it; love is wanting. It is, from what follows, on the very verge of being left in darkness. With all its many virtues it is a fallen church. For the further message to it is this: "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." (Rev. ii. 4: 5.)

As the church is composed of individuals, members this grave charge must apply individually as well as collectively. It is comprised in a very few words, "Thou hast left thy first love;" and this calls for repentance—"Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent and do the first works." Seeing that the departure from the "first love," and the neglect of the "first works," the works which were the result of the first love brought the church of Ephesus into such a fallen condition that it is in danger of having its candlestick quickly removed out of his place, should it not arouse the church of this day to consider whether or not it too, has left its first love? Whether it is doing "the first works?" A solemn consideration this, which should be brought home to our own individual thoughts; the condition of the church depending upon the condition of the individual members. If the members have left their first love, it will not prevail in the gathered assembly. So as we each value having our candlestick in its place, we should, as the apostle exhorts, "examine our own selves."

How tender and how teachable we were in that time of our "first love"—in the day of our espousals! How our hearts flowed forth in tenderness of feeling and love towards all and our "first works" were a co-working with that heavenly visitation of Divine grace which had in mercy been extended to our souls as filled us with this "first love." From first to last, all our works, in a religious sense should be as our "first works," in the time of our first love—a working in the fresh morning of the Spirit of the Lord in our hearts.

We may have all the many virtues of the church of Ephesus, yet be a fallen people; and if such be our condition we are in the same danger as was that primitive church. The call to repentance is just as imperative to us and the danger of having our "candlestick removed out of its place," just as great; a candlestick represents the church which retaining its first love, and doing its first works is holding up the lighted candle before the world. So is every individual and every bod-ligious professors in danger, if they leave first love and cease to do their first works, being removed out of the place designed by the Head of the Church that they should go—that of being as a candlestick to hold light to those around them. "But thanks to God, who giveth the victory," there are those preserved in different places and different names, of whom it may be said, "O, hast the dew of thy youth." "The eons also shall hold on his way, and he hath clean hands shall be stronger and ger." (Job xvii: 9.)

the message to the church of Ephesus after go so solemn a warning of what would be oom if she did not repent and return to rst good estate, closes with a heavenly ise, showing that we have indeed a mer- High Priest touched with the feeling of afirmities. "He that hath an ear, let him what the Spirit saith unto the churches: m that overcometh will I give to eat of ree of life, which is in the midst of the use of God." (Rev. ii. 7.) There is en- gement for all who have that ear which "what the Spirit saith unto the churches." to him that overcometh"—no matter where, so there be an overcoming of which has drawn away the heart from its love and led after other loves and to the cting of the "first works." These shall of the tree of life; and what a glorious ch that would be which should be com- of those overcomers, all united and feed- together upon the fruit of the tree of life a spiritual Eden and paradise of God! eeding continually, perhaps; for the tree e is described as only yielding "her fruit month," but when not feeding, waiting her in the faith and in the patience, know- that when the appointed time shall come ree will yield her fruit, and their souls d. T. H. W.

1st Month 15th, 1897.

ERY soul has an atmosphere, and you it as quickly when you enter it as the wind or the stream of fragrance and th of the south side of a hill where there owers and vineyards. To give out, al- gh unconsciously, an atmosphere that s others is an evidence of regeneration haracter. It ought to be one of the most l things a Christian can bear to have person say to him, "It does me good o be with you." That is a testimony e subtle yet potent influence of person- and when mere personality becomes a pible blessing, there must be character, nd trustworthy, behind it.

AIVE up to your promise after making it," a newspaper. That is a good rule, but e exceptions. Should a man live up to a ise to tell a lie? We should make no ises but right promises. Then we should up to them fearlessly. If we find we made a wrong promise, we should at go or write to the person to whom we bound ourselves, and explain that we eep it. If we received some service ompensation for our engagement, we d return it. We must always be true. e true makes fellowship with lies impos-

The Idol of Change.

"It is most discouraging!" sighed the ambitious mother of three young "society" women. "We no sooner get the sewing done in the spring than we find that styles are changing. Helen's street suit, which we hoped would be all right for at least a year, was stylish last March—but it is dowdy now. It seems as though the sleeves change almost overnight. The syndicates of merchants and manufacturers and dressmakers are leagued together to promote changes—and we are in their power. O, if the fashions would last only a single year!"

A million plaintive voices echo this cry. Happy the independent souls who can rise above such matters or who are obscure enough or rich and famous enough to snap fingers at the unreasonable despot of fashion, who is grinding the souls of so many of our woman-kind under his iron heel.

We are told that this constant alteration has many good features. It "promotes mental activity," "keeps money circulating" and "imparts a freshness and buoyancy to all social life." All this may be true, though it has a ring of casistry, and Horace Walpole has instructed us that the nation which becomes chiefly engaged in the pursuit of trifles is in a state of decline. What can be more trifling than these incessant variations in the shape of sleeves and the cut of skirts and the modes of decoration which now take up the minds of fully half our women during—at a chance, but not exaggerated, estimate—fully a quarter of their available time?

When the world is full of important work waiting to be done the judicious observer must shudder at the thought of the enormous amount of force which is daily expended upon the useless items pertaining to woman's dress. Greece and Rome knew nothing of these absurd changes. The women of the Orient know nothing of them now. The great mass of these women wore and wear loose, flowing, comfortable garments, which, broadly speaking, fit one woman almost as well as another. A festival robe could be made, embroidered with costly gems, worn two or three times a year and then laid away in a cedar chest to be handed down for the same sacred usage to distant generations. How sensible and easy this sounds!

A prominent woman was speaking recently about a certain great charity. "So many problems come up at every meeting of our board!" she moaned. "We have just so much money to spend, and yet the number of inmates is constantly increasing. We have difficulty in getting efficient and honest teachers and other employes. M. A. is the President of our Board, and she gives up nearly all her time to the details of management. She is growing old and infirm and cannot serve much longer. There is no one of us who can possibly take her place. Even if we had the ability, we haven't the time. We are all so horribly busy that we cannot possibly get time to consider and attend to all of these matters."

And what are these well-to-do, highly educated, benevolent women so "horribly busy" about? Is there any good and sufficient reason why some of them cannot be found to administer the affairs of this important charity? Let them fearlessly and candidly set down in black and white just the amount of time they spend each month upon the trying on, oversight and purchase an actual sewing upon their clothes and those of their family, and they will find that hours and hours of valuable time, over and above a reasonable amount, have been spent in deferring to rapid and utterly meaningless changes in styles.

Mothers cannot properly superintend the studies or manners or morals of their children because they "haven't time." The inner and higher things of life are often utterly neglected in this insane chase after outside decoration, which is primarily dictated, as the suffering mother of daughters properly said, by selfish and unpatriotic syndicates of tradesmen and dressmakers. There is a right and proper regard for appearances, but this is enormously overshot in the present struggle to keep up with the criminally rapid changes in the fashions.

Put the worst of it is not the "haggard hunt for style" in outer garments, though that is bad enough. It is the attitude of mind which this constant change begets in us. A passion for change—a tendency to weary of whatever one's life may be, follows upon this feverish chase after something new in clothing. People chafe at the calm monotony of daily work and domestic pleasures. Sameness, even right and proper sameness, bores them. Undoubtedly a feverish desire for new forms, without regard as to whether or not they are better, in literature, art and architecture, for new text-books and new modes of education, even for new forms of religion, is promoted by this silly chase forever after novelties in clothing. It is the opinion of profound social observers that even divorce is encouraged and extended by the apparently superficial fact of the constant and needless discarding of one sort of raiment for another.—Kate Upton Clark, in The Congregationalist and Christian World.

SIMPLICITY THE LAW OF TRUE INTERCOURSE.

—Thus is nature an interpreter, by whose means man converses with his fellow men. A man's power to connect his thought with its proper symbol, and so utter it, depends on the simplicity of his character, that is, upon his love of truth and his desire to communicate it without loss. This corruption of man is followed by the corruption of language. When simplicity of character and the sovereignty of ideas is broken up by the prevalence of secondary desires, the desire of riches, the desire of power, the desire of praise, and duplicity and falsehood take the place of simplicity and truth, the power over nature as an interpreter of the will, is in a degree lost; new imagery ceases to be created, and old words are perverted to stand for things which are not: a paper currency is employed when there is no bullion in the vaults. In due time, the fraud is manifest, and words lose all power to stimulate the understanding or the affections. Hundreds of writers may be found in every long-civilized nation, who for a short time believe, and make others believe, that they see and utter truths, who do not of themselves clothe one thought in its natural garment, but who feed unconsciously upon the language created by the primary writers of the country, those, namely, who hold primarily on nature.—Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

The matter under this heading is furnished to THE FRIEND on behalf of the "Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia," by Benjamin F. Whitson, 401 Chestnut St., Phila.

Days for deeds are few, my brother,
Then to-day fulfill thy vow;
If you mean to help another,
Do not dream it, do it now.

FIND your niche, and fill it. If it be ever so little, if it is only to be a hewer of wood and drawer of water, do something in this great battle for God and Truth.—Surgeon.

THE PURPOSE OF THIS PAGE, as outlined in Vol. LXXVI, No. 44, of THE FRIEND is "not to formulate or defend specific methods for dealing with the 'Temperance Question,' but to inform our readers as to methods being suggested or experimented with in the effort to cleanse society from the contaminating influences of a stupendous evil." While our attitude on the subject has not been questionable, it is true, nevertheless, that numerous publications in sympathy with the liquor interests are making claim to the same purpose. The popular method of journalism in seeking to please its following, or at least to offend no one, has doubtless had an influence with us, but not, we believe, to the hurt of our cause or to the compromising of Truth. We would, however, emphasize the concern expressed when this department was first edited, by saying again, "There is ground for fear that many members of the Society of Friends are unequal to their opportunities and unappreciative of their personal accountability because of ignorance as to the insidiousness and enormity of the evils of intemperance, and as to facts relative to temperance effort." We commend to our prayerful consideration the article on the first page of THE FRIEND, Ninth Month 3d, 1904, entitled "Energetic Passivity." "Passivity to God means activity to Him."

THE EFFECT OF THIS PAGE should be to stir in the reader's heart a sense of personal responsibility in the great issue here considered, and to lead to a self-examination that will result in a fuller consecration of life to God. The public is poorly informed, and in many cases misled, concerning this great social problem. Brave men and brave women are needed, who will not swerve before calumny and hate, but who will go forth in the power of the Christ-love to turn men's hearts to the Truth, by truth-telling. The dispassionate representation of conditions as they are is one of the best ways of moulding sentiment into unity of action. Methods of action will vary necessarily with localities and social conditions, but in the work of education there can be entire accord.

MANY Christians are quiet and respectable; they make no disturbance. But the devil says "Silence gives consent; I will go on with my business."—A Late Paper.

O, WHAT a world this soon would be if the perseverance of the "saints" were made of as enduring stuff as the perseverance of the sinners.—Dr. Parkhurst.

"The church people," says the New York Brewer, "can drive us when they try, and we know it. Our hope is in working after they grow tired, and continuing to work three hundred and sixty-five days in the year."

The trouble with the modern reformer is that he never cultivates the politician until he wants something of him. We church people are too modest. The devil is here only by usurpation. Every saloon is a trespasser, every iniquity is a squatter.—T. M. Hare.

IT IS NOT WISE TO BELIEVE EVERYTHING one sees in print. Printers and editors do not always concern themselves about the correctness of the statements they put in type, especially if they are paid for making the copy. One of the methods employed by the liquor interests in opposing the increasing sentiment adverse to them, is the putting of ostensibly correct information before the public in a form that ignores the evils of the saloon and, by the suppression of important facts, is likely to create an erroneous opinion in the mind of the reader. Editors have been offered handsome sums of money for the use of editorial columns for this purpose. Many such offers have been accepted, and the very paper or magazine in which we have been accustomed to repose much confidence may be receiving advertising rates for the publication of items or even whole columns indicating that prohibition is making no headway, or that the danger from the use of intoxicants is greatly exaggerated, or that it is wrong to charge so much crime and pauperism to the traffic in liquors. "Knowest thou what thou readest?"

THE WILLINGNESS OF THE PRESS to allow space for matter relating to Temperance Reform, if tactfully edited, is one of the encouraging signs of the times. Unfortunately the number of persons who are willing to give the time and thought necessary for the preparation of such matter is far too few. Let the reader consider what avenue may be open to him or her in this respect.

THE GROWTH OF PUBLIC SENTIMENT regarding the evils of the saloon has been illustrated most encouragingly by the almost universal and tremendous censure called forth by the recent action of Bishop Potter in dedicating the Subway Tavern. It is evidently an established conclusion of the popular mind that the true church of God and the saloon have nothing in common, but are opposed irreconcilably.

WIPE OUT THE PROHIBITION PARTY!—It's the easiest thing in the world—if you go at it the right way. The Prohibition party has nothing, except principle, behind it. There is no earthly consideration to hold men to the party if the things they want can be accomplished some other way. Any party that wishes to destroy the Prohibition party can do it by simply enacting and enforcing Prohibition. We are willing to be exterminated. We have other things to attend to, if we can only see this in safe hands.

Do you say, "Oh, we can't do that?" Very well, then, we shall have to, and simply stay right in the field and the fight till we get it done.—New Voice.

SCIENTIFIC STATION FOR PURE FOOD PRODUCTS is the name given to a place in New York recently established, and we shall probably hear from time to time of surprising discoveries (2) here made. The "scientists" who constitute the "board of directors" are each one associated with some prominent brewing establishment. The probable nature of the probable "findings" may be surmised without the gift of prophecy to aid us.

THE ARMY CANTEEN.—In his exhaustive statistical study of the canteen and no-canteen periods, William E. Johnson concluded as follows:

Summarizing the comparative records of the two systems we find that since the canteen has gone—

Desertions have decreased 33 per cent.
Deposits of savings have nearly doubled.
Court-martials have slightly decreased.

Admissions for alcoholism have decreased 33 per cent.

Admissions to the sick list have decreased 20 per cent.—St. Louis Advocate.

RELIABLE INFORMATION ON THE SUBJECT OF TEMPERANCE REFORM is not likely to be found in publications not in sympathy with temperance work. We wish that more people would realize this truth. The dissemination of complete and accurate information is one of the greatest helps to the cause. Every Christian home in the land should receive some periodical that is an exponent of this great social movement, and careful attention should be given to data therein. It is to be feared that we are more attentive to the record of "sessions" contained in our daily papers than the growth of righteousness discussed in many well edited periodicals.

The publications of the W. C. T. U. and the Anti-Saloon League, likewise the New York are to be recommended. The tone of the publications has changed somewhat during the past decade, the disposition being to become less radical and more co-operative, each speaking in high compliment of the work of the others.

THE PROHIBITION PARTY has stood steadfast for its ideals for a generation. It has won any large place in national politics as yet, but it has had large indirect influence upon public opinion. It is probably true that the success of the recent anti-saloon campaigns in different States has been in no small degree due to the sentiment to which the party given rise.—New Voice.

IN response to the foregoing declaration of the American Issue replies: "With the Anti-Saloon League, it is largely a case of old men having labored and of our having entered into their labors. The League has not claimed to be anything but a practical utility of the temperance sentiment already existence, and generated from many sources."

Science and Industry.

The wise workman begins early to perfect himself in details. The pupil in school, the apprentice in the shop, the clerk in the store, the learner of a trade or beginner of a profession, can in no way better pave the road to success than by learning to do the elementary things and the routine things entirely well.

A dictionary for the blind, the first ever issued, has been issued. It contains forty thousand words, and is in eighteen volumes. It has complete pronunciation marks and definitions. It is now about one hundred and ninety years since the education of blind persons has been expanded systematically. The wonder is that they have never been given a dictionary.

CONVENIENT INFORMATION.—A friend, who was sitting us, found that the glass stopper in a bottle was fast and she couldn't remove it. This is an easy thing to overcome when you know how. I took a bit of cloth, soaked it in some hot water, and wrapped it around the neck of the bottle. In a moment the glass stopper expanded sufficiently to enable us to remove the stopper with ease.

CRACKS SIMPLY MENDED.—There is another trick that occurs to me which housekeepers should like to know, and that is how to mend a crack so that it will not be marred and will not mended. Take some quick-lime and powder some hen pour on this the white of an egg. A mixture of vinegar and milk in equal parts must be made and added to the lime and egg, and the whole must be beaten well and slightly warmed. The broken edges of the vessel is to be mended must then be exposed to heat for a few seconds, after which the cement may be applied, in only a very thin layer. The broken edges pressed firmly together, and when the cement has dried it will endure enduring than the plate or cup itself. If the broken flints so mended, and after a few days hammered with an axe. The stone, of course, under the hammering, but in other places than where the break had formerly been. That shows the enduring quality of it.

TRIFLING THING.—One has said that "It is hard to tell what a trifle means." Everything in nature seems to be closely connected with everything else. An undue preponderance of force sets in motion all other forces. The eddying of a few particles of air may give rise to a tornado. A step may start an avalanche. A few drops of oil slowly leaking from a cask may seem of little account; but in due time the vessel will be empty. A pin, bolt, or screw out of place may ruin a powerful engine. A particle of dust may stop or render a chronometer useless as a time-keeper. The prick of a pin in a balloon may destroy it. Another writer has put it thus: "Thought in a still stronger light: 'There is such a thing as a trifle.' Any person who has lived many years and been engaged in the actions of daily life, will certainly appreciate this quotation. A useless expense of a cent daily, to a laboring man, will amount to a small sum in a series of years, while a judicious expenditure of the same will be exhibited in a few years in the general appearance of thrift all around such a man. To know how to do things in the best possible manner involves a knowledge of a thousand little things needful to insure success.—Unknown.

AN INEXPENSIVE FILTER.—For this purpose one had better take a stone jar, though for that matter, almost any receptacle will do. A hole sufficiently large for the stream of water one desires to enter the filter should be bored in the bottom and after this is accomplished the receptacle must be filled, first with a layer of sand several inches deep, then a layer of bits of sponge, and on this, to a level even with the top of the jar, plenty of small gravel or pebbles.

When the receptacle has been so filled a piece of wire screen is to be fastened over the top, made secure with bands of wire. The home-made filter must then be inverted over another receptacle, into which the filtered water is to drop, the little orifice attached to the hydrant by means of a small hose, and it is ready for business—ready to purify the water and render it as clear as the proverbial crystal. Except for the original cost of the jar and hose, which may be used indefinitely, the entire cost of the thing will not be more than a couple of cents, and the filtering ingredients may be cleaned each day with hot water without very much trouble, or new sand and gravel used frequently, just as one may elect.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

EXERCISE AND NERVE FORCE.—"If exercise throws off all impurities, temperance prevents them; if exercise clears the vessels, temperance neither satiates nor overstrains them; if exercise raises proper ferments in the humors, and promotes the circulation of the blood, temperance gives nature her full play, and enables her to exert herself in all her force and vigor; if exercise dissipates a growing distemper, temperance starves it."

This sound physiological truth was expressed by Joseph Addison nearly two hundred years ago. It contains the nucleus of everything that may be said in favor of exercise and in favor of temperance; and therefore the paragraph should be memorized by everyone who wishes to acquire a fundamental knowledge of hygiene.

The temperance referred to by Addison is temperance in eating, in drinking, in conduct, in thought, in mental labor, in physical labor, in pleasure—in short it means temperance in all indulgences in which it is possible to be intemperate. For intemperance in any or all its forms pollutes the blood; and exercise simply acts as a natural physic in eliminating the impurities. Considered as a purifier, apart from developing physical strength, temperance has been called the "substitute for exercise."

A MEDICAL JUDGMENT OF THE JAPANESE.—The Japanese have taught Europeans and Americans a lesson and quenched in some degree the conceit of the Caucasian in his superior capacity to do all things. Even in the manner of diet, our long cherished theory that the energy and vitality of the white man are largely due to the amount of animal food consumed, must undergo revision.

The Japanese are allowed to be among the very strongest people on the earth. They are strong mentally and physically, and yet practically they eat no meat at all. The diet which enables them to develop such hardy frames and such well balanced and keen brains consists wholly of rice, steamed or boiled, while the better-to-do add to this Spartan fare fish, eggs, vegetables and fruit. For beverages they use weak tea without sugar or milk and pure water, alcoholic stimulants being but rarely indulged in. Water is imbibed in what we should consider prodigious quantities—to an Englishman, indeed, the drinking of so much water would be regarded as madness. The average Japanese individual swallows about a gallon daily in divided doses.

The Japanese recognize the beneficial effect of flushing the system through the medium of the kidneys, and they also cleanse the exterior of their bodies to an extent undreamed of in Europe or in America. Another—perhaps this is the usage on which the Japanese lay the greatest stress—is that deep, habitual, forcible inhalation of fresh air is an essential for the acquisition of strength, and this method is sedulously practiced until it becomes a part of their nature.

The Japanese have proved that a frugal manner of living is consistent with great bodily strength—in indeed is perhaps more so than the meat diet of the white men. As to the water-drinking habit, which is so distinctive a custom to them, it is probably an aid to keeping the system free from blood impurities, and might be followed with advantage in European countries, to a far greater extent than is at present the case. Hydropathy and exercise seem to be the sheet anchors of the Japanese training regimen, and judging from results have been eminently satisfactory.—Medical Record.

Looking for Leadings.

A lady said in conversation with some friends the other day, that she had long made it her custom to look for daily leadings from above. "When I begin in the morning," she continued, "I take a special text as my motto for the day. Then as the opening hours pass on, I find myself more and more expecting to receive particular intimations of God's will and love. There are few days when, in some way, I am not shown that in the little things of life, He is looking out for me. Not very long ago, I was very much puzzled which of the two courses to take, in a matter of some importance, not only to me but to other people, and to an interest affecting very many. Friends advised one course of action, and I had concluded to follow their counsel, when suddenly the impulse to an opposite course grew stronger and stronger. It was as if I heard a voice behind me saying, 'This is the way, walk in it.' I concluded to obey the Divine voice, as I had prayed for guidance. The issue proved that I did right in doing this, for a larger blessing than I expected came to me and to the work which I had on my heart."

G. Campbell Morgan has said that the besetting sin of this age is lack of faith. Many of us are aware in our own experience that we have what might be called a firm general believe in God's constant care, but we neglect to ask Him for wisdom in the little daily things that present themselves to us, and sometimes to our very great loss. Why should we say that God, who moves the planets in their orbits, is unable to care for the small things that concern his children? Has He not finished with an exquisite nicety, the smallest flower that grows on the mountain-top where none but God can see, as He bestows on the most brilliant rose in the garden, or magnificent tree in the forest?

Those who look for Divine leading will usually find them.—Christian Intelligencer.

You cannot repent too soon, because you do not know how soon it may be too late.—Thomas Fuller.

Items Concerning the Society.

Rebecca Smedley has been liberated by Chester Monthly Meeting, Penna., to attend Ohio Yearly Meeting.

A lecture has been delivered with the title: "Quakerism, Its Inner Strength and Outer Weakness." Better so than the reverse.

New Garden Monthly Meeting, held at West Grove, Pa., on the 7th instant, issued a minute to Harry E. Moore to visit Ohio, Western and Iowa Yearly Meetings, and to attend to some other religious service by the way. He will be accompanied in these visits by his father, Clarkson Moore. The same meeting authorized Charles Kirsch to make religious visits to the families of the Monthly Meeting.

A DEATH-BED TESTIMONY.—When Levi R. Cowperthwaite, whose memory is dear to many readers of THE FRIEND, had rallied from a severe sinking spell shortly before his close on the 9th instant, and was sweetly engaged in leaving messages to his dear ones, and to those for whom he felt a loving concern, the query was put to him, "Father, do those little things—the 'minor testimonies,' as they are called, on which some look with scorn—do they seem of no account now?"

The blinded eyes could no longer discern the questioner, but slowly, yet clearly, the partially paralyzed tongue responded, "THEY BROUGHT ME PEACE."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The heaviest rainstorm occurring during the Ninth Month in the past fourteen years visited Philadelphia and its neighborhood on the 14th instant. In twelve hours more than 50,000,000 tons of water fell in this city. The precipitation was  $5\frac{1}{2}$  inches, the greatest in the same length of time ever recorded at the weather station. The storm moved northward along the Atlantic coast from the West Indies, doing great damage in various places. At the Delaware breakwater the wind blew for a time at the rate of 100 miles an hour, which is said to be the highest speed ever recorded there. At some points in Virginia a rainfall of from six to eleven and a half inches is reported.

The Census Bureau at Washington, in its recent volume on occupations, states that there has been an increase of divorces during the decade ending with 1900. It is computed that 25 per cent. more divorced men were found among those engaged in gainful occupations in 1900 than in 1890.

In the recent strike of the hatters, &c., in Chicago 50,000 men were involved. It is said that by desertions from the unions and by men seeking other employment, the strikers' ranks dwindled down to perhaps 30,000. Of this number, probably 20,000 will be re-employed. It is estimated that the men lost $5,100,000 in wages, and the packers, through loss of business and increased expenses, $7,500,000.

In the Interparliamentary Union meeting at St. Louis, Francis B. Loomis, First Assistant Secretary of State representing President Roosevelt, said on welcoming the delegate: "Within the last hundred years there have been more than 200 cases in which international difficulties have been adjusted by the peaceful method of arbitration in one form or another, and the Government of the United States has been a party to about 70 of these arrangements."

The Russian war vessel Lena lately put into the port of San Francisco for repairs. The Japanese Consul in that city made a demand upon the United States Government that the vessel be compelled to leave the port within 24 hours. President Roosevelt has decided that the Lena must be completely disarmed, and remains in that port until the war is over and she is being done.

In a late meeting of the Bankers' Association in New York, a colored man, John Mitchell, Jr., President of the Mechanics' Savings Bank, of Richmond, Va., made an address of half-an-hour, which was kindly received, and was responded to in a friendly speech by a Southern financier, Robert J. Lowry, of Atlanta, Ga. The colored man said there are ten negro banks in the South and none elsewhere, and that the colored race now owned $499,000,000 worth of property in the South, and more than $700,000,000 worth in the United States.

Statistics show that during the year 1903 the yield of petroleum in this country was over 100,000,000 barrels. About 80 per cent. was shipped to foreign countries. The States producing the largest amounts were California, Ohio, Texas, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and Indiana.

The skeleton of a mammoth was lately unearthed near Muskegon, Mich. A gigantic tooth measured seven inches long in thickness and was over 100 inches long. Three foot eight inches longwise and two feet four inches across the forehead. Projecting from one side was a tusk nine feet long.

Statistics prepared by the Dun Commercial Agency of the number of failures in business during 38 years from 1865 to 1903 in this country indicate that on an average about one out of every hundred business men or firms has failed. These figures are not probably entirely accurate, but it is believed safe to assert that not over five per cent. of business firms became insolvent.

Two earthquake shocks were felt at Augusta, Ga., on the 14th instant.

RUSSIAN.—The Japanese have issued a proclamation demanding the surrender of Port Arthur, and continued to bombard the forts and the town.

It is reported that the Russians still have possession of Mukden, which the Japanese are preparing to attack. Statements have been published of a revolting character respecting the treatment of the unhurt and dead near the close of the late battles and the merciless disposition now manifested by the belligerents.

Russia has conceded the British and American demand that foodstuffs and fuel, not directly consigned to a belligerent, are not to be seized as contraband.

A recent report of the Italian Commission of Emigration says that emigration is a necessity for Italy, and if it were not for the possibility of finding occupation for Italians elsewhere grave disorders against the public peace would occur. The existing capital and territory in Italy are insufficient to give employment to the mass of the people. The supply of labor largely exceeds the demand, and the only present corrective of the situation is emigration. In 1901 there were 3,439,014 Italians living abroad. Of this number 1,100,000 were in Brazil and 729,000 in the United States. Argentina had 618,000. Nearly 1,900,000 were in South America. Six hundred and fifty-four thousand were scattered over Europe.

A recent writer on the cost of living in Germany gives statistics showing that a large number of the wage-to-do families live upon comparatively small incomes. In the upper middle class there are 2,750,000 families which have incomes ranging from $675 to $2250 a year. That vast body, which is called the lower middle class, has incomes ranging from $450 to $675 a year, and there are 5,000,000 families whose incomes do not rise above $300 a year.

An analysis of a very prosperous person's expenditures of an annual income of $2500, shows that $300 of it is paid for taxes, an exaction largely caused by the maintenance of militarism.

The treatment of American negroes in the Transvaal, since the coming into the control of the British Government, has been formally brought to the attention of the State Department at Washington through a petition transmitted from Pretoria by the American Consul there, which petition is signed by about a dozen of resident American negroes. They appeal to the Consul because their liberties and property have been denied and their lives and lives once enjoyed under the late government are abrogated and they are left without protection. They allege that they are debared from riding in second-class railroad coaches because of their color; that they are not allowed to do business because they are Americans, and last they are told "that the American natives must expect the same treatment as the Africans."

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.
Joseph E. Barton, N. J.; Clark M. Terrell, N. C., to 13, Vol. 79; Joseph Patterson, Calif.; Anna P. Sharple M. D., Phila.; Charles C. Haines, N. Y.; Mark H. Bond, N. J.; Alva J. Smith, Agt., Kan.; Andrew Hinch, Galesburg, Smith, Cal.; James H. Smith, Pa.; Henry B. Lee, Agt., N. J.; $10 for Joseph H. Ashbed, Ezra C. Eng, Benjamin S. DeCos, Isaac Lippincott and Mary A. Matlack; Sarah T. Williams, O.

NOTICES.

WANTED.—A mother's helper to have care of two children. Also a middle aged woman's Friend to charge of house and care of an invalid in same family.
Address E. G. A.,
Office of THE FRIEND.

A middle aged woman wishes a position after Ten Month 1st as mother's helper, housekeeper or the care of an invalid in a Friend's family or in near Philadelphia.
Address B. T.,
Office of THE FRIEND.

Westtown Boarding School.—For convenience of persons coming to Westtown School, the stage will meet trains leaving Philadelphia 7.16 and 8.18 A. M., a 2.50 and 4.32 P. M. Other trains are met when requested. Stage fare, fifteen cents; after 7.30 P. M., twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, W. West Chester, Phone 114a.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY, Supr.

MARRIED, in Friends' Meeting-house, Woodbury, N. Jersey, Fifth-day, Ninth Month 21st, 1904, SAMUEL R. BERTS MALACK, of Moorestown, N. J., to MARIAN W. STOKES, of Woodbury, N. J.

DIED, on the third of the Fourth Month, 1904, BISHOP RAMSEY, wife of John Ramsey, in the eighth year of her age; a member and elder of North East Monthly Meeting of Friends, Iowa. This dear Friend had come concerned in early life for her own soul's salvation and the welfare of others, and was earnest in her endeavors to uphold the doctrine and practices of our Friends; believing they were the same as taught by Christ and the apostles, often exhorting those with whom mingled to faithfulness therein. Her last illness was long, but attended with much suffering, yet no murmur escaped her lips, saying she had no fear of death, but resigned to await the Mother's bliss, thus evincing in the grace which she had enjoyed in her younger years a fully self-grounded hope that through the mercy of God in Christ Jesus she is now enjoying eternal fellowship.

On the seventeenth of Sixth Month, S. ABB WARRINGTON, in the twenty-fourth year of his age member of the Western District Monthly Meeting Friends of Philadelphia.

At the residence of her brother, Jesse W. Peelle, near Woodbury, N. C., Seventh Month 23rd, 1904, J. A. PEELE, in the seventieth year of her age; a member of Rich Square Monthly and Cedar Grove Preparat Meetings. She was exemplary in health and patient sickness; consistent in life and calm at death, passed after a lingering illness of twenty months, without struggle, we do not, however, forget that she was afflicted with a grievous and unperceptible was the transition that those who watched her could see almost no difference, except that she was not for God took her.

At Ponsdale, the twenty-ninth of Eighth Mo. 1904, MARY M. PARKER, daughter of Ira J. and R. F. Parker, aged twenty-six years; a member of Mt. Monthly Meeting, Va. "She being dead yet speaks alive," and while of heavenly friends who were deeply impressed by her great patience and perfect resignation during a very painful sickness. Stricken in the bloom of life, she yielded all her preferences and her prompt into his hand, whose strength supported her. The sphere she created by her preparation for a heavy abode remains as a duty to her friends, who were called to witness her lifted spirit triumph over the distress accompanying last days. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and it die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."

WILLIAM H. FILE'S SONS, PRINTERS
No. 42 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

DL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 1, 1904.

No. 12.

Published WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Advertisements, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SHELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

Orders from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Printed as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

International Christianity.

The Society of Friends obtained their principle of Peace from the Witness of the Spirit in their hearts. From no other root can the evangel of Peace on earth to pervade the world. If nation shall not lift up sword against nation, it must be Christ in the individual that shall put it back into its sheath. The great War is the human heart,—not carnal, no scene of carnage. These are the days, but not the satanic root of war. The great spring of Peace is its Prince, Christ, in us. His witness in the heart led the people of God out of that in which wars and fighting were committed.

At Peace Conferences, so far as they deal with the outcomes of the spirit of war in man, let us pluck off some dire fruit and clip some weeds,—a result richly worth all the cost of our assembling and labor. But in proportion as their conference is with Christ, they rely on the power of the very Prince of Peace himself. He, as received, is the internal antidote of international war. The prescription for peace on earth and good will among men is His spirit. Inculcate that, and we inculcate His Peace. We can say that there is peace, peace," and there is no peace; but we cannot effectually speak Christ, without speaking peace. The simple gospel must work in them, they are the peacemakers who are so dear children of God as to live the gospel and so live it. We look for wars to cease only in the revival of the Spirit of Christ in men.

At the International Peace Conference of 1904 in Boston may be vouchsafed a touching of the spring of such revival, and the secret of the victory of Peace over war will remain to be the living and over-riding force, and the faithful that are with us shall be coadjutors and sharers in the triumph of love.

The Perpetuation of a Ministry.

We are not joining in the alarm which of late is sounded, that Christianity is not finding an adequate succession of candidates for the ministry. Christianity will not fail to find as many preachers as find Christianity. For Christianity is the Spirit of Christ. It is the very inner soul of Christianity that it should be a speaking force, a communicating power, even Christ the Word of God, as the dweller in his bosom to declare Him. And it is of the very nature of our distinctive profession that Christ the Word should be the one that speaks to our condition. A seed shall serve Him, and show forth his salvation from day to day, and his ministry shall not lapse into extinction.

Pulpits may be vacant, but not the Living Word. And the secret of their vacancy is their lack of dependence on that same living, inspeaking Word. The pulpit will never become a Christian power save as its power is Christ. And though it resound with enticing words of man's wisdom merely, it is still a vacant pulpit. But when it is occupied "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," there is a fulness of God, a feeding from heaven and a communion of the spirit. Under a free (or for stated times uncompulsory) gospel ministry this condition would be waited for, and its Authority waited on. Ministers would not speak because men desired sounds, but because God wanted to be heard.

Perhaps the merely professional ministry on earth (and we are far from including under that head all the ministry of other societies) is both finding out and evincing its hollow-ness; and ingenuous youth who respect nothing short of reality, are having a sense that the profession is not on the true foundation; and so there is a retreating from the cross,—from the fundamental experience which they believe the ministry ought to cost—a shrinking from being committed to the Rock of revelation, as a necessity for the true communion. This excuse digs deeper than most others.

We can regard it as a hopeful sign when the ministry, not as a possession but as a profession, is getting discouraged about itself. When it so gets to an end of itself as to reach a true beginning in the living word and power of Christ,—and other foundation for his service can no man lay,—then may it see that the power of the educated ministry and the power of the unlettered disciple is one and the same Authority—"Christ crucified, the wisdom of God and the power of God." In an article dealing with the growing unwillingness of educated men to become clergymen, a professor says, "it really begins to look as if our college bred men were leaving it to the untrained men who pass into the service of the church from the farm and the workshop."

Our Lord knew what He was doing in selecting for his first ministers such day-laboring men, perhaps lest their ministry should be more readily of the head than of his Spirit; and He knew what place also there was for an intellectually trained Paul as an apostle to the Gentiles. But man would select only the intellectually trained; and these at length are shrinking from so uninviting a profession, or are planting themselves on science as truth, through default of the professing church insisting on the Witness for Truth in the heart. And if men and women are indeed coming up as from the ranks to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, we can afford to bear their crudeness in education, so that the root of the matter is in them. Perhaps the growing desertion of the profession on the part of popular scholarship is leaving an opening for this to be demonstrated. Perhaps Christianity is demonstrating for itself that the professionals are not indispensable, but that the humble instruments of his word "the Lord hath need of."

But we do not fear that, while pulpits, desks, or platforms may not be supplied with incumbents, as men would arrange them, the church of Christ will not be supplied with his ministry whether through ministers, or immediately. "He must reign till He hath put all enemies under his feet." And though He turn and overturn, when it has become effete, this ecclesiastical scheme or that, yet, saith He, "My word shall not pass away." For this is his covenant with his church and people: "My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put into thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever."

THERE is, however, one alarm that we must join in,—not so much that our own young men are not entering the vocal ministry (our young women are doing somewhat better, in the vocal submission), but that they are holding back from obedience to the secret requirements of pure truth felt in their hearts. Grant unto the Lord your obedience in things little or great, popular or unpopular, and you are then in the one condition in which He will graciously use you. Submit to his use of you, and live. The ministry of the word may not be put upon you, and yet it may. What does it matter, so that it is the Lord you love to serve? Render to Him the obedience, and He will take care of the ministry. It will not be lacking for his church through some, where simple obedience in all things is the one concern.

THERE are two invasions which are a gag on a rising ministry in meetings under our name. One in sundry times and places is the invasion of a dead silence where a living silence would have been the right condition of the birth of true ministry; and the other is, the invasion of a stated ministry, expected, as it is, to occupy the right of way whether dead or alive. This is the deliberate gag now growing prevalent over large regions wherever the Friends' standpoint of worship has been separated from. Many whose gifts were once esteemed are made to understand they must forego their own offerings, as the time belongs to the pastor. No young person dares to intrude on pre-empted time. The fresh and tender upspringings of the ministry are stifled out by the Upas tree system. New supplies, to be produced for such meetings, must now be stimulated and manufactured on another basis than implicit waiting for and on the Lord.

The Bible and Other Books.

In 1804, "a numerous and respectable meeting of persons of various denominations" was held at the London Tavern, and a Society formed "to promote the circulation of the Holy Scriptures in the principal living languages." At that time the Bible, or portions of it, could be obtained in about forty living languages, spoken by two-tenths of the race. During the century since the meeting at the London Tavern adjourned, and very largely from the machinery then and there started, the Scriptures have been translated into 450 languages and dialects, understood by seven-tenths of the race. By the London Society alone, 180,000,000 copies have been distributed, at an expense of $70,000,000. If we add to this total the 70,000,000 copies already distributed by the younger American Bible Society, and the unknown millions printed and sold by private enterprise, we find ourselves inside a safe estimate if we hold that certainly 300,000,000 copies of the Scriptures, in whole or separate books or portions, have gone into circulation during the last century.

Amazement attends the study of the Bible, whatever the point of view or the course pursued. But nothing about the Bible is more amazing than its continuous, universal and utterly unparalleled popularity. In nearly every, if not every, country on earth where books are sold, more Bibles are sold than any other book. Last year the British and Foreign Bible Society alone distributed 5,943,775 copies, the majority by sale, in 370 languages, covering every part of the globe. And the issue by the American Society for the year amounted to 1,993,558 Bibles and portions. —The Century.

The Deadening "Sunday" Newspaper.

In the year 1808, Thomas Shillite having received the approval of his Monthly Meeting to a concern to make a religious visit to Friends, in Ireland, and having previously prepared the essay of "An address to the rulers of this nation, and those in power," records, in his Journal, that his not as yet having put forth the said address, had stood in the way of his proceeding to Ireland. He now, however, proceeded to publish it, sending copies to the king, the bishops, and each of the members of both Houses of Parliament. He speaks, in part, as follows upon the prevalent degeneracy, and the causes tending thereto:

"Is it not a proof that degeneracy and irreligion are increasing in this land, that the day set apart for religious purposes should be made by so many a day of the greatest dissipation, extravagance, riot and drunkenness: and that what are even called the higher ranks are but examples to the lower orders in this respect? It appears to me that some of the causes contributing thereto, are the needless increase and great abuse of houses of public entertainment, stage coaches unnecessarily travelling, and pleasure horses and carriages let out to hire on that day of the week, which must contribute to such dissipation, to which has of late been added a new device, newspapers sold on this day, usually called Sunday Papers, which must more or less have a tendency to dissipate the mind, and disqualify it for offering acceptable worship to God."

Nevertheless, the issuance of the papers thus rightly animadverted upon, appears not to have made, in England, anything like the rate of progress that they have so rapidly attained to in this country. An endeavor in London, several years ago, to issue a "Sunday" edition of one of the great dailies was not successful. A cheering item of information lately appeared in connection with an agreement made by and between the newspaper publishers of Marseilles, that ancient city of France dating from centuries before the Christian era, that they would publish no edition of their papers on the first day of the week.

A glance over any American metropolitan "Sunday" newspaper of to-day, with the consideration that millions of our population are regular readers of its unhealthy presentation of matters worldly—sports, pleasures and games of many, many kinds, politics, theatricals, fiction, etc.—must convince the friend of mind that the conclusion of Thomas Shillite was correct, that they must "have a tender to dissipate the mind, and disqualify it for offering acceptable worship to God." Indeed the further tendency is to get away altogether from the places of religious worship. "Stage-coaches" of T. S.'s day have been superseded by the trains, and with the "plate carriages" have been added the obsolete automobiles and various other motos which break in upon the quiet of the day's rest. During the past summer, Philadelphia was placarded with flaring invitations to participate in special, low-priced "Sunday excursions to Coney Island." The itinerary such an excursion, of which the "Sunday paper would be an almost essential part, would be likely to reveal, on the part of very many a long day of unprofitable hours.

The writer would encourage any of our members upon whose attention these papers are thrust, that they steadfastly witness word and act against them. While a mode of unobjectionable matter may be found in those highly expanded sheets, it necessitates the wading through much that is contrary to Christ, to reach it. Dr. John Robertson, Glasgow, said not long ago: "I have got from New York to San Francisco in your grand and goodly country, but the saddest thing in all the sociological phenomena of your land is your Sunday newspaper." And add with true Scottish vehemence—"Oh, swine stuff! Oh, the miserable garbage an immortal soul!" J. W. L.

SIX IMPORTANT POINTS.—Six things a ought to know:

First—That a quiet voice, courtesy and kind acts are as essential to the part in world of a gentleman as of a gentlewoman.

Second—That roughness, blustering, even foolhardiness, are not manliness. Most firm and courageous men have usually been the most gentle.

Third—That muscular strength is not hea Fourth—That a brain crammed only with facts is not necessarily a wise one.

Fifth—That the labor impossible to a boy of fourteen will be easy to the man twenty.

Sixth—That the best capital for a boy is money, but the love of work, simple tax and a heart loyal to his friends and his C —Texas Christian Advocate.

THERE is much evil in the land and there many wrongs to be righted, and it will not stand by the graves of our fathers lament the glory that has departed, as did Jews who huddled the tombs of the Proph and garnished the sepulchres of the righteous and begin to say within themselves, "We h Abraham on our father." But let us endeavor to hold fast that which we already h and grapple with the enemy that is at our doors, that we may by the help of the mighty be enabled to build up the walls our Zion over against our own gates.—Wern Y. M. Women's Epistle.

THE pride of many a modern city shall brought down as low as Capernaum's (M xi: 23..

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 84.)

The address is as follows:

the Chiefs and other Indians residing on the Allegheny Reservation.

Brothers: We have been lately informed that some of the chiefs of the Seneca Nation Indians residing in the State of New York have been to the westward at a Council held Sandusky, for the purpose of trying to procure lands for the Indians living on reserved lands in New York State to settle upon, but not obtain them.

Brothers: We are sorry to hear that you are sinking of leaving the fine country you inhabit, and part with the good lands you and your fathers have lived on so comfortably, and especially after having built for yourselves so many comfortable houses and barns—and cleared so much land and enclosed it with good fences; for, Brothers, you know it required many years' hard labor to do this, and you also know it is very trying to be in the woods, to cut down trees, to split logs, make fences, and to build houses and barns. It would take you many years to have as much as comfortable about you as you now have them, and some of you are now old.

Brothers: If you should remove further back into the woods and make improvements, do you think the white people would not wish you to move from them and go further west, until you are driven you know not where?

Brothers: The land on which you live is your own, and you know it to be good and the price of it well improved—then why do you think of selling it? The land is fast; it cannot be taken from you without your consent. It is true the land is worth a great deal of money; but if you sell and get the money, you may soon lose it and it will do you little or no good.

Brothers: If you go so far from us, how can we expect us to get our friends to go and live with you to instruct you, or that we should be able to you to counsel and advise you in what is best for you?

Brothers: Listen to our talk, for we want to do you good. We often meet in Philadelphia and think of what will be for your benefit and advantage, and we think the trial you have made must have satisfied and convinced you of the advantage there is in having farms yourselves, separate from each other, and to live much more comfortably many of you live there than you formerly lived when you were crowded in villages and had your fields common.

If you would agree to divide your lands among yourselves, according to your numbers, but under a condition that no part of that is so divided shall ever pass to white people; and, after agreeing among yourselves to the division of the land, and what part each would go to each, have a surveyor to run the lines and mark the same so as to distinguish the lots, farms and houses made over to each you, and have a map made on parchment, showing all the different parts with each part numbered—and then having a writing on parchment of the different parts according to their numbers, and whom each number belongs to, and have this writing so made that every part which is given to any one of you, should, upon the death of the man who owned it, go to his children, if he has any, and if he has no children, then to his nearest relations; but in no event should it ever be sold, given, or leased to white people;—this, we believe, would be an encouragement to the children to help their parents to improve the land, and build houses, because they would expect to have the good of them after their fathers and mothers died—and the estate in this way belonging to the family, the wife and children would have something to live on after the father's death.

Brothers: You know we do not want any of your lands or anything you have, but advise you for your good; therefore attend to our talk; let it sink deep into your hearts; do not let it in at one ear and immediately pass out at the other, but treasure it up in your breasts—and when you have made up your minds on the interesting subject we have advised you, let us know, because if we, or our friends living near you, can assist you, you will find us and them disposed to do what is reasonable for your help.

Brothers: May the Great Spirit direct you in your Councils on the important subjects we have communicated, and that your minds may be satisfied with what you do, and his Spirit continue to bless you and do you good.

Dated in Philadelphia the 30th of the First Month, 1817, and signed by twenty-two Friends.

In a letter which some of the Chiefs wrote to the Committee about the beginning of the year 1816, when Robert (Lendenon, his wife Elizabeth and daughter Hannah were about leaving Tunesassa to return home, they thus allude to the effect which the labors of Friends during twenty years had then had.

"We have heard with sorrow that our friends here are about to leave us, and that they have yet heard of none offering to supply their place, so that we are afraid you are all tired of bestowing your labor to so little purpose. It is indeed a long time, almost twice ten years, since you first held out your hand to assist us, and though we have not improved so fast as you might have expected; yet your labor has not all been lost. When your friends first sat down among us, we had not one comfortable shelter to accommodate them with; now, we have many warm and pleasant, and some spacious and even elegant dwellings; many of our women can spin and have wheels in their houses, and a number of us have good shelter and provender for cattle, besides corn, potatoes, and many other useful vegetables in abundance."

In the Sixth Month, 1816, Joseph Elkinton, with the approbation of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Southern District, of which he was a member, and the encouragement of the Committee, left his home to reside at Tunesassa, where he remained for sixteen years. During a considerable part of this time he was engaged in teaching and in superintending schools taught by others. In the course of his labors he encountered great opposition from some of the Indians who clung to their old habits and prejudices, and claimed that the acquisition of school learning, etc., by their children was displeasing to the Great Spirit. From some of this party Joseph Elkinton felt at times that his life was in danger. An interesting account of his stay among them, and some of his exercises, prepared by himself, was published in THE FRIEND, Vol. XXII, page 3-42, &c. His interest in these Indians, whose language he acquired, did not end with his return home, but he subsequently became a member of the Committee and continued to take an active part in its proceedings until his death, which took place at his home in Philadelphia, Second Month 9th, 1868, in the seventy-fourth year of his age, shortly after his return from a visit to the Allegheny Reservation. The memoranda which he left show that his mind was deeply exercised for the best welfare of these Indians, and there is little doubt that during this period his religious character was developed and strengthened. The following extracts are from his memoranda:

"The Friend's situation was attended with much conflict of spirit, that he might be favored with Divine direction, so as to act amongst this uncultivated people for their good, and for the glory and honour of his Heavenly Father, who had done much for him. He had to do with an ignorant, suspicious and divided people, whose passions were easily excited, but whose indolent habits called for much patience on his part, in gradually leading them to a proper decision, on a subject which involved their true interests. Much forbearance was requisite in meeting all the difficulties which they advanced; and while the Indian character is gradually developed, the cause of their slow improvement is also seen, but which it was nevertheless important to effect, though by a tedious and difficult process."

Tenth Month 10th, 1817, Joseph Elkinton notes:

"This morning as I was on my way to school, I met one of the chiefs; he informed me that he was going to Pittsburg and that in about ten or twelve days he would return; after expressing his desire that the Indians might do well and go on regularly and orderly in his absence, told me that the chiefs and people had yesterday given me a name which they had concluded, I should be known by, which was We-Ne-Se-W, which by interpretation signifies a 'very fine day,' being as he stated, satisfied and easy in their minds respecting my being amongst them.

"After conversing a little while he bade me farewell, desiring at the same time, I believe, that the Great Spirit might take care of me during our separation."

(To be continued.)

FOR "THE FRIEND."

WAR.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." (Matt. 7: 12.)
 When I think of the war and the slaughter of men; Of sables all gory and grim,
 I cannot but ask, with a doubt in my mind, Are they truly following Him,
 Who taught to do good is man's duty to man, Assuaging his pain and his woe?
 That we as brethren all should become
 And make earth an Eden below;
 But the roaring of cannons, the shrieking of shells,
 And the bloody, bayoneting fray
 Is the spirit of demons and not of the One Who died on Calvary's tree. —E. Robeson, ATHENS, Ont.

THE BETTER LAND.

I hear thee speak of the better land,
Thou callest its children a happy band;
Mother! oh, where is that radiant shore?
Shall we not seek it and weep no more?
Is it where the flower of the orange blows,
And the fire-flies glance through the myrtle boughs?

"Not there, not there, my child!"

"Is it where the feathery palm trees rise,
And the date grows ripe under sunny skies?
Or 'midst the green islands of glittering seas,
Where fragrant forests perfume the breeze,
And strange, bright birds, on their starry wings,
Bear the rich hues of all glorious things?"

"Not there, not there, my child!"

"Is it far away, in some region old,
Where the rivers wander o'er sands of gold?
Where the burning rays of the ruby shine,
And the diamond lights up the secret mine,
And the pearl gleams forth from the coral strand?
Is it there, sweet mother, that better land?"

"Not there, not there, my child!"

"Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy!
Ear hath not heard its deep songs of joy;
Dreams can not picture a world so fair—
Sorrow and death may not enter there;
Time doth not breathe on its fadeless bloom,
For beyond the clouds and beyond the tomb,
It is there, it is there, my child!"

—Felicia Hemans.

The Institute for Colored Youth, a Normal School.

The Normal School idea in the United States is more than sixty years old. It was in 1839 that the first of the three schools, due to the agitation of Horace Mann and his co-laborers, opened its doors to four students. That the number of students should be so small would doubtless have discouraged weaker men, but Horace Mann had unwavering faith in the idea and his faith is justified to-day by nearly two hundred flourishing Normal Schools in the United States.

The foundation of the Institute for Colored Youth was almost co-incidental with the agitation of Horace Mann. Few, if any, however, at that day would have believed that colored teachers could be counted on to educate the colored race. The conclusion of Kate Brosseau in her recent theses on the Negro Problem to the University of Paris would have shocked that age as it still shocks some in this. She says in substance that the negro teacher inspires in the black pupil a sense of self-respect and personal dignity in comparison or rather in contrast with the timidity, uncertainty of self and "physionomie compassée" of those under white teachers, that is of striking interest. The sixty years of history in the Institute for Colored Youth has confirmed this judgment. The normal work of the school has been its crowning effort, and when the doors of the Institute open at Cheyney next week the work will be confined strictly to training teachers.

Nearly all the Negro institutions in the country have used the word "Normal" as some part of their title. One of the largest and best of them has recently somewhat widely advertised its Normal Department. It appears, however, that in this particular case there are four instructors assigned to this special course and that not one of these instructors has had experience in teaching, although they are college graduates. Is it any wonder that the late Dr. Curry applied such strictures to the teacher training of the race?

Normal School work properly understood assumes that the students who take it have had some drill in the essential subjects included in the courses of our public High Schools. Some canvas of the States in which colored children are admitted to the High Schools shows that a very small number has had this preparation. The beginnings of a real Normal School then will of necessity be small, but it is well to keep in mind the four students that sixty years ago were the pioneers of that great army of white students now in attendance at our two hundred Normal Schools.

That nearly forty years of freedom should have passed without any adequate arrangement for training Negro teachers is surely a reproach to our country. The first effort in making Cuba fit for freedom was to bring a very large number of her teachers at no expense to themselves for special training at Harvard University. This first effort has been followed by others both for Cuba and for the Philippines, but if one were to agitate a like movement for Colored teachers he would likely himself be relegated to a "Jim Crow car!"

The new work at Cheyney is a pioneer work. It has no reflections to cast on those most excellent institutions that are doing their very best to make contributions, incidentally, to the greatly needed army of teachers. All these institutions are practically swamped, however, with the business of general education. They can not turn aside to a single speciality. That the Institute now proposes to do. It would take the fairly educated and train them how to impart knowledge, how to inspire hope in a hopeless race, how to give them race ideals of manhood, and womanhood and of citizenship. Ten such teachers at the end of two years make the circle of influence at least 500 souls. In a single decade the circle widens to a small army, but best of all, one such institution on right lines is like the beginning in New England. It is sure itself to multiply, once its work is publicly known.

Let us hope that the re-opening of the Institute on the 4th instant with the enrollment of 20 students will be a beginning of this kind, and that the endorsement of Booker T. Washington in putting the name of his son on the opening roll will prove to be deserved.

J. HENRY BARTLETT.

The Cross of Convenience.

(From an "Old Home Week" Address.)

Plymouth Colony has spread her autumnal Thanksgiving Day over the whole re-united country. The gathering of the scattered members of a family under the parental roof to bless each other in memories of old associations and to be thankful to the giver of all sure mercies for the bounties of the year, might well serve as a means of tender grace to those who rightly participate. But I used to notice that the same authority which issued his proclamation for a day of thanksgiving and affixed it to our township's post-offices, also in the spring-time issued another for "fasting, humiliation, and prayer." The former was observed with a feast; the latter fell out of use, because it bespoke self-denial; it made too practical for popularity this term of discipleship: "If any man will be my disciple him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me." The old Roman sacrifices for worship also floated as much on the principle gratification as of worship; the inward organs of the slain beast were consumed on the altar but the good meat was set apart for the feasting of men. Such of us whose only use of public worship is entertainment do the same thing; we renounce worship at its very altar save the worship of self.

That Christian character must grow up, and that which religiously observes the self-gratification which the gospel permits, but declines to put on the strength of self-denial not by making up, but by "taking up" the cross. You will not interpret me as wanting to restore a conventional Fast Day to bala the feast day, or as attaching any grace days; but in the spirit of true patriotism our town I would have more place given the principle, not of self-imposed, but of required self-denial or sacrifice. The principle of the Cross is the preference of the high life and love above the lower self—the triumph of the spirit over flesh, where these conflict. "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: for these are contrary the one to the other." The Cross began uplift of the Christ towards his Ascension afraid the tendency of all our religious organizations, not excepting the time-serving elements of my own, is to push rather the sentiments that will draw the natural man, to the worship that is in the spirit and in truth but to diversions from it. Some of us have been pretty thoroughly taught to expect of a self-denying religion will not be popular. Shall we then blink the truth? Shall we seem to be dissembling? We have not learned Christ. Not so are we of Robins of Fox, or Welles, or of Hooker. Not Puritans, or Pilgrims on the earth, or "Travelers at the Word of God."

ESCAPING FROM BONDAGE.—From Scott to Browning, true thinkers and poets have been emancipators. In the end this brings of new light into the mind of the world, be counted their chief service. "When I died," said one of the keenest of modern minds, one of the greatest of modern poets, "I lay a sword on my coffin, for I was a soldier in the war for the liberation of mankind. Like service has been rendered by almost of the great writers. They have been by their times; they have parted company with some usage, some tradition, out of which life has ebbed; they have broken away from some decaying creed; they have put a new knowledge in the place of some old ignorance. The steady movement of great literature is toward the light.—From "My Servant"—H. W. Mabie.

THE SINNERS IN ZION ARE AFRAID

O wasting fear that flies when fear is not!
O death that dies a thousand times before
The gate is reached by patient lowly saint,
Whose dread departed when the life flowed in What dark surprises cross the path of sin,
And robes of semblance flitter in the fray;
What broken hopes and stranded wreckers are Where anchor songs of saints are never heard

H. T. Miller

BEAMSVILLE, Ohi.

RAISE FOR CREATION AND PROVIDENCE.

[As repeated by Eunice Gidley when one hundred years old, and promised on page 69 to be copied in full.]

I sing the Almighty power of God,
That made the mountains rise,
That spread the flowing seas abroad,
And built the lofty skies.

I sing the wisdom that ordained
The sun to rule by day;
The moon that shines at his command,
And all the stars obey.

I sing the goodness of the Lord,
That filled the earth with food;
He formed the creatures with his word,
And then pronounced them good.

Lord, how thy wonders are displayed
Where'er I turn mine eye!
If I survey the ground I tread,
Or gaze upon the sky.

There's not a plant or flower below,
But makes thy glories known;
And clouds arise and tempests blow,
By order from thy throne.

Creatures (as numerous as they be)
Are subject to thy care;
There's not a place where we can flee,
But God is present there.

In heaven He shines with beams of love,
The same in worlds beneath!
'Tis on his earth I stand or move,
And 'tis his air I breathe.

His hand is my perpetual guard,
He keeps me with his eye;
Should I then forget the Lord,
Who is forever nigh?

—Perry's Spelling Book, 1809.

In Time of War Prepare for Peace.

The following by Graham Taylor appears in the Chicago Daily News, and is forwarded to THE FRIEND:

It looks as though the old adage "In time of peace prepare for war," were being reversed. For the international arbitration movement grows apace, not only in spite of recent wars, but all the more because of them. Nothing could be more significant of this than the presence in St. Louis this week of 300 men who are to visit Chicago next week. They are members of the European English parliaments who have come to America to hold the twelfth session of the Interparliamentary Union at the St. Louis exposition. They are the guests of the United States government on their visit to principal cities between New York and Denver. Congress extended the hospitality to the country by appropriating $50,000 for their traveling expenses and entertainment. Started in 1888 at Paris by members of the French Chamber of Deputies and of the British Parliament, the Interparliamentary Union has held eleven sessions at the great centers of the world, including Paris, London, Rome, The Hague, Brussels, Budapest and Vienna. A year ago at the latter city 600 delegates represented every constitutional government in Europe. Turkey and Russia, being ruled by autocrats, were not among them. The Czar had a personal representative at Budapest six years ago and issued his call soon afterward for the international conference which secured the establishment of The Hague court of arbitration. Members of Congress, led by Representatives Bartholdt of Missouri, formed an American branch of the union only last year. It already has a bill before Congress authorizing the President to issue an invitation to the governments of the world for a conference "to devise plans looking to the negotiation of arbitration treaties between the United States and the different nations, and also to discuss the advisability of and, if possible, agree upon a gradual reduction of armaments." The purpose of the union is wholly in line with practical parliamentary action. It furthers the official consideration of such points of practical international politics as the exemption of private property at sea in war times, but attempts nothing so impracticable as would retard effective legislation.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONGRESS.

Boston is the next point of interest at which many of these parliamentarians and a large company of other distinguished Europeans and Americans are to gather. The Thirteenth International Peace Congress is to be held there in Tremont Temple, Tenth Month 3 to 7. The most elaborate preparations are being made by the city government and the public for the occasion. At its opening session the Congress will be welcomed by the mayor of the city, the Governor of the State and representatives of the National government, headed by Secretary Hay of the Department of State. Public meetings at Faneuil Hall and the Old South Meeting House, supplementing the deliberative sessions, will present such subjects as "The Function and Influence of The Hague Tribunal," "Mutual Relation of Races" and "Reduction of National Armaments."

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, will preside over a meeting devoted to industrial arbitration, at which Peter Curran, delegate from the General Federation of British Trades Unions, will be one of the speakers. Among the many distinguished men and women who will participate in the congress are Sir John Macdonnell, the English authority on international law; Cobden-Sickert, daughter of Richard Cobden; Jules Seigfried and Gustave Hubbard, deputies of France; Senators La Fontaine and De L'Hale of Belgium; Dr. Adolph Richter and Richard Feldhaus of Germany; Baroness von Suttner of Austria; Moneta of Italy; John Lund of the Norwegian Parliament; Charles Wagner of Paris, author of "The Simple Life," representing the Protestants of France; Bishop Percival of Hereford, and Bishop Boyd Carpenter of Ripon, of the Church of England; Cardinal Gibbons and Bishop Spalding of the Roman Catholic Church; Percy Alden and G. H. Ferris, eminent in the social work of London. The Americans to whose world-wide relationships and strenuous effort is due this second International Peace Congress to be held in America are Robert Treat Paine, president; Benjamin F. Trueblood, secretary, of the American Peace Society, and Edwin D. Mead, chairman of its executive committee. It is hoped that some of the distinguished speakers of the congress may be secured to address a public meeting in Chicago soon after the adjournment of the Boston meeting.

COMMERCE MAY YET PREVENT WAR.

Significant movements for closer international relationships are by no means confined to those who have associated themselves avowedly to promote the cause of peace. The tendency of politics to become commercialized is justly regarded as a menace to the economic freedom of individuals. But beneath the evils which may be suffered from this source there may be a larger good evolving. For even the commercial interests which have been creating internal strife and provoking foreign wars among the people may soon become so international in their proportions and interests as to be the chief impediment to war and protection of the world's peace.

Organized workmen were among the very first to emphasize the international character of the bonds that bound them together. Indeed, their early organization of this type was so far ahead of the times as well as so radical in ignoring national boundaries that "The Internationals" used to frighten the world. What would become of patriotism, was asked in every land, if men were allowed to organize across every frontier? Nevertheless, without losing their patriotism, national labor unions are naturally growing international. The exchange of fraternal delegates between the British Trades Union Congress and the American Federation of Labor and such international conventions as the miners have just held in Paris with representatives from Europe, Great Britain and America bid fair to mass the most powerful constituencies in the world to command peace by arbitration instead of war.

The socialists, radical [or objectionable] as they are, help to join hands and hearts across seas. At their international congress in Brussels delegates assembled not only from the Continental countries but many from Great Britain and the United States, and some even from Argentina, for the discussion of such broadly common interests as "Militarism," "Protection and Free Trade," "Housing of the People," "International Solidarity and Arbitration."

But never is it to be forgotten that at the head of the very mixed multitudes which are lining up under the banners of peace to command the arbitration of international differences and promote the brotherhood of the races, marches the little yet potent Society of Friends, whose benignant presence has kept the heart of the modern world warmer and its hope of peace alive.

Science and Industry.

To remove paint and stains from a window get a little hot vinegar on a cloth and rub hard. Note, the vinegar must be quite hot.—Paddington.

WHEN cutting new bread heat the knife in hot water, and you will be able to cut it as smoothly as stale.—Ilmborn.

To stiffen the bristles of hairbrushes first wash the brush well in hot water, mixed with a dessert spoonful of ammonia (do not let it touch the polished back). Then dip it up and down several times in cold water, in which has been dissolved a large lump of salt. Dry it in the open air.

The report of the British Commission on Physical Deterioration, which appears as a Parliamentary Blue Book, is of general interest because the conditions which bring about the alleged deteriorations are present in the United States. Whether or not there has been widespread and acute deteriorations, the commission cannot, of course, determine from the brief period spent in studying the subject and from meagre data, but for such deterioration as is patent and indisputable the commission finds the causes to be first of all, alcohol and tobacco. One of the authorities on the subject consulted, Dr. Scott, mentions the significant fact that of all the undergrown children examined only 2 per cent. had not been habitual smokers. Besides stunting the user, tobacco is said to cause, especially in youth, shortness of breath, loss of vitality, weak heart and general inefficiency. The opinion is a unanimous one against the habit of cigarette smoking among boys. The teapot has also become a scourge to the British, and accounts for much of the deterioration of the poor. The rush to the cities, overcrowding, the slum life are contributing causes, and ignorance, weak character, shiftlessness, are responsible for the surprising fact alleged that in the past twenty-five years there has been no decrease of infant mortality.

JAPANESE CHEMISTS.—Probably no Eastern nation is more strongly represented than are the Japanese in the English annals of science, and more particularly in the literature of chemistry, says the London Lancet. They possess an undoubtedly strong faculty for original research, and they combine this faculty with a shrewdness as to the possibilities of practical application of the fruits of research. The Japanese chemist, in fact, unites the power of originality of the English chemist and the practical intuition of the German. At the University of Tokio practical study is very much favored, and splendid facilities for work are provided in the laboratories and workshops. There are several distinguished Japanese chemists who are fellows of the English Chemical Society, and who were elected to the fellowship on account of the excellence of their contributions to original science.

The Japanese chemists discuss with a freedom which astonishes the Western chemist all the modern abstruse theories bearing upon the atomic theory, the constitution of matter, the theory of dissociation, etc. They write powerful dissertations on the views advanced by such esteemed thinkers as Ostwald, Arrhenius, Van't Hoff, Kelvin, Thomson, Lodge, Crookes, Ramsay and others, and have offered valuable criticisms on the methods of systematizing and compiling atomic weights adopted by Western chemists.

HOW ANIMALS SWIM.—Almost all animals know how to swim without having to learn. As soon as they fall into the water, or are driven into it, they instinctively make the proper motions, and not only manage to keep afloat, but propel themselves without trouble.

Exceptions are the monkey, the camel, giraffe, and llama, which cannot swim without assistance. Camels and llamas have to be helped across water, and giraffes and monkeys drown if they enter it. Now and then both of the latter species manage to cross waterways when they are driven to extremities just as human beings occasionally can keep themselves above water through sheer fright.

A funny though able swimmer is the rabbit. He submerges his body with the exception of head and tail. The latter sticks away up into the air, and his hind legs make "soap-suds" as he churns the water madly to get away. But with all his awkwardness he is a swift swimmer, and is beaten only by the squirrel among the land animals.

The squirrel swims with his heavy tail sunk away down in the water and his head held high. He cleaves the waves like a duck, and a man in a row-boat has all he can do to keep abreast of the swimming squirrel.

One thing that none of the land-living animals does is to dive. No matter how hard pressed a swimming deer, rabbit, squirrel, or other purely terrestrial animal may be, it will remain above water. But the muskrat, beaver, ice bear, and otter dive immediately.—Farming World.

FACTS WORTH KNOWING ABOUT THE PANAMA CANAL.—Estimated cost of the Panama Canal, $200,000,000.

Amount paid French company for title, $40,000,000.

Amount paid Panama Government for perpetual lease of canal lands, $10,000,000.

Length of canal, forty-six miles.

Canal width varies from 250 to 500 feet at the top, the bottom width being 150 feet.

There will be five twin locks of concrete masonry, each 738 feet long and eighty-two feet wide, with a lifting capacity of thirty to thirty-two feet.

Lake Bohio (artificial) covers thirty-one square miles.

Alhajuela Lake (artificial) covers 5,900 acres, about nine square miles, and will furnish motive power for operating the locks and lighting the canal from ocean to ocean.

Distance from New York to San Francisco by old route, 13,714 miles; by the route through the canal, 5,299 miles.

Distance from New York to Manila by present route via San Francisco and Yokohama, 19,530 miles. Distance from New York to Manila by Panama Canal via San Francisco and Yokohama, 11,585 miles.

Distance saved in a sailing-trip around the world by the new route through the Panama Canal, 2,768 miles.

The Panama Canal was practically begun in 1883 by the French company. They had completed about two-fifths of the length, when, because of fraudulent management, the company failed, and the work ceased in 1889.—Woman's Home Companion.

MAKING ARTIFICIAL COTTON.—Washington, Eighth Month 9.—Thornwell Haynes, consul at Rouen, writes of an artificial cotton now being made at Milan from the cellulose of the fir tree freed from bark and knots. The fibres, after being pulverized by a special machine, are placed in a horizontal brass, lead-lined cylinder of some 3,500 cubic feet capacity and steamed for ten hours, after which 2,000 cubic feet of a bisulphate of soda wash is added and the whole is heated for thirty-six hours under a pressure of three atmospheres. Then the wood or fibre, which has become very white, is washed and ground by a series of strong metallic meshes, after which it is again washed and given an electro-chemical bleaching by means of chloride of lime. Passage between two powerful rollers then dries the matter, producing a pure cellulose, which when reheated in a tight metal boiler containing a mixture of chloride of zinc and hydro-chloric and nitric acids, to which is added a little castor oil, casein, and gelatin to give resistance to the fibre, gives a very consistent paste. Threads are then produced by pressing this paste through a kind of drawplate. These threads, after being passed over a gummed cloth, are immersed in a weak solution of carbonate of soda and passed between two slowly turning drying cylinders. Finally, to give the necessary solidity, the thread is treated to an ammoniacal bath and rinsed in cold water after which the produce is pliable and work well.

In Bavaria experiments have recently been made to produce cotton from pine wood, and it is claimed that the trials have been very successful.

MAPLE SUGARING.—Maple sugar making says Outing, is a more extensive industry than might at first be supposed, the annual output of the country being 51,000,000 pounds, with 3,000,000 gallons of honey; of this Vermont alone though she is, furnishes more than another State.

Although the primitive and romantic fashion of boiling sap in a huge kettle slung over an open fire has passed away with other things of a like nature, yet the sugaring time still a season of joy and activity to all living within range of the camps. The first step in the manufacture of maple sugar by present day methods is the preparation of horse-sled roads, which begins as soon as the first heavy snow falls in early winter.

As the weather becomes warmer in this Month buckets and spouts are overhauled, washed and put in order, to be in readiness when wanted. These buckets are usually of tin, holding about fifteen quarts each, are often covered, although many wooden ones are used by small and less painstaking manufacturers. Loaded upon sleds, the buckets are drawn out over the prepared roads and distributed among the trees of the orchard. Sometimes this is done when the snow is still deep as to necessitate snow-shoes, but the wise old sugar makers tell us that sap will not run until the snow thaws away from the base of the trees; and I have known ambitious sugar makers, lured by a few days of spring like weather, to scatter their buckets all then not be able to find them for several weeks, because a big snowstorm had buried them two feet or more.

But finally there are some warm, sunny days. The nights continue sharp and frost but the sun comes up with a smiling face and the wind is south and mild. This is ideal sap weather, and the whole work force is at once mustered to tap the tree and hang the buckets. Holes from one to one-half to three inches deep are bored on the south side of the tree with a half-inch bit and into these are driven round tin spouts with hooks attached, on which the buckets be hung. If the sap starts briskly and the y is still, one can stand in the sugar-house or and hear the measured drip, until the bottom of the empty bucket is covered the most up-to-date places the sap is gathered each day, the big monitor draw-tub, so called from its resemblance to the celebrated fl, being drawn along the roads and filled relays of men who collect the sap from yoke to tree by big pails slung from a shoulder. When the "monitor" is filled it is drawn to camp and emptied into huge tubs having cloth strainers on top to catch any foreign substance which may have fallen on the sap. Where the orchard lies on a slope the sap is frequently conducted to the pump through pipes, and thus much of the hard labor is saved and all of its picturesque-ness lost.

Testimony from the Quarterly Meeting of Reading for Wm. Penn. 1718.

Our friend William Penn departed this life his house at Ruscomb, in the County of Berks, thirtieth of Fifth Month, 1718, and his will was conveyed thence seventh of Sixth month following, to Friends' burying ground Jordan, in the County of Bucks, where he is honorably interred, being accompanied by his Friends and others from diverse parts, I being a member of our Monthly Meeting Reading at the time of his decease and many years before. We can do no less, in giving the foregoing account, than say something respecting the character of so worthy a man, and not only refer to other meetings ere his residence was, in former times, where we were witnesses of the great self-denial and fervor in the prime of his youth and patience with which he bore many a heavy cross; but we think it our duty to cast in a tribute, to set forth in part his deserved commendation. He was a man of great ability, an excellent sweetness of disposition, quick thought and ready utterance, full of the afflictions of true discipleship, even love without dissimulation, as extensive in charity, comprehensive in knowledge, and to whom malice and ingratitude were utter strangers; ready to forgive enemies that were not excused. Had not the management of his temporal affairs been attended with some difficulties, envy itself would be to seek for matter of accusation, and yet in charity even that part of his conduct, may be ascribed to a peculiar sublimity of mind, notwithstanding which he may without straining his character be ranked among the learned, good and great, whose abilities are sufficiently manifested throughout his elaborate writings, which are many lasting memorials and monuments of admirable qualifications, and are the essence of learned and judicious men among all nations. And though in old age by reason of severe shocks of a violent distemper, his faculties were much impaired, yet his sweetness and loving disposition, surmounted its most effects and remained when reason almost failed. He was learned without vanity, without forwardness, facetious in conversation, yet weighty and serious, of extraordinary greatness of mind, yet void of the in of ambition, as free from rigid vanity, he was clear of unseemly brevity; a man, scholar, a Friend, a minister, surpassing in exhortation, endowments whose memorial will be valued by the wise and blessed with the just.

Signed on behalf of and by the appointment of the Quarterly Meeting held at Reading Sixth Month 31, 1719. WM. LAMPOLD.
(Copied from an old manuscript book, Norfolk, Va., Fifth Mo. 9, 1904—A. F.)

Fooling a Child.

Charlie stood beside the table watching the motions of his aunt's pen. The older children had gone back to school, but he was only in the kindergarten, and came home at twelve o'clock. It was the first of a month when he had boasted many times that no one had made a "fool" of him. To tell the truth, no one had tried.

"I know what you're writing about," he remarked, as he saw his aunt making a number of queer little dots across the middle of a page.

She laughed, but did not tell him that the dots marked a break in the poem she was copying.

"Well, guess," she said, smiling into his wise face.

"About heaven," he answered promptly. "Those," pointing to the marks, "are the stars."

She laughed again, but he was so smart that a sudden notion of "fooling" him came to her mind.

"Charlie, could you mail a letter for me?" she asked.

"Oh, yes, Aunt Ellen, sure," was the eager reply. "I could climb easily."

She knew that the mail-box, only a few yards from the house, was beyond his reach, and climbing out of the question. Still, bent on fun, she drew a stamped envelope towards her, addressed and fastened it. Charlie caught it up. His aunt allowed him to go a little way along the sidewalk before calling him to return. At her summons he stopped.

"Come back! Come back!" she cried. "That's an old letter, and no good. April fool!"

He stood still for some moments; then, as grave as a judge, and without one word, he walked into the house and laid the letter on the table. His aunt put her hand on his shoulder, but he shrank a little away. He was hurt and offended, but that was not the worst. All at once she saw her power over him was gone. If she who was writing about heaven, as he thought, could be mean enough to deceive him, what was sure?

"It's the last time I'll fool a child," Aunt Ellen confided to Charlie's father that evening. "Life is so beautifully real to our children that it is no wonder they believe in fairies, dolls are people, and their houses homes, a toy soldier is a veteran, I have just made a fool of myself, only pretending, while the dear boy believed me true. Charlie, where are you? Aunt Ellen is the real April Fool."—Emma E. Hornbrook, in the New York Observer.

G. FOX FROM DERRY PRISON, 1650.—"The Lord is King over all the earth; therefore, all people, praise and glorify your King in true obedience, in uprightness, and in the beauty of holiness. Oh, consider in true obedience the Lord is known, and an understanding from Him is received. Mark and consider in silence, in lowliness of mind, and thou wilt hear the Lord speak unto thee in thy mind. His voice is sweet and pleasant; his sheep hear his voice, and will not hearken to another. When they hear his voice, they rejoice and are obedient; they also sing for joy. Oh, their hearts are filled with everlasting triumph! they sing and praise the eternal God in Zion. Their joy man shall never take from them. Glory to the Lord God for evermore." A. F.

NORFOLK, Va., Fourth Month 9th, 1904.

Items Concerning the Society.

Joseph S. Elkinton started on the 22d ult. for Canada, on account of the reported uprising of some of the Doukhobors, who are moved by religious fervor to set out again in search of a Messiah.

WHAT THE PASTORATE DEFECTION HAS TO EXPECT.—A candidate may have all the qualifications for a successful pastor, and may be greatly desired by the church, but if he should not be congenial to the "smart set," they will use such means as they can use to make it appear that "he is not the man for the place." Hence, in many cases, the man that is chosen is not the actual choice of the congregation, but only of the board, as they may be called, and he will remain pastor only so long as he pleases them. This is not Christianity. It is oligarchy of the worst kind. It is practical anarchy. It is anarchy of the power of darkness. It is the man of sin ruling in the house of God.—The Presbyterian.

THE FRENCH PHILOSOPHER OF "THE SIMPLE LIFE" SEEKS OUT PHILADELPHIA FRIENDS.—Says the Philadelphia North American of the 23rd inst.—"High thought and plain speech characteristic of the week-day Meeting of Friends in the old meeting-house at Fourth and Arch streets, yesterday, made a profound impression upon Pastor Charles Wagner, the apostle of the Simple Life."

"He went to the service with John Wanamaker, whose guest he is. In the course of the meeting he said:

"The benefit that comes to me from this service is beyond telling. It fills my soul. Your simplicity, your sincerity, are the ideal attitudes for worship."

"What spiritual power comes in such a period as the time you set apart for silent contemplation! Then, the heart expands, the soul grows, the mind is cleared. Such meditation enables us to see ourselves as we are; brings us close to the Father."

"I admire the Friends for what they do and for what they are. Plain speech and simple living make men and women great. You have left an impress on your city and your country that cannot be removed."

John Wanamaker added a tribute to the uplifting work done by Friends in Philadelphia.

"American co-education impressed and pleased Charles Wagner. He observed it in the Friends' Boarding School, at Westtown."

"The system exemplifies what I have preached in France," he said. "There the sexes are separated, and the result is far from satisfactory. I saw in Westtown boys and girls at luncheon together. Afterward I saw them in the school rooms with flowers about them, as if to bring the cheerful fields within doors."

Accompanied thence to the House of Refuge by a Friend, who is one of the directors, he afterwards said to a reporter:

"We went to the House of Refuge, at Glen Mills, and saw your system of training children who have erred. It is the just, the logical method of correction. The young spirits are not humiliated nor broken, but are stimulated to better thought and action."

Charles Wagner will attend the International Peace Conference in Boston, which opens on the 3d inst., and afterwards will deliver his message in various cities.

Notes in General.

Lynchings multiply, and in some instances, grow more atrocious. Last year they numbered 104, or two a week. This is an amazing as well as a horrid record for a nation that boasts of its laws and of its humanity.

Dear Friend:—The impotency of "man's self-reforming power" is clearly certified in Maine's recent election. War against the saloon has been prosecuted there for two generations, but the monster still lives with symptoms of reviving.

A World's Fair Bureau in St. Louis is prepared to furnish reliable accommodations at reasonable rates in hotels, boarding houses and private homes. The Association makes no charge to its patrons, either directly or indirectly, for the service, and the benefits of the Bureau are extended not only to young men, but the Christian public generally. Address E. P. Shepard, Secretary Y. M. C. A., Grand and Franklin Aves., St. Louis.

A sum approximating $50,000,000 is sent from the United States in small sums each year to enable those left behind in the Old World, or to assist them to emigrate. It has been predicted that the number of emigrants would soon decrease by reason of the exhaustion of the supply; but no such promise is warranted by the facts. Last year 230,622 Italians, 206,011 Austrians, and 136,093 Russians successfully passed the immigration barriers of the United States.

All letters addressed to the President of the United States are answered by the department under whose head they come. One man can give attention to only a limited number of matters, and while President Roosevelt controls the departments through his chiefs, no man can look after everything in so great a country. Like other Presidents, Roosevelt attempted it in the beginning, and was obliged to give it up. If one were to write to President Roosevelt on a given subject, the President would probably never see the letter. It would be opened by a secretary, and turned over to the department which has charge of matters in its class.

John Watson, in an address given to English Christians a year or two ago, testified to the altered or altering attitude of the Christian laity toward death. Their solicitude now, he said, was less about the future, with whatever it might bring, than about the welfare of those whom they left behind, their kindred and the like. Geo. A. Gordon, of the Old South Church, Boston, preaching to the Congregational State Association in 1902, said: "We ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ know as no other persons in the community what a paralysis has come over intelligent and thinking people in regard to the reality of the other life. So many doubt it; so few have any strong confidence in regard to it."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—In a letter of Judge Alton B. Parker accepting the candidacy for President, he says: "Grave public operations are pressing for decision." His names for two of them as of paramount importance, viz.: "Tariff reform, imperialism, economical administration and honesty in the public service." He also says: "The magnitude of the country and its diversity of interests and population would enable a determined, ambitious and able Executive, unimpaired of constitutional limitations and freed with the best of power, to go far in the usurpation of authority and the aggrandizement of personal power before the situation could be fully appreciated or the people be aroused."

According to a special Census Bulletin the negro population in five cities where it is the greatest is as follows: Washington, 86,702; Denver, 73,258; New Orleans, 77,714; Philadelphia, 62,618; New York, 50,665. The rate of increase in negro population in the country as a whole is steadily declining. There are 3,992,337 negroes in America engaged in gainful occupations, these breadwinners composing 45.2 per cent. of the race. The white males are 7,371,000, the white women 6,771,000, of whom are engaged in gainful labor. The good showing made by the negroes is explained by the fact of the marked prevalence of female labor in that race. The negro as a farmer is making great strides. In 1900 746,717 farms were operated by negroes. These numbered 2,233,333 acres and supplied 53,774 acres of fruit to the whole of New England. The total value of these farms is $250,000,000, and the gross value of their product is $255,000,000 annually.

A first payment of $2,000,000 has been made by the United States Government, on account of the purchase of the land to be supplied to the Philippine Islands.

The twenty-second of the Ninth Month was the coldest day of that month ever recorded in Philadelphia. The temperature at 6 o'clock in the morning was 33°. The cool weather was general in Delaware, Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

A despatch of the 19th from Washington, D. C., says: A sign was painted on the wall in the main reception room of the Perfection Bureau to order of Commissioner Vane. It read, "The Lord bates a liar." It was learned that for ten years the Commissioner has had the same phrase painted on the wall over his desk in his law office in Topeka.

Postmaster General Payne has promulgated an order which provides a new convenience for the business public in the use of the mails. Hereafter third and fourth class matter, in quantities of not less than 2000 identical pieces, may be mailed without affixing stamps, the sender pre-paying postage in cash. Each mailing must contain not less than 2000 identical pieces, and must be accompanied by a statement, signed by the sender, showing the class of matter, the total number of pieces in the mailing and the exact weight of a single piece. Postage on the entire quantity must be paid in money at the time the matter is presented at the post-office.

A commission appointed by Secretary Taft, when Governor of the Philippine Islands, has made a report, which is to be submitted to Congress. The commission is of the opinion that the use of opium is spreading to native Filipinos to an alarming extent and that measures should be taken promptly to check traffic in the drug. It recommends the adoption of a system of exclusive government monopoly, limiting the right of importation, wholesale and retail, of opium to the Government, and the effect of the governmental function to be entrusted to upright, intelligent, honorable and well-recommended persons, with the object of eliminating from such a responsible trust all personal and commercial interests which would tend to extend the sale of the drug. The recommendation is also made that the monopoly be replaced as soon as practicable by one of absolute prohibition. As a corrective and educative measure, all Filipino opium habits are to be deprived of the right of franchise and to be ineligible to all public offices, municipal, provincial and insular. Gratuitous treatment of all habits wishing to free themselves from the opium vice is to be provided at Government expense in the hospital.

It has been estimated that the average annual expenditure of an American family is $340. This result is reached by dividing the value of all farm and other products consumed in the United States in 1903 by the total number of families in the United States in that year. Excluded from the list are profits of farmers and employers; it is estimated that the average American family will spend possibly less than $700.

In four States—Wyoming, Colorado, Utah and Idaho—women possess the right to vote on equal terms with men at all elections. Either full or partial suffrage for women exists in twenty-six States. In eighteen States women possess school suffrage. In Kansas they have municipal and school suffrage. Montana and Iowa permit them to vote on the issuance of municipal bonds. In 1898 Louisiana granted them the privilege of voting upon questions relating to public expenditures.

Foreign.—It is stated that the Japanese attacks upon the Port Arthur have continued with increased vigor. The Port Arthur has directed that a large increase in the Russian army in the East shall be made. A railroad around Lake Baikal, 161 miles in length, has been lately opened, making an unbroken line of railway from St. Petersburg to the Pacific.

Foreign.—The of the 21st ult. from Liverpool says: "The streets leading to the steerage offices of the transatlantic steamship companies were blocked to-day by thousands of emigrants, clamoring for a chance to get to America for $10. The White Star Line steamship Baltic, which sailed to-day, took over 2000 $10-emigrants and many were left behind for lack of accommodation.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg states that the reaction of Great Britain in concluding a treaty with Tibet has caused a protest to be made against it by Russia as forwarded to Peking, and that according to the Russian view, Great Britain's pledges to Russia regarding the scope of the expedition only contemplated the regulation of trade between India and Tibet, and she declared a purpose to meddle with the internal or political affairs of the country. Instead of so doing, Russia claims that she would have to take up arms, and that she would go farther, creating a virtual protectorate over the country. Moreover, it is contended that the treaty is a restriction upon the sovereignty of China, inasmuch as, while recognizing the sovereignty of China by requiring her ratification, the treaty once ratified transfers the sovereignty of Great Britain by compelling Tibet to consult Great Britain in its dealings with the other world.

An eruption of Vesuvius began on the 23rd ult. On the 25th it was stated that the eruption of Mount Vesuvius continues to increase in force and is now more violent than at any time since 1872. Red-hot stones were hurled to a height of 1500 feet, falling down the flanks of the mountain with a deafening sound. Several cartloads of shocks were felt to-day. Some of the people in the surrounding villages have left their homes and are camped in the open air.

A Philadelphia archeologist, Harriet Boyd, has lately been engaged in prosecuting researches in the island of Crete under the auspices of the University of Pennsylvania. The existence of an ancient city at Gournia is being discovered by excavations, which it is believed date back to at least 1000 years before the Christian era, of which no tradition or history is known.

On the 20th ult. a celebration was held in Rome on the 34th anniversary of the fall of the temporal power of Pope.

The Hungarian Minister of the Interior, confirming the expulsion of two American Mormon missionaries, rendered a decision prohibiting the Mormon propagandists within Hungary, upon the ground that such a movement is undesirable both from the standpoints of state policy and religion.

NOTICES.

WANTED.—A mother's helper to have care of two children. Also a middle aged woman friend to be charge of house and care of an invalid in same family.
Address E. G. A.

Office of THE FRIEND.

A middle aged woman wishes a position after to Month 1st as mother's helper, housekeeper or the care of an invalid in a friend's family or near Philadelphia.
Address B. T.

Office of THE FRIEND.

Westtown Boarding School.—For convenience of persons coming to Westtown School, the stage meet trains leaving Philadelphia 7.16 and 8.18 A. M., 2.50 and 4.32 P. M. Other trains as met when requested. Stage fares, fifteen cents; after 7.30 P. M., twenty-cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, v. West Chester, Phone 1144.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY, Sup't.

DIED, at his home in Haddonfield, N. J., on the sixth Ninth Month, 1904, LEVI R. COWPERTHWAIT, in sixty-sixth year of his age.

The life of this dear Friend was a living testimony the truth of our Saviour's words, "He that followeth shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." To him the day of small things was a day of valiant courage, and he was deeply concerned from his youth up, to heed the gentle impressions of the Holy Spirit, coeving with joy the visitations from on high. There a living reality to him in the religion of Jesus Christ, as he faithfully endeavored to follow His leadings grew from stature to stature, and from grace to grace, feeling impelled to proclaim to others the depths of riches of our Saviour's love, and to invite them to participate in it. An illness of twelve days closed his life, and the severe suffering and loss of speech and sight accompanied this attack, it was borne with remarkable patience, few days before the close, his tongue was loosened to praise of his Master, and messages of love and benediction were left for some of those whom he had loved among, while in health. When he was thought to very near the brink, he said to those gathered around "For I know that if my earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, I have a building of God, an house made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

WILLIAM H. FILEN'S SONS, PRINTERS
No. 422 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 8, 1904.

No. 13.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER.

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,

PHILADELPHIA.

Entered from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,

No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

BETWEEN the unscrupulousness of the bloody-sidy mob, and that of the ambitious thrones, Christianity, in its work of creating Peace on earth, would seem to have yet before it a very arduous task. Some generations of leavening seem needed to work in men's hearts, both the lower and the ruling strata of society are qualified to seek peace and pursue it.

Under converted rulers and legislatures maps the lower stratum, who have the bulk of the burden of suffering and dying to bear, would easily be made willing to be rid in their persons of the merciless task of warfare. Exemption might come but would not eradicate the lust of war in them as partakers of the natural man. Personal conversion into spirit and nature of Christ, and that alone, would power ultimately to effect this change of act among men.

But how sorely this is needed in the ruling strata who incite the less privileged to fight and suffer for them—to be ground between the upper and nether millstone of their wars of unscrupulous ambition and resentment,—thus pictured by Edmund Burke:

"I cannot conceive any existence under heaven which in the depths of its wisdom tolerates all sorts of things) that is more truly odious and disgusting than an impotent, helpless creature, without civil wisdom and military skill, without a consciousness of any other qualification for power his servility to it, bloated with pride and arrogance, calling for battles which he is not to fight, and sending for a violent dominion which he can never exercise.

In the present state of things some have been deprived of the ability of a peace conference to check government authorities through their subjects, on the principle that "war is a game which, vere their subjects wise, kings would not play at;" and have questioned what a peace conference could accomplish in the face of belligerent spirits in power. This language has lately been used:

One such militant spirit panting for fame at the cost of blood may undo all the efforts of Christianity and civilization. The first effort of a peace congress should be to tame the warlike rulers of the world. Having eliminated the practical disturbances, they may establish the principles of international arbitration.

We believe, however, that the great and earnest conference of the present week in Boston will have a far-reaching effect in forming public opinion, and that a popular conscience thus growing adverse to war, will readily be reflected in the policy of rulers. The conviction of the public judgment by conferences is a great work. It helps prepare the way of the Lord. But there is no final security in man against war, short of the leavening and converting power of Christ's own spirit. May this follow up the good work, until the curse of Cain is eradicated.

A Monster not to be Removed by Ignoring it.

It was editorially remarked in No 50 of the last volume of THE FRIEND that the problem which Unitarian teachers seemed to avoid was that of sin and its remission. We referred to a convention held in Philadelphia in which a minister of that persuasion declared that there was one thing in which their great disadvantage in getting a hold on the people consisted, namely, "We don't know what to do with Sin, and he confessed they would ever be handicapped in reaching the convicting witness in the people at large, until they could compete with the other churches in dealing with the problem of sin, its satisfying remedy and remission."

And now an article in the London Friend of the 23d ultimo comes to the aid of this view. While it has been our own endeavor in this periodical to arraign principles and not names as matters in controversy, we see no way in quoting the article but to let it speak for itself as written:—

The statement made by Dr. O. Edward Janney as President at the opening of the Biennial Conference of the "other branch" of Friends in the United States and Canada, recently held at Toronto, marks such a genuine advance in sober and intelligent expression of religious truth as compared with some of the crude statements uttered by Elias Hicks and others who took part in the separation of 1827, that it justly claims our careful consideration. It is suggested in its introduction that it is an endeavor to give a clear idea of the belief of the body which was there represented, and as such an exposition of their views it deserves respectful thought. But to us it appears dangerously inadequate as a statement of Christianity. Dr. Janney, in his statement which we quote in full in another column, named "four cardinal points" upon which all of them were substantially agreed. The first was "a belief in God as the Creator of the universe, who directs its destinies." Secondly, "belief in the Bible;" thirdly, "in the Messiahship of Jesus Christ. The fourth principle is that of direct inspiration—"that there needs to be no obstacle existing between God and man, between the Creator and His creature." There is no recognition of sin and of the essential provision for redemption from sin in the coming or death of Christ, except in the passing allusion to the Messiahship of Jesus Christ "as being the messenger of God sent to the human race to re-establish the relationship which should exist between God and man, that of Father and child." How this relationship is re-established we are not told, except that Christ established the kingdom of God on earth.

If our eyes are once opened to any adequate comprehension of the holiness of God, we must surely have some conception of our own condition as sinners, and the consequent necessity for the Father's love to be expressed in the Good Shepherd laying down His life for us that He might bring back the lost. The sense of sin is apparently so perilously absent from this theological statement that it falls far short of the necessities of the world we live in. It reveals an inadequate conception of the essential attributes of God. But we believe that He is a loving Father yearning for the reconciliation of His wandering sons. The Sacrifice on Calvary is an essential part of the beautiful and perfect revelation of the mind of God in Christ. The incarnation, the faultless life, the wholesome and Divine teaching, all led up to the death for our sakes and the resurrection. These are the essential functions of a true Messiah, and essential to our newness of life. Christ was one with the Father before the foundation of the world, and humbled Himself to become the babe of Bethlehem. Thus becoming man, He identified Himself with human interests and responsibilities. He has borne our burdens and carried our sorrows. As one member of the body is affected by every other member of the body, so He became the Ransom for the many, that as many as receive Him by faith might be emancipated. In this solidarity and identification of interest and responsibility with us, He creates us anew, as our wills become obedient to His will. The covenant of the Father with the Son is thus enlarged to the covenant of the Father with His emancipated children. Born anew into eternal life, we become heirs of God, growing in grace and identified with Christ in character and privilege in His kingdom.

Dr. Janney states that a Christian is "simply one who tries to follow Christ." We must again plead that such a definition is inadequate. It is true we are to follow Christ and our whole being is to be regulated by His Holy Spirit. How? By faith. By faith in what? In the whole Christ, and not only in a heavenly voice within, or Christ in the heart. If we heed the Voice within, we shall infallibly come under a deep sense of personal condemnation for sin. Then we discover that the lifting up on Calvary meets our necessity. The coming of Christ in the flesh, and His voluntary sacrifice for our sins, are the central factors in the history of the world.

We cordially endorse the statement made in the British Friend for this month (page 254), "It was our sin which laid the Cross on Him, and that Cross is the measure of God's hatred of sin, not of His desire for its punishment." Yet Dr. Janney does not once mention sin or the sacrifice for sin in his theological statement. We also heartily agree with the able article on Forgiveness in the British Friend this month, when the editor states (page 245), "In the highest case of all, the will of the sinner must be reached, and must co-operate, if Divine forgiveness is to find its fruition. The Gospel is, essentially, the message that Forgiveness in the first sense is a part of the very nature of the Heavenly Father Himself." If forgiveness is left out and the new Birth, the Gospel is left out. Yet the statement of Dr. Janney does not mention forgiveness, or the need for being born again. As Edward Grubb well puts it, "In Christianity forgiveness is central." "The obstacle is not on the side of God, but on that of man." We are face to face not only with God, and the convictions of His Spirit, but with a world lying in wickedness. Our errand, as servants of Christ, is to point men to the Christ lifted up on the cross for sin, that they may be reconciled and forgiven, that their wills may be changed by the wondrous manifestation of Divine love, that whosoever believeth in Him may not perish, but have everlasting life. This is the Stone, rejected indeed by many builders, but it is become the Head of the corner, and is our immovable Foundation.

If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble into dust; but if we work upon immortal minds, if we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God and love of our fellow man, we engrave on those tablets something that will brighten all eternity.—Daniel Webster.

In a letter from John Newton to William Wilberforce on the marriage of the latter, in 1799, after mentioning the hope that eventually they may "be admitted to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Oh! what a transition will that be," after some further observations, he adds, "then, if not before, I believe we shall add our sharpest trials to the list of our greatest mercies."

For "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 91.)

On Eleventh Month 24th, 1820, Joseph Elkinton writes, after making arrangements for opening a school on the Reservation: "We have been preparing to move to Tunewanna to-morrow, and during the course of the day, whilst thus engaged, I have felt a portion of tranquility cover my mind, notwithstanding I heard that some of the natives said that my life would be taken if I persevered in teaching the school." Notwithstanding these discouragements, the school was opened, and was soon attended by at least eighteen children; and some of the chiefs who favored its opening and the improvement of their children, occasionally visited it, and thus gave it the weight of their countenance and influence. On one occasion, one of these chiefs [Skin-dih-quah-de] addressed the children in the following words: "Pay attention; open your ears to hear what I am now going to say. Do not have your minds otherwise occupied whilst I am speaking, for, by so doing, you would lose part of what I may deliver. I am glad you are all well now this day. I want you to return thanks daily to the Great Spirit for preserving you in health. At night when you lie down desire His protection that you may be favoured to see the morning light. Love Him and endeavor to please Him, and you will be prospered in your ways. Be attentive to your learning, and pay attention to the account we have in the Testament of Jesus; some of you now know something about it, and are able to understand. He spoke the words of life, to which we should pay attention. Love your schoolmaster who is sitting there. We old men all love him; he left his home where he had all the comforts of this life, to come here and endeavor to instruct you. The old men, the Quakers, enquired who amongst them would come here and instruct our children, and your schoolmaster said he would leave all and come here. His heart was willing to come amongst us; he believed the Great Spirit would be pleased therewith, and therefore he came, and we old men want you all to love him, and to look to him for example. Do not pay attention to what those Indians say who are opposed to improvements; they are very much benighted in their minds and are in the dark. You must not follow their customs. You cannot get your living by hunting; when you grow up, you must work and get your living out of the land. You must have cattle, which will be your money. You must follow the customs of the white people. Some of you are now coming to be wise; you know something of passing events. You may know that Washington is the seat of government for the United States; there Congress meet and make laws for all the United States to abide by. We wish you to become useful citizens and have things comfortable around you when you grow up. We old men are poor, and have nothing to give you. Pay attention to what your parents say when you go home, and return to school again at the time appointed. Do not stay away unless your parents give you liberty so to do. Upon your way home be orderly, insult no one, neither throw stones nor sticks at any cattle you meet on the road."

During the course of the ensuing winter Joseph Elkinton, after returning from the school one afternoon, found his skiff sprung from end to end, which had no doubt been done by one or more of the natives opposed to the school. He remarks in his memorandum when mentioning this circumstance, "Oh that I may be enabled to conduct like a Christian amongst them." He also says, "The opposition to the establishment of a school, produce no doubt, in part by the mischievous insinuations of white people, who wished to keep the Indians in ignorance, and ingratiate themselves in their good opinions, that they might more readily get possession of their land, make the situation of the resident Friends very difficult and seemingly hazardous, without gratitude on their part. The whites were evidently opposed to Friends; and whilst they were instilling unfounded apprehensions to the Quakers were seeking to obtain the land from the natives, it would have been for the 'poor Indian,' had he been as much awakened to that danger from his evil advisers, and at all future periods maintain his opposition to the encroachments of the many unprincipled people by whom he was surrounded. Friends had purchased a farm for themselves—they never thought of a compensation from Indians for any services proffered them. Large sums of money were raised by Friends in England, and by Friends in this country, to promote the civilization of this untutored people, and whatever was needed, which the farm and the mill did not yield, was paid for out of those funds in the hands of the Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. Well would it have been for the Indians, had they constantly maintained their suspicions of the danger of losing their lands to those white people, who have had for other object in view, but to deprive them, and then get their property."

In consequence of the opposition made to the party who desired to continue their Indian customs, the school was discontinued shortly afterwards, for several months.

As the Indians at Cattaraugus had expressed a desire to have their children educated in school learning, the Committee took steps to circulate this information among the members of the Yearly Meeting, and early in 1818, Sachar Man offered himself for this service, and with the approbation of the Committee soon afterwards settled among them and opened a school.

The divided condition of the Senecas at that time was in part due to the differing views the profession of religion. For some years previous to this period, efforts had been made to locate missionaries among them, and the result was that the community became divided into the so-called Christian party and the called Pagan party; the latter composed those that were not prepared to leave their former modes of worship and adopt those of the whites. The objections which thiselfelt to the introduction of the religion which was professed by some of the white people were forcibly expressed by Red Jacket in 1811 in a public council which had been called to consider a request which had been made by missionary to settle among them. A part of speech is as follows:

Brother: Continue to listen. You say you are sent to instruct us how to worship the Great Spirit agreeably to his mind, if we do not take hold of the religion which you white people teach, we shall be happy hereafter. You say that you are sent and that we are lost. How do you know us to be true? We understand that your religion is written in a book. If it was intended for us as well as you, why has not the Great Spirit given to us, and not only to us, why did He not give to our forefathers knowledge of that book, with the means understanding it rightly? We only know that you tell us about it. How shall we know you to believe, being so often deceived by white people?

Brother: You say there is but one way to worship and serve the Great Spirit. If there is but one religion, why do you white people differ so much about it. Why not all of you as you can all read the book?

Brother: We do not understand these things. You are told that your religion was given to our forefathers, and has been handed down from father to son. We also have a religion which was given to our forefathers, and has been handed down to us their children. We worship in that way. It teaches us to be thankful for all the favors we receive; to love each other and to be united. We never quarrel under religion.

Brother: The Great Spirit has made us all, but He has made a great difference between the white and red children. He has given us different complexions and different talents. To you He has given the arts. To us He has not opened our eyes. We know these things to be true. Since He has made a great difference between us in other things, why may we not conclude that He has given us a different religion, according to our understanding? The Great Spirit does right. He knows what is best for his children; we are satisfied.

Brother: We do not wish to destroy your religion, or take it from you. We only want to enjoy our own.

Brother: You say you have not come to our land or our money, but to enlighten our minds. I will now tell you that I have been at your meetings, and saw you collect money from the meeting. I cannot tell what your money was intended for, but suppose that it was for your minister, and if we should conform to your way of thinking, perhaps you would want some from us.

Brother: We are told that you have been preaching to the white people in this place. These people are our neighbors. We are acquainted with them. We will wait a little while and see what effect your preaching has on them. If we find it does them good, we like them honest, and less disposed to cheat. We will then consider again of what you have said.

In dealing with Indians holding such views as here expressed, our Friends saw the necessity of living up to the profession they made, and to exemplify in their lives and conduct the principles which they endeavored to recommend to others.

The Indian judges of men by their actions rather than by their words, and it has been a sorrowful commentary upon the profession of Christianity that of those Indians who did profess to be Christians, many of them have been perhaps overcome by temptations presented by the white men as well as those who retained the customs and worship of their forefathers.

In the troublous times which succeeded the fraudulent treaty of 1838, it was recorded by one who lived among them for many years that "Several of the Christian chiefs were bribed by the white man's money to sign the treaty. This so disgusted those who had not fully decided to accept the gospel, that they returned to 'paganism.' 'Red Jacket told us years ago,' they said, 'that if we took the religion of the pale face, we should lose our homes. His words were true.'"

(To be continued.)

CLAIMED THAT A BAD MAN MAY STILL BE A RIGHTFUL MINISTER.—Thomas Bennett, rector of St. James Church, Colchester, in Cambridge, Eng., wrote as follows in his "Confutation of Quakerism:" "I think it were proper to take notice of another mistake of our adversaries, the Quakers—they suppose that holiness of life is absolutely necessary in a ministry of the Gospel; so that if a vicious man preach the Gospel he is not a bad minister, but no minister thereof. This appears from W. Barclay, who says We (the Quakers), judge the grace of God indispensably necessary to the very being of a minister, as that without which any one can neither be a true, nor lawful, nor good minister, whereas on the contrary, we (the clergy), affirm, that though all ministers of the Gospel ought to be endued with holiness of life, and though it appertaineth to the discipline of the church, that enquiry be made of the evil ministers, and that they be accused by those that have knowledge of their offences, and finally being found guilty, by just judgment be deposed; yet sometimes the evil have chief authority in the ministrations of the words and sacraments—holiness of life is not indispensably necessary to the very being of a minister, nor does the want thereof make his commission to preach the Gospel void. "This also pretended that holiness is absolutely necessary to make a man a member of Christ's church, as I have already shewn, and consequently the foundation of his argument is overthrown."

Antitheses.

The World, the Flesh and the Evil One—Heaven, the Soul and Christ.

Pride, Ambition, Lust—Humility, Unselfishness, Purity.

The magisterial Intellect—The meditative, spiritual life of the Mystic.

The Wisdom of this World—The Foolishness of Christ.

An Eye for an Eye—Resist not Evil.

A Caesar, a Bonaparte—The Prince of Peace, a Penn.

Hatred and Revenge—Love and Forgiveness. Earthly Glory—The Cross of Christ.

The will a corpse in the hands of the Jesuit Superior, and the Nirvana or annihilation of the Buddhist—Self-abnegation, Self-sacrifice, a Life hid in Christ.

THE TRUTH.

"But there will come a better day, I see it but not now, Then lift each drooping head in hope, and clear each anxious brow, Redeemer! Thou can't make these storms work out thy sovereign will, The raging of the winds and waves, Thy purposes fulfill!"

Many are straying from the fold, Far from the beaten track, In which our fathers trod of old; O bring those wanderers back.

Restore the strength of zeal and youth, When Barclay, Fox and Penn Displayed a banner for the truth, Before their fellow men.

O! Keep me with thy little flock, Though poor and low it be, Which though the world deride and mock, Is owned, and loved by Thee.

The Truth, the same our fathers knew, Shall yet revive and reign; And they who closely cleave thereto Shall lift their heads again.

Bring round in thy appointed time, A better, brighter day, And cause Thy face again to shine And chase the clouds away.

From an old manuscript.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Paid Agents in Religion.

A book entitled "Princely Men in the Heavenly Kingdom," by Harlan P. Beach, gives a sketch of John Livingston Nevins, who after some time in Japan, commenced work in China in 1861. He was favored to start and organize a large number of stations where Christianity was taught. His words on making paid agents of new converts impressed me. He says, "It affects injuriously the stations with which they are connected. It makes other converts in the station dissatisfied. New converts are often injured by being made paid agents since they find themselves advanced to a position for which they are ill fitted or become puffed up by this promotion. Among people who are adepts in dissembling, the temptation to hypocrisy for the sake of gain is too great for many, and it becomes difficult to judge between the false and true. It also tends to stop the work of unpaid agents. "If money is given others for this service why not pay me, and if I am not paid why should I continue to labor?" The use of money tends to lower the missionary enterprise. The general opinion of the Chinamen as to the motive of one of his countrymen in propagating a foreign religion is that it is a mercenary one. When he learns that the native preacher is paid by foreigners he is confirmed in his judgment.

At the opposite pole is absolute self-support. As the Catholic fathers of North China had taught their converts to repair watches, do silver-plating and other work, to raise potatoes, &c., so in Shantung J. L. Nevins introduced small fruits, especially strawberries. He also imported Jersey cows to improve the milk supply. The setting of full tires on wheels was introduced into this section of China by J. L. N. All these attempts aided a little in self-support in the management of sixty stations under his care and his constant advocacy of financial independence in the native church effected much."

H.

ONE never waits on the Lord in vain.

AT THE WELL.

"How is it that thou askest drink of me?" (John 4: 9.)

This is a day to be remembered long.
Thy strange request awakes in weary heart
A hidden bubbling fount well-kept before.
A drink at my poor hands is wealth bestowed.
The dried-up fount of honor bursts anew;
And I a child of Abram feel the stir
Of dignified response to call divine.
I give thee drink! I give an affluent soul!

H. T. Miller.

BEAMSVILLE, Ont.

How our Literature Sent to West Africa is Valued.

Most of the readers of THE FRIEND are aware that part of the income of a legacy of the late Charles L. Willits is used in distributing religious writings among the English-speaking African population of Liberia. The following letter, read at the last meeting of the trustees, it was thought might have enough interest to warrant its insertion in the paper.

HARPER, Caspé Palmas, Liberia, W. G. Africa, Aug. 9, 1904.
To the Trustees of Chas. L. Willits, deceased.

Publishers of the African's Friend.

Dear Christian Friends: For some years I have been receiving regularly a little bundle of papers from you. When you first began to send them to me I was a student in school at Cuttington, now I am, under God, a minister, preaching the glad tidings of salvation to my fellow Africans in this city, Harper. I have under my care a large Sunday-school, composed of about 350 in all. My papers that you send being such a few, they are not enough that every one may have one, so instead of giving them to the school I send them around to Christians and unbelievers alike. They do good service. Many are led to Christ, I verily believe, by their perusal. In order therefore to have more good done, I write to beg that if possible you will send me regularly every month a sufficient number to distribute among the Sunday-school scholars. If you can't send me the whole number, send me at least 200. God will reward you.

Will you please inform me of your price for a bound volume of the African's Friend. I want one to give to the numerous persons who call on me to visit, especially the young men.

Our people are glad to have books and tracts to read. There is no publishing house here, and good literature is always in demand. I was interested in the article about the good and bad literature, as printed in one of your papers, and can add my testimony to the fact, that young people prefer to read something good, in preference to the low, vile reading of fiction. I pray God to hasten the day when these vile, nasty papers, that corrupt and debauch souls, will be done away with, and pure, clean, soul inspiring reading will take its place.

Brethren, I for one thank God for the African's Friend. I look upon the papers as a valuable auxiliary to the cause of Christ in the world. Brethren, let your good work continue. Cease not till this dark continent of Africa, yea the world, shall be brought to Jesus. Till the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of the Lord. Cease not to raise your voices against intemperance, for I tell you of a truth, that our people are fast becoming enslaved to rum and other deadly poisonous drinks, sent out here to the natives from Christian England, Germany, France and America. O these nations, great and powerful as they are, will be arraigned before the great God of Nations, for their repeated acts of sending to Africa, poor Africa, this vile, degrading thing that destroys body and soul.

Brethren, may God be with you in all your work. May you continue to sound the alarm, till Jesus shall reign. Pray for us in dark Africa, with our millions of heathen brethren, who are still groping about in darkness, heathenism and superstition.

I shall anxiously await your reply.

Your brother in Christ Jesus,

G. W. GIBSON, JR.

"Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines; it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace." Heb. 13: 9.

We sometimes meet with persons to whom the offers of mercy have been evidently made. They themselves have been sensible of this, and were almost persuaded to give themselves to Christ and to accept his rule as the law of their lives. But having much to attend to and think of, they were not so deeply stirred as to come to the decision that security of soul through faith in Him was of so much importance as to demand their first thought and care. Giving at best a divided attention to religion, their interest in it does not lead them to examine the doctrine of Christ and to have clearly formed ideas of the beginning, progress and completion of His work of redemption. They, however, do learn enough to convince them that the religion of the New Testament, if applied to daily life, is not an easy acquisition to human nature. An earnest attempt to attain it is put off through one excuse or another, and the question of an interest in the merits of a crucified and risen Saviour remains unanswered.

The Apostle John wrote, "many false prophets are gone out into the world." Meeting with some of this legion, the mind afloat in things of business and pleasure, not having understood the doctrine, for want of application to learning in the school of Christ, these unstable souls do not discern the false spirit and are easily caught with a plan to be saved which is not that established by the Divine wisdom. A counterfeit has been offered to them; it may be of base metal and coarse design, but their hope is it will answer their purpose, and it costs little or nothing to possess it, or it may have so close a similarity to the genuine as to easily deceive, but when presented to Him who designed and made the original, his refusal to own it will leave the possessor at a loss.

Men-pleasers and false teachers who preach any other gospel than that made known by the revelation of Jesus Christ are severely denounced. Let us then build upon the foundation God has laid. Much digging down through our earthly nature may be found necessary, but when that is removed the unmovable will be reached and the building of our hope can firmly stand upon the Rock, against which the gates of hell have not prevailed. In the voyage of life let us take the Bible for our chart, on which the rocks and shoals of danger are clearly marked, and the deep and safe waters are laid plain and open. With the Holy Spirit as our compass, the voyage can be continued by day and by night; whether the effulgence of the Sun of Righteousness shine on us or His rays be hidden behind clouds of adversity and grief. Head winds and storms cannot keep us from making our port, for our Pilot abhors not them all in his own control.—J. E. RHOADS.

I Was in Prison and One Visited Me.

Some years ago an itinerant minister was passing through a prison crowded with convicts showing every phase of ignorance and brutality. One gigantic fellow crouched alone in a corner, his feet chained to a ball. He was an unhealed wound on his face, where had been shot while trying to escape. The sight of the dumb, gaunt figure touched the visitor's sympathy.

"How long has he to serve?" he asked the guard.

"For life."

"Has he anybody outside to look after his wife or child?"

"How should I know? Nobody has ever noticed him in all the time he has been here. May I speak to him?"

"Yes, but only for a minute."

The minister hesitated. What could he say in one minute? He touched the man's toe.

"I am sorry," he said; "I wish I could help you."

The convict looked keenly at him, and nodded to indicate that he believed in the sympathy expressed.

"I am going away, and shall never see you again, perhaps; but you have a friend who will stay here with you."

The small, keen eyes were on him; the prisoner dragged himself up, waiting and eager.

"Have you heard of Jesus?"

"Yes."

"He is your friend. If you are good at true, and will pray to God to help you, I am sure He will care for you."

"Come, sir," said the keeper. "Time up."

The clergyman turned sorrowfully away. The prisoner called after him, and, catching his hand, held it in his own while he could. Tears were in the preacher's eyes.

Fourteen years passed. The convict was sent to work in the mines. The minister was down one day into a mine, and among the workmen saw a gigantic figure bent with hardship and age.

"Who is that?" he asked the keeper.

"A lifer, and a steady fellow—the best of the gang."

Just then the "lifer" looked up. His face straightened, for he recognized the clergyman. His eyes shone. "Do you know me?" said. "Will He come soon? I've tried to be good."

Through a single word of sympathy the lifer had been transformed, the convict changed. Selected.

DEATH pays respect neither to youth nor usefulness; but mows down together the tender herb, the fragrant flower, and the noxious weed.—J. A. James.

Considerations on the Life of Faith.

It is obvious from the Scriptures that we are required "whatever our hands find to do, do it with our might," "to provide for our households," and undoubtedly every person, on Christian principles, regularly and scientifically accomplish the appropriate work of his hands, whatever it may be.

But here also as in everything else, we must recognize the presence and agency of God. We do not do whatever our God requires us to do, must recognize Him alike in the fulfillment of the disappointment of our efforts. We do not think too much of the inferior instrumentality of the rain and the sunshine, of turning of the furrow, and of the planting the seed, although these are important in their place; but placing these and all other secondary causes comparatively under our feet, endeavor to gain a higher position, and stand in nearer proximity to the Primitive Cause. "He that observeth the wind shall sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap." God works in connection with second causes, but not in dependence on them. They are his servants and not his masters; a sort of dumb expositors of his will and purposes; but in no sense, though man seldom looks above them, the originating and effective cause.

In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." The seed is the man, who as he goes about his daily business, tending his flocks with Abraham, or ploughing his fields with Elisha, can be God in trees and flowers, and running brooks, in hills and valleys, in clouds and sunbeams; and can connect Him, as an intelligible effective agency with everything that has to do with the time and the place, the nature and the results, of his labors.

It is important also in the experience of a Christian life, to extend the principle of the recognition of God's presence and agency to all public and national events, as well as to those more private nature. In republican governments, and in all governments of a constitutional character, there are almost constantly before the public, questions of great moment, which, when viewed out of their relation to the Divine mind, are calculated to create in the Christian, as well as in others, a feeling of anxiety. When he beholds conflicting parties and nations, when he witnesses wild political commotion and uproar which is characterized almost every age of the world, the heart of the good man would faint in him if he did not know that the hand of the Lord is in it. And yet the faith, even of Christians, when exercised in relation to public events, is exceedingly weak; so much so hardly, in the comparative sense, to constitute an existence. It is very different in this respect from what it should be. Nothing but a frank and blind unbelief could thus exile a man from a participation in national movements. There has no political event ever taken place, there has been no rise or fall of prices, no building up or overthrow of parno aggressions of wars or pacifications of the world, without the presence of the hand of the Lord, either for good or for evil, for punishment or reward. Such is the doctrine of the Scriptures as well as of reason. Their language is, "The kingdom is the Lord's, and He is the governor among the nations." "By me kings reign and princes decree justice." God says of Cyrus, the Persian king and conqueror, "He is my Shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built, and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." And He adds in the next chapter a remarkable passage, which shows that kings and rulers, who have no realizing sense of the Divine superintendence and presence, may yet be the instruments in His hands for the accomplishment of His purposes. "For Jacob, my servants' sake, and Israel, mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name, I have surnamed thee, tho' thou hast not known me."

Oh, that we might learn the great lesson, the lesson absolutely indispensable to him who would experience the highest results of the inward life, of beholding God, either in His direct efficiency, or His permissive or controlling guardianship, as present in all things, whether high or low, of whatever name or nature. Without taking this view of His presence, we deprive ourselves of that great centre where the soul finds rest. We are tossed and agitated by passing events. Everything is perplexed, mysterious and hopeless. —Thomas C. Upham, in Interior Life.

The Silent, Upturned Face.

Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace . . .
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

—Tennyson.

Ex-Governor Black, in the speech in which he placed Theodore Roosevelt in nomination for the Presidency, said:

"Men may prophecy and women may pray, but peace will come to abide forever on this earth only when the dreams of childhood are the accepted charts to guide the destinies of men."

How closely this accords with the words of old Him who said:

Verily I say unto you, Except ye . . . become as little children ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

In scores of pulpits to-day, ministers of the gospel are explaining to their congregations that the disciples of Christ erred in supposing that His kingdom was established by force of arms. They are telling the people that the multitudes hoped that His triumphal entry into Jerusalem was the first act in a coercive despotism. That the people of that day could not understand the Master's purpose of conquering the world by means of love alone. The ministers are telling their congregations to-day that Jesus' example was in perfect accord with His precepts; for He was led as a lamb to the slaughter—He was dumb before His accusers—He made no resistance when they pressed the thorns into His brow—He was silent when they spat in His face—He bore His own cross—He, who might in a breath have called legions of angels to His defense, rather than set an example of coercion to the world, suffered Himself to be nailed to the cross; and, in that supreme moment, while all the hosts of heaven listened, and men, exhausted by the frenzy of their hatred, rested for a space, hark!—

"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Black was right. Men may prophecy and women may pray, but peace will come to abide here on earth only when the dreams of childhood are the accepted charts to guide the destinies of men. Not till men become as little children will peace come to abide, here on earth.

But Black spoke, not as an exponent of this doctrine of the Christ, but as a scoffer of it. Hear him:

"The fate of nations is still decided by their wars. You may talk of orderly tribunals and learned referees; you may sing in your schools the gentle praises of the quiet life; you may strike from your books the last note of every martial anthem, and yet, out in the smoke and thunder will always be the tramp of horses and the silent, rigid, upturned faces. . . . If the pressure is great, the material to resist it must be granite and iron."

No doubt, so long as the scoffers of peace, who sound the praises of war, are dominant; the silent, rigid, upturned face will mark where the man of granite and iron; for war is the instrument by which the men of granite and iron decide the fate of nations.

But, you may talk of world powers and the glories of battle; you may voice from the forum the wanton eulogies of strife; you may blot from your books the last note of every paean of peace and love, and yet, forever upon Calvary will appear the silent, upturned face of One who died under the iron heel of the men of granite; died, without so much as lifting His almighty arm in His own defense; and in so dying, branded eternal infamy upon the hellish front of war. And over the crests of the centuries, wafted on airs of heaven, we hear the matchless words:

"Except ye become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven. . . . Peace on earth, good will to men."

And when (God hasten the day!) the will of the common people—the multiplying hosts of Christian democracy—shall have wrenched the helm of human destiny from the crimson hands of self-seeking demagogues, then war shall end, and peace shall usher in the blessed reign of human fellowship and love, beautiful as the dreams of childhood.—Edward H. Putnam in the Public.

Wanted—Prophets.

What is a prophet? One who forth-tells the mind of God. A prophet is one whose soul is under the government of the Spirit of God. The prophets that are wanted are not men who foretell future events, but men inspired of God who speak to the present need and the present-day conscience. If we fulfil our duty, and through the power of the Spirit arouse conviction for sin and proclaim the Saviour from sin, we can safely leave the morrow to care for the things of itself. The true prophet is not the man whose vocation is limited to preaching in meetings for worship. The prophets of Holy Scripture threw themselves alongside their fellow-men in every great crisis. A national crisis was often the means of calling the prophet to the front. They were men in whose heart the Spirit was burning for expression. Great moral issues awake their intensest sympathies. . . . The world to-day is in urgent need of prophets, men of the prophetic spirit who declare the mind of God, even though it is quite possible that their message will be unacceptable when they appear. Independently of all church organizations, and probably amid them all, inspired men are being raised up to speak to our condition. Just in proportion as they speak under the inspiration of the One Spirit, these voices agree together, although the drapery of their institutions may widely differ. Dr. Gore, the Bishop of Worcester, in his sacerdotal vestments, Charles H. Spurgeon, at the Tabernacle, and Catharine Booth, the departed saint of the Salvation Army, have alike given utterance to thoughts which members of the Society of Friends imagined they were themselves raised to uphold. The church that produces prophets, be they men or women, deserves the gratitude of the world. Many prophetic gifts have been buried under the weight of denominationalism and sacerdotalism. This world's covetousness, its busy greed and care, are answerable for untold quenching of spiritual gifts.

Our own church order is not founded on any mere "basis of silence," appropriate and helpful as times of silent worship are in these busy days. Our real basis of church order is loyal obedience to the government of the Holy Spirit in meeting and out of meeting, individually and collectively. Christ is the President in every assembly of His people. His Presence is to be waited for and realized whenever we meet. He is very punctual and regular in His attendance. Under His presidency the spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets, and His voice in one accords with His voice in others. In a gathering held after the pattern of the early church there is room for all to speak whom He shall call. . . . To some men the Church needs to say, "Stir up the gift that is in thee." To others who are voluble, the Church may say, Hold thy peace till others have an opportunity of expression. Many meetings are held in this liberty of prophesying and are joyous occasions. Sometimes the liberty is abused by over-much talk; at other times the liberty is abused by over-much silence. Congregations everywhere need to be so developed that they may in truth become schools of the prophets. If it is to be so, we must have patience with ourselves, and patience with one another. In unexpected quarters, in the cottage of the herdsman, in the public school, in the desert, in royal courts, the prophet appears. Not by the election of majorities, but by Divine election the anointing oil descends, and the Spirit comes on that man from that day forward. Christ loves willing-hearted disciples. Sometimes He strikes down the opposer and converts him into an apostle; here and there a gifted scholar receives and welcomes the still small voice. But amid all the variety of outward circumstances and inward discipline every true prophet may look upward and thankfully acknowledge his Divine ordination. The Prophet is in fellowship with Christ, and Christ is in close fellowship with the Prophet. —London Friend.

Be much with God, and your face will shine; let all men see the new creation. —Bramwell.

CONSOLATION.

When the streamlet is dried up then flee to the fountain,
When the valley is flooded then haste to the mountain,
When the arm thou hast leant on is laid in the dust,
On the arm of thy God lean with faith's cheerful trust.

Earth's gourds, oh how tempting their flowers and fruit,
While we love their sweet shadow a worm's at the root.
Is thy gourd that once sheltered now withered away?
Be the shelter of Jesus thy shelter and stay.

How oft have earth's visions deceived the fond-hearted,
Like the rainbow they shone, like the rainbow departed.
When thy light that once sparkled is darkened and gone
See the rainbow that fades not, it reaches God's throne.

How oft have earth's pleasures for which the heart panted,
Like the bright upas tree proved deadly when granted.
When thy soul has been sickened with earth's poisoned joy,
Look up for pure pleasure to fountains on high.

Like the dove when of old from the ark it went forth
Some green spot to rest on to seek thro' the earth,
When it found the deluge so deep and so dark,
Left no green spot uncovered, returned to the ark.

So when floods of affliction have gathered all round
And no green spot of gladness, no hop-branch is found,
Then flee to the Saviour the true ark of rest,
Oh, there's no place of shelter like his pitying breast.

When there thou art sheltered tho' storms rack the skies,
Tho' higher and higher the deep floods arise,
Above the dark waters the ark is lifted high
And bears its blest inmates to God's mount, the sky.

By the scorn and the scoff for thy sake He bore,
By the sharp crown of thorns for thy sake He wore,
By the sweat in the garden, by the death on the tree,
To Him who redeemed thee, then wearied one, flee.

From Him thine own Saviour what'er may betide thee,
No sorrow can sever, no distance divide thee.
Earth's friends may forsake, but He'll forsake never.
Earth's loved ones must die, but He liveth ever.

In love He afflicts thee, in mercy He chastens,
To wound He is slow, but to bind up He hastens,
When thy sins call for chastening 'twill comfort impart,
Tho' a frown's on his brow, yet there's love in his heart.

Each dear little cistern by his hand may be broken,
But his stroke tho' severe, of his love is a token.
He breaks them that we by their loss may be led
To drink of pure pleasures at joy's fountain head.

To Him who so loved thee let grief draw thee nearer;
Each dear precious promise let sorrow make dearer,
And welcome each trial by which there is given
To thy soul more of God, to thy heart more of Heaven.

—Charlotte Elizabeth.

The world may promise much but can give nothing of that substantial joy and solid peace, which is to be found only in the union of the soul with its Divine Creator and Redeemer. —Maria Fox.

Science and Industry.

HOW PRESSED GLASS WAS INVENTED.—1827, a carpenter of Sandwich, Massachusetts wanting a piece of glass of a particular size and shape, conceived the idea that the molten material could be pressed into any form, much the same as lead might be. Up to that time all glassware had been blown, either off the wheel or in a mold, and considerable skill was required and the process was slow. The glass manufacturers laughed at the carpenter, but he went ahead and built a press, and now the United States is the greatest pressed-glass country in the world. —Cosmopolitan.

BORAX IN THE UNITED STATES.—The borax fields of the United States are mainly in the desert "dry lake" region of southern California, although deposits are found also in Nevada and Oregon. Borax was first produced in the United States in 1864, at Borax Lake, California. The borax was contained in the water of the lake and was obtained by evaporation.

The saline crusts of the so-called dry lake or borax marshes of the Mohave Valley were next mined for borax, and afterward, about 1838, work was begun on the beds of colemanite, or borate of lime, in San Bernardino County, Cal., from which most of the borax mined in the United States has since been obtained.

THE COLLECTION AND PRESERVATION OF WELL RECORDS.—The United States Geological Survey has recently perfected plans for the systematic collection and preservation of well records and samples. The demand for information regarding wells has become so great that the Survey has decided to issue an publication containing a brief account of wells bored each year. This report will be published as near the beginning of the year practicable, and will be sent to all those who apply for it. It will contain the names and addresses of persons doing well work and summarize the work done by them in the preceding year.

In order to obtain data for such a year the Survey wishes to make arrangements with well drillers and well owners to send samples and records to the Survey's headquarters at Washington, D. C. On receipt of names of persons willing to save samples of well bottom the Survey will at once send them supply canvas bags in which they may transmit their samples through the mails without paying postage. As these samples may be sent as often as drillers visit the post-office, there is no danger that they will accumulate and become bulky. For the keeping of a log a convenient pocket memorandum book will also be provided.

Records of the borer's work will be carefully filed in the office of the Survey, and will be readily available to them at any time, so in case their notes are lost they can be obtained.

Their cooperation will aid materially in the study of the geologic structure of the United States and will thus assist in obtaining knowledge which can not fail to be of ultimate fit to well drillers.

POSTAGE STAMPS NOT LEGAL TENDERS
Those Government Bureaus that are auth.

aw to sell certain of their publications recently have trouble in regard to the form in which remittances are made to pay for books, pamphlets, or maps. Among these Bureaus are the United States Geological Survey, whose reports and maps have a wide circulation. The Survey has persistently endeavored to make generally known the fact that checks, foreign (including Canadian coin), and postage stamps can not under the law be received in exchange for the publications, yet almost every one brings remittances of postage stamps. Some cases the clerks who are required to sort out the books and maps have simply weighed the stamps and themselves turned them into the official coffers, so that the offenders have received without detract the publications ordered. But these clerks have naturally become averse to invest the entire amounts of their salaries in postage stamps which they can not use and for which they must therefore find buyers, and this trade will now be discontinued. The offence ending stamps has been in many cases aggravated by the remittance of amounts in excess of the price of the book or map. It has happened that six cents in stamps has been offered in payment for a five-cent map. In these cases it has been necessary to return them to the purchaser at a cost greater than its value. In most instances, perhaps, change has been expected, but the rules of government bookkeeping has made it necessary to turn the surplus amount.

Postal money orders or cash can be received for these publications. The maps of the Survey have now a wide sale, and the failure on the part of intending purchasers to obtain the requirements of law has become a source of so great inconvenience that a rigid uniformity to these requirements will hereafter be exacted.

REMOVAL OF CRIMINAL PROPENSITY BY SURGERY.—Jesse Beard, fifteen years was brought into Juvenile Court by his mother, charged with being incorrigible. He had been away from home five days, and the mother and sister of the boy thought that he should be put in some institution where he could be managed. Pending an investigation of the case, Helen W. Rogers, chief probation officer, and others of the Court, conceived the idea that a physical defect was responsible for the boy's mental attitude.

The mother and sister then remembered a doctor who had received by the boy when three years old. The doctor had struck his head on a rock in a stream and he was wading. Dr. Kohlmer's examination showed a concave formation of the skull which it should have been convex. Arrangements for an operation were made, but they were not carried out until June 5, as the boy was run away in the meantime.

The operation by Dr. Kohlmer involved the removal of three pieces of the skull, on the right side of which he found thick growths lying against the brain. The boy was allowed to leave the hospital fourteen days later, and as strong as ever, but showing a remarkable difference in his manner. The oldness and ungovernable temper were gone, and he was perfectly amenable to the wishes of his mother.

The mind of the boy has cleared and he seems extremely bright. It is believed that he will learn rapidly in school and make up for the worthless years. He understands what has happened to him and says he is very thankful to the court and to the doctor.

He will enter a special school in connection with the Shortridge High School, maintained for truants and backward students, this week. The boy has not been in school for three years because of his incorrigibility, and at the time he was taken out of school he had reached only the second grade—the class of boys eight years old.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The reading of the above recalled an incident related to the writer by the late Dr. Charles Evans, of Philadelphia. He stated that two bright English lads, well trained in an intelligent family, had been sent from home to a boarding-school. Some time after, the school authorities notified the parents that one of the boys, who had always heretofore exhibited nothing but an affectionate nature towards his brother, had become quite alienated from him, and in other ways showed marked change of character from what he possessed on entering the school. A surgeon was called in, who made an examination of the scalp, finding in one spot a cicatrix. Inquiry was made at the school, as to whether the patient had received an injury there, and it was discovered that an usher had struck the boy on one occasion, upon the head, with a ruler.

The surgeon informed the parents that, if allowed to trephine their son, at the spot indicated by the scar, he had hope that the operation might result in a restoration to the former mental condition. Upon the little circular piece of the cranium being taken away, there was found a spiculum of bone, projecting into the brain substances, from the inner plate of the skull. Immediately upon its removal, complete restoration to the boy's normal mental condition followed. W. E.

Items Concerning the Society.

A list of 57 pastors was reported by Iowa Yearly Meeting as employed in meetings within its limits—44 men and 23 women.

We were indebted to an evening paper of last week for the misinformation that Joseph S. Elkinton was on his way to Canada. He has been pursuing his service in the coal regions of Pennsylvania.

The decease of Dr. Richard H. Thomas, at the age of 51, on Second-day evening the 3d inst. in Baltimore, will sadly solemnize many hearts under the name of Friends throughout America, England and Norway, wherever his labors as a minister have been known and felt. Thus the foremost officer of "The Peace Association of Friends in America" ended his service here below on the day in which the great Peace Congress in Boston began, and the gospel of love spares from earth a strong exponent.

In writing last week on the systematic ministry operating as a gag on the spring of the ministry in others of the congregation, and leaving the future supply of ministers to be raised by a process of human manufacture, we had not then met with the more pointed statement which appeared Seventh Month 21st in the American Friend, referring to the Pastoral System of the Western Yearly Meetings in America. The writer says:

"In not a few of our meetings all vocal service, except singing, is performed by one person. Singing is by a choir only, or as the choir leads. Visiting ministers are expected to arrange with the pastor as to what part they shall take in the service. Any attempts on the part of old-fashioned members to have an open service are frowned upon, to the point of suppression. Young Friends are being reared under such influences that they express surprise that, in some meetings, people other than the pastor are allowed to take part in the preaching service. Did the modern movement free us from bondage to sell us into servitude?"

[The following observations on the Society of Friends have been handed to us, as found in the Public Ledger. They may help invite some of us to live up to the ideal which the writer has of Friends. Their numbers may be decreasing, perhaps in no places faster than where the Society under that name is increasing, but that they are dying out, we do not believe. As has lately been repeated, Quakerism will never be a failure so long as the Holy Spirit is not a failure:]

In common with a multitude of Philadelphians, I regard the Friends (or Quakers), as a religious body, the best type of Christianity in existence, and yet, it seems to me, they are passing away like the Indians.

It is universally admitted that a nation exclusively of consistent Quakers could easily dispense with human law and lawyers, courts and Judges, policemen's clubs and soldiers bayonets, jails and penitentiaries, lunatic asylums and breweries, and, of course, gambling "joints" and other dens of iniquity would be totally unknown.

In short, the Friends teach and practice the Golden Rule, the fundamental principle of the religion of Jesus. This, together with their faith in the "spirit," or "inner light," make them conspicuous examples of what is termed the "beauty of holiness."

While all this is an admitted fact, the question follows, What would become of the thousands who live by preying on their fellow-men should, by some miracle, the Quakers secure control of, say, this one city? Fancy the situation: No dens of vice of any kind; no gamblers' bells; no rum holes or champagne clubs; no political machines or tricky politicians; no shyster lawyers or divorce courts; no policemen, or jails, or paupers; and, above all, no necessity of a "warrior bold" in the entire land.

I say, fancy such a condition! Should such a state of affairs prevail, what would become of a vast multitude of "toilers"—policemen, Judges, petty Magistrates, an army of lawyers, politicians for revenue only, newspaper reporters of the scavenger brand, and a horde of criminals of every grade who live by vice and who cling to the decent minority of our citizens like barnacles to a stranded ship in some far-off deserted port? What would happen should this multitude be suddenly compelled to earn a living by doing a fair day's work for common wages?

And now that the "old guard" of morality and the "Golden Rule" (the Friends) are passing away, slowly but surely, where can we look for any organization to take its place as exemplars of the teachings of the Man of Nazareth? "By their fruits ye shall know them!" Judged by this incontrovertible standard of all things human or divine, the Friends lead all brands of religion on the lines laid down by Jesus, the Christ, who is regarded by millions as the eternal and animating spirit of the universe. If this be a fact that Jesus was and is the eternal and animating force of the universe, which is summed up in the word God, then, in the name of justice, equity, reason and common understanding, why should such models of Christian ethics as the Quakers be permitted to pass away as an organization, while vice, in all its hideous forms, runs rampant throughout the universe?

Either Jesus, the Christ, is the eternal spirit called God, and all powerful, or He was simply an inspired human, born of woman, like the rest of mankind; but with a mission to the world far surpassing in importance anything ever delivered by the wisest prophets and seers before his time.

On these two propositions the Friends divided, as I understand the situation—one wing holding to the divinity of Jesus, those opposed stubbornly insisting that He was merely a man, but inspired "to speak as no man spoke before." * * *

JOHN FOSTER,

1634 Parrish St., Phila., August 1, 1904.

Notes in General.

The British and Foreign Bible Society have carried the Bible to the coldest city in the world, Yakutsk, Eastern Siberia, capital of the province, in which are 400 European houses, the rest of the abodes being huts covered with earth.

Tibet, the "Great Closed Land," is surrounded by missionary stations waiting for opportunity to enter and preach the gospel. Some of the Aloravian stations are 10,000 feet above sea level. The missionaries try to win the confidence of Tibetans who come over the border to trade.

FUNERAL FLATTERY.—There is a timeliness for us in the following concern of the Presbyterian:

Praise of the dead should not be fulsome. Their laudation, now so common, is out of place. Some persons seem to look upon it as a necessity. They think that friends expect it, and blame the minister if he does not extol the virtues of the deceased, or find ways of discovering them if they have been lacking in the life. But it is the minister's business to bury the dead, not to laud them; to comfort and cheer the mourners, not to guarantee a safe passport into glory, or to picture them as veritable saints during their stay upon the earth; to inspire the funeral services to the instruction and admonition of the living, not to give the departed an eulogistic exit. He who recognizes his position aright can find many an occasion for doing good. As a rule, the least one says of the dead, and the more faithful he is to the God of judgment and grace, the more appropriate and impressive is his funeral address.

THE NEGRO QUESTION IN AMERICA.—Edward Grubb, Secretary of the Howard Association in England, in an answer to a correspondent of the Standard who appears to condone certain lynchings of negroes, says:

"If your correspondent would have English people form just conclusions in regard to the subjects upon which he wishes to refer to them, there are certain facts and considerations which it is essential they should bear in mind, but to which he makes little, if any, allusion.

Only 24½ per cent. of all the lynchings that occurred in America in 19 years were for criminal assaults (real or alleged, actual or merely attempted) on women, whether white or black. On the other hand, 41 per cent. of those lynched were charged with murder. (The actual number of persons lynched from the beginning of 1885 to the Autumn of 1903 was:—For rape, etc., 637; for murder, 1260; on other charges, 892; total, 2849.) A similar proportion holds in the case of States such as Alabama, where lynchings are frequent, as in the Union generally.

"2. In most cases the persons lynched have been untried, and therefore, in the eye of the law, are presumably innocent. In several instances it has been discovered, too late, that the wrong person had been the victim.

"3. For many generations the coloured race were taught by the example of white men that the honour of negro women was of no account, and it is hardly a cause for wonder that this example should, after their liberation from slavery, have acted adversely on their morals.

"4. An abominable prison system, in the Southern States, is actually turning loose upon society hundreds of coloured men and some whites, schooled in every conceivable vice. This system is retained on the ground that it is "plenty good enough for niggers," and it is justified under the wholly false idea that the coloured person as such is inherently vicious and criminal, that attempts to reform him are useless, and that education only makes him worse.

"5. The idea that people inclined to crime can be terrorized into decent conduct by ferocious punishments is known by every instructed person to be false. When public executions prevailed in England, and hanging was inflicted for every petty theft, crime was infinitely more prevalent than it is now. There is much evidence that the diseased imaginations of a certain sort of people are excited by these public horrors, that a kind of frenzied desire for notoriety seizes them, and that the very crimes which their tempers are most inclined to perpetrate are not less softened by them, but increased. We have high authority for saying that 'Satan does not cast out Satan.'

"6. The witnessing of such scenes as the burning alive and mutilation of a human being, as President Roosevelt powerfully pointed out in a letter to Governor Durbin of Indiana, leaves indelible marks of demoralization and degradation on all those who are concerned in it."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—In a recent gathering at the National Farm School, near Doylestown, Pa., which was founded by Jews and under their management it was stated by one of the Executive Committee:—"The calls upon this institution for men educated along these lines is incessant, not only within our own borders, but from foreign countries. We continue an education here, we give facilities for post-graduate instruction to those who come to us with a preference to those who come from institutions that instruct in the science of agriculture and those sciences that are related to agriculture. We have taken in more than five hundred young men since I came here for such instruction, and the demand still grows. Universities throughout the country are making arrangements to teach meteorology, geology, animal husbandry, soil physics, forestry, applied entomology, scientific statistical work, road-building, farm mechanics and engineering, etc."

On the 30th ult. a petition to intervene in the affairs of the Congo Free State in the interests of civilization was presented to President Roosevelt. The memorialists say that they are "seeking the counsel and pleading for the assistance of the first citizen of the American Republic, which has ever interested itself powerfully in the cause of civilization. It is a matter of honor for all nations and individuals in any way responsible for the creation of the Congo State to do all possible toward the removal of the system which has grown up under the governing power and the offenses committed under it."

Over one thousand employees of the Pennsylvania system northwest and the Pennsylvania system southwest have lately left the service of the company because of a general order that no employe of the company who was hired after he read the age of thirty-five is to be retained, then he retains his position.

Hugh Garney, Third Secretary of the British Embassy, was lately arrested and fined in Lee, Mass., for driving an automobile at greater speed than the laws of Massachusetts allow. Under international law an ambassador is exempt from absolute independence and freedom of action in order that he may be able to perform his duties at all times. This applies to his family, to the secretaries and other attaches of the legation. Though a resident in the country to which he is accredited, his position is regulated upon the supposition that he still resides in his own country, and he therefore is exempt from both the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the country to which he is sent. The fine was remitted and an apology has been offered. In cases where offences occur, the British ambassador at Washington has power to take action towards removing the offender and procuring his recall to his own country.

Replying to a request of the Interparliamentary Union lately meeting in St. Louis, President Roosevelt has promised to call a second meeting of The Hague Tribunal. He said: "In response to your resolutions, I shall at an early date ask the other nations to join in a second congress of The Hague. I feel, as I am sure you do, that our effort should take the shape of pushing forward toward completion the work already begun at The Hague, and that whatever is now done should appear not as something divergent from, but as a continuance thereof."

A party of prominent Armenians has arrived in this country, bearing a personal letter from the Supreme Patriarch of the Armenian Church to President Roosevelt asking him to co-operate with the powers of Western Europe in an effort to prevent further massacres of Armenians, which it is alleged, are of frequent occurrence. Millions of potatoes have been awarded to the State depository from Long Branch, lately acquired over the tracks of Long Branch Railroad and interfered with the movement of a train upon a steep grade.

The death of George F. Hoar, late U. S. Senator from Massachusetts, at his home in Worcester, Mass., on the 30th ult., is regarded a national loss.

FOREIGN.—It is estimated that 150,000 Japanese troops are in the neighborhood of Mukden. Following the reconquest of Russia to increase its army, Japan has taken steps to bring forthwith a very large body of trained soldiers into the field.

Recent assaults on Port Arthur are reported to have resulted in the loss of seven thousand of the Japanese troops. The Russians are reported to be making desperate efforts to retake forts near Port Arthur recently captured by the Japanese.

An officer of high rank has been appointed by China to proceed to Tibet and investigate and manage affairs there. The British military expedition left Lassa on the 23rd ult. Strong earthquake shocks were felt in the south of Italy on the 2d inst., accompanied by floods of rain.

A despatch of the 2d says: The eruption of Mount Vesuvius continues, and, although it has somewhat decreased, it is still most imposing, and its vividness has been augmented by the breaking away of the crust around it, and explosions, making it appear as if the whole mountain would be rent from top to bottom. On the Pompeii all the eruption is very threatening, and a great quantity of ashes is being ejected.

A despatch from Shanghai of the 27th ult. says reports received from the authorities part of the Province of Shantung say that the Shontan Boxers are organizing prospectuses, which fix Tenth Month 17th the date for the extermination of all foreigners. It stated that it was in Shantung that the great anti-foreign outbreak of 1900 began and that it was the Boxer Society there, the I-Ho Tuan, which started the rising. The I-Ho Tuan, for means the League of United Patriots, but its last word can be spoken so as to mean fists, and athletic contests were engaged in by its members, if fighters gave them the name of Boxers. Recent reports from China indicate anti-foreign feeling in various sections of the country.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

Charles Demetriades, Phila.; Stacy F. Haines, N. Y.; Gertrude W. Cartland, Mass.; Susan W. Worrell, Pa. No. 12, V. 79; E. M. Henson, Chas. Margaret, rising, Pa.; H. H. H. for means Benington, Ia.; Seth Shaw, Agent, for Elbert L. Cope and Nathan Kirk.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Wanted.—A teacher for the West Caln School, good boarding place near the school has been secured. Apply at once to Susie B. Smith, Parkesburg, Ches. County, Penna.

The Corporation of Haverford College.—Annual Meeting will be held in the Committee Room, Arch Street Meeting House, Philadelphia, on Third-day Tenth Month 1st, 1904, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Members are particularly requested to bear this appointment in mind. The charter requires that twenty shall be in attendance to make a quorum.

Please notify the Secretary of any change in address. J. STODOLSKY, Secretary, 1011 Diamond Street, Philadelphia.

Westown Boarding School.—For convenience of persons coming to Westown School, the stage meet trains leaving Philadelphia 7.16 and 8.18 A. M., 2.50 and 4.32 P. M. Other trains are met when requested. Stage fare, 10c; extra charge, 7.30 p. m., twenty cents stage fare. To reach the School by telegraph, West Chester, Phone 114.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY, Sup.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 15, 1904.

No. 14.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

Entered second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to
JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

to be Maintained by Weapons of Warfare not Carnal.

The proposition accepted in the Peace Congress that certain nations should combine as "pacifiers" states, to induce peace between those disposed to be belligerent, is the harbinger of an advance step, so far as it means peace by peace. Such standing testimony that spread over nations a moral influence against war. An example of four or five powerful nations standing in protest against the sin of carnal warfare, must have a salutary effect. But when even these as peacemakers state they expected to apply war as a last resort, to compel belligerents to keep the peace, though it would afford a decided gain and prevent incalculable amount of woe in comparison with the present practice—and is to be commended as far as it goes in peace—it reaches the short of laying the axe of Christianity at the root of the corrupt tree. Let us hail every advance in practice towards the consummation of peace on earth in principle. But whenever the principle of peace is realized on earth, it never adopt the principle of carnal warfare; instead of employing Satan to cast out man, must overcome evil with good. A peace that depends on carnal war as its ultimate foundation, but contradicts itself.

Any proposed mitigation of warfare on earth, and every tentative process towards it, comes as a relief to our sympathies with humanity. But the cause of peace rests on the spirit which saves men's lives, and never, by doing evil that good may come, would destroy man. The peaceableness of "the wisdom that cometh from above," is "first pure," without of no mixture or compromise with the opposite principle. And it remains for the Society of Friends as the vanguard of the Kingdom of Truth in its very Spirit and living Original, to keep aloft its pure standard, and that for Zion's sake we should not hold our peace, and for the heavenly Jerusalem's sake not rest, "until its righteousness shall go forth as brightness, and its salvation as a lamp that burneth."

Echoes of the Peace Congress in Boston.

The peace movement, as we see its evidences in our city, at the present time, rises to even higher expression than an appeal for the abolition of war. It is entering into social and religious relations, a fact that is conspicuously shown by the religious services held every morning. Here are beautiful unity of spirit and harmony of purpose. Truly the motto that heads the circular announcing all this belongs there. "Peace on earth, good will among men." It is a new feature of peace conventions, and perhaps in an important sense it is not too much to say that it is a crowning feature.—Boston Transcript.

Francis H. Rowley, in opening, said: "No movement which has for its aim the world's larger life, its betterment and its uplift can live save as it is fed by the streams that flow from the faith of man in God. It is, therefore, appropriate that these services should be held, in which we recognize God as the fountain and source of peace, and as leading us to the goal we are striving to reach. We hear from thousands of sources that religion has failed, and multitudes in our churches have seemed to think that we are retrograding. Yet I have never been more impressed than during the last few weeks with the fact that, while many things in the churches have not been moving as fast as we should have liked, outside the churches in the great world God's kingdom has been winning one of the greatest triumphs of the centuries—winning it in the turning of the hearts of men toward this great cause of peace among the nations.

Secretary Hay's words as quoted by the chairman in introducing him:—"The highest victory of great power is that of self-restraint, and it would be a beneficent result of this memorable meeting, this ecumenical council, if it taught us all that mutual knowledge of each other which should modify prejudices, restrain acerbity of thought and expression, and tend in some degree to bring in that blessed time

"When light shall spread, and man be liker man, Through all the seasons of the Golden Year."

"If the press of the world would adopt and persist in the high resolve that war should be no more, the clangor of arms would cease from the rising of the sun to its going down, and we could fancy that at last our ears, no longer stunned by the din of armies, might hear the morning stars singing together, and all the sons of God shouting for joy."

We give ourselves to these underlying currents which we do not create, but to which it is our duty to conform. The deeper channels of the thought of the age are moving irresistibly toward the unity of the world.—F. G. Peabody.

"The ministers of your churches have a great responsibility in this matter, as have also the writers for the press. The press should guide the people in the way they ought to go. It too often panders to the sentiments of the moment and merely tries to write what will enable the paper to be sold. Then, too, the women should work unceasingly to influence those who control public affairs, for let us not forget that in war it is the women who suffer most."—Thos. Lough.

It is the duty of the churches to kill the war spirit by preaching the fraternity, brotherhood and peace, which is the gospel of Jesus, and thus make impossible the dispositions that lead to war. You will never prevent war by a mere appeal to pity. The sufferings on the battlefields and at home are enormous, but no consideration of them will prevent men from fighting what they call the battles of their country, and no consideration of possible bereavement will prevent Christian women from sanctioning and blessing their children as they go forth to carry the flag of their country to some new enterprise. Nor will the appeal to reason be sufficient, as the histories of wars have shown. When the war passion arises in a nation or a man's heart reason is thrown to the wind.—Walter Walsh of Scotland.

M. J. Elliott of England said that nearly everybody, not only savages and barbarians, but civilized people, churches and ministers, are for war. We want to be loyal to Jesus and be peacemakers. I am for peace, notwithstanding its unpopularity. It is a degenerate Christian, disloyal to the Master, that approves or excuses war. The earliest Christians for over two centuries declared it anti-Christian and refused to bear arms. War is in its nature contrary to the spirit and teachings of the New Testament. No war can be reconciled with the words of Christ: "Love your enemies." War appeals to the unholy passions of men.

War settles nothing except who is stronger in physical brute force and strategy. It destroys life and devastates property. War is international duelling, and duels are absurd, wicked and condemned. The question of right is as much undecided after war as before.

The distinguished English statesman, orator and author, John Morley, biographer of Cobden and Gladstone, is on his way to this country, where he will remain for some time studying our people and institutions. From Lucia Ames Mead's "Primer of the Peace Movement," a valuable compendium of information on this subject, we quote the following utterance of Mr. Morley: "You push into territories where you have no business to be and where you had promised not to go. Your intrusion provokes resentment, and resentment means resistance. You instantly cry out that the people are rebellions, in spite of your own assurance that you have no intention of setting up a personal sovereignty over them. You send a force to stamp out the rebellion. Having spread bloodshed, confusion and anarchy, you declare, with hands uplifted to the heavens, that moral reasons force you to stay. These are the five stages in the Forward Rake's Progress."—Boston Herald.

What I want is for Americans to get rid of the wrong imperialism and take up the right imperialism. There are two kinds of imperialism. One is ruling other people by force, and the other is ruling them by ideas and sympathies. I am an imperialist in this latter sense. The American people, if they only get rid of the idea that there is no higher influence than force, can do something that no other people can do.—Ruen Thomas.

There is no such thing as the sane imperialism which Kipling writes about. War is murder. Nations cannot be Christianized by the killing of man by man.—Herbert Burrows.

All our greatest men have been earnest advocates of peace. The very men who founded our liberties with the mailed hand detested and abhorred war as the most futile and ferocious of human follies. Franklin and Jefferson repeatedly denounced it—the one with all the energy of his rhetoric, the other with the lambent fire of his wit. But not our philosophers—our fighting men have seen at close quarters how hideous is the face of war. Washington said: "My first wish is to see this plague to mankind banished from the earth;" and again he said, "We have experienced enough of its evils in this country to know that it should not be wantonly or unnecessarily entered upon." There is no discordant note in the utterances of our most eminent soldiers on this subject. The most famous utterances of General Grant—the one which will linger longest in the memories of men—was the prayer of his war weary heart, "Let us have peace." Sherman reached the acme of his marvellous gift of epigram when he said, "War is hell." And Abraham Lincoln, after the four terrible years in which he had directed our vast armies and navies, uttered on the threshold of eternity the fervent and touching aspiration that "the mighty scourge of war might speedily pass away."—John Hay.

Here are various religious denominations, comprising many millions of people, who if they chose to act together, could doubtless put an end to war. Why do they not act together to do this? Millions of Baptists think it important to observe a literal text, bearing upon the duty of immersion. Why are they not equally strict to observe the plain words of the New Testament against war? Highly respected members of the Episcopal Church meeting in Boston, will soon be insisting upon the precise letter of Jesus' word on divorce. Is not Jesus as strong against war as against divorce? Does He not teach that one cannot even worship at the altar till one is "reconciled" with his brother? A multitude of people like to call themselves "liberal" in religion. How shallow it is to be liberal, if one is not concerned to see men killing each other by the thousand! Americans are kindly; when a theatre burns, we think of new laws and safety contrivances. Why then do we not think what we can do to stop forever that cruel mode of slaughter by which millions of men have perished in various wars within the memory of the present generation?—Charles F. Pole.

Those who know war are not those who make war. They sit quietly at home who send others to be crushed and maimed on the battlefield, and who spend the money which they themselves do not pay. They know nothing of the miseries they entail on others.—Belgian Senator Lelaie.

In Europe I see men and women giving their thought to this growing cause of peace who do not acknowledge the supremacy of Jesus. I honor such men for their noble self-sacrifice; they put many of us Christians to shame. They are fighting the battle of Christ, and they are casting out devils, though not in His name. But this I would say to them and to others: There is no real hope of any large or enduring success in the cause of peace and freedom unless we can inspire both the peoples and the governments of the world with a sense of the pre-eminence and paramount claims of those virtues which Jesus preached in the Sermon on the Mount.

There is no discouragement there of the pagan virtues—wisdom, temperance, justice, courage. These hold their high place in the Christian life, as in all other life. But Christ has exalted a new type of virtue. It gives a new idea of life and conduct, a new conception of humane perfection, and breathes a new spirit into human society—the spirit of humanity, patience, forgiveness, love of righteousness, love of souls, love of peace. So we have the well-spring, the unfailing source of this movement to-day.—Bishop Percival.

We are living in a predatory age—better than that in which our forefather's lived, but far less humanitarian than that in which our descendants will live in four or five generations more.—Boston Herald.

What are we to think of men whose trade is to demoralize the people, for that is the trade of yellow journalism? War is the great demoralizer, as much so to those who sit at home and read about it as to those who fight. Is it not strange that the one superbly heroic spirit in our day who has been excommunicated by his church, and to whom the whole world looks for a message when it wants one, is the Russian Tolstol? To humanize man is surely the call of the Christian church.—Ruen Thomas.

Samuel Crothers of Cambridge protested against the misinterpretation of the ideal of peace. Peace does not mean passivity. "We do not want," he said, "the peace of the slug-gard or the coward, but the peace that comes through heroism and continual effort. The ideal peace is the real strenuous life. We must seek to change the sentiments of the young men in the first years of their youth-manship. They are misled into thinking that all wrong can be burned up in the fire of war and that war is the only real outlet for the activity which they crave. They think it better to fight for the right than sit in peace and rail at wrong, as if there were no alternative ideal. Peace must be made attractive; it must be made an ideal which will elicit the enthusiasm of these young men.

"In twenty-five years Kipling will be singing songs of peace and forget the songs of his youth.

"The labor of peace is the exaltation of the human above the material. The true peace is the highest opportunity for heroism, for self-sacrifice."

"If we are to maintain, to extend and strengthen the influence of Christ in our common life, in all our affairs, we must learn the selfish or unscrupulous greed is as mean thing in a nation as it is in an individual. It stamps both with the mark of degradation. We have to learn to feel that the jingo spirit which swaggers in its pride and delights in warfare and aggression is in the main a survival of those brutal instincts that should be eliminated from every civilized and Christian life."—Bishop Percival.

"The fact of the matter is that our church is not Christian. Christianize the church and you will stop war.

"We have all been trained in paganism and we have been training people in paganism. Therefore, you don't have any really Christian churches. You have churches with good aim and intentions—churches that think that sometime or other there will be Christians in the world—when we get to the millennium.

"Christianity is not something for an ideal world, but something for a world like this. If individuals can live in humane and Christian relations with each other, so can nations. Humanity is made up of nations, and the question is—are we humanized? A man is not humanized until he is Christianized. What we are contending for is the humanization of humanity. If we had been seeking God's righteousness, conditions would now be very different from what they are."—Ruen Thomas.

"If it should be required that by a super example of sacrifice, a nation should choose to perish and be wiped out by its foes rather than resort to arms, rather than cease from loving its enemy, then that nation would have achieved a unique and solitary glory in the annals of mankind, and would have written a name higher in human history than the most despotic military power that has ever prevailed on the rights of the human race."—Walsh, of Scotland.

"The anomaly of executing with solemn functions of the law the man who slays a single man being, while building monuments to whose skill and strategy slays thousands, will not continue forever. And the time will come when the finest public squares will be given not to the slayers of humanity, but to the helpers and saviours who give life rather than take it."—A. A. Berle.

"I believe that if any large nation like England or the United States would voluntarily disarm itself no other nation would thoughtlessly attack it. I hope that before long there may be a conference of nations to consider this question of disarmament, and I believe that France would join with England in its respect."—Herbert Burrows.

"What is it that is driving the heart and conscience of men to participate in this great world movement? It is not mere necessity, it is the Divine power in itself. The God whom we are to love by loving our very neighbor as ourselves, the God of nations, of national purposes and aspirations, the God who stirs and stirs the impulses of the human heart. It is God who is gathering up this hope of the nations for the understanding of one another, intelligence and sympathy with one another's life. Thus only, will justice among the nations do its work; and the result will come only through the urgent pressure sure of the Divine life, the word of God, on the part of man, applied on a grander scale than ever before, no longer merely dominating the heart and conscience of the individual, but securing possession of the great common national and international life."—Arthur L. Lilly, London.

A VISIT TO ACKWORTH SCHOOL, NINTH MO. 1792.—Our kind friend John Barlow took P. and me in a chaise to Ackworth, where with several other Friends, we arrived to teach the children were summoned to supper, went to look first at the girls, and here I saw not that I can do justice either to my feelings or the sight my eyes were saluted by; the silence that prevailed, the solidity of the mistresses and the children, and the ease of good meeting into an humble admiration, only to be expressed in such language the one-half was not told me.

The view of the boys afterwards was attended with similar feelings, and as our time was limited, it seemed best to desire the whole daily might be collected. Several Friends in Sheffield and other places were present. I believe all in some measure, young and old, bowed under an awful sense of the Divine presence, which indeed administered life and fitted thankful returns of praise to Him who never forgets worthy. This one season was worth any journey, and the feeling of sweet peace dwelt under the roof, accepted as a precious pledge to our minds of the Lord's gracious regard towards this extraordinary institution, which is surely stamped with holy approbation. I will, I doubt not, be a blessing to future generations.—Life of Mary Dudley.

The Christian should not look for rest in this life of the grave; his rest is to be in eternity. —Maria Fox.

THE INDIAN COMMITTEE OF PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

(Continued from page 99.)

William L. Stone, in his "Life and Times of Red Jacket," in commenting upon the speech above quoted, remarks, "The irregular and reckless border men, pressing them closely upon all sides, and setting every bad example possible before them, called themselves Christians. Those who were continually persuading the Indians to drunkenness, in order to cheat or plunder them before they were sober, were called Christians. And the rapacious land jobbers, who were seeking every opportunity of stripping them of their territory, and who were held in special abhorrence by Red Jacket and the more considerate of the chiefs, were likewise known to the Indians as Christians. The orator had pondered all these things; and being unable to discriminate between the nominal and the real Christian—or rather not understanding enough of the nature of Christianity to know that it was a religion of the heart, and that, no matter by what names they were called, those only were Christians who endeavored to live up to its principles—he could perceive nothing good in the system. So far as he could judge from such lights, and such examples, he saw nothing better in Christianity than in his own paganism."

In addition, however, to the stumbling effects produced by this class of irreligious persons, some of the more thoughtful Indians were confused by the teaching of the missionaries themselves. They were unable to believe the assertions that baptism with water was necessary to salvation; and that those who died without being thus baptized, went to punishment. On different occasions Friends were appealed to by such Indians to know their belief on this subject. It is recorded of our friend, Ebenezer Worth, who at a later period than that of which we are now treating, spent many years at Tunesassa, that he gave the following judicious answer to one such enquirer: an answer which appeared to be entirely satisfactory to the Indian, viz: "He thought all good white people and all good Indians would go to the good place, and that all bad white people and all bad Indians would go to the bad place, whether they were baptized or not."

The progress and condition of the Indians, both on the Cattaraugus and Allegheny Reservations, are referred to somewhat in detail in the Report of the Committee to the Yearly Meeting in 1818, from which the following paragraphs are taken:—

"The duty devolved on the Committee, appearing to require close attention, several of its members were deputed to visit the natives settled on the Allegheny and Cattaraugus Reservations, and our Friends residing among them. In the Eighth Month last [1817] four of the number proceeded to the respective settlements, and spent several weeks amongst them, in attending to the various services of their appointment. The substance of a part of their report will, it is thought, exhibit to the Meeting the state of the concern at that time.—Of Cattaraugus they observe, "The settlements of the Indians at this place are scattered about ten miles in length, many of which we have visited, and from the observation we have been enabled to make, it appears that they are gradually progressing in agriculture. They have more grain growing this season than usual—they have fenced in many fields, and laid out their farms more detached from each other than formerly. It is supposed that they have more than two hundred acres of corn growing, which generally looks well; beside an hundred acres under cultivation in spring wheat, oats, potatoes, and various vegetables. Their stock of cattle and horses is much increased; and divers of the Indians have enclosed lots of grass on which they gather hay for winter. Many of their women have made considerable progress in spinning. The last year several of them joined in making about seventy yards of linen cloth which was divided among them in proportion to the quantity of yarn that each had spun. Several pieces were also made by individuals, amounting to upwards of one hundred yards.

"The last winter, when the natives of this settlement were informed of the donation of provisions intended to be made to them by the Committee, they agreed that Friends should defer the distribution until the time of putting in their spring crops, and accordingly kept their families in the woods hunting until about that time; when the provisions, provided by Friends for this purpose, were divided amongst them, which enabled them to remain at home for a month or six weeks, and to attend to the putting into the ground of their spring crops. The potatoes they received were generally planted. There were fifty-seven families of Senecas and thirteen of Munsies, consisting of three hundred and ninety individuals, who partook of the donation; which, beside enabling them to increase their crops the present season, had otherwise a salutary effect."

Of the settlement at Tunesassa, they say: "There are seventy families on this reservation, all except four of whom have horn cattle, amounting in number to upwards of four hundred head. They have more horses than are of advantage to them. Their corn, oats and buckwheat promise to afford them a plentiful supply the ensuing winter. Several of them have raised spring wheat; and some of them are preparing to sow winter grain this fall. But although there seemed to be a disposition of improvement prevalent in various respects, yet it was evident that their attention lately being much drawn to the cutting and rafting of pine timber, has retarded their progress in agriculture. Many of their women continue spinning and manufacturing clothing.

"On visiting the school taught by one of our Friends, it was found that eighteen Indian lads attended, who generally had made satisfactory progress in learning. Several of them could read the English language. The cleanliness of their persons, the order observable in the school, and the attention they paid to their learning, afforded an encouraging prospect of the issue of the attempt making for their instruction."

It appears that the number of natives at this place who partook of the provisions furnished by the Committee in the time of scarcity last winter amounted to five hundred and twelve."

The Committee from whose report the above passages were taken consisted of Thomas Stewardson, Halliday Jackson, Joseph Warner and Israel W. Morris.

These Friends, in the course of their visit, were requested to give their attendance at a Council of the Chiefs at Cold Spring, whither accordingly they went, and were informed by the Indians they were in great distress; "that one of their people, who had lain sick for some time of a fever, was buried the day before—that previous to his death he had said he was bewitched, and charged one of their chiefs with having some agency in it, and that a brother of the deceased had threatened to take the life of the accused person, and they wished our interference, and stay among them until the matter was settled, lest they should not be able to meet the Council at Cattaraugus."

The Committee mention in their report, "After some conference among ourselves, we presented them with the following address, which was explained to them by Jacob Taylor.

"Brothers, we feel sympathy with you and the removal of a young man of your people by death. We are concerned to learn that some of his relations suppose his death to be the effect of witchcraft, and that one of them threatens to kill the person they suppose to be the cause of it.

"Now, brothers, you know his disorder was a fever, and that his understanding was much affected thereby.

"Brothers, we are sure that one man cannot, by witchcraft, produce such effects on another, and it is quite time you took measures to do away such notions among your people.

"Brothers, you must by all means prevent one killing another for such supposed, or even real, injuries, for if you do not, it seems likely you will before long be no people; only consider that where one man murders another, according to your custom, his relations will be likely to retaliate, and this may go on until there be few of you left.

"Brothers, you must put an entire stop to one killing another, either for this or other injuries. Where any are so wicked as to commit this act, the nation ought to take some decided measures to bring the murderer to justice.

"Brothers, for great offences the white people have a place where the offenders are confined for a very long time. No white man is at liberty to avenge his own cause, but if he has reason to apprehend injury from any one, we have persons who judge whether any injury is intended or not, and if they think there is, his friends are bound to see that it is not committed.

This advice appears to have been well received, and a few days afterwards four of these chiefs met them at Cattaraugus, and informed them "that immediately after our departure from Cold Spring, they had repaired to the house of the young man who had threatened to take the life of one of the chiefs; that they had reasoned with him on the inconsistency of his conduct, and fully explained to him the sentiments we had communicated on the subject; that on hearing them the young man expressed that although he had felt his mind very much disturbed at the loss of his brother, yet his mind now began to feel more composed and reconciled, and that he should take it under serious consideration, and he thought they might make themselves easy on his account. The chiefs further told us that they felt their minds relieved from the distress they had been under, and were very thankful that they had got the matter so settled as to be able to come over to Cattaraugus."

The Council held at Cattaraugus at this time was an important one, as the subject of dividing their land and holding it in severalty, was to be considered, and it was understood that no agreement upon the subject could be made without the consent of Red Jacket and some other of the chiefs residing on the Buffalo Reservation, who, it was expected, would be present on this occasion.

At this Council the Friends present addressed them in a communication previously reduced to writing, which was read; the most important paragraph of which was the following:

"Brothers, we are very desirous that such of the Indians as become industrious and make their improvements, might have some security that they would not be taken from them—but that they might descend to their children, and children's children—and with this motive we have proposed their running these two reservations into lots—that each family might have a lot secured to them in such a way that they would not sell nor lease it to white people—and if upon trial you find our proposal to be for the advantage of the Indians, you can divide such of the other reservations as you think proper."

Red Jacket made a short reply to this communication, in which he mentioned the fact that concerns of such importance must be acted upon by the whole nation, stating "that we must excuse them for feeling doubtful about it; they did not yet fully understand it, and requested some further explanation of it."

(To be continued.)

A CRISIS IN CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION.—No thoughtful observer can contemplate the past, or seek to penetrate the future, without recognizing the extreme gravity of the crisis through which Christian civilization is passing. The stupendous material developments which mark the age are commonly accepted as the sufficient evidences of progress, and do by their magnificence dazzle the thoughtless. But it is these very phenomena which terrify the earnest soul.

That there is no life in organized Christianity is not of course to be maintained, but it is our conviction that at the present moment the spirit of materialism prevails throughout the Christian churches to an ominous and perilous degree. It may conceal itself under much outward prosperity and under much organizing zeal, it lurks behind orthodox formula, and conformity to accepted moral codes, but everywhere it saps spiritual power and destroys the freshness of spiritual life.—J. S. Rowntree, in Present Day Papers.

The prophet must never look for an easy life. His word ever runs counter to the current of the age, to the popular tenor of thought; the powers that be never comprehend the invisible forces of the Universe.

A Short Roughness for a Long Comfort.

Request is made for this and one or two other extracts from a summer lecture delivered by a Friend on land supposed to have been formed by ancient glacial action, and where the highways are now in process of being macadamized:—

"There is a story of Mahomet standing in view of a mountain and commanding it to approach him. But at length he had to say, 'the mountain will not come to the man, then the man must go to the mountain.'" In the case of our home-land, the evidence is that the mountain has come to the man. For coming down hither from the Bay shore amidst the sand and rocks, I could remember the saying of our geologists that these were dumped here, like most of the township's land, by glaciers coming from the mountains of the Granite State; and could well fancy that some of those icebergs did not grind past Plymouth Rock in vain, or fail to leave some kindred grit in this further soil. And when, on a less mountainous scale, we are seeing in these summer days the dispensation of the stone crusher and the sifting of fragments down from smaller stones to smallest grains and dust, and by the sweat of their brow Romans earning their bread in building a Roman road, and the mighty tribulation of the steam-roller compacting the strata together and smoothing out the highway for the generations following, we might again reflect how the mills of God also in His historical preparations, 'grind slowly but they grind exceeding small,' to prepare a way where there seemed to be no way; and a times to break up and roughen our persons ways for a short space that He may re-form them in an everlasting kindness.

"That spirit which is symbolized in Plymouth Rock and in the everlasting hills is spread over here for the groundwork of our old homes of character; much crushing tribulation he worked 'patience, and patience experiences and experience hope;' and upon Himself the living Rock of Divine Revelation, cleft and bruised for us, prepared for and speaking to our condition, Christ hath built His church. These things are an allegory. For not far outward mountains descends our spiritual he or heritage; parents even from Plymouth cannot give grace, but only habits to the children. 'That which is born of the flesh flesh,' and the succession of the Spirit is from the Spirit; so that we take up the harp with David, revise our vision and version, and say 'I will lift up mine eyes unto the mountain From whence shall my help come? My help cometh from the Lord, who made heaven a earth.'"

The disciples of John acted wisely who they buried the body of their leader, "a wrent and told Jesus.'" Let us seek the shelter of His bosom, and weep out our heart-ache there. The heart may be too sore and healed for words, but tears will not be unheeded misunderstood by Him. He will calm a strengthen us, and enable us to say, even through our tears, "The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.'" He hath but taken His own will He gave, and we shall ever praise Him for His gift, and rest assured that our treasure which are His also, are safe with Him.

Society of Friends and the Negro Population of Philadelphia.

Since the time of Anthony Benezet's "School for Black People and their Descendants" the Society of Friends has had a place more or less influential with the colored population of the city. The great procession of colored people that followed the funeral train of Anthony Benezet to the grave in 1784, like a similar procession that followed Thomas Shippen at a later date, attested this influence most strikingly. Between 1844 and 1866 eight hundred pupils in all were instructed in Benezet's (the present Raspberry Street) School. In 1850 the negro population was 8000, so that it is not to conclude that at that time the Society of Friends had nearly the whole negro population somewhat directly under its influence.

Since 1850 two lines of development that have changed the whole character of the problem have come into active operation. The first of these is the extension of public school facilities until every negro child in the city is not only entitled to a seat in school, but the compulsory law requires attendance with a fixed measure of regularity from all. Unless this is not a matter without some measure of disadvantage, but the gain to the city in giving them as children a contact with the white race in its beneficent and nurturing function, far more than as a corrective agent, eclipses entirely the minor disadvantages of race prejudice and persecution, that may be charged to the public system.

The other line of development, however, is of even greater moment than the changed school conditions in modifying the character of the whole problem. Since 1850, but especially the last two decades, a great immigration of negroes to the city has taken place. The negro population is now put down as 60,000, nearly double what it was even a decade ago. Compared with the 8000 negroes of 1850, the vast majority of whom had had some connection with Benezet School, this great army is such a startling element, so little tied to any traditions of the past, that it presents difficulties that have so far baffled the most earnest students of the situation.

Probably Talcott Williams has made as careful a study of the case as any one in Philadelphia. His conclusions announced at a public convention last winter need not be recited in length, but in common with most who have dealt with the subject, he emphasizes the importance of a right leadership from amongst colored men and women as the only adequate final escape from ignorance and degradation. Such leaders naturally enough may be secured up in any walk of life, but in the main the negro ministers and teachers must be trained on to mould a public sentiment in the city that will insure a fair measure of progress from year to year without the present means of retrogression.

The Society of Friends can take no active part in training colored ministers. It is, however, a serious question whether they are not as a Society a distinct call to the city to the active ministers in the city. In a few known instances worthy members of the Society are in close touch with such ministers and are making no small contribution to the solution of the race problem in this way. What might not a rightly called and anointed committee do in an advisory capacity for the whole ministerial body of the city? The colored ministers need such help and doubtless would be ready to accept the counsels of such a wise committee in the spirit in which the help would be offered.

With the teachers, however, the Society of Friends has had an important place for at least sixty years. In one Philadelphia public school there are five excellent teachers who owe their training to the Institute for Colored Youth. Who can estimate the effect on the city at large of the dozen or more such colored teachers? One does not need to magnify the teacher's office. It was magnified by Him who in the flesh was the Great Teacher, and in the spirit remains to be the real teacher's unending source of strength. A moment's thought, however, would convince any one that a sufficient multiplication of teachers like the best type amongst us—like Booker T. Washington for example, would almost certainly meet all the difficulties of the vexed negro problem. What then is the needed type? The case has been restated so often that we have grown somewhat callous to the actual need of it.

That excellent woman, Fanny J. Coppin, who served the cause herself so faithfully for many years, had a right conception of the needed type. She saw clearly that the domain of knowledge added to the average negro environment failed to make the type. A training of the hand and a training in home life are more essential really for negro or for white than the intellectual equipment, although the three need to be brought into harmonious relationship to give any satisfactory realization of the type. This is the conception that carried the work, over which she presided so long, to a farm in the country. The teachers trained in this re-organized work should be able in turn to train their pupils how to live and how to apply intelligence to their living.

Graduate enough teachers from such a school to fill the positions open to negro teachers in the city and the Society of Friends has gone far toward restoring its old time touch of influence with the vastly increased negro population. If added to this there can be some real help extended to the negro ministers the doors of influence will be as much open as we can expect.

The hope of influencing a large circle of colored people through a right kind of school is by no means visionary. The work at Christiansburg, Va., proves this. Friends will do well to continue their active nurture of this school, and to watch opportunities to establish centres like it when they are certainly demanded.

Let us be sure however, to have the teachers to meet the demands of as many schools as possible. Economy dictates expenditure in training the leaders. In no way so certainly are dollars multiplied. J. HENRY BARTLETT.

EVERY serious and thinking man has his religion of some kind or another. Religion is "that voice of the deepest human experience." And no matter how much we may differ with other people's religion, there is one thing sure—their feelings for what they consider to be sacred are entitled to respect.

A HELPFUL TOUCH.

As we meet and touch each day
Let many travelers on our way
Lay each such transient contact bare
A glorious, helpful ministry;
The contact of the soil and seed,
Each giving to the other's need;
Each helping on the other's best,
And blessing each, as well as best.

—Selected.

Schism.

Dr. Owen says: "The departing of any man or men from any particular Church, as to the communion peculiar to such Church, is nowhere in Scripture called schism, nor is it so in the nature of the thing itself; but is a thing to be judged and receive a title according to the circumstances of it."

We understand by the nature of schism, division or divisions in a Church, not a difference between one Church and another. There were schisms in the Church at Corinth, but those Christians who differed from the Church of Corinth, whether in the Church at Philippi, or the Church at Ephesus, were not considered schismatics. A schismatic is one who either makes a division in a church or who is party to a division. And when the dominant party of a Church as a society suppresses the rights and privileges of the minority, to the aggravation of schism and rupture, the true schismatics are they who force to schism, and those wronged are martyrs, not schismatics. The charge of schism can be real and Scriptural only when one or all of three reasons is violated—apostasy, irregularity of walking, and professed sensuality.

Then there is a schism which God himself justifies. When a Church repudiates, both in doctrine and worship, its own articles of belief, and the worshipper, being aware of this, withdraws himself from that Church, his attitude is justifiable according to the Scripture (2 Timothy iii: 5; 2 Thessalonians iii: 6). The apostle further advises it when he says: "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you." Here schism is justified with a "Thus saith the Lord!"

But ecclesiastics brand him a schismatic who does not submit to their authority! A person might be a good Christian and show by his life and works that he has the Spirit of Christ, but if he walk not in "subjection to obedience," he is nothing short of a schismatic. Neither Christian character nor piety has any consideration whatever if one choose another than the organized authority. It is always the cry: "Come back to the fold and end the sin of schism." This is what they say, but what they mean is plainly seen: "Come back under our authority."

Truly he is narrow and prejudiced who never looks above denominationalism. But he who, like Joseph, whose branches run over the wall, sees a Church universal which consists of elect believers, in whom is found the same spirit which was in Christ, uniting each member to the great Head of the Church, and through Him to one another, he recognizes that this is the Catholic (i. e. universal) Church, comprehending all individuals who have vital union with Jesus Christ, of whatever denomination, and the alliance of Christendom, Jerusalem above. —Selected from Episcopal Recorder.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

War Notes.

JOSIAH W. LEEES.

At the annual re-union of an organized society called "The Medal of Honor Legion of the United States," held in the Ninth Month at Atlantic City, Admiral Melville, in responding to the toast, "The Navy," exultingly referred to the friendship existing between America and Great Britain, and (as reported) added: "Let other nations combine if they will. Standing together we can defy the world." It had been hoped by the opponents of the fighting method of determining international differences, that the amicable rapprochement of the Anglo-Saxon peoples meant a benevolent combination tending to the peace of the whole world. Unhappily, this Admiral seemingly does not interpret it so. Making common cause with the advocates of the much mooted "billion dollar navy," his language is of similar tone to that of the prize-fighter. It is to be hoped that the Government will disavow any sympathy with the defiant sentiment.

A type-written letter received by the undersigned upwards of a month ago, refers to certain circulars entitled "Who's Who," "International Peace and Arbitration," "World's Order of Merit." These seem to stand for the peace complement of the war company alluded to in the first sentence of the preceding paragraph. Cogitating upon the theme of this honor claiming and honor getting, in "the services," one's mind reverted to the fact that during the recent Spanish-American War, and in the course of the several years thereafter, the names and claims of pretty much all the admirals, generals and other prominent officers, became the subject of contention for "honors" on the part of their respective rival supporters. Oh, the charges, counter-charges, recriminations, envyings, jealousies, heart-burnings! Newspapers, magazines, the departments, the halls of Congress, in all these the contests waxed hotly. Nowhere was heard a whisper of the Lord's declaration, "I receive not honor from men." And again, "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" So it seemed best that the letter of inquiry as to Who's Who in the propaganda of peace, and all questions of honor and merit presumptively arising therefrom, might properly be left unanswered.

A VOICE FROM HOME.

AN INCIDENT OF THE RUSSO-TURKISH WAR.

On a battle-field of the Russo-Turkish War of 1877, there was found by the gatherers-in of the wounded, the dying and the dead, a flaxen-headed man, whose hands, rigid in death, clasped a crumpled little letter from his child at home to her "own dear papa." The pathetic incident was told at the time by G. L. P. in the columns of Temple Bar. The anguish of the home severance, the horror and misery of the battle-fields of this present Russo-Japanese War of 1904, repeatedly alluded to in the dispatches as simply indescribable, repeat ten thousand times the single harrowing tale. Thus, a peasant neighbor of Tolstoi, drafted from the Reservists, wrote the following day to the Count, whom he begs to console and counsel his agonized wife and their four children—"When we, these two thousand satisfactory individuals [excepted Reservists], were driven from the military commander to the barracks, along the road spread out for almost a verger stood a crowd of relatives, mothers and wives with infants in arms, and if you had only heard and seen how they clasped the fathers, husbands, sons, and hanging round their necks wailed hopelessly! Generally I behaved in a reserved way and could restrain my feelings, but I could not hold out, and I also wept." Following is G. L. P.'s poem:

In his wind-shaken tent the soldier sits;
Beside him hares an oil lamp smoky;
Whose dim light gleams and flickers on the sheet
Of rustling paper that, with eager eyes
And heart, intent he reads. Now with a smile
The flaxen-headed sunburnt face lights up—
A smile that in the smiling breeds a pain
Within his yearning heart; the gentle hand
That those sweet loving words have traced, will be Ever again in his protecting clasp
Enfold it? Who can tell! He can but kiss
With wild intensity, the page that hand
Hath touched. Each line, each word read and re-read,
At last there is no more. With swimming eyes
He looks, and drinks her name into his soul.
Yet see those lines, with pencil widely ruled,
Where largely sprawl big letters helplessly;
What do they say, those baby characters,
So feebly huge?
"Loved Papa,
When will you come home again?
My own dear Papa!"

As he reads this the tent to him grows darker,
His strong hand trembles, and the hot tears burn
In his blue eyes, and blur the straggling words.
What need to see? The words are stamped upon
His heart, and his whole soul doth feel them there.
The wind on gusty wing sweeps by, and lo,
With its wild voice, his child's sweet treble mingles
In accents faintly clear:
"Loved Papa,
When will you come home again?
My own dear Papa!"

And now his head is bowed into his hands.
His brave heart for a moment seems to climb
Into his throat and choke him. Hark! what sound
Thus sharply leaps among, and slays the sad
Wind-voices of the autumn night, with shrill
And sudden blast? The bugle call "To arms!"
And startled sleepers, at its fierce appeal
Half dreaming clutch their swords, and gasping wake,
How many soon to sleep again—in death!
And on that father's heart the pealing cry
Strikes cold as ice, though soldier there's none braver,

For still above the bugle's thrilling breath
That pleading child-voice sweetly calls:
"Loved Papa,
When will you come home again?
My own dear Papa!"

Across the rough hillsides the light of dawn
Doth coldly creep, with ruthless touch revealing
All that by darkness had been hid, and there,
Among the stalwart forms that stiffening lie
Upon the blood-soaked ground, where they lie thickest,
There is one found with flaxen hair and beard
Dark dyed with gore, a bullet in his heart!
A crumpled paper in his hand was clutched,
Gaining the cold lips the rigid hand did press
Some childish writing by his life-blood stained.
What are the words? One scarce can read them now:
"Loved Papa,
When will you come home again?
My own dear Papa!"

GLADSTONE AND THE TRANSVAAL.

When, in 1881, war broke out between the British and the Boers, Gladstone, then prime minister, convinced that his country's course was wrong, withdrew from what he perceived to be but a war of annexation—and did so, despite the defeat of the British at Majuba Hill. For this manifestation of true Christian statesmanship, Gladstone was severely blamed by many of his countrymen. Later, as we know, the other plan was tried. The Boers were conquered. But now general disaffection and unrest prevail in the Transvaal over the semi-slavery policy of importing Coolies to till the vacated fields and do other necessary labor. Further, as collaterally resulting: Although New South Wales for a hundred years had possessed neither an army nor a navy, yet when Great Britain called upon her colonies for help in the Boer war, then was the first cannon made there. The result in New Zealand, it is reported, has been to make military drill an almost universal part of school education. Great Britain turned aside from the providential opportunity of 1881 (when the following lines were written to be our own great hurt and the world's loss. To-day, the British Weekly, in reviewing Morley's Life of Gladstone, says concerning the secret of that statesman's power: "He never pondered to what is little and low and mean among men." He believed that there was that in the British spirit which would answer the heavenly call, and he was there to speak it, the friend of freedom and righteousness and peace."

A way despised he calmly trod—
A way by rulers rarely known—
With grateful hearts we can but own
He brought a nation nearer God.

We say it nobly Christian is
When youth can unresentful brook
The undeserv'd threat and look
And for a blow give back a kiss.

Yet how can we this law of love
Commend to those of tender years,
Whilst, taking counsel of our fears,
We fail as men its worth to prove?

But when, intent upon the right,
We see a Gladstone hold his way
In spite of pride, O then we say
It braver is to yield than fight.

It happens thus when men are true,
And guided by thinspeaking Word
Do simplest service for their Lord,
That thousands reap a blessing too.

Hence, not alone shall Britons feel
The upward impulse of this deed:
It reacheth every nation's need,
"Twill help for aye the common weal.

J. W. L.

NO OTHER GOSPEL.—The preaching of the Founder of Christendom, who taught the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, undeniably was the great awakening of spiritual life in the world. A world without spiritual life, or religion, as the embodiment of the life and regulated by social science solely its temporal interests, is perfectly conceivable. But the religion which should take the place of vital Christianity is not. Renan says of the words addressed to the woman of Samari that they are the essence of religion, and that if there are intelligent beings in other planet and they are religious, this and none other their religion must be.

The revelations of the physical world come to us through the action of high scientific intellects. Was it not possible that a revelation of the moral world should come to us through a character of unique excellence, benevolence and beauty, preserved in its simplicity and purity as was that of Jesus.—Golden Smith.

How ungrateful is the human heart! How much more disposed to dwell on little circumstances, that are, in any degree contrary to its wishes, than to number with thankfulness and humility, the great, the innumerable blessings of which it is the daily and hourly receiver!

Old Home Week Reflections.

These outward charms, we say, are enough draw us again hither, whether pilgrims or anglers. But how long could it seem a me-land to any who could exalt it only as a d "where all but man is blest?" Home is not consist in these outward advantages, me is found only in the inward dispositions its members. It takes another atmosphere in peaceful zephyrs and tonic air to inspire mind with the sense of home. It takes atmosphere of love, confidence in each other harmony of heart met with in hovel or man, and a good conscience brought into it by selves as visitors, to make a home for any nate or guest. We can conceive the society heaven itself as an uneasy situation and no here, even indeed a torment, to a visitor imre in heart. It is the spirit that we find our native town, saying "we seek not yours t"—and the spirit that we bring here, t must combine to make the town, or any use, a home. Primarily the secret of home the secret condition of a man's own heart, himself. Is he reconciled to God—is he home with the Lord? Then he does not k for home anywhere, even in uncongenial roundings. If we are out of harmony with rying else, let us awake to the discovery it is because we are out of harmony with l.

And if it be the home-stayers that are to ke the home-comers have a home worth ing to, it is equally the home-leavers who st leave an inspiration behind to make the e nicer. Go away where you will, someg of you always stays behind, and when come back to enjoy the result, you enjoy selves. What man ever enjoys himself, ass it is a good self? And the happiest is the baptized self, sunk out of sight in ist's spirit of sacrifice for the obedience ith and the good of others.

Behold, of some home-leavers, something k has stayed behind, impressed upon my boyhood's wonder, if not character. I d on still to a sense of the dignity, upness and clear judgment in few words, one who prospered by the live-oak industry; inspiration of the example of his son that turned my ambition towards higher school; the senatorial presence and personality of neighbor, called a "gentleman of the old pol," whose wife as a mother in Israel upl his home circle in lofty ideals, and whose pbling language to us academy boys have died; the profound impressiveness, depth, imity and unflinching moral standard of minister who seemed to us as verly a d of God; the faithful, sympathetic and ulating instructions of one now looked k upon as my intellectual father in the idemy; the tender grace, inspiring gift in ry, and saintly ripeness for glory of her y was styled the sweet singer of our home- ;—many more you could mention, and I d like to name, who, as home-leavers a better country have left to us an equally ble legacy of character. Whatever goes our lives from these, or into other lives ours, save as its sin is removed, goes in ver.

Yonder burial ground, combined with the e-yard extended into every state and the e-yard of the sea which has not yet given up its dead, suggests to us that the town-ship's church triumphant far outnumber its church militant; let us reflect that we are the militia of that church militant. Ye are God's militia whom He calls out to be soldiers of the cross, the weapons of whose warfare are not carnal, but commissioned to bring in every thought as prisoners of the Holy War, to the obedience of Christ. Farmers, ye are God's husbandry; mechanics, ye are God's building; fishermen, Christ would promote you to fishers also of men; housekeepers, ye are set for ministers of a sanctuary; husbands as house-bands and wives as weavers of home-bands, ye are set in your lot for queens and kings, and priests unto God. As laborers togeth with Him, we beseech you not to receive His grace in vain. It brings salvation. It has appeared to all men. It appears to you as your daily bread and quickening wine of life and teaches how we ought to live.

Notes in General.

Yellow leaves and autumn wind,
For summer days have flown,
And now there is a harvesting
Of that which once was sown.
Here men together reap their grain;
Here men reap theirs alone;
And many there are who reap the grain
And bind the golden sheaves,
And many there are whose arms are full
Of dead and yellow leaves.

Paley's "Evidences" has been pronounced obsolete from the pulpit of Westminster Abbey. Canon Duckworth compares the book to a piece of "medieval artillery."

Men of the literary class in China are said to have spent last year $250,000 for books and papers that teach the wisdom of Christendom. The most of this literature was of missionary origin.

Authorities at the Vatican are especially pleased because King Victor Emmanuel, in naming his son Prince of Piedmont, instead of Prince of Rome, indicated his desire to conform to the wishes of the pope.

It is estimated that one hundred Mormons are doing missionary work in the Eastern States, and seventeen hundred Mormon elders are busy proselyting outside of Utah. They promise every man land and a home, and are making converts among the middle classes.

Professor H. G. Mitchell delivered an address at the opening of the School of Theology of Boston University in which he pointed out that the qualities of the ancient prophet of Israel are all required by the modern minister. These, he said, are breadth of sympathy, long continued preparation and profound convictions.

"The Boston Herald" has distributed in Worcester within four weeks three tons of Bibles, and every Bible has nailed a new reader for "The Boston Herald" for the next eighteen months." We have heard of Bibles being given as prizes in Sabbath-schools and day schools, but never before as a premium for a daily newspaper.

Edward Everett Hale, in a plea for money to build a schoolhouse for Jane Sharp, who is the accomplished head of the education of women in Liberia, says: "I think that such enterprises as Mrs. Sharp's promise more for the black continent than all the Congo missions of the king of Belgium, or all the cotton planting of the emperor of Germany."

For many years no one has been more prominent in the peace movement in America than Albert K. Smiley, who has given much time and money to the cause, and entertains yearly the American Conference at his home at Lake Mohonk in the Catskills. His reception, when called upon to speak for America, was enthusiastic, says the Boston Transcript.

THE SPIRIT MORE TO BE REGARDED THAN THE MACHINERY.—The temptation is common to ecclesiastics, lay and clerical, in every clime and in every century, the temptation to give "means" rather than "ends" the main place in our thoughts; the temptation to lose the true proportion between large matters and small, the temptation to take a petty view of what life's issues really are.—Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

Edward Everett Hale, who was greeted with enthusiasm at the Boston ministers' meeting at Pilgrim Hall, which was held in the interests of the International Peace Congress, called, in his address, upon the churches to make it a religious duty to see that the congress succeeds. S. B. Capen, in a telling presentation of the subject, showed how the abolishment of war "would enable the nations to advance rapidly in philanthropy, religion and commerce."

A commission of eminent American ecclesiastics, delegated by the supreme patriarch of the Armenian Church, is on its way to this country to appeal for action in concert with the chief Powers to compel the sultan of Turkey to cease persecuting the Armenians. The commission was received cordially by the dignitaries of the Church of England, and Lord Lansdowne, head of the Foreign Office, has given them a respectful hearing. Here the commission expects to see the President and Secretary Hay.

A. E. Dunning, editor of the Congregationalist, who has recently been traveling in Russia, says of the church edifices there that in the value of their treasures they rival the palaces. "St. Isaac's Church," one of the finest in the world, built during the last century at a cost of over $14,000,000, is constantly adding to its treasures. "Icons framed in gold studded with precious stones are abundant, and many single jewels given as votive offerings cost each what would be a fortune to most of the poor people who prostrate themselves before the shrines."

A TRIBUTE TO SENATOR HOAR'S MEMORY, BY EDWARD EVERETT HALE.—That sense of the real presence of Almighty God which gives light and life to every word of the [true] prophet revealed itself in the daily life of our dear friend. . . . And this inspiration made him so tolerant of the opinions of other men, tolerant of what was said, tolerant of what was done already, if only he was sure that the man was following the leading of the Holy Spirit, that a man was doing what he thought right or saying what he thought was true—that was enough for him.

It was at Moukden, where a battle between Russians and Japanese is imminent, that the gospels were translated first for the Koreans. This was thirty years ago. Now Christians there number about three thousand, and in all of Korea about thirty thousand. Almost all of the work among Koreans has been carried on by Americans, it being only a few years since Scotch churches began work there. When the war reached Gensan some time since, a great religious revival was on, maintained by American Methodist evangelists. People were excited, not about the war but about

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 22, 1904.

No. 15.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

scriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

Month from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

the Work of Christ with Christ Left Out.

of the trumpet give an uncertain sound, shall prepare himself for PEACE? Many have been ringing in the past week, if always with the trumpeting of peace, with trumpeting for peace. Some have taken of peace as if it were the cessation of a condition devoutly indeed to be wished, such were but a hollow peace. We might well call silence worship—when silence is a room in which worship may be placed. Wars may stop—but though they cease to-day and that be all, war remains. Peace is a word not confirmed, we will not say that wars cease, but we will say, till war is extinguished. Its spirit must be eradicated from branch, but root and branch, from the heart of man. And then, when war utterly ceases the heart, what is the condition left? Is that Peace? The mere vacuum is a condition for peace to fill, but is peace itself. If the Living Peace do not fill the void, the unclean spirit may soon return sevenfold.

Peace is not a blank, or an inert void, Peace is Life, a quickening Spirit, a vivifying love, full of mercy and good fruits, a love on the alert and love in action to the peace repaired and bright, in obedience to its living Prince. For a state of peace men consists in the practice of the divine will towards them, and peace with God and harmony kept alive by conforming with will.

Therefore we would trumpet the certain word of the Living Word—no peace of death, greater peace than that of expediency or of a truce of damage, even the peace of life professed from Him who is our life. Many may have missed the sounding of his name through the trumpets. The Conference, considering its mixture of elements in religion, went as far as it could, in some instances being notably, and beyond former precedent, Christian in its doctrines of Peace. Still we have wished that in the midst of so much that has been so sincerely and so acceptably said on things and effects, or transcending all the inquiries, "What is our Peace?" there had had appeared more of the inspired courage to ask "Who is our Peace?" and more of the gospel answer to declare of Christ crucified that "He is our Peace, who has made both one, and has broken down the middle wall of partition between us!"

Between whom? While the text may advert to an international separation, primarily the separation is between us and God. He in Christ reconciling us by his death so as to put away that dividing wall of sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and our Saviour, in his love made sin for us, so taking the place of the middle wall of separation as to be the medium of union between us and God, He is our Peace, and our covenant of Peace and its Author, to us as many as will receive Him. Under a sense that God so loved us, we find ourselves loving one another—every heart and every soul the wages of whose sin He tasted. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor. Therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" of Peace. Christ is neighborly peace, and the international peace provided for us. No one ever truly preaches Christ without preaching peace in all its applications, whether he think of that universal scope of Christ or not. An agent of Christ and his spirit anywhere is building more wisely than he knows. And all these peace conferences and turnings toward arbitrations and international tribunals, are but outcroppings of Christ's secret leavening the world; and it has seemed to us there was more of Christ in the heart exercises of some of these ethical philosophers over Peace, than they with their intellects give Him credit for. The absence of his literal name may not prevent the presence of his spiritual name. His kingdom is "not in word, but in power." And while in their avoidance of seeming cant, it is the universal and saving life of Christ that they apprehend as the foundation of Peace on earth, we will not discourage them though they call Him by as many other names as the early Friends did, or as many as He named for himself.

Making all these allowances for those who are doing and saying the best they know, the experienced disciple of the gospel of Peace nevertheless misses something, and that very often all that is vital to Peace, where there is but a hazy recognition of that World-Reconciler by whom he has received the atonement. Determined to know nothing among men but Christ Jesus and Him crucified, and not otherwise, will the apostles of Peace on earth speak, not merely in enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power. The trumpet that obviously lacks Christ and Him crucified, lacks the certain sound of the living word of the living Peace. The cause is his. Effects of war have been known for thousands of years and the utmost horrors of these effects have never proved sufficient to abolish war. Indeed it is for these effects that battles are executed. They come from the heart of the natural man. All the powder rammed into cannons has been so much black hatred; every projectile so much dire death sent forth from the heart of man to the hearts of brother men. "There's nothing in the cannon that's bad, but the man in the cannon," said Charles Wagner last week to school children. The conversion of man to the spirit of Christ, that is the only sure peace to be labored for, and in doing it we have little need to say peace, for it speaks Peace itself, it carries the peace of Christ with it, else it is not conversion. The foundation of peace standeth sure, having this seal, "the Lord knoweth them that are his;" and "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his."

We hail all efforts to remove or mitigate effects of war, to stave off particular wars, to diminish armaments, to create, by cessations of wars, peace even as a blank where we cannot plant it as a principle. All these expedients, and all shrinking from wars on expediency are incalculably a greater mercy than the entering into armed conflict, which is internationalism let loose. Humanitarian grounds for peace are by no means to be despised. There is a measure of Christ in them. Concerned men speaking often one to another in conference for the cause of peace serve to swell the volume of public opinion against the crime of war. And may the unparalleled slaughter of the present awful war serve to shame mankind of warfare forever, speed the progress of the principle of arbitration, become a mighty factor in preparing the way of the Lord for Peace, as wrath of man overruled to praise Him, and the remainder of wrath may He speedily restrain. "Who is our peace?" more than "what is our peace?" is the question for Christians. And may their faithfulness to their Prince demonstrate that Christ crucified is our peace, and the world's peace, who shall make Satan's belligerents one, and break down sin, the one great wall of separation between them as men or nations, and between us and the Father. Christ crucified, the wisdom of God and the power of God and the love of God—Christ in the individual is the one Word of that trumpet of Peace that gives the certain sound.

As the above goes to press, the following contribution from the State of Maine comes to us, containing references some of which are confirmatory of the foregoing remarks:

"Rev. vi: 4. BE NOT DECEIVED. 'The way of Peace have they not known.' Peace cometh not by agreement. "Jer. xxx:5, 7, 8; Rom. xi: 26; Rev. vii: 14; Zech. xiii: 9; Luke xxi: 26; Isaiah viii: 9 to 14; Jer. vii: 15; Rom. iii: 9, 17. Isa. xlviii: 1, 22; Jer. vi: 14; Ezek. vii: 25; 1 Thes. v: 1, 2, 3; Isa. xxxiii: 7 to 15; xxvi: 20, 21; Jer. xii: 12."

The Atonement.

The fact that sacrifice and suffering for the sake of others is the law of human life, and that by the death of Christ the destructive power of sin has been done away with for all who are attached to Him by faith, gains fresh evidence for all thoughtful men. "Help Thou my unbelief." It is an inexpressible comfort to the weak brother to be able to stake everything, not on any moral result in himself [while not without deep moral result], but upon the fact that Jesus has lived and died for him. This redemptive process is not merely individual; it extends to the race of mankind and to the whole constitution of things in which we live. "God sent His Son . . . that the world through Him might be saved; . . . by Him to reconcile all things to Himself, . . . whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven." The atonement is, (under Christ's Spirit), the stimulus to every effort for social regeneration, for freedom, for international peace, for the bending of all the forces of nature to their proper object—the bringing in of the kingdom of Christ. The more this positive and far-reaching aspect of the atonement is dwelt upon, the less likely we shall be to fall back into the puerile or immoral explanations which have obscured it, and the more powerful will it become for the work of Christian expansion and Christian unity.—Freemantle.

FREQUENT living confession of Christ is not only a bulwark against worldliness and thoughtlessness, but a positive means of grace.—Francis E. Clark.

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 113.)

The Indians, having spent two days in conference among themselves, finally agreed to allow the Allegheny Reservation to be divided into separate lots, as an experiment.

Their reply on this subject was made by Pollard, who was also one of the chiefs of the Buffalo Creek Reservation, and contained the following:

"Brothers: Your advice is to divide our land and to hold it for the benefit of ourselves and our children. You think it best to run it off into lots. We have considered it all round, and we will tell you, brothers, what our conclusion is. When any person wishes to try an experiment, they make a beginning to see how it will do. We have agreed to let the Allegheny Reservation all be run out into lots. It belongs to the whole of the Seneca Nation. We are all consenting to it. That reservation we wish should all be run out into lots and be for the whole of the Nation. We don't want it parted from the rest, but be all included in one deed and signed by the whole.

"Brothers: We wish you not to think hard that we have not agreed to run out more of our land. At Cattaraugus they seem perfectly easy. They have met with no difficulty yet about their reservation—they only wish to have the boundary lines run over again, and marked anew lest the white people should encroach on them."

In accordance with the understanding arrived at in the Council held at Cattaraugus in 1817. Friends agreed to obtain the services of a competent surveyor, to run the lines of the Allegheny Reservation, and of the individual allotments, and Cotton Fletcher, who had been employed by the Holland Land Company, was engaged for this service. He began operations on the 5th of Eighth Month, 1818, in company with some of the Indians who were favorable to the measure. In a few days, however, Corn Planter, who was unwilling to have the land divided, came to the Reservation and a general Council on the subject was held, the result of which was a conclusion not to have the lines run, and a request that Jonathan Thomas, one of the Friends then residing at Tunnessa, should order the surveyor to desist and depart from their land. The work was thus suddenly ended. In explanation of their conduct in this matter, the principal chiefs on the Allegheny Reservation addressed a communication to the Committee, in which they desire that they would obtain from the President of the United States an instrument in writing, having the seal of the United States, and also something from the Governor of New York, and forward them that they might see them. If this were done, they think it would be a satisfaction to the Six Nations, and that those who are opposed would not make so many objections, which tend to unsettle their minds respecting having their land run out into lots.

In compliance with the desire of the Indians that the views of the President of the United States should be obtained upon the subject of the division of their lands, four members of the Committee had an interview with President

Monroe, which resulted in the preparation of a letter to the Seneca Indians living on the Allegheny Reservation, which is as follows:—

My Red Children: I am very glad to learn by your friends Samuel Bettle, Thomas Wistar Thomas Stewardson, and John Cook, that you no longer live in that miserable and destitute condition which you once did. They say that most of you have become sober and industrious; that you have got good houses to live in; and that by cultivating the ground, and raising cattle, you have now plenty to eat: this is to me, very good news, as I shall always rejoice to hear of the happiness of my red children.

My Red Children: You cannot become civilized till you have advanced one step further. You know that among my white children, each one has his own land separate from all others; you ought to do the same; you ought to divide your land among families, in lots sufficiently large to maintain a family according to its size.

Your friends the Quakers would, no doubt enable you to make a just and equitable division. By thus dividing your land, each one could then say, This is mine; and he would have inducements to put good houses on it, and improve his land by cultivation.

My Red Children: I have annexed the sea of the United States to this talk, so that you may know that it comes from your father,

PRESIDENT JAMES MONROE,

15th January, 1819. To the Seneca Indians living on the Allegheny Reservation.

The diversity of views among the Indians in regard to the division of their lands continued and prevented any further attempt at the time to carry it into effect. The continuance of the school was also much opposed by the party desirous of retaining their old customs and at times the Friends at Tunnessa felt much embarrassed in their efforts to assist them, being desirous on the one hand not to disappoint those Indians who were sensible of the value of school learning, and desirous that their children should have the benefit of it, and thus be better qualified to conduct business and protect themselves from imposition; and on the other hand, that they should not assist in the formation of two distinct parties among them, opposed to each other, and thus to a certain extent frustrate the object of their labors among them, in elevating the people as a whole.

In the Third Month, 1821, Joseph Elkinton wrote that it was a time of great commotion among them, in consequence of the divided feeling on these subjects: that the party opposed to improvements had succeeded in getting the school discontinued until a general Council should be held in Buffalo, and had also proposed to the other part of the nation to remove to some other Reservation, or else have the Allegheny Reservation divided in two parts, so that those "who wanted schools and adhered to the Quakers should be on one part, and those satisfied with Indian custom should remain on the other, for they believed their land would certainly be taken by the Quakers for the services they rendered the Indians."

In order to disabuse their minds of the impression (which probably had been industriously spread among them by designing whites) that Friends would ultimately bring charge against them for the help they had rendered, the Committee thought it best again to furnish them with a distinct disclaimer of any such intention, and the following instrument of writing was accordingly prepared, copied on parchment and sent to the Friends at Tus-sassa to present and explain to them, viz:

To the Chiefs and others of the Seneca Nation residing on the Allegheny.

Brothers: We have been informed that some of you are uneasy in your minds for fear that your brothers, the Quakers, will bring a charge against you for the assistance they have afforded you in your endeavors to improve in the manner of your living and in the management of your lands, etc.

We hereby tell you plainly, as we have often told you before, that your brothers, the Quakers, do not want any of your land, any of your skins, nor any of your money, for anything they have done for you, and that they never will bring any charge against you for any of these things, and we send you this writing to keep forever, to make your minds easy on this respect.

(Signed by 26 Friends.)

Philadelphia, 19th of First Month, 1821.

The result of the effort of Friends at this time may be understood by the following brief speech made by a prominent chief among them, in reply to some friends. "We hope our children, as they become instructed, will see the propriety of dividing it, and proceed therein; We cannot now accomplish it in our divided state; we hope you will have patience with us."

(To be continued.)

TRUE RELIGION A FRIEND OF TRUE SCIENCE.—A pure and undefiled religion, based on the teachings of Jesus Christ, not only contradicts no known or ascertainable law of reason, but also positively contributes to the spiritual satisfaction and moral upbuilding of the race. It is the friend of a true science, while it also supplies that which no science could ever possibly provide or even interpret. What has been called "the absolute world riddle," remains insoluble for science and even philosophy, except as the clue to the mysteries which encircle life, and which loom up along the vistas of the future, is furnished by the religious teaching of the incarnate Son of God, who, by His Spirit, still leads men into all necessary truth. The ungoverned and unguided reason, when it refuses to be taught of faith, will certainly and grievously err. The great questions of destiny must be heard and decided in the parliament of the whole man, under the tutelage of the Divine Mind. Life is meaningless, and therefore valueless, without an illuminating and inspiring faith. So long as men trouble themselves to think at all, and so long as human hearts yearn for love and human wills crave guidance, religion will remain continuous with life, saying the first and the last word as the ends of existence, and proving beyond successful rejoinder its Divine worth.—New York Observer.

LOWLINESS of heart is real dignity, and humility is the brightest jewel in the Christian's crown.—Bond.

OBEDIENCE to known duty is wisdom's way to knowledge.

THE RAINBOW.

"I do set My bow in the clouds . . . and I will remember My covenant which is between Me and you."

All day the wind blew wild,
At last her light grew dim;
The darkling waters darker piled Moaning low requiem.

The chill—the misty air
Wept on the sulken strand;—
Bleak desolation everywhere—
On sky, and sea, and land!

My heart grew faint with fear
As with a nameless dread;—
As with a nameless bleeding dread,
Hope, joy and radiance dead.

Then lo, the same Who spake
From out the cloud of old
The awful bands of blackness brake,
And all the west was gold!

Aloft, His jewels gleamed,
His deathless Light to prove;
And o'er the tossing waters streaked
The Banner of His Love!

Soul, doth the wild rain beat?
And doth the wild wind blow?
Hold thee in patience at His Feet,
And thou this truth shalt know;

His care—eternal—sure,
Hides in the darkest form;
His glad; and sweet promises endure,
And break through every storm!

C. A. L.

ATLANTIC CITY, Sixth Month 30th.

Ministry; by William Penn.

They were changed men themselves, before they went about to change others. Their hearts were rent as well as their garments, and they knew the power and work of God upon them. This was seen by the great alteration it made, and their stricter course of life, and the more godly conversation that immediately followed.

They went not forth or preached in their own time and will, but in the will of God, and spoke not their own studied matter, but as they were opened and moved by His Spirit, with which they were well acquainted in their own conversion . . . This proof and seal went with their ministry, that many were turned from their lifeless professions, and the evil of their ways, to an inward and experimental knowledge of God and an holy life. . . . And as they freely received what they had to say from the Lord, so they freely administered it to others.

The bent and stress of their ministry was conversion to God, regeneration and holiness. . . . They directed people to a principle in themselves, though not of themselves, by which all that they asserted, preached and exhorted others to, might be wrought in them, and known to them through experience to be true. . . . They required conformity upon no human authority, but upon conviction of this principle, which they asserted was in them that they preached unto; and unto that they directed them, that they might examine and prove the reality of those things . . . as to its manifestation and work in man. . . . This people did not only in words press repentance, conversion and holiness, but did it knowingly and experimentally . . . which is more than theory, and speculation, upon which most other ministers depend; for here is a certainty, a foundation upon which man may boldly appear before God in the great day of account. They reached to the inward state and condition of people, which is an evidence of the virtue of their principle and ministry from it, and not from their own imagination, or comments upon Scripture. For nothing reaches the heart but what is from the heart, or pierces the conscience, but what comes from a living conscience. . . . Yea, the very thoughts and purposes of the hearts of many have been so plainly detected, that they have, like Nathaniel, cried out of this inward appearance of Christ's, "Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel." And those that have embraced this divine principle, have found the mark of its truth and divinity that the women of Samaria did of Christ when in the flesh to be the Messiah, namely, it had told them all that ever they had done, shown them the most inward secrets of their hearts, and laid judgment to the line, and righteousness to the plumb-line, of which thousands can at this day give in their witness. So that nothing has been affirmed by this people, of the power and virtue of this heavenly principle, that such as have turned to it have not found true, and more; and that one-half had not been told them of what they have seen of the power, purity, wisdom and goodness of God therein . . .

This principle fitted even some of the most unlearned of this people for their work and service: furnishing some of them with an extraordinary understanding in divine things, and an admirable fluency in the way of expression which gave occasion to some to wonder, saying of them as of their Master, is not this such a mechanic's son, how came he by this learning? Others took occasion to suspect and insinuate they were "Jesus" in disguise, (who had the reputation of learned men for an age past), though there was not the least ground of truth for any such reflection. . . . They came forth low, despised and hated, as the primitive Christians did, and not by the help of worldly wisdom and power, as former reformations in part have done, but in all things it may be said, this people were brought forth in the cross; in a contradiction to the ways, worship, fashions, and customs of this world; . . . that no flesh might glory before God.

They could have no design to themselves in this work, thus to expose themselves to scorn and abuse, to spend and be spent; leaving wife and children, house and land, and all that can be accounted dear to men, with their lives in their hands, being daily in jeopardy, to declare this primitive message, revived in their spirits by the good spirit and power of God, that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all, and that He has sent His Son a light into the world to enlighten all men in order to salvation, and that they that say they have fellowship with God, and are His children and people, and yet walk in darkness, that is, in disobedience to the light in their consciences, and after the vanity of this world, they lie and do not the truth.

But that all such that love the light and bring their deeds to it, and walk in the light, as God is light, the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, should cleanse them from all sin. John i. etc.

Their known great constancy and patience in suffering for their testimony, in all the branches of it, and that sometimes unto death, by beatings, bruising, long and crowded imprisonments, and noisome dungeons; four of them in New England dying by the hands of the executioner, purely for preaching among that people; besides banishments, and excessive plunders, and sequestration of their goods and estates almost in all parts not easily to be expressed, and less to have been endured, but by those who have the support of a good and glorious cause, refusing deliverance by any indirect ways or means, as often as it was offered unto them.

That they did not only not show any disposition to revenge, when it was at any time in their power, but forgave their cruel enemies, showing mercy to those who had none for them.

Their plainness with those in authority, like the ancient prophets, not fearing to tell them of their private and public sins; and their prophecies to them of their afflictions, and downfall when in the top of their glory. Also of some national judgments; as of the Plague, and fire of London, in express terms; and likewise particular ones to divers persecutors, which accordingly overtook them, and were very remarkable.—From the Rise and Progress of the people called Quakers, by William Penn.

Church-Going by Children.

Friends will be able to adapt the following language from the Church Economist to their own situation:—

D. N. Hillis of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, has been doing good service by sharply calling attention to a lack of parental authority in the matter of church-going habits of children. He justly condemns the practice of letting children of even eight or nine years of age decide whether they shall go to church or not. Parents are altogether too indifferent in this matter, especially in cities.

In connection it is said by many that the Sunday-school is a splendid supplement to church attendance, but a poor substitute for it. In this age of specialization, many look upon the Sunday-school as the children's church. This is a grave mistake.

The Sunday-school has information for its key-note, not for worship. Its stirring activity, its friendly bustle, its conversational and familiar atmosphere lack the quality of reverence, which is the very first essential of public worship. The best Sunday-school for a child, if there can be but one, is a seat in the family pew beside its parents, at the ordinary service of the church.

The argument that children acquire an aversion to the church by being forced to "go to meeting" by their parents is ridiculous.

Children are "forced" by their parents to do all sorts of things, such as eating good food and abstaining from food that is harmful, attending school, and going to bed. It is not apparent that they thereby acquire a rooted aversion to wholesome food, to sleep or to an education. Nor is it a matter of observation that children who are trained up by their parents to go to church are the people who, when they come to more mature years, constitute the absentee class from church attendance and services.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Items Illustrative of the Warning Words in Habakkuk ii: 15.

In the Temperance columns of THE FRIEND some months ago, reference was made to the fact that a large department store in this city had been granted a license to deal in intoxicating liquors. It appears as a result of this that quite a number of patrons of the place, Friends, members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and others, have ceased making purchases there. One of these, in returning the "identification coin" of the family to the proprietors (who are Hebrews), desired them to have regard to their accountability in the premises, quoting the warning of the prophet Habakkuk as against those who hand forth strong drink to their neighbor, and put the bottle to his lips. The burden of doing this, it seems, was too heavy in the case of a young woman clerk employed in that special department of the establishment. After taking orders for some five hundred cases of liquors in a single week, she felt obliged to hand in her resignation.

In the printers' shops, years ago, it was a very common practice to dispatch the boy of the place, with pitcher or pail, to a neighboring liquor saloon, for ale or beer for the refreshment of the compositors and pressmen. In the present day, however, the master printers who desire their employees to put forth very careful and expeditious work, expect them to be "level-headed" in order to that end. The travelling beer kettle is hence generally forbidden. It is gratifying, further, to know of a consistent manifestation of abstinence among the employers themselves. An announcement of the annual dinner of the Printers' Board of Trade, to be held this week at the Bourse, makes no greater demand upon the purse than "one dollar per plate," to defray all the expenses. The explanation of this is, that the menu makes no provision for wines or other intoxicating drink. This custom has been followed several years, and presumably will have become a permanent one. When one contrasts this with the initial banquet to a select few, given after the opening last month of a most luxurious apartment house in this city, whereat the expense per plate, including wines, decorations, lights, attendance, etc., was reported to have exceeded one hundred dollars, he is reminded of that passage in Paul's Epistle to the Philippians (iii: 19), concerning certain self-pleasing, effeminate professors who were "enemies of the cross of Christ," and of whom it was affirmed that "their glory is in their shame."

The committee appointed in and by the various Monthly Meetings of this Yearly Meeting, to make inquiry of their members concerning their use, yea or nay, of intoxicants as a beverage, and of handing the same to others for that purpose, are now, no doubt, in their several measures, giving attention to that duty. It was good testimony on the part of one member, a farmer, who had been engaged in turning a portion of his surplus apple crop into cider for purpose of conversion into vinegar, that upon being asked by a colored helper (having a fondness for the liquor in its heady state) to sell him some of the freshly expressed juice, he replied that he "could not do it." The influence of example comes in very strongly here.

The proprietor of a local paper having a large inland circulation, was written to by way of appeal, not to continue in his columns the advertisement of a certain "patent medicine" of the brand of "health bitters." He was informed that the Massachusetts State Board Analyst, in an examination of thirty-six alcoholized patent medicine preparations, had found that the one referred to, the rankest of all of them but one, contained no less than forty-four per cent. of alcohol! At the same time that this ensnaring card was being thus laid before the public, a Court of the Quarter Sessions was being held at the Court-House, whereat numerous cases were heard of the illegal sale of beer, the latter decoction, as we know, containing only two to five per cent. of alcohol. When it is borne in mind that many millions of dollars are expended by our people upon one or other of the numerous patent medicinal bitters, health invigorators and restoratives (so claimed), and that almost all of these compounds are heavily charged with the liquor that intoxicates, we need not wonder at the statement of the American Grocer that not only is the total of the manufacture and consumption of such liquors steadily increasing amongst us, but that there is a like increase per capita year by year, beyond the ratio of the population's increase.

The writer has before him a letter written from Paris in the autumn of 1886, by a then prominent and promising clergymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Henry C. Potter. Having in view a designedly-beneficent purpose, I may be excused for now quoting it. He says: "Your Essay on 'Simplicity of Attire [as related to the Promotion of Social Purity]' has been forwarded to me here, and I wish to thank you for it. It is a timely word, and I wish that it might reach a wider audience than that to be found in our own land. I have sent it to one of our clergy in New York who, I hope, will call general attention to it through the press." It was gratifying to receive so earnest a tribute to the principle of simplicity from a member of a religious denomination which is generally thought to allow more liberty in this regard than most others. But the views of Bishop Potter upon Christian simplicity, in the eighteen years' interim, must have surely undergone transformation, else we could hardly expect him to appear in the way of pronouncing a benediction upon a "Subway Tavern," where liquors of pure quality, it was claimed, were to be respectably dispensed to patrons of both sexes. While sincerity may be claimed for the act, the general consensus the land over is, that even sincerity will not atone for gross moral errancy. We are pointed further, to the bishop's endeavors to "elevate the stage." He has, it is true, for several years held the place of president of the Actors' Church Alliance, but those who know what the theatre really is, are ready to admit that herein is not an alluring alliance of the church and the world. Said an early friend of Bishop Potter, the late Arthur Cleveland Coxe, bishop of Western New York—"All that theory can duce in defense of a possible drama, vanishes before the gross sensuality of the actual stage. The voice of Christian antiquity denounces as anti-Christian the whole system of the play-house, and the very heathen lash as seen and shameful, scenes which are exhibited to 'young men and maidens' in New York and all over the land. 'I go to the theatre myself,' said a young man to me lately, 'but I thought the devil himself must be laughed when he saw a communicant of the church there.' Obviously, a champion of the play-house cannot with consistency contend for 'simplicity of attire,' seeing that the Paris stage is the originator of fashions in the female dress. The costumes of the actresses in the — are those usually copied by the society leaders of Paris, and when these adopt a style, the whole world follows suit."

JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

Talking at Home.

Children hunger perpetually for new ideas, and the most pleasant way of reception is by the voice and the ear, not the eye and the printed page. The one mode is natural, the other artificial. Who would not rather listen than read? We not infrequently pass by in the papers the full report of a lecture, and then go and pay our money to hear the self-same words uttered. An audience will listen idly from the beginning to the end of an address, which not one in twenty of those present would read with the same attention. His is emphatically true of children. They will learn with pleasure from the lips of parents what they deem drudgery to study in the books; and even if they have the misfortune to be deprived of the educational advantages which they desire, they cannot fail to grow up intelligent if they enjoy in childhood and youth the privilege of listening daily to the conversation of intelligent people.

Let parents, then, talk well at home. A father who is habitually silent in his own home may be in many respects a wise man, but he is not wise in idle silence. We sometimes see parents, who are the life of every company which they enter, dull, silent, uninteresting at home among their children. If they have not mental activity and mental stores sufficient for both, let them first provide for their own household. Ireland exports beef and wheat, and lives on potatoes; and they fare as poorly to reserve their social charms for companions abroad, and keep their dulness for home consumption. It is better to instruct children and make them happy at home than it is to charm strangers or amuse friends. A silent house is a dull place for young people—a place on which they will escape if they can. They will talk of being "shut up" there; and the youth who does not love home is in danger. Make home, then, a cheerful and pleasant spot. Light it up with cheerful, instructive conversation. Father, mother, talk your best at home.

Selected.

Keep thy Saviour ever nigh
On Him, fix thy constant eye;
Let Him be thy guide, thy star,
Give thee strength from day to day;
Light and life and grace are known,
In our Saviour Christ alone.

—From the German.

AS THEY WENT.

LUKE xvii. 14.

As they went they felt the cleansing power
Responsive motion to the Master's tongue,
A willing spirit moved their heavy feet
And as they went fresh tides of life flowed in:

Following on to know, the knowledge comes Glorious lights are reached as we move on,
Cleansed, equipped, adorned in service free,
We rise till perfect vision crowns the day.

H. T. MILLER.

BEANSVILLE, ONT.

Quakerism without its Testimonials.

In a late number of THE FRIEND is an article by J. E. Southall in regard to the retention of the "Plain Language." He starts out with speaking of a married woman as a certain man's wife. This is a case occurring with especial frequency in our business with the world. If we would adhere to our convictions we must, when the wife's name is unknown, resort to some circumlocution. There is none, perhaps, more convenient than that used by the prophet Elijah, "Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam." In most cases, when any further intercourse is expected, we may get over the difficulty by learning the wife's name. If she have hitherto been a stranger to Friends, the inquiry may lead to a valuable lesson to her. Thus, as in many other ways as we walk through life, we may shed a light around us. Friends, if consistent, cannot be too decided against this modern habit of concealing a woman's identity beneath the name of her husband. I know there is great pliancy in our giving way at this point. But there is no doubt the prevailing cause of stumbling is the cross. The same feeling, as an occasion of stumbling, besets him who is weak in the faith in regard to all our testimonials. The argument that the names of the week-days are a recognition of heathen deities can have no effect upon a mind devoid of religious experience. Such may use these names with innocence so long as they have no sense of duty in regard to it. But when the Spirit of Truth is come, and calls for their abandonment, the use of these names is innocent for us no longer.

I can remember some embarrassment when a young man in using plain language with those who, I imagined, had not before heard it. I knew that the customary "thee" as a nominative was not grammatical. This in itself I was ashamed of. I then determined that "the Tempter" should not have this conscious weakness in me as his ally. With the change to correctness of speech I was no longer ashamed of the language called for by sense of duty.

In the maintenance of all our testimonials we meet with obstacles from without. But I am convinced there is no way in the Divine economy to obtain stability in the Truth but by overcoming these obstacles as, one by one, they are presented to us. To one who had hitherto been travelling in the world's pathway, but now, heeding the inward monitor, sets out to lead a new life, every one of these testimonials may at first appear as an obstacle. But as we encounter them, armed with Christ's sufficiency, they vanish from our road, and what had even appeared as a thorn in the flesh, becomes a source of enjoyment. We are now led to realize that if any man be in Christ he has become a new creature. He no longer values the approval of a world that so largely lies in wickedness, but finds his rejoicing that the more closely he follows his heavenly guide the more that world respects him. Such an one may be led to the adoption of all Friends' testimonials. Put it at any point he "falls short," he will, by so much, have fallen short in his standard of Christian attainment.

Here is no disposition to call in question the acceptance in the Divine sight of the multitudes who have lived in ignorance of some of our scruples. It is he that knoweth and doeth not, to whom a thing is sin. I have read the record of the lives of many religious persons, whose experience for a long way was coincident with that of awakened minds among Friends. In some cases they became wiser than their teachers, showing advanced stages of sanctification among their own people; in others having attained the most approved standards among their associates, they have been allowed there to rest. But some, becoming impressed with the want of spirituality inherent in their church, have stepped out and become identified with Friends. Others, again, as Guyon and Fenelon, have become qualified and anointed preachers of righteousness, though bearing a name so tarnished as that of the Church of Rome.

It were not difficult for some brought up among Friends to conclude that the standard of attainment of the devout in other societies is high enough for us. We know that these societies bear no testimony against war. This grand defect shows there is something in their system that leaves them far short of the design of Christ's gospel. Whatever the virtues of individual members, it is highly unsafe to take them as exemplars in a religious life. It is enough for us to know that our testimonials are essentially connected with progress in Divine knowledge. If any doubt this, let them mark the history of those who have turned backward from the cross.

Their vision has become obscured. They have let in doubts with regard to steps already taken. They have come to be of the pitiable number of whom the apostle said, "It were better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them."

The statement of J. E. S. of the extent to which the plain language has been abandoned by the members of London Yearly Meeting is almost appalling. Along with this departure, we understand, our testimony about heathen names and complimentary titles had also been dropped, and further, that there is but little of spirituality retained in their meetings for worship. Unfaithfulness in one point has been followed by weakness in others, and when religious vitality has been impaired, there will remain only the bond of philanthropic effort to hold the society together. It does not appear that this degeneracy has yet taken the form of simulated methodism as in America. But if they have lost the leading spirit by which only they can bear testimony to the power of Truth. It were of secondary importance what forms they adopt in church procedure.

It is the blessed privilege of one who has submitted to the baptism of regeneration to know a change in his nature. Instead of wrath, with its attendant evil-speaking, an atmosphere of love attends the presence of a purified spirit. Yet such an one testified that having felt a gentle impression that he should quit reading war news, he did not fully yield at once, and as a consequence, he found his mind a prey to evil passions. Not only were little offences magnified, but the kindness of his friends was ascribed to wrong motives. He found obedience to be the price of Divine aid, without which it would be impossible to hold on to the ground already attained.

As J. Dymond expressed it, "The will of God being known, human duty is ascertained." It may throw light upon this question to introduce a quotation from Thomas Story, written when he had turned his back upon the frivolities of the world. "I called unto my God out of the great deep, and He had compassion on me because His love was infinite and His power without measure. He called for my life and I offered it at His footstool; but He gave it to me as a prey with unespeakable addition. He called for my will and I resigned it at His call; but He gave me His own in token of His love. He called for the world, and I laid it at His feet with the crowns thereof. I withheld them not at the beckoning of His hand. But mark the benefit of exchange! For He gave me instead of earth a kingdom of everlasting peace, and in lieu of the crowns of vanity a crown of glory." L. BALDERSTON.

Tenth Month 1st, 1904.

How it grieves me to see any of our dear friends departing from that Scriptural simplicity of language, which as members of our Society, they have been taught to use! I hope my beloved children will never abandon this noble testimony against the corruptions of a false and deceitful world; for though I would be far from commending a self righteous spirit or a censorious temper, towards our Christian brethren and sisters whose attention may not have been called, as ours has been, to these particular branches of gospel truth, I do believe it is important for us to maintain our own ground, even in little things; and I think I have long observed, that where there has been a giving way in these; it has proved an inlet to greater weakness, and a means of undermining, gradually, the attachment to other important testimonies, which have been committed to us. Oh! that our Society had individually borne them with faithfulness and in the meekness of wisdom, and then, I believe the Christian church would, ere this, have made greater advances than she had yet done, and her children, being less conformed to this world, would have made more successful resistance to the spread of evil.—Selected.

MEN who live near to God, and are willing to suffer anything for Christ's sake without being proud of it, these are the men we want.—Judson.

Yet there is room! The Lamb's bright hall of song
With its fair glory, beckons thee along;
Yet there is room! Still open stands the gate,
The gate of Love; it is not yet too late.
Pass in, pass in; That banquet is for thee;
That cup of Everlasting Love is free,
E'er night that gate may close and seal thy doom,
Then the last low, long cry—No room, no room!
—Bonar.

TEMPERANCE.

The matter under this heading is furnished to THE FRIEND on behalf of the "Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia," by Benjamin F. Whitson, 401 Chestnut St., Phila.

"He has no enemies, you say!
My friend, thy boast is poor;
He who hath mingled in the fray
Of duty that the brave endure,
Must have made foes. If he has none,
He has hit no traitor on the hip;
He has cast no cup from tempted lip;
He has never turned the wrong to right,
He has been a coward in the fight."

We think temperance meetings and literature and prohibition campaigns ineffective assaults on the ramparts of rum. But liquor organs and trade journals do not deem them harmless. They view them with alarm, and warn their constituents against these perils to the liquor interests. These fears of our enemies ought to encourage us in doing all in our power, through platform, press and tracts, to create and direct omnipotent public sentiment against this "sum of all iniquities."—Christian Standard.

HOW LIQUOR MEN THINK AND ACT.—"It is of no concern to the Improved Order of the Royal Arch (liquor organization) in Pennsylvania whether the Legislature about to be elected shall be composed of a majority of Democrats or Republicans.

"The avowed purpose of the temperance reformers to enact a local option law in Pennsylvania admonishes liquor men generally throughout the State to watchfulness and readiness to meet such an innovation. It will be well for all retail liquor merchants to remember that, in individual efforts for the protection of our trade, but little success may reasonably be hoped for. Our strength lies in union and concerted action."—H. N. Schnee, Grand Master of Ceremonies at Philadelphia, Ninth Mo. 24th, 1904.

"It is all well in theory to offer the left cheek after the right has been smitten, but very few people are "built" that way. If the Republican party should go back on the Liquor interests the latter will go back on the party. That is all there is about it."—Cincinnati Liquor Organ.

Every member of the league (liquor organization) in Indiana is compelled to subscribe to the following pledge:

"We pledge our honor mutually to each other to lay aside individual and political preferences and to lend our aid and influence and vote to defeat any and all candidates for the office or public trust who are known enemies to the licensed liquor traffic."—American Issue.

If the good citizen would do as the corrupt politician and the corrupting business man do, shift freely from one party to the other as the change served his interest, then both parties would represent good citizenship. They would differ—more than they do now—on broad questions of public policy, but they would both stand, as they do not now, for the public interest. But the good citizen is "loyal t party." Half the loyalty that is betrayed by parties would, if devoted to the state and the nation, save the country and the parties, too. Such independence, however, would mean no partisanship in State and national politics, and the good citizen is only just learning, with many a qualm of conscience, to vote independently in municipal elections. In State and national politics he votes too constantly, not for his State and the United States, but "his party." Hence his party can deliver his vote.—Lincoln Steffens in McClure's Magazine.

ROOSEVELT ON PROHIBITION.—"The saloon are our foes, and I, for one, am glad of it. It is perfectly natural and proper that the whiskey sellers should be against us. We are against them. . . . As we advocated the doctrine of prohibiting slavery in the territories where we had the right and power to do it, so we will prohibit the sale of liquor every place where a majority of the legitimate voters give us power to do it. . . . Prohibition is the end that we would all of us like to see accomplished. I wish it were possible now to enforce it absolutely throughout the whole land."

So formerly said our honored President who confronted by grave questions of expediency [The province of this periodical is outside political parties, except that witness for truth which should prevail within them, and in the hearts of men. So we neither arraign nor recommend a party as such. Let that in every man which best makes for righteousness guide his vote.—Ed.] It is right that I should make it possible for any party to "deliver my vote?"

There are three stages in every reform: (1) Universal recognition and practice of the evil; (2) an endeavor to regulate the evil by hedging it about by law; (3) the abolition of the evil. We have reached the second stage of this great reform. Why not proceed to the third?

DUPLICATE EDITORIAL.—The American Issue of Ninth Month 24th publishes an article that appeared as editorial matter in three different papers in different parts of the country on the same date. The papers were the Chronicle St. Louis, The Telegraph of Harrisburg and certain Columbus paper that discovered the fraud too late to prevent its publication. The article in question was an attempt to defame the army canteen, and favoring the re-establishment of the same. It was probably furnished by the liquor bureau to which we had occasion to refer in previous issues.

Barnesville, Ohio, with a population of 40,000 more, has the second time met the sales forces in open contest at the polls under the local law and "gone dry." The majority of the time in favor of no license was 135 vote greater than at the similar election two years ago. The liquor interests of the State had made repeated and desperate efforts to defeat credit prohibition.

THE baptism of the Spirit refreshes the parched and thirsty ground.

A Child's Seriousness.

What we oftentimes run athwart in the child, daily offend, is his seriousness. I should be astonished if this remark surprises more than one reader, for there is, alas! an imperious wall between the state of mind of most adults and that of a child. We do not take a child seriously. It is assumed that what concerns him is insignificant, that it is limited to certain unimportant events, things in miniature, which take place down where he is, far from those heights where the only things of sequence happen. "That is childish, a trifle, a mere nothing," we continually say. "short-sighted creatures that we are, dull sense and narrow of vision! How with our very tread do we crush the gracious blossoms that garden of God called the heart of a child! We take ourselves seriously, our affairs the affairs of moment, the child's are mere rillities and play. But we deceive ourselves. No one is more serious than the child, the merchant over his accounts, the judge pronouncing sentence, the sage in meditation, the faithful at prayer, is more serious than he. We might even make a saying: Serious as a child."

Listen to this story: It is an old man's tale, in the depths of his heart he still felt his dish words.

"I had committed one of those faults so usual to children and so little malicious in intent, however grave. In the presence of the lady and some friends I had been dealt with mildly, as the offence merited, and in the face of my fault, acknowledged and bitterly reprimanded, I had burst into sobs. Then I was at a way. As I closed the door, still overwhelmed by what had happened, I heard behind me a great burst of laughter. Then I hid and hid in the farthest corner of the house, I wept my little heart out, that laugh had led me suffer so. From that day I lost the confidence it is so well to keep as long as we may; and over and over again I asked myself the question, "Are big people then not serious?"—Charles Wagner.

He recorded history of religion is illustrious; it is, as Burke said, "the basis of civility, and the source of all good and of all comfort;" in nearly all its forms "sacrifice be the first element of religion," and it is this sense of self-sacrifice which makes human society hold together; in practice it has been the world not only a love which radiates, "a force which acts."

Items Concerning the Society.

Joshua Pim, of Dublin, after a considerable tour in America, last week visited relatives in Philadelphia.

The London Friend records it of the Yearly Meeting held at Damascus, Ohio, in Eighth Month, that a conspicuous feature of the meeting was the presence of Dr. A. T. Pierson, Baptist minister, well known on both sides of the Atlantic, who preached twice on the Sunday, and took other part in the proceedings." In another Yearly Meeting two of its ministers supplied neighboring churches on First-day.

We hear of Eliza H. Varney being in Philadelphia to attend the Yearly Meeting opening on the 27th instant in Woodland, North Carolina; also of the prospect of Job S. Gidley, of North Dartmouth, Mass., to attend it, as well as that of Ida Chamness and companion, Lena Thompson, of Iowa, who are already present on religious service in that neighborhood, as well as Sarah Hobson, of Winona, and Lydia K. Lightfoot, of Salem, Ohio.

Among delegates or visitors to the Boston Peace Conference who attended Friends' Meetings in Philadelphia last First-day was John Ashworth, a member from Manchester, England. Richard Westthrope from England, Thomas Barrow, wife and daughter, from Lancaster, England, and Ellen M. Stone, the noted captive whom Americans ransomed from the hands of Bulgarian bandits by paying $72,500. In Twelfth Street Meeting she gave some tender expression of her feelings.

THOMAS CHALKLEY, minister and mariner, by Joseph Taylor, London: Headley Bros., 14 Bishopsgate without, price one penny (2 cents).—This is the title of an attractively gotten-up booklet (paper cover), number 6 of a set, entitled "Friends Ancient and Modern," now being published by the London Friends Tract Association. Thomas Chalkley was a decidedly "ancient" Friend, for he was born in 1675, when George Fox and the first preachers were in their prime, and his life extended into the middle of the eighteenth century. His life was an interesting one, for some years of it were spent in Pennsylvania, so that its story brings us into touch with William Penn's "Holy Experiment," and afterwards as a sea captain he plied back and forth between the old world and the new, visiting also, time and again, the West India Islands, Barbadoes and other places closely connected with the sufferings and triumphs of early Quakerism. Finally the end of his earthly life came whilst he was on a mission of Gospel love to the Virgin Isles and he was laid to rest in the ancient Friends' burying ground at Tortola. Joseph Taylor has produced a very interesting sketch of this interesting man, and we highly commend the little book. —Interchange.

Notes in General.

The late Charles H. Spurgeon's London publisher has issued his 2900th sermon. All these sermons are in stock and are constantly being sold. There is a greater demand to-day for the sermons of noted preachers than ever before.

Walter Walsh of Dundee, Scotland, in his notable address before the faculty and students of Boston University School of Theology said, "The Bible is the anvil on which all our fads are forged or broken. The Peace Congress will be no exception."

In Boston the Archbishop of Canterbury spoke as a Christian brother to students and teachers of a university founded and controlled by Wesleyans, and admitted "that the separation from the mother Church was for the betterment of the life of the world."

Bishop Korfe of Korea has been obliged to resign, it is said, on account of the great difficulty in acquiring the Korean language, in which every single thought can be expressed in seven distinctly different ways. There is an utter lack of affinity between the English and Korean languages.

In Cooper Cemetery, five miles from Rochester, Ill., is the grave of a "hard-shell" Baptist, over which stands a monument with this inscription, "Here lies an inveterate Hater of Salary Preachers." This epitaph was demanded by the will of the testator, who was a "hard-shell" farmer and preacher.

Charles Wagner, who is now in this country, is closely associated with many of the philanthropies of Paris. He is pastor of an independent congregation, but is not connected with any religious denomination. He places emphasis on direct communion with truth through the Spirit of Christ and through the works of nature, and upon doing good in all possible ways.

"There are five popes on the face of the earth," says the Paris correspondent of London Truth. "They are the Pope of the Latin Church; the schismatic, or Orthodox, Pope; the Father of the Faithful, ruling at Constantinople; the Pope of Tibet, who has five hundred millions of subjects; and the schismatic Pope of the Mohammedan world, who reigns at Morocco. All five are threatened with hard times; 1904 has been unpropitious to them. . . . Of the five Popes, Pius X. is the most venerable, Nicholas the most feared, the Sultan the most terror-haunted and terrorist, the Dalai Lama the most mysterious, and the head of the Muslim schismatics the best "fellow."

"WAS IT FROM HEAVEN OR MEN?"—But ye shall be baptized of the Holy Spirit, Acts 1: 5. The baptism of the Russian heir as described by the Russian press, says the Trutherion, must have been a most gorgeous affair, scarcely to be comprehended by those who have never witnessed the elaborate ceremonial of the Greek Church, which, of course was far more splendid because it was the christening of the heir to the throne.

The procession that moved from the palace at Peterhof to the Cathedral, was headed by the master of the imperial household. The golden state carriage, drawn by eight white horses, with outriders and grooms, was preceded by a retinue of officials and followed by an escort of Blue Cossacks, a body of soldiery of whom the tiny babe is already the head.

In the carriage sat the Princess Galatin, the mistress of the imperial household, holding the royal infant in her arms.

A lieutenant-general rode on each side, and when they arrived at the church, following the Princess, who carried the baby, came General Richter, bearing its pillow and General Vorontsoffsdasshoff, its veil.

The churches are lighted with hundreds of candles, and the effect is most beautiful.

The sponsors, who are regarded as the spiritual parents of the child, may be many or few in number, and at this christening represented an emperor and empress, two kings, a prince and four grand-duchesses. The parents are not permitted to be present, as the "spiritual parents" take the vows to train the child in holy living. A law peculiar to Russia forbids marriage between god-parents and god-children, and even between the sponsors.

This is the method of the baptism. The priest takes the child, who is clad in one simple garment, turns him to the east, breathes in his face, signs him with the cross and then prays for him. Then turning him toward the west, he asks if he renounces the world, the flesh and the devil, to which the god-parents answer.

Three candles, signifying the trinity, are then lighted.

The babe is then signed with the holy water, after which the priest pours oil upon the water, and dipping his fingers in the oil makes the sign of the cross on the child's forehead, heart, shoulders, hands, and feet. Then swinging the babe in his arms, with its face toward the east, the priest says: "The servant of God is baptized in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. Amen. Now and ever and to all ages. Amen." At the mention of each Person of the Trinity, the child is immersed, sprinkling being permitted only on occasions of great weakness.

We are told that the Russian heir gave a "justly yell" over this part of the ceremony, indicating that his royal babe is as easily frightened as many of his humble American congeners become on similar occasions.

After the baptism, the white robe (which must always be presented by the godmother) is put on, and the cross (which must always be given by the godfather) is placed in the child's hands, and the ceremony is concluded with prayer.

At the close of this royal christening the Te Deum was chanted by a mighty choir. The instant this was finished the bell ringers began, and that was the signal for a salute of three hundred and one guns from the imperial yacht. The guns of the Kremlin belched forth, and mass was celebrated. In Moscow five hundred bell ringers played upon five hundred bells with tremendous effect.

The child has been named Alexis. To this name is added the term Nikolaievitch, meaning "son of Nicholas."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The death of seven men is reported to have taken place in New York City from the effects of drinking a poisonous compound sold as whiskey. Upon an examination by the Coroner it was discovered that the common practice of adulterating whiskey by manufacturers there was whiskey from chemicals, and that in many instances wood alcohol, a deadly poison, forms a part of the concoction. A barrel of whiskey is manufactured on the spot, which costs the mixer a cent a drink "if it is made bad, and two cents if it is made good," according to the Coroner. This is sold to the consumer on credit. Westchester, N. Y., a student who is alleged to have caused the death of three of his classmates by three supposed victims of poisoned whiskey. Acting upon a suspicion that similar poisoned liquor might have been responsible for other deaths, one saloon was closed, samples of whiskey were taken from every saloon in a certain district, and the contents of each of such districts were sent to the Board of Health for chemical analysis.

A decision has lately been rendered by Judge Beiler in a common Pleas Court in Philadelphia, that a policy of fire insurance is rendered invalid if a building described in the policy, whether intended for occupancy by owner or tenant, be or become a storehouse for goods, so remain for ten days, and that a return of the occupant after ten days does not again render the insurance valid. The Judge stated that he was satisfied that there were thousands of householders holding similar policies who could not collect in case their property was destroyed by fire, because the policy was voided by the goods being away in the summer, leaving their houses unoccupied. It is understood that all of the fire underwriting concerns will, however, at the request of the insured party, insert a clause that the building, provided it is situated within the limits of any city, may remain unoccupied in any part of the year without notice to the company with which the insurance is placed. Because of the risk attending buildings in the suburbs and country districts, scarcely any company will allow this clause to be inserted with respect to such.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has inaugurated a system for giving first aid to the injured. The plan includes the equipping of all baggage, motor express, work and service cars, terminal stations, yard offices, shops and important stations with stretchers. Locomotives, terminals, yard offices and important stations will also be provided with medical boxes, so that aid may be quickly given to employees and passengers who may be injured. The order requires all brakemen, conductors, engineers, firemen, station and employees, and porters at all stations, to be instructed by members of the medical staff on how to care for the injured. These lectures will be given at stated times each week until every man is familiar with the work.

The seizure of mails from the steamer Catcha by Russian land vessels, and the opening of United States mail bags to the detriment of a letter, even if found on a vessel sailing under the flag of a third country, also a news item. This was the fact in this case.

The utilization of water power for the generation of electricity has reached such a stage that it has been estimated that the total horse power in actual use throughout the world for the generation of electricity is nearly double the total steam power at present developed in Great Britain and Ireland for a like purpose. It is stated that America leads the world in this development of water power. Two California companies have in practical commercial operation lines 232 and 147 miles long respectively, and an enormous power is developed on each side of the cataract at Niagara, which is used on the spot and also transmitted to a distance.

The Interstate Commerce Commissioner states that during the past three years there has been no railroad accidents in the United States. It is stated that not a passenger was killed by the railroads in England last year, notwithstanding that their roads are busier than ours.

The President has appointed Robert J. Wynne Postmaster General. He has been the First Assistant Postmaster General since Fourth March, 1902.

The report of United States Treasurer Roberts on the operations of the Treasury for the fiscal year shows a deficiency of $41,770,577, caused by Panama Canal and World's Fair expenditures. Unusual expenditures were $50,000,000 on account of the Panama Canal and $4,600,000 loaned to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. Contingent liabilities have not been nearly repaid. But for these, it is stated, the recorded deficiency of $41,770,577 would have been changed to a surplus of $12,820,428.

An international automobile race has lately taken place in Nassau County, Long Island, over a distance of about three hundred miles. One machine of 30-horse power traversed it at an average rate of nearly fifty miles an hour. Another machine ran for a time at the rate of nearly seventy miles an hour. An ineffectual attempt to stop it was made by The People's Protective Association of Nassau County. It has been stated that a curiosity look-alike has occurred on a road, but it is not half criminal. Of the course, the successful competitor said: "The road is so soft and narrow in places that it is exceedingly dangerous. If there are not live hots out some of those sharp turns I shall be agreeably surprised; it is almost like committing suicide to race over such a course."

A report of the U. S. Commission appointed to investigate the cause which led to the loss of 955 lives in New York harbor by the burning of the steamboat General Slocum has been made public.

President Roosevelt, to whom the report was submitted, directs Secretary McCall to give effect to the commission's findings, and orders the discharge of certain inspectors, who are held responsible for the faulty examination of the General Slocum, an account of which the disaster is directly attributed. A searching investigation of the whole inspection force of the Port of New York is ordered, to the end that all unfit inspectors shall be removed and additional legal action is recommended.

FOREIGN.—The Japanese war vessel Hetero struck a submarine mine in Pigeon Bay, near Port Arthur. Nearly 300 persons who were on board were drowned.

A battle lasting nine days has lately taken place in the district between Liaoyang and Mukden. The number of troops is said to have been 200,000 Russians and more than 200,000 Japanese. The Japanese are said to have been victorious at many points; and that the slaughter has been enormous. The carnage caused by the recent battles has awakened a feeling throughout many civilized countries that earnest efforts should be made to stop it.

A member of the diplomatic corps in Japan is reported to have said: "I believe the world will recoil from the sickening slaughter of this battle. Every interest of humanity demands the adjustment of the differences between the two nations and the proclamation of peace."

It is officially announced that the arrangement for a loan of 200,000,000 francs to the United States, including Corsica and Algeria, will come into force Eleventh Mo. 1st, under contracts with the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique and the American Express Company.

In a recent address in England Secretary Chamberlain "dwelt on the agricultural situation and painted a gloomy picture of present conditions, predicting that there was some prospect of improvement, but that the price of wheat and land value had shrunk by hundreds of millions. The capital of farmers, he said, had fallen $1,000,000,000. There were a million fewer laborers in the country now than in 1851 and 13,000,000 people were underfed, while the people of America, Germany and other foreign countries were prosperous and enjoying great Britain in every line of trade and business." He said that to deny existing conditions was impossible and to ignore them would be criminal."

Owing to hard times and depression in the cotton industries, there are said to be between forty and fifty thousand people in Manchester on the verge of starvation. Other large cities of the United Kingdom have similar conditions and the coming winter is expected to be, for the poorer classes, one of the hardest in many years.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, who has lately been in this country, has agreed to attempt to bring about an amicable adjustment of the present crisis between the United Free Church of Scotland and the United Presbyterian Church in Scotland.

When the United Free Church of Scotland and the United Presbyterian Church voted to merge, in 1900, the union was opposed by twenty-four Free Church ministers. They carried the case through the courts of Scotland claiming the whole property. Their claims were rejected by the courts, but the House of Lords, by a majority of two, on Eighth Mo. 1st of this year, reversed the decision placing in the hands of twenty-four ministers, most of whom represented small Gaelic communities in the Highlands, funds amounting to more than $5,000,000, and property comprising more than 1000 buildings and dwellings throughout Scotland, valued at nearly $50,000,000.

A despatch from Shanghai states that an uprising has taken place in one of the northern provinces of China, in which 10,000 persons are involved, and that the foreign missionaries are seeking refuge.

Vast irrigation plans have lately been carried out in India, by which, as is stated, a tract of two and a-half million acres has been irrigated by the Cheong Canal and supports a civilized population of 800,000, who export large quantities of cotton and grain. In 1892 this land was peopled by a few nomads. This transformation has been brought about by the diversion of waters from the Himalayan glaciers at a great cost.

NOTICES.

The annual meeting of The Friends' City Home Association will be held at 1623 Second Street, on Fourth day afternoon, Tenth Month 26th, 1904, at 4 o'clock. All interested are invited to attend.

Notice.—B. P. Brown or George H. Parker, if addressed at George, N. C., will meet at Woodland Station Friends desiring to visit the Yearly Meeting to open a Woodland, N. C., on the 27th instant, or Meeting for Ministers and Elders on the 26th at 2.30 P. M.

Westtown Boarding School.—For convenience of persons coming to Westtown School, the stage will meet trains leaving Philadelphia 7.16 and 8.18 A. M., 2.50 and 4.32 P. M. Other trains are met when requested. Stage fare, fifteen cents; after 7.30 P. M., twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, visit West Chester, Phone 114.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY, Sup't.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., Phila.—Open on week-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 7 to 9 P. M. Recent additions to the Library include the following:

BARTON, Clara.—Story of the Red Cross.
DAWSON, T. C.—South American Republics. Part 2.
REDUAWAY, W. F.—Frederick the Great.

ROOSEVELT, Theodore.—Addresses and Presidential Messages.

SEBASTIAN, H. D.—Francis Parkman.
SHARP, D. L.—Roof and Meadow (Birds).
SMITH, C. S.—Working with the People.
STREETER, J. W.—Pat of the Land—Story of an American Farm.

TRWING, C. F.—College Training and the Business Man.
WOOD, W. S. H.—Friends of the City of New York.

MARRIED, at Friends' Meeting-house, Passadena, Cal. fornia, on the twenty-first of Ninth Month, 1904, HENRY HARTLEY, of Stillwater Monthly Meeting, Ohio, and MARGARET C. WILLIAMS, of Passadena.

DIED, on Fourth Month 10th, 1904, in Kennett Square Pa., SILVASSUS METZKE, in the eighty-first year of his age. He was a member of London Grove Monthly Meeting of Friends, and until prevented by illness, was a faithful attendant of the meeting at Kennett Square from its beginning.

She was a member and elder of London Grove Monthly Meeting of Friends, and regularly attended the meeting at Kennett Square as long as health permitted.

—Tenth Month 2nd, 1904, at Winona, Ohio, ESTER MASTERS, wife of Joseph Masters, in the seventy-second year of her age; member of the Garden Monthly Meeting of Friends, Ohio. Of rare goodness of character she manifested in many ways her loving interest in that about her, thus fulfilling the injunction, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ," who she desired most earnestly to serve in all things. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS
No. 42 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

OL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 29, 1904.

No. 16.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

scriptions, payments and business communications

received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,

PHILADELPHIA.

(From Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,

No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Can the Church Get Down to Business or Up to Faithfulness.

There are obvious clamorings for the secularization of spiritual work, and their tendency must be to lower the spiritualization of secular work.

The spiritually minded man is wont often to use the term "secular work," to do under mental protest—sometimes indeed admitting, "There is no secular work! there are no days that are not the Lord's days!" Our so-called secular work is associated with a spiritual interest, and the true Christian will so perform his daily doings as unto the Lord, that secular shall be undistinguishable from spiritual.

Not apart from walking in the Spirit, there are those otherwise minded a secular spirit, a worldly line of conduct and business, degrading its popular success from the world which "will love its own," and flattering itself with the patronage of men in swelling numbers tantamount to the divine prosperity. Indeed, while it lasts, the verdict of man is what of that?

What all this plane of success captivate the churches? Does it not appear that bodies which capture phenomenal numbers have been most captured by them? That in the world at large, immense enlargement of religious bodies is in inverse ratio to the spirituality of their standard and practice?

What we regard as a lowered standard for modern religious profession is that which is the conduct of religious operations for business undistinguishable from secular—that man-made, man-conducted, man-engineered, man-commanded—sometimes pushed with the violence of haste, in apprehension that this is the God-anointed with the life of his institution.

The change of base from the witness of the Spirit down to man's conductorship is often contended for, and now again voiced by a distant contemporary under the title "Program in Worship" for Friends' meetings. "We would just as well," says he, "undertake to conduct business, a Sabbath-school or a college without set programs, as to conduct a church without one." And again: "There is not a business house in the world that would not soon go into hopeless bankruptcy if conducted on the same theories and unbusiness-like methods that have sometimes obtained among the Friends." If anything has obtained in some meetings resulting in spiritual bankruptcy, and for that reason numerical bankruptcy, the cause has not been the Friends' doctrine of the witness of the Spirit, but in their failure to practice it.

There are indeed grades of church business as business which require the classification of subjects according to times set for their consideration; there also, let the standard be kept aloft: "As it is the Lord's work, let it be done as in his sight." But it would be a degradation of worship from its heavenly places in pure spirit and in Truth systematically to drag it down to the bondage of will-worship and man's manipulations and timing. And that it is worship, which our writer puts on the same level with organized business affairs as such, is declared in his title. Let affairs be conducted by talents for affairs, but our devotional faithfulness in meeting and out of meeting by the leading of the Spirit.

We would—in all tenderness for a generation of members brought up on principles which were introduced under our name a little before members now in service were born—still query whether "we to conduct a church" as per "program in worship," does not concede the whole case of worship and ministry to the basis from which our religious Society was called into being to "come up higher." If its founders' foundation, other than which no man can lay and be right, even the witnessing Christ as our Mediator and Head over all things to his Church—if that living Foundation is to be slipped from under our waiting or vocal worship, and the Society drop down to the human foundation on which plans for worship were conducted before the early Friends' protest arose,—stated courses which now continued in various churches to be run—then as shifters of the foundation we ought to operate under another than the founders' name of "Friends." If "business" policy is now to be in dominion even in the sanctuary, let us consider what other business house in their copying after it would respect the business principle of enterprising members of a firm, if they secede in policy from the founders of the house, and set up trade for themselves in articles and lines which the older firm had scruples against, and go forth without its consent appropriating the name still used by the original partners, and, it may be, some of the trust funds left by testators for an opposite policy. Shall the new firm copy from the popular business houses their business, and from their former partners their sign-board? There is an ethical side to "our Father's business," which we deem the pushers of religious business houses will respect when they see it.

Up to Faithfulness, rather than down to Business, where business would be a downward step from the higher authority; and "diligent in business" as made "fervent in spirit" "by the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him;" and "serving the Lord" as the immediate "Leader and commander of his people"—this is the rallying-call of Life for our religious Society. If we rise to the situation of the Spirit, and comply with his felt behest as his executives, that makes business which is faithfulness indeed. Faithfulness is ever an ascending step. A response to a call from on high, it rises to meet the Speaker of the call every time. It is the practical way of saying "Nearer, my God, to Thee." Faithfulness is obedience to our Father's business as laid upon us. It mounts us up "with wings as eagles." It is the law of an ascending church. Mere business to which man sets himself stays lower down. "Arise and shine, for thy light is come," to be diligently responded to in the openings of the light—is a call which explains our bankruptcy if we have not heeded it, and will recover us only as we throw off our fear of heeding it and are willing in faith and faithfulness to be valiant for the Truth upon the earth. This valor may be exercised in suffering or in other service, but it is a faithfulness which is the fruitful business of a prospering and effective church.

For "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 115.)

In the latter part of Cornplanter's life he showed an increasing aversion to adopt the habits and improved methods recommended to him by the whites, and although he had been prominent in inviting Friends to settle among them, and encouraged his people to observe their advice, yet after the lapse of twenty years and more, a decided change was observable in his feelings. This was attributed by some to the fact that his son Henry, who had been educated in school learning away from the Reservation, and became able to read and write, had, on his return, acted in an unprincipled manner, and by forging his father's name to some important documents, for which he was disinherited by his father, had shown a capacity for evil greater probably than if he had remained in his former condition. Whatever may have been the cause, however, the influence of Cornplanter in his later days, was strongly in favor of the old Indian customs as opposed to schools and other improvements, and in the year 1821, though he was supposed to be then about one hundred years old, he still exercised considerable authority. In a Council held in the Ninth Month of that year, Joseph Elkinton writes: "A general Council of both parties had been requested by those who are in favor of Indian customs, and the chiefs and others accordingly assembled. Cornplanter spoke largely in the Council; he began relative to their people continuing to remain independent, and not submit to come under the laws of the white people, as had been proposed by the President in his late message to Congress; said that it had been concluded upon long since that they should be independent, and it was best to continue so; for it was in vain for them to try to come under the laws, for they would not be able to live up to them. He wished all those of their people who were now in the practice of paying attention to the first day of the week to cease therefrom, and follow their former custom; for it was all in vain to keep First day and have Councils, when by paying attention to former customs they should remember the Great Spirit daily. As it respected the school, insisted that it should be resumed no more amongst them, and wished all their people should cease paying any further attention to the advice and instructions of the Quakers in learning useful trades, &c., for they would certainly bring a charge against the Indians for the services that had been rendered, for we have no instance [says he] of white people assisting one another in the manner the Quakers have assisted us—but if some of the Nation still insist upon their children being educated, they must pay therefor themselves, as is customary among the white people, and the property of the Nation would then be in no danger. Cornplanter said much upon the aforementioned and other subjects, and amongst the rest it was proposed that all those who would not unite in following Indian customs, should remove from this, and settle themselves upon a distinct reservation, and those in favor of former customs should continue at Allegheny, and each party would then be by themselves. They then concluded to meet again in three days and reply to the speech that had been made to them, and accordingly collected together at that time. James Robinson on behalf of those favorable to improvements replied to the speech that had been made by Cornplanter, and said that his party were afraid to oppose the views of the President, and have nothing to do with improvements, because they believed their situation would be very critical and dangerous if they should do so; for to the President they looked for safety respecting the holding of their lands, and if they should be driven off from their present possessions, and sent to the westward, the Indians there were very warlike, and no doubt many of them would lose their lives if they went there; and as it respected the school and their moving to another reservation, they would consider thereof at the approaching General Council to be held at Buffalo."

In view of the opposition of many of the Indians to the school upon their Reservation, it was concluded to erect a building upon the land belonging to Friends, and to teach the children there, notwithstanding the inconvenience resulting to some from the increased distance; and on the 25th of Third Month, 1822, a school was opened at Tunesassa, for day scholars, with encouraging prospects, under the tuition of Joseph Elkinton in a house which had been built for the purpose. On the 30th of Fourth Month, 1821, Jonathan Thomas and family left Tunesassa, and Joseph Elkinton in his notes expresses the desire that he might be directed aright now that he was left alone with these people.

In the early part of Fifth Month, 1822, Joseph Elkinton was joined by Robert Scotton, who had offered his services to the Committee under an apprehension of duty; and whose concern was chiefly to assist the Indians in some of the necessary arts of civil life.

These Friends appear to have been strangers to each other at this time, but under the cementing influence of gospel fellowship they became closely united, and the warm feelings of mutual interest in each other continued to advanced age, and were ended only by death. Many years after they had each withdrawn from this field of usefulness, it was the custom of Robert Scotton, who then resided in Frankfort, near Philadelphia, to visit his friend Joseph Elkinton at his home in this city, often spending weeks at a time, and attending the meetings here, in which as a minister of the gospel, he was occasionally engaged in exercising his gift. They were both at this time members of the Committee, and their interest in the welfare of the Indians, maintained by frequent intercourse with them and each other, remained unabated.

In the notes which Joseph Elkinton made during his residence among the Indians, he records that in the 8th of the Tenth Month, 1821, "One of the natives came here and said he wished to have some conversation with me, and requested that I would inform him on some subjects with which he was not fully acquainted. He began by rehearsing the manner he had been led which induced him to refrain from labor on the First day of the week, (which had now been some time), and said he had experienced satisfaction in paying attention thereto; he had taken notice of their people who had professed to pay attention thereto and found that individuals did not live up to what they said, but were occasionally busy on that day about their secular concerns; the same time after he had refrained from labor upon that day of the week, he visited his friends, and occasionally came to see the Quakers. Time so passed on until last spring an Indian came to the Reservation and recommended the Indians who kept First day to collect together and sing, after the manner of the missionaries, which their people according to the agreement; they had several Councils at that time for said purpose, and it was then dropped from among them; latterly it had again been resumed, and the people collected together at the school house in a meeting capacity; which times they sing, speak, and address the Supreme Being, which course he was not satisfied with; he did not feel easy in joining with them in singing, for he considered himself very poor, and not able to live up to the language that he should make use of, if he saw with the multitude; and the lengthy manner in which the Supreme Being was addressed whilst the assembly stood upon their feet, was also cause of uneasiness to him, and he had also been dissatisfied with the freedom used in mentioning the name of our Saviour by the speaker. These things he had opened in mind upon to the natives, and they were much dissatisfied that he dissented from them, and told him he would not be able to do as the Quakers did, the manner of which he approved.

"He said he found it more advantageous to him to settle down in silence, and meditate upon the Great Spirit; he was also pleased to have speaking, but singing and lengthy prayers were not satisfactory to him. He wished to know the views of Quakers upon the subject, and whether our Saviour had left a command that people should sing to their Creator. He informed him respecting it, and told him that Quakers did not approve of vocal singing, and it was impossible, they believed, for a whole assembly to sing the same thing and all speak the truth, for their states must be diverse and as respected long prayers, and these matters at will, they did not believe they were profitable, but to pray with the Spirit, and "groanings which cannot be uttered," were far more effectual; and preaching they wished to flow from inspiration, which undoubtedly would profit the hearers. I recommended him to keep under his exercise, and as he saw his way the clearness, to move forward, and not otherwise. He wished to know whether it would be wrong for him to cease attending the meetings of the natives whilst they practiced these things, as they were very burdensome to him which I told him would not, and also recommended him not to mind their scoffs and jeers that he might receive from the multitude, and keep the attention of his mind directed to himself who would undoubtedly lead aright. He told me he could not sing any more, and had spoken to his wife to unite with him therein.

The circumstances narrated in the above account no doubt made a deep impression upon the mind of Joseph Elkinton; and a few days later he drew up an address "to the chiefs and warriors on the Allegheny River" upon these subjects, which shows the exercised mind he had passed through for the benefit of these Indians, and his desire to discharge

To All Young Friends.

BY ONE OF THEMSELVES.

ERE let me strive with each besetting sin. Recall my wandering fancies, and restrain The sore disquiet of a restless brain; And as the path of duty is made plain, My grace be given that I may walk therein Not like the hireling, for his selfish gain, Backward glances and reluctant tread, Seeking a merit of his coward dread— But cheerful in the light around me thrown, Making as one to pleasant service led; Doing God's will as if it were my own, Yet trusting not in mine, but in His strength alone." WHITTIER.

has been a matter of regret for some past that as we young Friends leave school many of us lose interest in and utterly forsake the Society under whose shadow we have been nurtured and educated, and seek other fields our spiritual and social welfare. Many times has the cause of this lamentable state been discussed, and much has been done of interest; yet the source of the trouble has not been reached, for the outflow comes unchecked.

We are, as a religious society, no longer grouped and apart from other sects; for our school we study, play, and make friends with children whose parents belong to other denominations—and it is well that it should so—it is good that the great universal truth of Christ should be knit together, even the hands of little children. But this makes necessary that we should early learn to reason as to why we are members of the Society of Friends. How else can we stand when vehement questions threaten to overthrow the citadel of faith? For instance, how many of us when the war fever was at its height—when we were among fellow-Christians who did not grasp our principles of love and peace—how many of us were able to state clearly and decidedly why we felt, aye, knew war to be wrong? How many of us stood firmly beside our standard, favoring neither the one side nor the other, but striving to teach our fellows the true message of love?

much more is done for us nowadays, so many of our Friends are trying to make our way through that it is only just to them and to ourselves that we should endeavor to grasp individually, first separately, but finally collectively, the meaning, the faith, and the beauty of our mode of worship.

There comes a time to most of us when the simple trust of the little child gives place to the reasoning powers of maturer years, when we dream and airy castles totter and fall, and we struggle vainly to re-erect our lost broken idols. Sooner or later the faith of our fathers is ruthlessly attacked by the questioner, doubt; the veil which hid the inconsistencies of life is lifted, and a dull, despairing light that all is not so perfect as we thought strikes to our hearts like the hard cold touch of ice. It is no longer any use to say "our fathers have told us"—we must think for ourselves, or drift. It is this quagmire of doubt and confusion which we must pass successfully, and must pass it by ourselves. Let us face this bravely in the secret of our own hearts, and look within, seeking rather the counsel of God than the aid of men. But whatever we may keep from falling into that lethargic indifference which will lead to a lack of quickening interest, and end in our drifting away altogether from the strongholds of Friends.

We of to-day have far greater independence of thought and action than our grandparents would have considered possible in their young days. Let us not abuse this, to the detriment of our lives and characters.

This is a restless age, an age when the world at large is craving constant change and amusement, the old-time rest and peace are rudely broken into, and the cry for newness which resounds over our country has struck home to the hearts and brains of many of us. The quiet, silent peace of our meetings becomes irksome, and high spirits and quick temperaments chafe against the outward calm when within storm and tumult reign. There was a depth of spiritual life—a sense of "that peace which passeth all understanding"—about our forefathers which we in the rush and excitement of modern life seem unable to attain unto. Do our hearts beat so loudly and our thoughts speed on so swiftly that we are unable to hear in the silence the music of that "still small Voice"? We are too apt to let our thoughts stray, and to think but lightly of the solemn hush in our meeting when, to those who believe, comes the sense of the actual presence of God in our midst. The great cry of to-day is that we may go forward. Let us go forward in all things right and true, but let us not rush blindly or aimlessly onward, dropping as we go, or lightly passing over those things which made the Friends of old strong to resist evil.—Maude G. Tyler, in the London Friend.

How a Welsh Boy Became a Friend.

[By the late Joseph Harrison, of Windor, Pennsylvania, in a letter to Frederick J. Gibbins, of Neath Wales, who sent it to the London Friend.]

My father, William Harrison, worked at Pen-y-daren iron works, Merthyr Tydfil, as a refiner of iron. By some means he left and found employment at Neath Abbey iron works. I was then a boy attending school at Cae Pant Tywell; and having heard of Neath with its shipping, I made up my mind one morning, instead of going to school, to take the other road for Neath, determined to find my father, and see Neath and its wonders. My poor mother not knowing the plans of her only child, put up my dinner in the small basket, and away I went. I reached Neath Abbey about nightfall, and inquired for my father. The old lodge-keeper very kindly gave me the care of a Mr. Bonville. He took me to father, who happened to be on the night turn that week. After a little scolding, father took me to his lodging.

In a few days I heard much talk among the people about the Quakers, and wondered what kind of people they could be, inquiring of my father, who promised when leisure would allow, he would tell me all he knew about them. Leisure came, he told me about their mode of worship, its silence and why; free Gospel ministry, justice, plainness, truthfulness, non-observance of ordinances, hat-homage, women preachers; and explained to me what he thought was a cardinal doctrine with Friends—the universality of grace, or the measure of Divine light given to all, looking back over the years intervening since that day and this hour in which I am writing, what a strange life mine has been. In a few years afterwards I bade farewell to parents, country and kindred, and came, a stranger youth to a foreign country, away from advice, care and restraints of a godly mother and affectionate father. But, thanks to my heavenly Father, the teachings of my father on that strange day never lost their hold of me. However far I wandered, whatever company I was in—strong temptation on the right and left, formal professors or avowed infidels—it made no difference. The measure of Light was with me; turning inward to myself in tavern and grog-shop, the voice of the Spirit could be heard by me; Christ the Light that enlighteneth every man was rebuking, accusing, and striving, also showing the path, and saying, "This is the way." Never could I have peace, never happy in the way of sin or company of sinners, ever different from my companions. Did my poor father but know what effect his conversation would have upon his only son, I think he would weep at the thought of his son being different from most people, for I have been most of my life away entirely from Friends. And he would, methinks, shout with joy and gladness at the thought that he, by the Divine blessing was showing to me the workings of the implanted Word that has proved too strong for all the wiles of the evil one, and all the oppositions that have tried to hinder me in my journey from a wicked world to a home of rest among the ransomed. Always would I defend the truth he taught me. On one occasion willingly did I face danger, rather than compromise Peace principles.

A few years ago I was made known to Friends, who kindly took me into membership; and, although I am living quite a distance from meeting, I attend as way opens. Their company I value, and their kindness to me can never by me be returned. Now, Friend, I ask thee to read this letter in Friend's meeting at Neath if way will open, as an encouragement to faithfulness to sow beside all waters, leaving the increase to the Husbandman. As a tribute I owe to Friends, if I were young, happy would I be to cross the waves and preach (the Lord willing) the Gospel on the very spot at Neath Abbey where my father taught me the doctrines and practices of the Quakers. But I may not: rather may I be called home to my Father's house, to mansions prepared by our Elder Brother, forever to be with Him and His faithful ones.—Sincerely thine,

JOSEPH HARRISON.

HOUTZDALE, Clearfield Co., Pennsylvania, Sixth Month 23, 1888.

This is the sum of all true righteousness: Treat others as thou wouldst thyself be treated. Do nothing to thy neighbor which he would do to thee. Thou wouldst not have thy neighbor do to thee. In causing pleasure, or in giving pain, In doing good or injury to others, In granting or refusing a request, A man obtains a proper rule of action By looking on his neighbor as himself.

—Maha-Mahara.

MAN has to be erected anew in Christ Jesus, if he would have an heavenly mind, and thus be fitted for the Society and atmosphere of Heaven.

AT JACOB'S WELL.

He told me all the things that'er I did,
A thirsty stranger at our father's well,
There came a new born flush like fragrant rose,
To my poor face, oft washed with many a tear;
The deep concern, the gentle hopeful tone,
The sympathetic look, the searching power,
Made me captive in his strange embrace.
Come and see! This surely is the Christ!

H. T. MILLER.

BEAMSVILLE, Ont.

The Churches of Christianity Responsible for the Continuance of War.

If intelligent humanity would be brought for the first time face to face with the scenes of war—unbiased by the false splendor with which it has been invested by historians and poets—there is no doubt but in the light of reason such a mode of adjusting difficulties would be pronounced barbarous and absurd, in every way unworthy of rational beings; and in the light of the gospel it would be recognized as the carnival of revenge and a gross defiance against God, and an insult to the good feelings of humanity. O if men who are accustomed to take the lawfulness of war for granted, could once free themselves from all prepossession and be induced to take up the subject and examine it attentively with the best reason and judgment, testing it by the eternal principles of right and wrong, they in common with the wisest and best men, who have candidly and thoroughly studied this question, would pronounce it a horror of horrors and a crime of crimes. Still more, if they would take the Christ of the New Testament for the man of their counsel, and carefully compare its cardinal law of love, its injunctions to long-suffering, forbearance and forgiveness, its blessings on the peacemakers and the whole tenor and spirit of its teachings with the deeds of war and the dispositions, feelings and motives which prompt those deeds, they would at once recognize the utter incompatibility of war with Christianity, and would wonder that the members of all the Christian churches (with but a few exceptions) have tolerated an institution so Godless, so Christless, so wicked.

We put the question: Have you ever candidly pictured to yourself the fury and evil passion, the carnage and mutilation of the battlefield with the long interminable train of woes that follow—the wounds of bleeding hearts of widows, mothers, sisters—wounds that never can be healed on this side of eternity—and the widespread demoralization resulting from army life and from the presence of an army in any community where the institution of every kind of good society is destroyed? Now, when you have summoned up before your imagination the picture of a battle, with all its concomitants and the ghastly realities of the field; then look up at the calm heavens, look around you on the beautiful, bountiful earth, and behold how peace, and harmony, and order are the laws of God's visible creation. Consult the best feelings which He has placed in your hearts, listen to the silent voice of God when you are out at eventide, open your souls to the gentle teachings of the Holy Spirit, take the New Testament for a guide and carefully obey its teachings of love, and pray your Father which is in heaven to guide you into all truth, and you cannot fail to see and feel that war is utterly wrong, a hideous evil, a crying sin. And yet, if a point of national honor is involved, and you are smarting under a sense of national wrong, you and the whole nation (including the members of the churches) are ready to cry out for war, and when war comes, to sustain it with your influence, your money, and, if need be, your lives. War is a heinous crime of nations, it is a contagious, epidemic madness which fires the blood and turns the heads of whole nations at once.

But my dear Christian friends, this terrible evil could not continue to exist among Christian nations, if the good Christian men were once to look upon it in its true light, through the teachings of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Therefore, we do solemnly arraign the church of Christianity in all its divisions (save a few small bodies who have faithfully borne testimony on this question) as responsible for the continuance of this barbarous institution which entails its woes of lamentations upon the world. The white robes of the bride of Jesus Christ are pure and spotless. But men professing Christianity have bedraggled them in human blood. The skirts of the churches are polluted with the gore of the battlefield, and stained with the tears of the widow and the orphan. War seems to aim at setting up the kingdom of Satan on the earth; and yet it tries to stand behind the authority and powers of the church. It says God-speed to the warrior as he sets out on his mission of death. It asks God's blessings on the impending fight. It offers its thanksgivings at almost every shrine for victories bought with blood. Upon this subject it has lost its original principles, and is responsible for the continuance of war; for by a declaration of its fundamental principle it would stop war among the great Christian nations of the earth.—Geo. S. GRAY, in the Evangelical Visitor.

Saw Him First.

The amount of greeting among ordinary Kafirs is to say "I see you"; to which answer comes back, "Yes." When a native passes a European in the uncivilized part of the country, says Dudley Kidd in "The Essential Kafir," he will frequently anticipate the white man's "I see you," and will start off with a loud "Yes."

Of all ways of expressing sentiment, grunting is the favorite, and the Kafir grunts with great eloquence. His simple grunt can express a whole world of sentiment. After hearing natives express so much by grunting one cannot avoid thinking that pigs might learn to speak.

Kafirs have many very expressive exclamations, such as "Yo!" when they wish to show contempt; "Hau!" when they show surprise; "Wow!" and many other similar utterances. In visiting a chief it is rude to speak first. Accordingly, when we visited a Kafir king, we sat in silence, and pretended not to see him. At length he looked up at us and said, "I see you," and the ice was broken. We granted approval of the sentiment and said the proper things. When the questions began to be a little too personal we told our native servant to fetch the blanket we had brought with us in order to open the chief's eyes.

When we gave the chief the blanket he looked at it and gave a grunt which was one of moderate and guarded approval. He felt the qualities of the blanket with his fingers placed it to his skin to see how warm it would be; he then showed it to his councilors and asked them bluntly what they supposed it had cost. When he was satisfied that it was better than any kept by local traders, he gave another grunt of approval which plainly said "Thanks; I think that on the whole it is no bad; I have seen better, but it will do all the same."

Then he said in words, "Now my eyes are open and I can see you." In fun I began to chaff him and said, "Well, if you can see now, will you tell us what you can see?"

Swift as light came the answer, "I shall know what I see when the night is cold and wrap the blanket about my body."

A native never commits himself if he can possibly help it. After a little more desultory conversation the chief thought it was time to end the indaba, "to hem the fringes of the tal with the thread made up from the sinew of an ox," as their expressive phrase runs. So we hemmed it up.

Science and Industry.

The government carries the names of about ten thousand boys between fourteen and nineteen on its payroll. Most of them are employed as special delivery messengers.

The Monthly Bulletin of the Economic Zoologist published free by the Pennsylvania Department of agriculture comes to us for Fifth Month with its usual wealth of information valuable to country life. Stories of Reptile treatment of Trees injured by freezing, Lice or Rabbits, by San Jose Scale, Fungi Insects; Treatment of Cut-worms, Borers, Caterpillars, Crows pulling corn; also a paper for Bee-keepers, all show how this publication keeps alive to our rural interests.

NEW ZEALAND FURNISHES THE GREATEST GEYSER.—Yellow Stone Park is reputed have the most magnificent geysers in the world but according to a writer in the Scientific American, the most splendid geyser to be found anywhere in the world is situated in Rotorua, in New Zealand. The height of the eruption of the geyser varies from 900 to 1,200 feet. The area of the basin is about two and a half acres, from which it may be inferred that the geyser may properly be called the largest in the world. The geyser plume about twenty-two times each month, is very erratic, and gives no warning when it is about to erupt. The "Inferno Crater" of the geyser, as it is called, which contains a scalding sheet of water, is about 410 feet above the surrounding plain. Rotorua is distant from Auckland about eight hours' travel by express train.

HOW BANANAS RIPEN.—There is an erroneous idea concerning the harvesting of the banana crop, says the Mexican Herald. The statement that four or five crops of bananas are harvested every year, is entirely incorrect. A crop is harvested on an average of every days throughout the year. Each thrifty planter has many suckers or stalks growing from a single root at the same time. One or more bunches of the ripening fruit if cut from le duty to them faithfully. It is as follows:—

To the Chiefs and Warriors of the Allegheyyer:—

It is an awful serious thing, my brothers, to perform worship to God. I have for some a past been much concerned on your act, being very desirous that you should be aright in this important matter.

I want you, brothers, to seek and search yourselves, and know for a certainty that you are in the practice of that which bring peace to your souls, and whether the Maker is pleased with your performances.

Some of you, I believe, have been conded for your souls' prosperity, and have anxious to get into some mode of worship, ch would be pleasing to your Creator.

thers, I wish you may be very cautious be-you move forward. The evil spirit is
's busy, and is anxious to lead people astray.

ant you, my brothers, not to settle down curity, short of coming to a knowledge of blessed will of the Great Spirit concerning which He will most assuredly give you a nowledge of, if you, in sincerity, turn your s to Him, and desire His assistance.

He is very good and gracious to His poor n creature man, and wishes they should come to a knowledge of Him. He will assist and enable us all to serve Him, if we truly re to do so, but we cannot deceive Him; knows the secrets of all our hearts, and we not think an evil thought but it will be wn to Him. How important it is, my thers, to endeavor to serve Him in sincerity.

He will most assuredly call us to an ac-it for all the actions of our lives, whether be good or whether they be evil.

I want you, my brothers, to consider of practice you have lately fallen into, of coling together and singing, and praying ngst yourselves. It is a good thing to to our Maker, but we should first know a paration of heart before we engage in that ul service; it is a serious thing to approach Maker in prayer, unless we are prepared efor, and feel the influence of His Holy it to draw us into the exercise. He will be mocked. He does not delight to be ved into in the wicked will of man. It is er for us to sit down in awful reverential ce before Him, and wait until we feel the ings of His blessed Spirit upon our minds, ch will teach us what to say, before we ertake to address His Holy Majesty.

And I want you, my brothers, to consider ther your conditions are profited by sing-g do you know what you sing? Do you all the language of your heart? If you do do you think your Creator will pay attention to what you sing? How can you, my thers, sing the same thing in truth? Some on will, perhaps, feel your minds in a joy-condition, whilst others of you will feel poor, and be repenting of your bad actions, yet, notwithstanding this, you will join together and sing the same thing. I want you, brothers, to consider of these things fully,
not do them because you see others do so, rather seek for yourselves, and know ther such things are required of you.

I feel anxious that you should get into right path, and if you ask your Creator in sincerity to direct you He will most assuredly do so in His own time, which is always the best time, and after He has been pleased to enlighten your understanding, and you are satisfied of the way in which He wishes you to go, then endeavor with all your might to walk therein, daily looking to Him for assistance, for we are such poor creatures that we are never safe, unless directed by Him, who never, never leads astray. He watches and knows our every action, and well knows when we desire to please Him, but He will not be satisfied unless we try to please Him with our whole heart. He has said we must love the Lord our God, with all our heart, with all our soul, with all our might, and with all our strength.

He will not be satisfied if we only try to please Him sometimes, but we must try every day to please Him, and then it will be acceptable to Him.

"You know, my brothers, that I never insisted upon your doing as the Quakers do. I only want that you should in sincerity of heart, endeavor to know the will of your Maker, and after He has been pleased, then daily and hourly try to live up thereto.

"We know not what hour we may be taken from the world, and it is a matter of great consequence to us to know that our Heavenly Father will admit us into those mansions which are prepared for the righteous, after we leave this world.

"May He, who has been pleased to preserve you until this day, condescend to regard your exercises and lead you into that path which is well pleasing in His holy sight, and you be favored to experience a willingness to walk therein, is the sincere desire of your friend and brother,

JOSEPH ELKINTON."

Tenth Month 12th, 1821.

(To be continued.)

BOASTFUL BUILDING.—"Blow, O winds!
Rise, O ocean! Break forth, ye elements, and try my work!" Such was the boastful inscription put upon the first Eddystone light-house, built by the eccentric Winstanley.

His challenge was accepted, and one fearful night the sea swallowed up the tower and its builder. The next one met a similar fate, the structure and its builder, Rudyard, again perishing together. The third was erected by Smeaton, who built it all of stone, making it a part of its rock foundation, so that the light-house penetrates it as a tree penetrates the soil. Upon this lighthouse no vanishing inscriptions were placed, but on the lowest course were chiseled the words, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it," and on the keystone above the lantern is the exclamation, "Laus Deo!" That structure still stands, a never-falling beacon-light to storm tossed mariners. He who would build for eternity must not set about his task in any vain-glorious, over-confident spirit. He must be careful as to his foundation, building firmly and deeply upon the rock, Christ Jesus, and relying in trust and humility upon Him who alone can enable one to reach a perfect result.—Selected.

For this world the word of God is Christ,
And when we come to die we shall find
The day has been too long for any of us
To have fulfilled the perfect law of Christ.
—H. E. H. King.

Organists and Choirs.

A writer in the Apostolic Times records the following dialogue, saying:—"I vouch for the truth of every utterance here, as having occurred in a preachers' meeting. I will represent the ministers of the different churches by A, B, C, D and E; and the last named letter will stand for myself, as I spoke last.

A.—"Well, brethren, how shall we arrange about the music for this week of prayer?"

B.—"And I presume we will have no difficulty in agreeing upon a hymn-book to be used by all, but the trouble is we can't get the organists and the choirs to agree about anything."

A.—"No, I never saw as contrary a set, nor one into which more jealousies would creep. So far as church music is concerned
I wish I never again could hear of an organ or a choir."

C.—"My experience, brethren, in my work in this city, is simply this. I have had more trouble about the organ and the choir than all else beside."

D.—"You would have been amused, brethren, to see how I engineered to keep out of a mass with my choir lately. I discovered that there were two parties in the choir, differing in their preferences and tastes, and they soon began to run to me to settle it. I replied, Go on and give us anything you please, except Y— and S—, and I won't complain. These are two pieces that I never like in church, but maybe I am a little old fogyish."

E.—"Well, brethren, I am truly glad you are all coming around to the true position on this music question. We have been catering to the vain desires of the world in this matter long enough. Most of your organists in the cities are godless men—(not long since I saw one right from his organ drunk); most of the female choir singers and the organists would as soon perform on Sunday night at a beer garden or dance, if the price be the same; and this class of musicians will ridicule everything as unfit, except some of their pieces, in which they may do some artistic fingering. Whenever my people here want an organ they must get an organ-preacher. I am not one!

"It was then stated that a denomination in the city had recently employed a celebrated vocalist who drew large crowds, but when the sermon began the crowd withdrew and left the preacher almost alone. The show was over, that which was advertised had been exhibited, and yet some of the church thought it rude in the crowd to leave and not stay to hear the sermon.

"Musical entertainments in churches, read-sermons, and sensational announcements as to pulpit themes, have about done the work for our cities on the religious question. It seems to me that we now have a fine opportunity to give the people a pure gospel with a pure worship, singing 'with grace in our hearts to the Lord.' In self-defense we shall have to discard all these follies, and seek the 'old paths.'"

If you know how to spend less than you get we have the philosopher's stone—A. D.
1736.

MANY a lowly life may be as great as Paul's in God's eyes.

Only an Hour.

About 1860 a gentleman from New York, who was traveling in the South, met a young girl of great beauty and wealth, and married her. They returned to New York, and plunged into a mad whirl of gayety. The young wife was a gentle, thoughtful girl, anxious to help all suffering and want, and to serve her God faithfully; but, as "Mrs. L—," she had troops of flatterers. Her beauty and dresses were described in the society journals; her bon mots flew from mouth to mouth; and her equipage was one of the most attractive in the park. In a few months she was intoxicated with admiration. She and her husband fitted from New York to Newport, from London to Paris, with no object but enjoyment. There were other men and women of their class who had some other worthier pursuit—literature or art, or the elevation of the poor classes—but L— and his wife lived solely for amusements. They dressed, danced, flirted, hurried from ball to reception and from opera to dinner. Young girls looked at "Mrs. L—" with fervent admiration, perhaps with envy, as the foremost leader of society. About twenty years later she was returning alone from California, when an accident occurred on the railroad train in which she was a passenger, and she received a fatal internal injury. She was carried into a wayside station, and there, attended only by a physician from a neighboring village, she died.

The doctor who attended her has said that it was one of the most painful experiences of his life.

"I had to tell her she had but an hour to live. She was not suffering any pain; her only consciousness of hurt was that she was unable to move, so that it was no wonder she could not believe me.

"I must go home," she said, imperatively, 'to New York.'

"Madam, it is impossible. If you are moved it will shorten the time you have to live."

"She was lying on the floor. The brakemen had rolled up their coats to make her a pillow. She looked about her at the little dingy station with the stove, stained with tobacco, in the midst.

"I have but an hour, you tell me?"

"Not more."

"And this is all that is left me of the world! It is not much, doctor," with a half smile.

"The men left the room, and I locked the door that she might not be disturbed. She threw her arms over her face and lay quiet a long time, then she turned on me in a frenzy:

"To think all that I might have done with my money, and my time! God's too late now. I've only an hour!" She struggled up wildly, 'Why, doctor, I did nothing—nothing but lead the fashion! Great God! The fashion! No, I've only an hour! An hour!'

"But she had not even that, for the exertion proved fatal, and in a moment she lay dead at my feet.

"No sermon that I ever heard was like that woman's despairing cry, 'It's too late!'"—Selects.

THERE is one tree that always bears fruit. That tree is a good example.

ASPIRATION.

Thy daily duty rightly done,
No matter what the station,
Is preparation well begun
For future coronation.

To do thy part, and do it well,
Though humble toil may bind you,
Will train the virtues that excel
Till nobler spheres shall find you.

'Tis not by sudden bounds we reach
The goal we often sigh for;
'Tis not the dreams we lightly preach
That we would care to die for.

We slowly climb the upward way
And scale each opposition;
We turn the darkness into day
And win by transposition.

And every honest labor brings Us nearer our endeavor,
And all our glad awakenings
Have songs of the forever.

—United Presbyterian.

The Crocodile Story.

Not long ago Freddy went to hear a gentleman talk about crocodiles. This gentleman had been in Africa and had seen very many crocodiles, and he drew pictures on the blackboard that made Freddy fairly shiver with fear and delight. For the creatures were so big and fierce and ugly, and Freddy loved to hear stories of adventures.

One of the pictures was of a great crocodile in the water—near the bank, where it was muddy—trying to get inside of some stakes which protected the little point of land where a boy stood.

The stakes were named "Don't chew," "Don't smoke," "Don't swear," "Don't drink," "Don't lie," "Don't be impure."

The gentleman said that when he went down the Busi river, in Africa, one time, he counted twenty-five big crocodiles in one day.

I wonder if some of you who read this were at his "talk." For this was given to some little boys I know about, not many weeks ago.

"There are crocodiles right in our town," he told them. And you ought to have seen how big Freddy's eyes grew then! "And they try to catch boys and girls, and bite off their arms and legs, and draw them down under the water, just as they do way over the ocean in Africa. The names of our crocodiles are Saloons, and Temptations, and names like these.

"But I'll tell you how to keep safe from the crocodiles on Life's river that are waiting to swallow you alive. There are three ways to be safe.

1. Keep inside the fence that good men have built to protect you. The crocodiles can't get inside that "Don't" fence.

2. Keep in the canoe if you have to go on the water. The name of that canoe is "Church and Home."

3. Keep in clear water. Crocodiles love muddy water, but they dislike clear water. Don't do anything that you're not sure is right. Don't go into temptation—muddy water—when you don't need to. And then you're sure to be safe."

All the little boys who heard this have been hunting up crocodile pictures ever since! But they don't mean to have those big jaws get hold of them, I can tell you."—Teacher's Magazine.

A Town Without a Religion.

Pownal is in the southwest corner of Vermont. Just now it merits notice, and is getting it, in the press, because its story illustrates afresh an old and important truth.

It seems this part of Vermont was settled on the principle that people of similar religious beliefs are congenial and neighborly, and so pleasantly to the same vicinage. So it came to pass that Bennington was settled by congregationalists, Arlington by Episcopalians and Shaftesbury by Baptists. Those professions no particular faith went to Pownal.

We copy from the Springfield Republican "The stamp then given has never been lost. From the first settlements to this day, three towns named have been almost unique among country towns of that size for strength of the churches of the given denominations, and the denominations have almost monopolized these towns.

"These three towns have also been in good repute for progressive civilization. As Pownal, no church has ever been able to thrive there, nor has civilization thrived; though it the town next adjoining Williams College, and two Presidents of the United States have been taught in the same school-house in Pownal, intelligence and progress have not developed among the Pownalenses.

"This spring Pownal has been in the papers as the scene of two White Cap affairs."

If Bennington, Arlington, and Shaftesbury—church towns, pervaded by an influential Christian faith and sentiment—leave Pownal the unchurched and skeptical community, behind them in the march of progress and better life, it is a fact to be noted, pondered, and acted on by the statesman, the political economist, the lover of his country and his kind.

It is beyond question that religious principles, honored and diffused throughout a community, promote order, morality, respect for law, go far to secure the safety of property and person, and are effective guardians of rights and liberties of men.

How infinitely is the atmosphere of Bennington, Arlington and Shaftesbury to be preferred to that of Pownal, highly advantaged in location and opportunities though this churchless community seems to have been.

Truly it is a good thing to know that we believe, what we believe, and why we believe.—Wm. T. Sabine.

BETWEEN John, the bishop of Constantinople, called the Almoner, and Nicetas, a nobleman, some bitter words had passed one day, and they had parted in anger. John had been wronged. Still, as the day was drawing to close, he remembered the words of the Apostle, "Be ye angry and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath" (Eph. iv. 26). He sent a friend to Nicetas with the message: "My lord, the sun is going down." Nicetas understood, hastened to him, and they reconciled themselves, cheerfully, before the sun set. How many there are by whom the sun daily warning is unheeded!—The Lutheran

When the blind heralds of despair
Would bid thee doubt a Father's care,
Look up from earth, and read above,
On heaven's blue tablet, God is Love!—Holme

le stalk, while the other stalks growing in the same root are left untouched, and in plays another of these is shorn of its fruit. The process continues incessantly during the year. In Seventh and Eighth Month it is necessary to cut off the ripening bunches every ten days, while in Twelfth and First Months, but once a month is sufficient; the average throughout the year being practically 15 days.

CHRISTIAN FRUGALITY AND MODERATION.—I met with a man about thirty years ago whose wife did not seem willing to let him live on an income of ten thousand dollars a year, but had to take the consequences of being angry with her from their old home pretty nearly into the woods on the mountain, where he was endeavoring to get extracts into market and instead of knitting her husband a set to work in, she would entertain herself in knitting tassels for the mules' ears. I do not see how the man was to redeem his circumstances; but seated by him on the porch of their residence on a quiet First-day morning he remarked that he admired how members of our religious Society bore unexpected trials with composure; which I answered by saying that it was the work of religion, and I heard there were two things we ought to complain of, that which we could have avoided, and that which we could not have avoided.—A Correspondent.

THE WINTER SLEEPERS.—There are some species of animals that hide away in the winter, and are not wholly asleep all the time. The woodchuck moves a little, and once in a while they take a breath. If the weather is mild at all, they wake up enough to eat.

Wasn't it curious they know all this beforehand? Such animals always lay up something to eat, just by their side, when they go to their winter sleeping places. But those that do not wake up never lay up any food, for food would not be used if they did.

The little field-mouse lays up nuts and grain. Sometimes when it is partly awake on a warm day. The bat does not need to do this, for the same warmth that wakes him wakes all the insects on which he feeds. He catches some of them then eats. When he is going to sleep again, he hangs himself up by his hind claws. The woodchuck, a kind of marmot, does not wake; yet he lays up dried grass near his hole. It is it for you to try? On purpose to see if it ready the first moment he wakes up in spring. Then he can eat and be strong when he comes out of his hole.

J. T. ROTHROCK.—Dr. Rothrock's resignation as Forest Commissioner of Pennsylvania was profoundly regretted by all who feel an interest in the work of forest restoration and preservation. That Pennsylvania has done so much in this direction and has set a splendid example to other States is due entirely to the unselfish and untiring zeal and enthusiasm, combined with expert knowledge on the subject which Dr. Rothrock brought to the work.

Eleven years ago the Legislature authorized the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon the forestry conditions of the State. Dr. Rothrock was made a member of that commission. He was its heart and soul, and his report on the forests of Pennsylvania, their character, value and rapid depletion, led the succeeding Legislature to create the office of Commissioner of Forestry in the Department of Agriculture. Dr. Rothrock was appointed to that position, and his energetic and successful work in this field led a later Legislature to make forestry a separate department of the government, and Dr. Rothrock was very naturally and properly made its head. He is the father of a very wise legislation on the subject of forestry. By his addresses and publications he has accomplished a work of popular education on this subject, so that the necessity of forest preservation and restoration is no longer the fad of the few, but the conviction of the many. The State has been put in the possession of over half a million acres of land ready for reforestation. The work of replanting this land with desirable saplings has begun. The Department of Forestry was well launched on its great work and Dr. Rothrock, whose health has been seriously impaired, now retires and leaves to others the comparatively easy task of carrying on the work he has so well begun.—Philadelphia Press.

In the last analysis, and to go down to the very root of the Christian religion, to be a Christian is not to acquire a notion of God, or even an abstract doctrine of his paternal love; it is to live over, within ourselves, the inner spiritual life of Christ, and by the union of our heart with his to feel in ourselves the presence of a Father and the reality of our filial relation to him, just as Christ felt in himself the Father's presence and his filial relation to him.

The error of Protestantism has been that of substituting the Book for spiritual life, in lieu of regarding the book as an expression of spiritual life and a means of developing spiritual life in others. The error of the Roman Catholic Church has been that of substituting tradition for spiritual life, in lieu of regarding tradition as an expression of spiritual life and a means for development of spiritual life in others.

Items Concerning the Society.

James Henry Tucker, a minister from North Dartmouth Monthly Meeting, Mass., has gone to attend Kansas Yearly Meeting, held at Spring River, and expects on his return to visit some Philadelphia meetings.

Anna B. Crawford, with Jane W. Bartlett as companion, was released by Western District Monthly Meeting of Philadelphia of last week to attend Baltimore Yearly Meeting, and some meetings in its neighborhood.

A minister and an overseer of Western District Monthly Meeting, Philadelphia, have been released to visit a family of members in Oriole, Somerset County, Maryland, and if way opens, hold a public religious meeting in that neighborhood.

A paper which represents the work of a distant yearly meeting says of one of its city meetings that it "has greatly improved its services of song by placing a number of children in the chorus; and that "children have natural tenor and soprano voices, and to have them mingle in the service of song is but natural and right.

The natural tenor of the natural man is, indeed, a natural service. But the Author of His own worship seeks a spiritual service.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.—A Friend who misses an account in this paper of Ohio Yearly Meeting for this year, sends the following:—

Said meeting assembled Ninth Month 24th. The Meetings of the Ministers and Elders, also the Meeting for Sufferings having been held the day before, it was of about the usual size, and the cordial greetings of many from a distance, and near by, was very noticeable. There were three members in attendance from Canada Yearly Meeting, four or five from Pasadena Monthly Meeting, of California, quite a number from all the different meetings in Iowa belonging to Ohio, and several from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. Among them, Rebecca Smedley, a minister with credentials from Media Monthly Meeting, Pa.; Harry Moore, from West Grove, Pa., with credentials from his Monthly Meeting, and Benjamin Vail, from Sixth Street Meeting, Philadelphia, all of whom were favored to labor amongst us to good satisfaction and to the encouragement of many who long for the welfare of Zion.

The Meetings of Ministers and Elders were seasons of Divine favor, especially the one on Second-day morning, and the different sittings were characterized with much love and good feeling. A minister who belonged to Stillwater Meeting mentioned on Third-day a concern which had rested with him for months, to have a meeting appointed on Fourth-day P. M. for the members, and one of the visiting ministers visiting with him in the concern, the meeting was held to good satisfaction. The public meetings were large and much more satisfactory than at some times, as the crowd seemed inclined to keep their seats through the most of the meeting. The usual Yearly Meetings with which we correspond were addressed by brotherly and sisterly epistles. The report of the committee charged with the care of the Boarding-school showed a more favorable standing than last year, and the same Superintendent and Matron were continued with the charge of it.

A very instructive memorial had been prepared concerning our late beloved Friend, Hannah H. Stratton, and was read in both men's and women's meetings, and many hearts were touched at the remembrance of her and her untiring zeal to labor in the cause of Christ, and the query arose, "Who will take up the mantle she wore?" But there seems one here and another there who are qualified by the Head of the Church to bear good tidings to the people, and we are favored with a pure gospel ministry.

The meetings closed on Fifth-day, the 29th, and now that the Yearly Meeting of 1904 is a thing of the past, I have no doubt many can look back over it and feel glad they were there, for although weakness did abound, and the companionship of several dear Friends who had been removed by death since last year, was greatly missed, yet there was felt much unity and harmony and a desire to labor for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of Christ, who is head over all to his church and people.

Notes in General.

But there is room for doubt regarding the theory that any legitimate requirement exists for the formation of a huge system of rifle clubs the country over.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

War, as we see it to-day exemplified, is too horrible to be endured, and all this suffering and slaughter will have been doubly a waste if the whole world cannot learn from it the insensate wickedness of the appeal to arms. With all its scientific invention, it does not belong to anything that we can recognize as civilization. It is a reversion to barbarism.—Bulletin.

No other nation, at this time, can consistently with its own practice, reprove the Russians or the Japanese. They are but doing what all the others are prepared to do—fighting for territorial possessions and commercial and political influence. We have infringed upon one another's interests and have come to blows, as any other nations are liable to do that seek imperial expansion."—Evening Paper.

Charles Wagner, speaking before Presbyterian ministers on the need of simplicity in addressing children says of a pastor: "In the pulpit he speaks in high-flown, fancy words which no one can understand; but before the children! Here he speaks as he thinks."

"A thing which is not interesting when it is told simply, is nothing; our pulpit language is often like putting gold and silver paper around nothing."

Because of the large following which the Abbe Loisy has obtained among the younger clergy in France, the pope has ordered the congregations of the index and the holy office, which condemned the abbe's works because of alleged false interpretations of the Scriptures, to print a summary of all the errors found in the books, each extract to be followed by an official refutation in accord with the theological views held by the Church. It is proposed to distribute the publication widely in the French dioceses most affected, so that the clergy may gain a correct idea of the motives which led to the prohibition of the works. This is the first time in the history of the Church that any Roman congregation has been called upon to justify its actions in the case of a forbidden book. It is also the intention to secure from the abbe, a formal retraction of his errors, or, if he will not make one, to proceed against him according to the law of the Church.—Boston Transcript.

In his speech at Mohonk, Justice Brewer of the Supreme Court said, "I do not think I was ever more impressed with the power of public opinion than when I was a member of the Venezuelan Commission appointed by President Cleveland. That commission had absolutely no power; it was called to investigate and report on the true division line between the British possessions and Venezuela. If it had ever declared what in its judgment was the true line, that judgment would have bound no nation, neither England nor Venezuela, nor the United States. Yet no sooner had the commission been organized than the two governments of Great Britain and Venezuela each proffered all possible assistance. So, too, did the governments of Holland, Spain and France. What did this signify? It signified that the two nations especially interested, although they knew that whatever the conclusion reached by our tribunal, it would have no legal force, yet felt that the great power of public opinion was behind it."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A despatch from Washington of the 21st inst. says: In the course of two days the President will dispatch formal invitations to the Powers to name delegates to the new peace conference to be held at The Hague. The Powers are to be invited to suggest a date or dates for the meeting of the conference. Secretary Hay submitted a draft of the invitation to the Cabinet to-day.

A case has lately been tried in this city involving the use of chemicals to preserve meat. The defendant was Charles W. Spencer, proprietor of the Kansas City Beef Company, charged with selling Hamburg steak adulterated by the use of sodium sulphite as a preservative. So important was the case, that the governments of Holland, Spain and France, including a representative of the Government. The preservative which was used as acknowledged by the defendant contained 88 per cent. of sodium sulphite, 10 per cent. of boracic acid and 2 per cent. of bicarbonate of soda. In trade called Three X preservative, it was known privately to the manufacturer as "boron compound." A verdict was rendered of having sold meat adulterated with sodium sulphite used as a preservative. Testimony of experts as to the harmfulness of sodium sulphite in the small quantity used in this way was not unanimous.

The total estimated crop of wheat in the United States for this year, according to the American Agriculturist, is 554,713,000 bushels, against a crop of 703,000,000 in 1904. The wheat crop of the world, according to the most trustworthy authorities, is short about 250,000,000 bushels.

M. G. Brougham, first Commissioner of Education in Porto Rico, lately stated in regard to school education in that island: "The population of nearly one million souls was so inadequately educated under Spanish rule that 88 per cent. were classed as illiterate. When civil order became operative in 1900 there were scarcely 600 teachers in school in operation, and not a single building in the island that had been erected for public school purposes. In 1901, one year later, we had 835 schools, about 40,000 children enrolled and an average daily attendance of 75 per cent., being a larger percentage than that of any State in the Union, Massachusetts, with 76 per cent. alone excepted. A series of agricultural schools was projected for rural communities. The wealth and the hope of the island is in its soil. These schools are built on good farmland and are equipped with tools, seeds, books and maps. Portions of each day the children till the soil under the personal guidance of the teacher, acquiring a practical insight into the value of production and the necessity of securing representatives of life insurance companies in Philadelphia. It was stated that according to a compilation just completed covering thirty years' experience of the insurance companies in this country, the death-rate is largest among non-abstaining naval men, next among members of the army. The death-rate among negroes is ten per cent. higher than that among whites. Of the foreign-born population, those who come from Sweden and Norway are the longest lived.

The qualifications of a voter in Louisiana as required by recent changes in the Constitution of that State, in addition to those of citizenship and residence, are that the person shall be able to read and write by established franchise in his own name, or that he is the son or grandson of a person entitled to vote on First Month list, 1867. These provisions have been in one form or another, it is stated, under consideration by the Supreme Court of the United States, which has declined to disturb them. These provisions were adopted in order to disfranchise the negro, which was done by establishing qualifications similar to those in force in some of the most advanced of our Northern States. With a common-school system everywhere, these qualifications are not beyond the reach of any negro whose intelligence is sufficient.

Louisiana had a total male population of voting age, by the census of 1900, of 325,943; of whom 147,348, or about 45 per cent., were negroes. Of these over 61 per cent. were illiterate, the proportion of illiteracy among the whites being 13.

A recent despatch from New Orleans says: The completed registration figures for Louisiana show how efficiently the suffrage amendment and the poll-tax legislation have eliminated the negro vote of the State. The total white vote registered is 102,723, against only 1147 negroes. The poll-tax has completed the elimination of the blacks from State politics. Under these circumstances the power of the Republican party in Louisiana is completely broken. Only about 35,000 whites have allowed themselves to be disfranchised along with the negroes, either because they do not value the ballot or because of neglect or carelessness on their part. The great mass of the negroes, illiterate and illiterate, have not registered at all.

In a recent discussion of the method of purifying drinking water by the use of copper, the Director of the laboratory plant physiology of the United States Department of Agriculture, spoke on the subject of copper, in the forms of both metal and sulphate, as a bactericide. Efficiency, harmlessness and cost, he said, were the three cardinal points to be considered by a community troubled with water of such a nature that it was either vegetable or bacterial. He read letters from various communities testifying to the efficiency of the process, again cited scientific authorities as to the harmlessness of the solution, and explained that reservoirs holding 80,000,000 gallons had been treated at a cost not greater than $50. The health officer of the health department of the Chicago public schools stated that there are now 35,000 divorced persons in Chicago, and they are the parents of about 40,000 children. A majority of the boys and girls committed to the corrective institutions of Chicago are sons and daughters of divorcees.

H. Howe, in a recent article in Parson's Magazine, states that the average American consumes in the year four sheep, nearly a sheep to every man, woman, and child; in 1900 the consumption had been reduced to fifty sheep to every 100 persons—a reduction of almost a half. More remarkable still has been our turning from pork;

118 hogs to every 100 persons in 1850 to forty-three in 1900. We are still large eaters of beef, how though here, too, there is a reduction of twenty per cent. from twenty-five heaves to 100 persons in 1850, to ten heaves in 1900. In 1880 the supply of eggs was scarce for each 100 persons, and in 1900 it reached 40 dozen. In the same period the supply of dairy produce increased by more than threefold. The only dairy product showing a decrease is cheese; fifty years ago each pound was four and a half pounds annually; in 1900 the amount had dropped to one-half pound. Reducing all these products to their common denominator—the pound—deducted, it is found that our meat diet as a nation had increased in fifty years by about thirty-six per cent. To look at the table of vegetable products consumed we find that it has increased eighty per cent. during the century. All this, however, does not mean that we eat all the meat consumers, for, as a matter of fact, "we still the greatest meat eaters in the world."

The strike of the Sheet Metal Workers in this city, lately been settled. It is said to be the first pre-arrangement ever signed by the chartered bodies of employees and employers. The ending of the strike, it is said, is of national importance, as 70 per cent. of all the metal work in this country is done in Philadelphia. It is estimated, is made in this city. The men have obtained an increase in wages, a half-holiday in the summer months and a guarantee that only union men shall be employed; the employers have gained, apparently, the great advantage of immunity from all labor troubles in the future. The strike of the coal miners at the Shabko in Manchuria lasted 10 days.

Fighting has been continued around Fort Arthur, fierce bombardment has been going on, it is reported without cessation for six days.

A fleet of Russian war-vessels proceeding from the Baltic Sea, in passing through a group of British fishing vessels on the North Sea, about 220 miles from the East coast, fired upon several of them without provocation, killed or wounded several of the fishermen. This has caused great excitement in England, and grave apprehensions that unless it is immediately disclaimed by Russia, and an apology offered, very serious consequences will follow.

The people residing upon the isthmus of Panama complain that by the interpretation put upon the treaty negotiated a year ago their country is practically cut into parts by the establishment of the tract from ocean along the course of the proposed canal as a separate State. They want the United States to permit them to ship their domestic produce across the zone directly. They also ask that they may have access to the zone with their products for sale to the thousands of workmen soon to be employed there. They say that when the treaty was agreed to they thought they were to pass and forth over the canal zone as if it were their own country. On the contrary, they were treated as foreigners and have no privileges there whatever. Secretary Hay has been sent by the President to endeavor to adjust the differences on the spot.

A despatch from London of the 18th says: The duty of Great Britain for an indemnity of $3,750,000 for the Tibetans appears likely to lead to a prolonged delay in the settlement of the indemnity. The Chinese demand their final ability to pay the indemnity within the three months first stipulated, and Great Britain has now proposed that the payments be made at the rate of $50,000 per year until the whole sum is paid the British retain possession of this valley, which is the key to Tibet. The nations are said to approve of the proposal by China's opposition to the ratification of the treaty is increasing.

NOTICES.

Bible Association of Friends in America.—The annual meeting of the Bible Association of Friends in America will be held in the Lecture Room of Park Street Select School, 140 North Sixteenth Street, on Fourth and Eleventh Month 23, 1904, at 8 o'clock P. M. Friends generally are invited to attend the meeting and take part in the proceedings.

WM. T. ELKINTON, Secretary.

Westtown Boarding School.—For courses of persons coming to Westtown School, the steamers meet trains leaving Philadelphia 7.16 and 8.18 A. M., and 2.50 and 4.32 P. M. Other trains are met when required. Stage fare, fifteen cents; after 7.30 P. M., twenty cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, West Chester, phone 1144.

EDWARD G. SNEYLEY, S. T.

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS
122 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 5, 1904.

No. 17.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

Orders from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Clear for Action.

Last week certain ships of war, in prospect of a foe which might have to be encountered, were ordered to have their "decks cleared for action." Every article on deck not indispensable for the business in hand must be got out of the way, for if not a help it would be a hindrance to the movements of the men going for victory.

Just so when an army on land clears itself for action, every soldier rids himself of every article not of direct use for the battle. Baggage, reckoned among the hindrances in the march, would be fatally so of the fray, and hindrances was the name, "impedimenta," which the Romans gave to their baggage.

The church militant is held captive to its baggage in proportion to the paraphernalia of ritual, equipment, elaborate services, creeds, artificial employments, or entangling alliances with the world and its selfish interests.

Accumulated rubbish, expedients useful as crutches of their day and ever afterwards as dispirited forms rusted into her being, brought to be the church herself, means of clearing the place of ends, superfluities fastened on as essentials till essentials are condemned as superfluous,—may make a deck that usurps more wind than the sails, a stowage of the bulk that leaves no room for the engine-fires to breathe. Yet obstructiveness of furniture is not a matter of olden times; are innovations tacked on equivalent to the clearance of the deck,—but whatever old, new or old, is a non-essential to the action to the captain's living word, a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence. Simplicity! The simplicity of the eye kept clear to its hidden aim, simplicity of the ear to hear the word of authority, simplicity of heart to be valiant to manifest the simplicity of equipment for effectiveness cleared of surplus, however showy, that bewilders; simplicity, the mark of perfection for the mariner of life's voyage and victory—the beautiful garment of salvation for the soldier of the cross, single to the one thing needful, determined to know nothing in the face of the world but Christ and Him crucified—simplicity is the condition of a church or a Christian cleared for action.

For "no man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please Him that hath chosen him to be a soldier." "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." "If a man therefore purge himself from these (perishables, vessels of wood and of earth), he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use, and prepared for every good work,"—cleared, indeed, for action.

Singleness to the witness for Truth—singleness of heart as unto Christ,—is the law of straightforward efficiency in the use of the weapons of our warfare which are not carnal but mighty. The simple life is the strong life, the illumined life,—the life before which principalities and powers that serve as rulers of the darkness of this world, hide their diminished heads.

According to all the proprieties of our origin and profession, it should have been a Friend who had spread forth to the world the spirit of the simple life which in his own style was written by Charles Wagner, not always on the gospel basis of a Friend. It should have been a Friend who as a voice crying in the wilderness, even in the complex jungle of the modern superfluity of naughtiness, had voiced the simple life. We regret no Friend was found raised up for or responsive to that mission in a message speaking in this generation's own tongue wherein it was born. Yet we fear the average worldly conformity going on under the name of "Friends" has lost them their voice and testimony. But as to Charles Wagner's rendering of a concern ancient with us, its key-note has struck the popular, and even penetrated the fashion-sick ear of the times. His "Simple Life," we read, is "attracting more attention in New York than has been shown here to any book published in recent years. Thousands of people are reading the book, ministers are using it as a text for sermons and commending it to their congregations, and it is expected its good influence will be widespread."

May the wave thus started be more than a fad, and Friends as living epistles of the simple life by the single eye be made a body full of light, a permanent committee of Christ reinforcing the good work.

Clear the decks of sin and its decorations, "lay apart all superfluity of naughtiness," of ecclesiastical ostentation, of personal lust of the eye and pride of life; receive with meekness the inspeaking, soul-saving Word; clear the decks and clear the hulk, from stem to stern, from heart to topmast and all external, of every defilement of flesh and spirit, and the banner of victory through Christ over self will be a formidable sign to all our soul's enemies and to foes of a purified church, to keep safe distance from a gospel ship armored with faith, and making war in righteousness by the deliveries and sword of the Spirit.

The Blood is the Life.

"The life of the flesh is in the blood" (Lev. xvii: 11). Christ gave thirty-three years of sacrificial life. His whole life was a conscious sacrifice culminating in its last drop on the spear-point at his cross; an atonement. "I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life" (Lev. xviii: 17). He himself says, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." This is contrasted in the context with the material "manns of the wilderness." It is a spiritual view of the whole life as typified by his flesh and blood. We are to embody his life on earth as though we had become flesh of his flesh and blood of his blood, his blood which is his life circulating through our flesh, ruling body, soul and spirit; by this we become at one with Him, realize the at-one-ment (see John vi: 48-58).

Christ gave a pure life, even to the last drop, for the redemption of man from sin—the pure for the impure, that we may see God (Matt. v: 8). The lesson is that we may so realize Christ's life in the flesh as to reflect his character, carry with us something of his light and love as a pure and attractive atmosphere known and read by men. The early Christians lived Christ, reflected Him. Paul said: "To live is Christ" (Phil: 1: 21). While the man Christ Jesus declared that his powers and words were all from God, the Father, he was obedient unto death, our example—the Bread of life and yet God manifest in the flesh.

H.

For "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 123.)

On the 12th of First Month, 1822, Joseph Elkinton notes in his diary that the chiefs and warriors had taken the preceding night some liquor from two of the natives who had been in the practice of keeping it for sale. On the 15th he writes: "One of the natives came to my dwelling early this morning, to inform me that it was the wish of the chiefs of both parties that I should attend their Council at Cold Spring; they had concluded to destroy the liquor that had been kept on the Reservation by the natives, and wished me to be a witness to it. I accompanied him; we reached the place, and after waiting some time, the Indians collected together in Council, the liquor that had been taken possession of by the chiefs was brought into the Council House, and after an address made by Robinson stating their views, the barrels were broken by an individual appointed for the purpose, in the presence of the Council, and the liquor cast away; some little resentment was apparent by one of the individuals who had kept the liquor during the speech of the chief, otherwise the Council was conducted in an orderly manner. It appeared to be the determination of the chiefs and warriors to keep liquor from off their lands, and they destroyed the liquor and burned the barrels in the Council House.

"After the liquor was destroyed, I was requested to write a letter to a neighboring justice of the peace, informing him of the transaction of the Councils, and what their determination was respecting keeping liquor from off their lands; also to write a few lines to a white man who keeps a tavern in the neighborhood requesting him to desist from selling liquor to the Indians.

"I told the Council of the satisfaction I had experienced in seeing the chiefs of both parties together, and both uniting in endeavoring to put liquor from among them, encouraged them to persevere in removing bad things from among them.

"Toward the close of the speech made by the chief relative to their conclusions, I saw the animated determination visible in him, which is so characteristic in him, or of the Indian, for, as he turned to the individual who had been appointed to destroy the liquor, he told him in a very determined manner that if he hesitated at all to do it, through fear or otherwise, he himself would attend thereto, for he did not intend that all their counselling should be for naught."

In the year 1821 and 1822 a difficulty arose between the white people living near the Cornplanter Settlement in Warren County, Pa., and Cornplanter and his descendants respecting the taxation of his land. As a gift from the Legislature of Pennsylvania, the old chief believed it was his own, and not subject to any demands of this kind, and refused to pay the taxes which had been assessed upon it, in common with the other real estate in the neighborhood. The dispute had run so high that a resort to force had been threatened, which the Indians were intending to resist.

In this situation of affairs the assistance of Joseph Elkinton was called for, who notes under date of 21st of First Month, 1822: "Started this morning for Cornplanter's; was overtaken on the road by two of the chiefs, who were likewise going to attend the Council. Arrived at Cornplanter's, and the subject of taxes was soon taken into consideration; a number of the natives were present; many questions were asked relative to it.

"Cornplanter said that at the close of the Revolutionary War the Government had told him that Indians should be free and independent, and now the white people were laying tax upon them, and he believed it originated with those white people who lived in the neighborhood, or otherwise it was the doings of the present Government of Pennsylvania. I told him that it had long been a law of Pennsylvania that all freeholders should be taxed for their land, but that it had never been put in force against them until now, and I wished to know what he intended to do in the case. Much was said by many of the natives relative thereto; I told them it was a very important case, and it would not do to be trifled with. It was concluded that each one should give their views. I told them I would give mine, and after that should feel easy whether they united with them or thought different. I told them I believed it would be best to endeavor to settle the present demands, and petition the Governor to exonerate Cornplanter from paying any more in future; probably he might see fit to refund the present demand against them. I told them there was no doubt a company of white men would come and take their cattle by force if something was not done by them respecting it, and I felt very much concerned for their welfare, fearing war would take place between them and the white people, and if that should be the case, their situation would be a sad one.

"After I had mentioned my ideas, some individuals spoke to the case, and Cornplanter inquired if I would tarry all night; I told him I would if it was his request; he wished it, and said I could lodge with the white people, who lived hard by, and he would bear all expenses for supper and lodgings, and they themselves would have a Council, and see what was best to be done, and in the morning would inform me.

"Was comfortably accommodated by the white people, who appeared much pleased that I had come to endeavor to settle the difference."

"After getting breakfast," Joseph Elkinton notes, "went to Cornplanter's; he told me they had concluded to pay some tax, to gratify the white people, but would only give what they thought proper. I labored hard to explain to them the nature of the thing; that we had to accede entirely to the sum we were taxed with, and it would not answer to pay the thing that we thought proper. After a time the old man acceded, but said he could not pay before he received his annuity from Government. I told him I thought it would be best for him to go to Warren and see the constable and justice of the peace, and propose his views to them, and probably it might be settled. He said he was willing to go, and asked if I would write for him. I told him I was anxious that no difficulty should take place, and would accompany him if he wished. He was pleased with my offer, and we accordingly went on horseback. We saw the justice of the peace and the constable, who had mustered a number of men to accompany on the morrow to collect the tax by force arms. Cornplanter made a speech to the two officers, stating that Indians had been called on before to cast into the tree of the white people, informed them of the cause of the Revolution, his interview with the Government at the close thereof, and much to similar import, and at length stated his views to them relative to the proposed mode of paying his taxes for this one time, and was acceded to by the justice and constable. I felt my mind much relieved, and in the evening the old man expressed his satisfaction the difficulty was settled." On the 27th of First Month Joseph Elkinton mentions: "was informed by another native, in the evening of the morning, that at a late Council few of the chiefs of both parties, Cornplanter expressed himself much more moderate towards the opposite party from him than for some time been the case, as it respects the education of their children, also in relation to their collecting together on First days, recommended moderation towards them, that they did not interfere with the others' duties. He also remarked that many thoughts had been with Cornplanter at Conowong being the means of saving the lives of children, and the natives were now pleased with my being there. I told him I felt the difficulty had subsided, as was not the case, but as for anything I had done towards it I considered it of little account, any further than that the natives might see that the white people had their welfare at heart."

Application was made to the Governor of Pennsylvania by Cornplanter that his land should be exempted from taxation, and on the 12th of Fifth Month, 1822, Joseph Elkinton writes that he had received a visit from Cornplanter, "who showed me a letter he had received from Government, which exempted him from paying taxes for his land, which pleased him. The old man appeared friendly and open."

(To be continued.)

LEAD ME UNTO THY HOLY HILL. — As soon as I followed, I thought: "Why must we some future realization of this glorious vision be there no peace possible here and now? God's hill only a thing to be looked for to?" And instantly the answer came: "No; God reigns now, and wherever He is seen and known there is His hill of strength and peace. Though I cannot see Him with eyes, He is here, if only I accept His guidance, yes, God the Lord guides us not only to the dear future place but to the sanctuary of His universal presence. He is everywhere, particularly He dwells in the hearts of children if they are humble and contrite. Surely that is a wonderful guidance! Now on the Holy hill to which He leads us, we have full trust, of service, of sacrifice, of friendship! The hill of ever ripener knowledge ever deeper love, ever truer consecration. Floyd Tompkins.

Heaven is kind to the faithful heart,
And if we are patient and brave and calm,
Our fruits shall last, though our flowers die.
—D. M. Child

PER PACEM AD LUCEM.

not ask, O Lord, that life may be pleasant road;
not ask that thou wouldst take from me
weight of its load;
not ask that flowers should always spring beneath my feet;
how to well the poison and the sting of things too sweet.

one thing only, Lord, dear Lord, I plead, and eye might—ough strength should falter, and though heart should bleed
through Peace to Light.

not ask, O Lord, that thou shouldst shed
all radiance here;
e me but a ray of peace, that I may tread
Without a fear.

not ask my cross to understand,
ly way to see;
ter in darkness just to feel Thy hand
nd follow Thee.

is like restless day; but peace divine like quiet night;
d me, O Lord, 'till perfect Day shall shine
through Peace to Light.

—Adelaide Anne Procter.

The Protection of our Pigeons and Fowl.

The following is a law, righteous as far as does, for the protection of pigeons and other and constituting the violation of its provisions a misdemeanor.

Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey: Any person who use a live pigeon, fowl or other bird for the purpose of a target to be shot at, or for amusement or as a test of marksmanship or shoots at a bird as aforesaid, or is artfully to such shooting or leases any building, room, field, or premises, or knowingly permits the use thereof for the purpose of such shooting shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to a penalty of $50 for each violation of this Act, and to an additional fine of $25 for each pigeon, fowl or other bird shot at or killed in violation thereof; but nothing in this Act shall be held to apply to the shooting of game."

Others besides our New Jersey subscribers may have occasion to be interested in the above article from the New Era, of Riverton, N. J.:

A wise and just law, in the passage of which Governor Murphy was personally active, was voted at Trenton last winter, prohibiting the killing of live pigeons for sport in New Jersey. Immediately after the passage of the law there was considerable talk about convincing it in an attempt to prove it unconstitutional and the test shot held recently by members of the club was the first step in an effort to annul the law. Neither these two persons are residents or property owners in the vicinity of the club, which is a well-known resort for sportsmen of New York and Philadelphia.

A letter of thanks, addressed to Governor Murphy for his activity in securing the passage of the bill, was signed last June by residents of the Borough of Riverton owning real estate in the neighborhood of the club grounds regarding an assessed valuation of $250,000.
It would seem eminently fitting that the wishes of so large a number of persons, vitally interested in the welfare of the community in which they live and own their homes, should have proper consideration in this attempt to revoke the pigeon law.

"In the two towns of Riverton and Palmyra, with a population of about 5000, there are not at present five active members of this club, and the membership of the board of managers is composed of men not residents of Riverton —the latter having been the case for several years. The management of the club is largely in the hands of persons who have no financial nor personal interest in the welfare of the State, and who are not residents of our State.

"A true sportsman will seek his game in their natural habitat, the duck on the river, the birds in the woods; not stand on the lee side of a club house, sheltered from the wind, and shoot at a dazed pigeon, thrown by artificial means from a trap.

"In the name of Justice and Humanity let the trial have the full measure of real justice for which the State of New Jersey has become justly famous."

Trouble Made Beautiful.

Most of the shells of the oyster are pearly in the interior; and as the true pearls are merely morbid growths, they may produce pearls of various qualities. The formation of pearls is caused by the introduction of irritating substances, such as grains of sand, between the mantle and the shell. The irritation causes the animal to cover the obnoxious objects with layers of pearl, which generally attach the foreign body to the interior of the shell. The Chinese produce pearls artificially by placing substances in the position just described; and we have seen some shells to the interior of which small metal images were attached in this manner by the pearly secretions.
When we look at a pearl, we look at an annoyance which has been ennobled. The oyster by itself is of merely nominal value. But the result of the oyster's own treatment of irritation in this world—the pearl—is something "of great price." Apart from this, its pecuniary worth, the gem has a moral significance.
It suggests that trouble may be made beautiful, and reminds us that among mankind some martyrs are more remembered by the glory which they invested in their sorrows than by any other portion of their lives. Biography has its moral pearls, which have been treasured long after the creators of them have perished, just as the material pearls are valued long years after the oysters have been discarded.—Great Thoughts.

To bear my share of ills
Without undue complaint;
In toiling on the hills
To lift them up who faint.
To spread hope where I can,
To give joy where I may;
To strive to be a man
Who shall be missed some day.

To do my best and know
That if my best must be
But little, the world's woe
Is not increased by me.

—S. E. Kiser.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Redemption of the Gang Spirit.

"Lynchings multiply, and in some instances grow more atrocious. Last year they numbered 104, or two a week. This is amazing, as well as of a horrid record for a nation that boasts of its laws and of its humanity." Such was the statement which appeared in "THE FRIEND of the 1st of this (Tenth) Month. To some of us, who have for years past seen the results of a bad environment upon children of tender years, it is not amazing to hear of the breaking out of mob violence now here and now there;—one might say, in the very strongholds of the peaceful living and peace-loving members of the human family. Mob violence can be traced to what is known as the "gang spirit,"—which comes of the waste material of neglected childhood;—the moral and physical wreckage floating here and there like driftwood. That which is fed and fanned into flame beyond the sway of law, and humanity—it is lawlessness in its extremity of power!
Again and again we are shocked and startled by some horror; but aroused public sentiment subsides with the assurance that "better enforcement of law will prevent a recurrence thereof." Enforcement of law comes after;
—in most cases, long after the trouble begins; and does not reach the source from which the supply is continually being replenished. In "THE FRIEND" of last week attention was called to the fact of "Removal of Criminal Propensity by Surgical Operation," through a procedure of what is called the "Juvenile Court."
Enforcement of "law" need not have been resorted to, to find the cause of the trouble; had "humanity" reached the point of practical result in the prevention of criminal tendencies by physical examination and treatment of childhood showing symptoms of such "propensities." Moral instruction, together with physical treatment, has much more of humanitarianism in both procedure and effect than court trial and record. Friends, especially, are better fitted to appreciate the significance of these facts than those whose training has been in different channels. The dignity of law is upheld by Friends in peaceful living; in the spread of peace principles by example;
(if further action is not open to them) by in-culcating peace principles into the souls of their children, and in the moral and physical protection of their bodies. This is, in part, the following of Friends—at least those deserving the name—by living up to the high profession; but there is a broader opportunity right at hand; in the community where congestion has set its seal upon innocent childhood in an environment from which there are few (if any) chances of escape. Some may question the advisability of educating these little ones "above their life station," but, none can question the right and duty to give them moral and physical protection, and instruction which tends thereto. Strikes of working people are fed by the "gang spirit," no matter how "leaders" may strive to prevent the evil. Excitement to riot is to be feared wherever the lack of moral stamina (in other words, self-respect in the individual) is the predominating characteristic; hence the pressing need of inspiring it in young children—if they are to be the "hope of the nation."

Not only peace, but temperance in all things, can be moulded into the tender nature of the very young! Unfortunately they are not begun with young enough;—when the school age is reached the character is practically formed, and extra effort may count as naught. Sanitary homes are necessary to right living; and, it should be in the power of humanitarians of all religious sects, to unite in improving the environment of the poor and the degraded, not only by occasional visitation and investigation, but by permanent protection in dangerous localities; and care which must reach even the most neglected children before they are placed upon criminal record.

MARY HESTER GRUBB.

Tenth Month 10th, 1904.

How to Write.

Write what you think, rather than think what to write. Thoughts which kindle your heart will melt the hearts of others. Ideas that stir the writer will wake up the reader. Write facts. There are whims, fancies, and fictions in abundance. Tell what you have seen and know, rather than what you imagine or believe.

Write as fast as you can. Jot down your ideas anywhere with pen or pencil on a scrap of paper, and when you have time write them out more fully.

Lay your article aside for awhile and keep the matter in mind, and add anything you happen to think of, and after an interval look over your notes and manuscript, and re-read, re-write, interline, improve and condense the whole.

Write your articles carefully on one side of the paper, using small sheets, so that if you wish to re-write one, it will cost you little labor. Then read it over by yourself aloud, and mark every word that does not read smoothly, sound well, or exactly express the idea. Make needful changes, or re-write the whole again. Put in all quotations from the Scriptures in full, copying them unchanged from the Bible, for most of your readers will never stop to hunt the references up.

Write on smooth white writing paper, with a coarse pen that will make a plain mark, and use black ink, as black as midnight. Leave an inch blank at the top of the first sheet, and then write the title of the article, leaving an inch blank down the left side of the page; and where a new subject commences leave two inches blank at the beginning of the first line of the paragraph.

Write your title in fine letters at the top of each page, and number the pages 1, 2, 3, and pin or stitch them together at one corner. Keep the pages folded and smooth. Never roll them up but fold them flatly across the sheet.

Lay your work aside awhile, and then read it over. Correct the spelling, grammar, and punctuation. Put a capital letter at the beginning of each sentence and a period at the end. If you do not understand punctuation omit all other points, and leave them for the editor to insert.

Do not say, "I write in a hurry, please correct all mistakes." You have more time to correct them than an editor has, and if you have not made an article just as good as you possibly can, the editor may possibly burn it. Some people suppose that editors are employed to correct manuscripts for blundering and lazy writers. This is a mistake; they are employed to keep such writing out of the papers.

It is said that Newton wrote his chronology over fifteen times before he was satisfied with it. Many articles by experienced writers are re-read, and re-written again and again. New beginners ought not to expect to do work with less pains than experienced writers.

Do not write poetry. Most who try do not know what poetry is, and poetic prose is far better than prosy poetry. Do not write long articles. This is an age of short stories and telegrams.

Never ask an editor to return a manuscript. Keep a copy for yourself. With scores and hundreds of letters piling up before him to be attended to, he has something to do besides hunting up old manuscript, received, rejected, buried, or burned up long ago. You think it is a very small thing to ask a busy editor to write a letter informing you of the fate of your last article; but suppose he had a hundred letters to answer and read, should he be obliged to read your manuscript which he never asked for, and then write a letter about it to the neglect of other and more important matters which demand his attention?

Do not be angry if your articles are rejected. Many persons have lived to wish their early writings had been burned up rather than printed. A cobbler's first pair of shoes are not likely to be in the best style, and it takes more skill and longer practice to write a good article than to make a good pair of shoes. There are a hundred times as many good shoemakers as there are good poets or authors. If you are not willing to work as hard to write an article as you would to make a shoe, do not expect to succeed as a writer, and if you cannot bear criticism and rejection, you are not fit for an author, and may as well know it at first.

Write plainly; make every letter distinct, especially all names of persons and places. Some tired printer has to set the type for every article, and all that is saved by using pale ink, poor paper, writing finely or cross-ways, to save postage, will cost the printer in toil and delay, fifty times as much money as you will save.—The Common People.

ON GUARD.—If you ever go to a fort, you will always find a soldier on guard. He is called the sentry, and it is his duty to see that no enemy enters the fort. If the sentry is caught off his guard, he may be put to death for neglecting his duty. This is necessary, for it is important that no enemy ever be allowed to enter the fort.

Every boy should always be on his guard, for there are enemies who are trying all the time to get into a boy's life. Some one has said that a boy should be ironclad in his whole body. His ears should be ironclad against impure words; his hands against wrong-doing; his feet against going into bad company; his eyes against bad books and pictures; his tongue against evil-speaking.

A boy who wants to guard himself against all these enemies needs Jesus Christ as his great Captain, and with his help, there will be no need to fear any foe, however strong.—Boy's World.

FOUR "THE FRIEND"

Some Sinister Results of War.

The editor of The Christian, of Boston, giving some matter designed to illustrate Sherman's blunt characterization of war, alludes to an incident of the bloody struggle in the East which was lately told by Prince Radziw, an eminent Russian, who had just returned from the scene of the fighting. The account says:

"A party of six hundred Japanese had reached a position from which they could neither advance nor retreat, raised a white flag in token of surrender, but the infuriated Russians disregarded it and continued firing upon them, while the Japanese in the recessed at such a token of weakness, began firing at their own brethren, and then under the combined fire of friend and foe hundred men sunk down in death. For four days afterward, fluttering handkerchiefs, raised mute appeal by the wounded men slowly dying of thirst and starvation, were disregarded those inside the fort, because they dared not venture out to aid them. At length the hand ceased to move, and war had done nothing. Tennyson tells of a certain 'Six Hundred' that rode into the mouth of hell at Iwakava. No poet will describe the pitiable end of these six hundred Japanese, shot down by friend and foe; but the boys whose blood is stirred by reading, 'The Charge of the Light Brigade,' and who are encouraged to play and imitate armed camps, need to have a little of the horror of war brought home to them.

While it is true, as shown by the editor of The Christian, that the Japanese, particularly in the earlier conflicts of this war, had manifested a strong desire to deserve the opinion of the civilized world by their treatment of the wounded and the prisoners who fell into their hands, yet the publication of a number of later ferocious episodes such as the foregoing, would seem to give color to saying that "mankind is only two days away from barbarism." Similarly, the above queries, while conceding that a large proportion of the young men who entered our army in 1861-5 were moved thereto by high motives, how it happens, if it be not through the process of moral degradation induced by indifference in fighting, that when two or three soldiers are gathered together, we will likely to hear, in lieu of the former kindly sentiments, the details of petty thievery or reprisal upon the enemy. This part of the subject is thus illustrated from home testimony very recently given:

"During the Grand Army Encampment, Boston in August," says the article, "an old soldier told the writer of an incident in the war of 1861-5, equalizing in horror any reported during the present conflict in the East. A soldier was thrown down, thrust through the body with a bayonet and pinned there, while in his struggles to escape his feet described a circular track in the dust about him. He was left thus dead, and his comrades so found him: in the next battle they neither asked nor gave quarter, but fought until they exterminated the company they believed to be responsible for the deed. This was not in Manchuria, but in the United States of America. Who can tell how much of the present reign of lawlessness in the uth, the horrible outrages of burning men, or of hanging them and shooting the dead bodies, may be due to that war a generation ago? The babes who then sucked hatred from their mothers' breasts are now grown to the stature of men, and seek to revenge themselves upon the negroes for the humiliation and defeat of that awful struggle, and our civilization has gone back three hundred years, and even governors of States encourage the brutal prejudices of mobs. War no exaltation, but a debauch, from which a nation even though victorious comes out with seeds of weakness."

That which has just been quoted concerns one of the reflex influences of what has been spoken of as "a righteous war," never there was any," receives apt corroboration in a letter which came to hand last week. It is written by one who had been assailed for years with his father in the publication of a religious paper in the South, although he had served for awhile as paymaster on a government naval vessel. He writes:

Being thoroughly concerned on the subject of Peace, at home as well as abroad, I have year written three articles upon what I deemed to me pertinent themes, but they have been declined by official Methodist papers. My belief, in bare outline, is that the South is a race conflict in store; the negroes are very bad, but they have been made so by the whites' treatment of them. The negro is said to be dishonest, and so it is, as such, I am convinced; but I am also satisfied that such dishonesty originated in their desire even up for what the whites had cheated them out of. (Besides, the negro is truly an active being). To my certain knowledge the negroes are regularly defrauded throughout the country districts of the South. There are innumerable ways of cheating them, with paying them a cent less than is promised, n."

J. W. L.

Out from the joyous springtime
Into an endless spring,
Just as the young birds learned to swell
And the year's new birds to sing;
Just as the storms had lifted,
Just as being was sweet,
Into the veiled hereafter
Glided the willing feet.

Out from the love that holds her,
Swift to the tideless main,
With only a wave of the vanished hands
For the hearts that plead in vain.
Art sad that the stream was narrow,
Dost mourn that the way was short.
That her bark obeyed the Pilot
And drifted down to Port?"

Out from a peaceful summer
Into a surer bliss,
From the life that shows so plainly here
To a grander far than this;
Not one remembrance broken,
Not one old love to cease,
Out from the joys that waited
Into the waiting peace.

purpose may be righteous, but not so the way of its accomplishment. John Woolman foresaw the end of slavery "terrible things in righteousness." The war itself terrible, awful, and not in the way of the Christian's honor, being as Isaiah says, as "every battle of the Lord, with confused noise and garments rolled in blood."

GROWING OLD.

Old,—we are growing old;
Going on through a beautiful road,
Finding earth a more blessed abode;
Nobler work by our hands to be wrought,
Freer paths for our hope and our thought:
Because of the beauty the years unfold,
We are cheerfully growing old!

Old,—we are growing old:
Going up where the sunshine is clear;
Watching grander horizons appear
Out of clouds that enveloped our youth;
Standing firm on the mountain of truth:
Because of the glory the years unfold,
We are joyfully growing old.

Old,—we are growing old:
Going into the gardens of rest
That glow through the gold of the West,
Where the rose and the amaranth blend,
And each path is the way to a friend:
Because of the peace that the years unfold,
We are thankfully growing old.

Old,—are we growing old?
Life blooms as we travel on
Up the hills, in the fresh, lovely dawn:
We are children, who do not begin
The sweetness of living to win:
Because heaven is in us, to bud and unfold,
We are younger, for growing old.

—Lucy Larcom.

The Use of Tobacco.

The efficacy of Divine grace in enabling one to abstain from the use of tobacco is strikingly illustrated in the following narrative concerning the late Isaac W. Hampton, a glass blower of Millville, N. J., who became widely known for piety and zeal in the promotion of the cause of vital religion. He had in early life been addicted to many forms of vice, and being of a very active mind and possessed of an unusually strong personality, he exerted a wide influence upon others, especially his fellow workmen, who, like himself, were walking in the path whose course is downward toward the chambers of moral degradation and spiritual death. But having through the mercy of the Saviour been led to see the end of the wicked, he experienced such a change of heart as to induce him to abandon completely his former course and to endeavor to make known to others the joys of salvation, which are made known to those who by faith accept the promises of God in Christ Jesus.

So strongly was he addicted to the intoxicating cup that for years he was rarely found under its debasing influence, and its abandonment was one of the first steps in the new life upon which he now entered; though, as he was wont to say, it was only by the grace of God he was enabled to resist the temptation to drink, which remained constantly with him. He was also an inveterate smoker and chewer of tobacco, and although recognizing to the full the necessity to the Christian of a life of self-denial, he had for a considerable while after his conversion regarded the use of tobacco as harmless, until the following incident took place. He was on the eve of departure for New York, where he had engaged to visit Water Street Mission, an institution for the reclamation of fallen women, when the will of his gracious Master was distinctly made known upon the subject of his relationship to this habit.

He had provided a number of cigars for the journey, and while enjoying himself in the smoking car the thought came, "What will those Water Street Christians think of me, professing the life of faith as I do, if they see me smoking?" The thought was dismissed at first as an unimportant one, feeling that it was the approbation of God rather than man he was seeking. He settled the question with himself by saying: "Nowhere does the Word of God (Bible) prohibit the use of tobacco." Just then occurred to his mind that verse in Corinthians which says, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." He took out his Bible and said, "Clearly I have no right to wound the consciences of my brethren in this matter; therefore I will not smoke before them, or let them know that I use tobacco in any way." As he turned the leaves of his Bible his eye rested on that verse in the same epistle which says, "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." He said, half aloud, while the cold perspiration started out on his brow, at the thought of the sin he had been ignorantly committing, "Had I not better give up the use of it altogether?" "But can I," he thought, "suddenly break off a habit whose foundation was laid in boyhood?" The words, "My grace is sufficient for thee," or, "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it," came into his mind and decided him once for all. He threw his cigar out of the car window and bowed his head in silent prayer to God, asking to be delivered from this sinful habit. From that time to his death he never used tobacco again, and often said to his friends that all desire for it was then taken away.

Selected for "THE FRIEND."

Jane Pearson.

Jane Pearson, daughter of Jonathan and Jane Gibson, was a native of Cumberland, and died at Whitehaven at the advanced age of eighty-one, in the Third Month, 1815.

It pleased the Lord, when she was young in years, to work upon her heart by His good Spirit, and to awaken her to a sense of the importance of a religious life, and of the awfulness of eternity. She early loved to read the Scriptures, and especially the New Testament, and was deeply affected in reading of the sufferings and crucifixion of our blessed Lord. Her father dying when she was young, the education of four surviving children devolved on their mother, who manifested a pious solicitude and concern for them, by the care she bestowed on their education. She was of a lively turn of mind, and of warm and affectionate feelings, and in early life was strongly inclined to gaudy, but submitting to the powerful operations of Divine love, these natural propensities were, in great measure, brought under its restraining influence.

In the year 1757, being then about twenty-two years old, she was married to John Pearson of Greysouthern, a religious young man. In the course of several succeeding years, she passed through much secret conflict; her distress of mind was often very great, and the provings of her soul very deep; but in due time she was enabled to yield obedience to the power of God inwardly revealed, and, in the year 1773, first appeared as a minister, very acceptable to her friends.

In the following year her husband was removed by death; this was a heavy affliction, and a few remarks in a testimony which she wrote to his worth may be unsuitably introduced here: "Oh, my loss is inexpressible! His kindness, his nearness in a religious sense, cannot be set forth by me; his compassion, his patience towards me, his condescension to my weakness in my infant state, cannot be penned. For indeed I had gone through various and deep provings; many weary years had passed over my head whilst I was under the preparing hand of my God." Not long previously to this event she had lost her two youngest children by the small-pox: five survived their excellent father, some of whom were taken away in early life, and the others at different periods after they grew up; but they all died before their affectionate mother.

Jane Pearson was diligent and exemplary in the attendance of meetings. Her ministry was sound and edifying, and though she spoke frequently, and sometimes at length, she was particularly concerned that she might not go beyond the pure openings of the Holy Spirit. She was deeply impressed with the solemn nature of public prayer; and her offerings in this way were remarkably powerful and fervent. In conversation she was lively, affable, and instructive, being endowed with an excellent understanding. She retained her natural cheerfulness to very advanced years, and her mental faculties were unimpaired to the last.

It will be obvious, from this brief memorial of her tribulated life, that she partook largely of outward affliction and conflict of mind; but through all, her faith continued steadfast, and she sought to place her whole trust in the mercy and goodness of Him whose ways are all in infinite love, and in wisdom unerring and unfathomable. He who had been the guide of her youth, and her support in seasons of great extremity, was at times graciously pleased in her declining years, both in her silent waiting before Him in religious meetings, and in her secret retirements in her own dwelling, to break in upon her with His life-giving presence; to grant her the evidence of His love, and an undoubted assurance that when the trials of time should terminate, she should be admitted to an inheritance incorruptible that faadeth not away.

Not many weeks before her death a friend taking leave of her, she seemed affected, and said, "Though I drop tears, I am not left comfortless. No; we have not followed cunningly-devised fables. I think what I feel might convince the whole world. Oh, it is marvelous! it is marvelous!" At another time she requested that her two granddaughters, being all the family she had, would not grieve after her; but would rather rejoice that she was released from all her sufferings. "For I believe," she added, "that at my dissolution, death will have no sting, nor the grave any victory."

On the 17th of the Second Month, 1815, being much tried with infirmity and pain, she said with earnestness to those about her, "Join with me in petitioning the Father of mercies to relieve me from my sufferings. Oh, that I had wings like a dove; for then I would flee away and be at rest."

Very early in the morning of the 20th her cough became troublesome and her breathing much affected. About this time she was thought to be exercised in prayer, but the words could not be understood. She quietly drew her last breath about three the same morning; and there is every reason to believe that she entered into the rest prepared for the people of God.

Science and Industry.

ONCE, at least, in each twenty-four hours nature gives us an opportunity to exhibit a most splendid faith; that is the time of sleep. Worry by night is more of a wickedness than any of us realize. Perfect faith abandons everything to God, self and burdens together. It is not possible at all times to lay aside our troubles with our clothes; but it is the normal thing to do. And it is a habit that we ought to cultivate.—Bishop Brent.

FROM A SINGLE INSTANCE, WHAT A HOST OF EVILS.—A few years ago says Harper's Weekly, a scientific person in Massachusetts imported some caterpillars that interested him, and kept them in a bottle, but one day the bottle tipped over, and some of the caterpillars escaped into the scientist's garden and presently stocked it with gypsy moths. To catch them and their descendants the Bay State has since spent about a million dollars of public money. They have cost it many millions of dollars beside in damages. The old method of fighting them was to find and destroy the cocoons. The State finally gave that up, much to the regret of many of its citizens. The bugs have since increased very much and carried destruction into the woods. It is now proposed to fight these pests in the latest style by breeding parasites which will attack them. That method is recommended by one Koebel, of Alameda, Cal., who tried it successfully in that State for white scale. The Massachusetts Forestry Association favors the experiment, which will not cost much, and Koebel will doubtless be invited to bring his parasites to Massachusetts and sick them on. The whole country is concerned in the experiment because a Massachusetts Congressman has invited Congress to declare the gypsy moth a national enemy and to appropriate $250,000 to fight him. The parasite cure is a modern wonder and has been affective in cases of great moment. The experiment says it will not wipe out the gypsy moths, but will keep them down. The boll-weevil may presently be restrained by the same methods.

CIGARETTES LEAD TO CRIME.—That cigarette smoking has something to do with leading a boy into crime seems to be proven by the fact that of ninety boy criminals who were arrested and locked in jail within the last six months, all but two were victims of the cigarette habit. Those of the boys who were induced to give up the habit were reformed, and when released on parole, lived aright and did well. The few who could not be broken of the habit turned out badly when given a chance to do better.

These facts are contained in a report submitted to the Men's Union of W. C. Johnson the probation officer of the county jail, Kansas City, who has charge of the boys in the and the boys released on parole. This recovers the six months ending Third Month W. C. Johnson says in his report that of ninety boys incarcerated in the jail in the six months, not one was at work or at school when arrested, and all but two were cigar fiends.

We sometimes hear boys of 12, 15 or 20 years of age, declare that they cannot give up cigarettes and often they have not sufficient energy or will-power to even make the tempt. Sad, indeed, is their fate; I wonder, my brother, slaves to this insatiable monster, the cigarette. This poison of nicotine finds its way all through the blood and gives it a very unpleasant odor. It injures the nerves of the heart, and thus weakens its healthy action. This is called "bacco heart." In fact, tobacco is one of the most virulent poisons in nature. A single cigarette dipped in hot water and laid upon the stomach produces a powerful effect on mere absorption.

The youth who was smoking a cigarette near the monkey's cage took another one in his pocket. "Would it do any harm, asked, "if I should offer him one of these?" "Not a bit," responded the attendant. "Wouldn't touch it. A monkey isn't half as foolish as he looks.—Chicago Tribune.

OUR SOURCES OF SULPHUR.—An interesting report entitled "The production of Sulphur and Pyrite in 1903" has been prepared by Pratt for the United States Geological Survey and is published as an extract from the forthcoming volume of "Mineral Resources, 1903."

The greater portion of the world's supply of natural sulphur is obtained from Sicily, of this production the United States consumes by far the larger amount.

The sulphur imported into the United States is used chiefly in the manufacture of Sulphuric acid and in the paper trade, while that from France and Italy is employed for agricultural purposes. The increase in the production of Sicilian sulphur has stimulated the manufacture of sulphuric acid from pyrite and bismuth to cause a substitution of pyrite for natural sulphur employed in the manufacture of paper pulp. In a few instances in this country, sulphite paper mills are obtaining their sulphuric acid from smelters treating pyritic ores. Up to the present the largest increase in the production of pyrite and its use in the place of sulphur has been in the manufacture of sulphuric acid for the fertilizer trade and for refining petroleum.

Dr. Pratt Devotes some space to a description of occurrences of sulphur in Louisiana, Texas, Arizona, Nevada, California, Utah, Alaska. The deposits in Sicily, Japan, Mexico, Chile, Peru, and Spain are also mentioned. The countries that may become extensive exporters of sulphur are Mexico and Chile. It is probable that the United States may have to depend on importing a portion of its sulphur consumed.

Considerable space is given to a description of the production, exportation, and price of Sicilian sulphur and to a description of four methods used in Sicily in smelting pyrite ore.—Bulletin of United States Geological Survey.

How many errors are occasioned by the distinction of mankind to dogmatize in religion,— frame theories of their own, on points not revealed to us, and which we can never comprehend, until that solemn period when the veil shall be removed, and we shall know even also we are known. In the meantime it is part of the true believer, to receive, with humility, the mysterious truths of Christianity, to rest in the assurance, that what may appear to our finite understandings incomprehensible or even contradictory, will be found in perfect harmony with all the valuable attributes and adorable perfections of God. But human wisdom is unwilling to wait; so, systems are proposed, and the simple truths are perverted about that which it is of little importance to them, individually, and, whilst there may be some danger of neglecting those plain, practical, heart-searching truths, that ought to press on our most serious and attentive consideration.—Selected.

It is true to God who's true to man; wherever wrong is done
the humblest and the weakest, 'neath the all-encompassing sun,
wrong is also done to us; and they are slaves
most base whose love of right is for themselves and not for all their race.—James Russell Lowell.

Items Concerning the Society.

From the limits of Poplar Ridge Quarterly Meeting, Elizabeth Meckel, a minister, accompanied by her, Elizabeth, Jesse Meckel, and by Martha is visiting some meetings in and about Philadelphia. And Ferris Halleck, with Rebecca Meckel company, has been laboring within the limits of the Muncy Monthly Meeting, Pa., on her way to its in and near Philadelphia.

There are sometimes asked what boarding place or lodging there is in Washington suitable for Friends Christian simplicity. The following letter is received from L. C. Rines, of the Elsmere; confirmed on inquiry of a resident of that city:
"We being Christians, think it meet to seek your operation, working together to make known a lodging place where no liquor is sold and things are done decently and in order. A clean abode with pleasant surroundings where ladies can sojourn in ease and comfort, at reasonable rates, 1408 Street, N. W., Washington, D. C."

The Peace Association of Friends of Philadelphia has done the country a service by publishing in a pamphlet of 46 pages Tolstoi's great Letter on the Sino-Japanese War,—a most impressive indictment of all war. There are signs of this producing its mark as an epoch-making message to Christendom, proclaiming unto man its trumpet-
ing. "Bethink yourselves!"

Isaiah Noah Worcester's "Solemn Review of War," published ninety years ago, is reprinted in the issue of Peace for Tenth Month. This presentation of war is said to have aroused the Christian community as it had never been aroused on this subject.
The result was the organization of the first peace societies in this country and in England. We repeat its mention of the Society of Friends as follows:

There are two sects of professed Christians in this country peculiar in their opinions respecting the lawfulness of war and the right of compelling others by violence—the Quakers and the Shakers.
The Quakers, does it appear from experience that their bearing spirit brings on them a greater portion of injury and insult than is experienced by people of other sects? Is not the reverse of this true in England? There may, indeed, be some instances of such gross depravity as a person's taking advantage of their pacific character to do them injury with the hope of impunity; but in general their pacific principles and spirit command the esteem of even the vicious, and operate as a shield from insult and abuse. How seldom, too, do children of a mild, forbearing temper experience insult or injury, compared with the waspish who will sting if touched? The same inquiry may be made in respect to persons of these opposite descriptions of every age and in every situation of life, and the result will be favorable to the point in question.

Should any deny the applicability of these examples to national rulers we will produce one example undeniably applicable. When William Penn took the government of Pennsylvania he distinctly avowed to the Indians his forbearing and pacific principles, and his benevolent wishes for uninterrupted peace with them. On these principles the government was administered while it remained in the hands of the Quakers. What then was the effect? Did this pacific character in government invite aggression and insult? Let the answer be given in the language of the "Edinburg Review of the Life of William Penn." Speaking of the treaty made by Penn with the Indians, the Reviewer says, "Such, indeed, was the spirit in which the negotiation was entered into and the corresponding settlement conducted that for the space of more than seventy years, so long, indeed, as the Quakers retained the chief power in the government, the peace and amity which had been thus solemnly promised and solemnly never was violated, and a large though solitary example afforded of the facility with which they who are really sincere and friendly in their views may live in harmony with those who are supposed to be peculiarly ferce and faithless."

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.—Held this year at Earle-ham, Iowa, commenced with a meeting for worship on Fourth-day, the 12th of Tenth Mo., and closed on the following Second-day. Although the attendance was smaller than on former occasions, harmony and love prevailed throughout the different sittings. Harry E. Moore, a minister, accompanied by his father, Clarkson Moore, both from Pennsylvania, were the only Friends in attendance with credentials from their home meetings; but quite a few were in attendance from different parts of the land belonging to other Yearly Meetings, whose company and sympathy was felt to be a strength.
—Swaneger Mirror.

Further Account.—At a Yearly Meeting of Friends held at Earleham, Iowa, by adjournment from the twelfth day of the Tenth Month to the seventeenth of the same, inclusive, 1904.

Clarkson T. Perrose, clerk, and James E. Gordon, assistant clerk. A meeting for worship was held in the forenoon, Tenth Month 12th, which proved to be a very satisfactory and tendering occasion.
The dear Master condescended to be with the gathered assembly.

In the afternoon the Yearly Meeting convened to transact the weighty affairs of the church.
Epistles were read from Canada, Ohio, Western held at Sugar Grove, near Plainfield, Ind.), New England (held at Westery, R. I.), and Kansas Yearly Meetings of Friends. An epistle from North-Carolina Friends, who are striving to maintain the doctrines and testimonies and practices of Friends, as promulgated by George Fox, William Penn and others, was also read, although it was directed to the clerk of Iowa Yearly Meeting. The reading of these epistles, bearing, as they did, words of sympathy, encouragement and a desire that the waste places of our Zion might be built up, was felt to be both strengthening, refreshing and encouraging.

A committee was appointed to prepare essays of reply to those Yearly Meetings with which Iowa was in correspondence; also one for the Friends of North Carolina, if the way opened for it.

During the consideration of the state of Society, as shown by the readings of the queries and answers, excellent counsel was banded forth. Friends were encouraged to attend all their meetings, those held near the middle of the week, as well as those on First Day. It might take quite an effort on the part of some to do this, but Friends were reminded that King David would not offer an offering unto God that cost him nothing.

Respecting the training of children in plainness of speech, behaviour and apparel, a concern was expressed that it was just as important now as ever it was. Parents were encouraged to look after the literature in their homes. That there is so much issuing from the press of to-day that is of an injurious character, that those having the care of the youthful minds need to be on the watch.

The book committee for the distribution of the approved writings of Friends, were encouraged to faithfulness in this line of duty. The banded forth of even a tract, under the divine blessing, had been the means of changing a wild young man of the world from the broad way into the straight and narrow, that leads to eternal life.

Committees having the selection of teachers, both for the preparative and higher schools, were encouraged to be very careful in their selections; to secure those that were not only qualified to teach, but were good examples to the dear children in their every-day life.

The meetings for worship on First-day were felt to be seasons of Divine favor. On First-day afternoon the house was taxed to its full capacity, and some standing in the doors. Quietness and solemnity prevailed throughout the meetings. Salvation by Jesus Christ was proclaimed; that He was the way, the truth, and the life; that no man cometh unto the Father but by Him, the true and living Vine; that there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we may be saved, than the name of Jesus Christ. The invitation to all, as expressed in Revelations xxiii. 17,—"The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that hear-eth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come.
And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely," was revived. "Whosoever will," the invitation was as full as it could be. The parable of the prodigal was revived. That the love and mercy of our Heavenly Father was very great. All were tenderly and lovingly exhorted to repent, for we all have sinned and come short of the glory of God.
There is balm in Gilead, and a Physician there.

The committee to prepare essays of epistles reported they had prepared epistles for all the meetings that they were in correspondence with; also one for Friends of North Carolina. These were read and approved. A few Friends were named to prepare a minute of the exercises of the meeting, if way opened for it, to be printed with the extracts of the meeting. They produced a minute which was satisfactory to meeting [but lack of space crowds it out of our present number].

The business of the Yearly Meeting having been transacted in much harmony and love, concluded to meet at West Branch, Iowa, at the usual time next year. U. C. H.

Letter from a Correspondent.—Iowa Yearly Meeting was nearly as well attended as it usually is when held at Earleham. One feature of the meeting when held at West Branch being the increased number of Friends belonging to Hickory Grove Quarterly Meeting in attendance. Notwithstanding the truth of the above, Hickory Grove was by no means unrepresented, a goodly number of their members being with us, as well as several from other Quarterly Meetings, whose company and fellowship was felt to be a strength to the meeting.
The company of these dear friends both in and out of meeting, and the satisfaction of sharing with them the blessings so freely bestowed upon us at this time, was felt to be mutual; and the joy at thus sharing them was enhanced thereby; and as the loaves and fishes handed to the multitude when bled by the Master were more than sufficient to feed them all, so our mutual love is not weakened by extending it to others.

The vocal exercise of ministers in attendance was not so extensive as on some former occasions, yet it was characterized by a good degree of life, which was shown by the communication of one so remarkably fitting, and rendering complete that of another. This being the more remarkable when the fact is noted that one of the ministers (a dear old friend, whose earthly pilgrimage must be near its close) is almost totally deaf, so that she could not hear one word that was said. Yet her testimony was in full accord and fellowship with that of the other ministers.

The public meetings on First-day were well attended, and an interest in what was handed forth was manifested both by the orderly deportment in meeting and the numerous comments and inquiries afterwards. The periods of silence were also felt to be seasons of profit by many. The youth were earnestly and affectionately entreated to yield themselves to the yoke of Christ while in the morning of their days, and not to put off the Divine visitations, being assured that His yoke is easy and His burden light. The invitation to so yield themselves is extended to all, none being withheld. The grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared unto all men. The word spoken through the prophet is verified, "All shall know me, from the least to the greatest." We all have access to that which is within the veil, for our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, having broken down the middle wall of partition, has opened the way into that which is within the veil, where He ever liveth to make intercession for us.

Encouragement was extended to those who are tempted and tried, that they continue faithful, and yield not to the enemy. For as we overcome we grow in grace, and more strength is given and we become comparable to stones fashioned according to the purpose of the great Master Builder.

The faithful performance of the daily duties incident to this life, humbly looking to the Master, day by day, and hour by hour, for strength to surmount the obstacles that beset our path, is the best preparation for the life which is to come. The reading of the epistles brought our distant friends of other Yearly Meetings afresh to our remembrance, and these greetings of love and unity were felt to be of great value when put forth in the life. That this might be the case at this time was felt to be the concern of the meeting.

The consideration of the state of society occasioned deep exercise, the many deficiencies as shown by the answers to the Queries being cause for humiliation and heart-searching inquiries of, Is it?

The subject of a guarded education for the youth continued to claim the earnest consideration of the meeting.

In taking a retrospect of the Yearly Meeting after the lapse of two weeks, the impression that perhaps remains most vividly on the mind is the entire harmony and love that prevailed throughout the sittings, unbroken by a single note of discord. This precious covering seemed to continue with us and follow us in a good way to our homes during the week of Yearly Meeting. H. S.

EARLEAM, IOWA, Tenth Month 26th, 1904.

I slept, and dreamt that life was Beauty;
I woke, and found that life was Duty,
Was thy dream, then, a shadowy lie?
Toil on, sad heart, courageously,
And thou shalt find thy dream to be A truth, and noonday light to thee.

—Ellen Hooper.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A despatch from Washington of the 30th ult. says: The Secretary of State, John Hay, has carried out the President's instructions relative to proposing a second Hague conference. The note not only contains the words of the President, but also the substance of the plates the reassembling of The Hague conference for the consideration of questions specifically mentioned by the original conference as demanding further attention, such as the rights and duties of neutrals, the inviolability of private property in naval warfare and the bombardment of ports by naval forces, but goes further by practically indorsing the project of a general system of arbitration treaties, the definition of contraband of war and the establishment of an international congress to meet periodically at prescribed intervals.

The subway built in New York City for the running of underground railroad trains was opened for travel on the 27th ult. Nine miles of it are now in use, and the remainder of a total of fourteen miles, it is expected, will be ready in about three months. Starting at the City Hall, it runs in a generally northerly direction to 103rd street, where it crosses the main line, on a ramp northeastward, passing under the Harlem River, and the other continuing in a northerly course to its terminus. It has been constructed under a crowded city, requiring the solution of such problems as those involved in the displacement of hundreds of sewers, many of them great main trunk conduits; masses of intricate and interlaced electric wires, gas, water and steam pipes, without seriously interrupting them. Quicksands, strongly flowing springs and long forgotten streams were frequently met with. Throughout it is lined with white tiles. Electricity is used in moving the cars.

W. H. Wiley, Chief Chemist of the Department of Agriculture, has declared that 85 per cent. of all whiskeys commonly used in this country were adulterated.

The report of the Commissioner of Education for the fiscal year ending Sixth Month 30, 1904, shows that 16,009,361 pupils, or 20 per cent. of the entire population of the country, attended the public schools during that year. As compared with the previous six years, this percentage shows a slight decrease in the number of pupils, as compared with total population. The cost was $3.15 per capita of total population, and $22.75 per capita per pupil. The report shows that last year 1,578,632 negro children were enrolled in the common schools for that race in the forty-six States and the District of Columbia. The enrollment in 1877, the first year statistics were taken of the negro schools, was 571,506.

FOREIGN.—On the 24th instant the British Government sent an urgent note to the Russian Government respecting the attack by the Russian fleet upon British fishing boats on the North Sea. In addition to the claim for indemnity for the vessels and compensation for the wounded and pensions for the widows of those killed, the British Government will, it is said, demand an ample apology and assurances that other British shipping which may fall with the Russian squadron shall not be submitted to similar treatment. King Edward received from London a copy of himself a cable message, expressing deep regret, and a practical acknowledgment that Great Britain's peremptory note will meet with a reply conceding every demand for apology for this act of aggression, compensation for sufferers and punishment of the officers responsible for what is everywhere considered to have been a gigantic blunder. The settlement of certain points in reference to this matter has been referred to an international commission under the Hague Convention. The Commission of Inquiry will, it is understood, make a thorough investigation to ascertain the facts, particularly whether or not there were Japanese vessels in the North Sea; whether, even if there were not, the Russian naval command was in a position of such a nature that it would warrant them in believing that vessels of the enemy were in the neighborhood and intended to attack them. The Russian Government has ordered the detention at Vigo, a port of Spain, of that part of the fleet which was concerned in the incident, in order that the naval authorities might ascertain what officers were responsible for it. This case is regarded as by far the most important which has yet been referred to the Hague tribunal. It is now believed that the Russians mistook their own torpedo-boats for Japanese vessels, and that, laboring under this delusion, they fired into their own vessels, injuring several, probably sinking one of them and wounding several Russian officers.

Fighting in the neighborhood of Port Arthur has continued, and also in the neighborhood of Mukden, between the Russians and Japanese. It is stated that Japan has taken steps to raise $385,000,000 in order to prosecute the war with Russia.

H. Parker White has lately published an article upon conditions in the Philippines, where he had spent four months, summing them as follows: "We have, in fact, destroyed the public buildings of the country; inflicted continuous crop losses during a period of six years; ruined and burned large sections of territory; produced conditions leading to the death of one in four farmers; and, as a result, a human and animal epidemic, brought foreign trade to an unprofitable condition by our traffic legislation; inaugurated a tremendously expensive government for the benefit of foreign officeholders; established a partisan judiciary; crowded the prisons and deported or sent to the galleys the best and most patriotic of the native leaders."

A despatch from Paris of the 27th ult. says the report on the Anglo-French agreement relative to Newfoundland was laid before the Chamber of Deputies to-day, strongly approved of the agreement, and says: "It is chiefly important in putting an end to a serious difficulty between the two great nations. It is part of the general movement for a rapprochement and union between France and Great Britain. Too long have these countries been divided. The hour has come when both people desire reconciliation and union. This convention is one of the pledges of the establishment of sincere relations. We ardently hope that the two governments will continue the salutary movement until they have achieved a settlement of all questions still in suspense in Africa, Asia and Oceania."

An English engineer, it is reported, has discovered a process for manufacturing ozone by electrical discharge at far less expense than by ordinary methods. Ozone on account of its great oxidizing power, is well adapted for supplying oxygen to closed rooms, such as hospitals, shops, etc., for purifying drinking water, for the purification of sewage, bleaching of leather, treating oils, and other uses.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 78.

George Sykes, agent, England, £175. Gs. 6d., 10s. 1 each for Joshua J. Ashby, John Anderson, Robert B. Atland, Elizabeth Bellows, Richard B. Brockbank, Birmingham Friends' Reading Society, E. and G. Brodribb, Stephen Cumberland, Thomas Francis, William B. Gibbons, William Graham, Rachel Hall, Joseph Hinde, Joseph Hall, William Knowles, Elizabeth Knowles, Francis Kenneby, Joseph Lamb, David McCauley, Agnes L. Melan, A. Moorhouse, August Marshall, William R. Nash, Gene Pitt, E. M. Southall, J. H. Shield, Isaac Sharp, James Stewart, F. B. Sainty, E. C. Thompson, Sarah Jane W. John H. Walker, William Williamson and E. K. Watkins and 5s for J. E. Southall.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will appear in the entries until the following week.

NOTICES.

Wanted—A woman Friend, with experience, desired a position in a Friend's family as housekeeper or companion.

Address "A,"

Office of "THE FRIEND."

Westown Boarding School.—For convenience of persons coming to Westtown School, the stage meets trains leaving Philadelphia 7.16 and 8.18 A. M., 2.50 and 4.32 P. M. Other trains are met when requested. Stage fare, fifteen cents. Agents, Westtown, Pa. Moorhouse, says: To reach the School by telegraph, a West Chester, Phone 114a.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY, Supr.

DIED, at her residence, Haddonfield, N. J., on the twenty-first of First Month, 1904, MARY ELMA BALLING, widow of the late Joshua H. Ballinger, in the sixty-sixth year of her age; a member of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting of Friends. Her eye hath not seen nor ear heard neither has entered into the heart of man the thing which God hath prepared for them that love Him.

She was born West Branch, Iowa, Ninth Mo. 17th, 1840, LYDIA B. OLIPHANT, widow of William Oliphant, and daughter of James B. and Sarah Brubaker, her eighty-third year. She was a beloved member of elder of West Branch Monthly Meeting of Friends. In a woman of excellent judgment and superior mind. She was greatly missed by her many friends. She was a charitable disposition, ever ready to extend help to those in need.

—at North Lewisburg, Ohio, Ninth Month 2, 1904, ELISABETH W. YOUNG, wife of Dr. Edward C. Young in her seventy-second year. She was a birth-right member and loved the quiet order of our worship. The vestment of the community seems to be, "A saintly character, a life of prayer, and a heart full of love." She leaves her aged and seriously afflicted and four surviving children to mourn their loss. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS
No. 422 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

OL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 12, 1904.

No. 13.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,

PHILADELPHIA.

Entered at post office at Philadelphia, Pa., as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,

No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

SHALL particularly recommend to the youth among the people called Quakers, the writings and examples of faithful elders of that period; the one, to inform their judgment; the other, to excite their practice. Education can lead to profess, but gives not strength. Whence it is, that the posterity of men must unavoidably degenerate, unless they have recourse to their first principles. The foundation of your ancestors was the Light of Christ; a firm and unalterable basis. By illumination they regulated their thoughts, their words, their actions. Instructed by its light they renounced the pride, the pleasures, the lusts and vanities of the world, separated themselves from humanly-invented modes of worship, bore a faithful testimony against many errors and corruptions of their day, zealously reprov'd vice and immorality, were exemplary to their neighbors in holiness and righteousness, ordered their conversations right, obtained a good report among men, and in the end were made partakers of the salvation of God.

Would you be the happy successors of their name, as well as Name? Follow the same. It will lead you in the same path, and give you when you turn aside to the right or to the left. It will teach you a reverent and religious regard to the testimonies which have been consciously bore and suffered for, and which bring to its direction and guidance, you will never return to the follies and vanities which came out of. It will show you the emphasis of formal profession, and the necessity of inward and spiritual work of regeneration, to the purifying, through the blood of Christ, your consciences from dead works to be the living God. Turn not your backs to his heavenly Monitor, which is with you, and in you. "Know thou the God of thy fathers, and serve Him with a perfect heart with a willing mind. For the Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts. If thou seek Him He will be found of thee; but if thou forsake Him, He will cast thee off forever."—Joseph

WORSHIP is the human soul in communion with God.

To Readers Not in Profession with Friends.

Ministers and members of other religious denominations are receiving THE FRIEND, who may think at times that our aim is to attack them and their position; when really, we are addressing the case of their imitators who are inconsistently operating under our name of "Friends," and so misrepresenting it. We respect the representatives of the churches of Christendom everywhere who, verily believing the tenets which they have been severally taught, consistently abide by them, and work earnestly under them, according to the light they have. We might not respect any of their members who should embrace our distinctive tenets, being with us in faith and testimony, and yet remain in organic unity with denominations professing to the contrary. So our readers belonging to other denominations will best respect "the jewel consistency" in us, and expect us clearly to represent to their minds what we stand for. And this is all that the world wants and needs of the Society of Friends—that it represent faithfully what it fundamentally stands for, as its contribution to truth in the church militant.

But the day is now upon us, of which we saw a prophecy quoted some forty years ago, when our contending for the faith and testimony once delivered to us as a people, should have to be transferred from outside our limits to within our own borders. Accordingly non-members will please not feel hurt if some family talk of ours being overheard by them, seems incidentally to hit them. And we are not faithful if we do not at times call in question their position also, directly. But let all our things, both ways, "be done with charity."

The Present-Day Turn of Christian Interest.

We apprehend it must be very noticeable to our readers that religious zeal is in the present day changing its mode of expression. Whereas it has heretofore taken form in devotional exercises, the propagation of doctrines, the yielding to rhapsodies, the proselyting of men to special professions of faith, or in various stated offices or spontaneous offerings of worship—now religious zeal is learning to take the form of social energy. Instead of cultivating the piety of our own souls exclusively in cloisters of outward confines or in cloisters of the heart, it is urging us to step out among our fellow-beings in efforts to improve their condition. It lays its emphasis on the first and great commandment in terms of the second—testing our soundness in the one by our earnestness in the other. Its query is, "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" and its motto, "Inasmuch as ye have done service to the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." It is held that "the first and great commandment" sums up the true theology, and "the second, which is like unto it," the true sociology.

We suppose that the terms egoism and altruism have been invented to express these two fields of Christian or moral life; and we believe that in effecting this turn of religious interest the Spirit of Christ is working a more healthy religion by bringing the pent up devotions of men out into fresher air, and enlarging their hearts to embrace not merely the salvation of themselves, but that of all whom He so loved as to give himself for them. "I have compassion on the multitude"—that was his spirit. The same is the spirit of his own on earth to-day.

We may well be in sympathy with the growing obedience to the sociological direction of Christ's Spirit, and believe that many non-professors though regarding themselves as ethical philosophers of altruism, yet secretly moved by the prevailing current blowing where it listeth, may be workers together with Him better than they know.

Friends, as foremost among the pioneers of such humanitarian movements, can never have a testimony against their members entering into benevolent and philanthropic enterprises, on the ground that these are benevolent. They simply ask that a member does not assume his commission merely from the ends in view, but that he look to the authority of the true and holy Witness, manifesting in the heart a conviction of his will for such a calling. They also ask for a care as to joining the ranks of associations of those who assume their marching orders on other principles, and whose modes of procedure would drag a Quaker member down from some of the principles of truth of which he is in himself convinced. What a little pampering of an accommodating Quaker with an office, in some of these associations, it takes to make him throw overboard his Quakerism! And by this is not meant his sectarianism, but his owning the Witness for Truth in practice and testimony. Such compromises destroy the spiritual value of a Friend for the work of Christ in any association. It is not intolerance of other denominations that makes us hesitate to serve with them in many a benevolent organization. It is because we would have to waive, here one, and there another doctrine or principle, in order to conform with certain ways of theirs. Where there is no danger of this compromise, or where the member is so established as to maintain in love his testimonies for the immediate warrant of Truth on his performances, his association with others in good causes enhances their respect for loyalty to principle, and augments the weight of a Friend's influence as a co-worker with them.

The complaint that Friends are laying stress on worship rather than on work, is not well placed. The complaint should rather be that they are not worshipping enough—deeply enough, spiritually enough, constantly enough. Then would all their work be an expression of their worship, and a mode of it. Work would improve with worship and worship with work, where both are done as unto the Lord. Work with a divine inspiration is worship, and where it is converted into social energy, it is Christ still lifting up the poor, enlightening the dull minds, unfettering the slave, creating peace, healing diseases, making glad the wilderness and solitary place.

"He that believeth on me," said the Author and Finisher of true faith—not about me, but "on me—the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works shall he do, because I go unto the Father." Improving and reforming the bodily and social conditions of our fellow-beings, in which his works were so manifest in the days of his flesh, are not to be neglected because of the greater and soul-converting ministry of his Spirit more abundantly shed forth in his exaltation with the Father; but both the social betterment and greater still the spiritual regeneration of the world through Christ's disciples will be products and signs of the same quickening Spirit of our risen Lord.

To be a Christian, says a recent writer, means to attain that condition of soul that Jesus possessed in an overpowering sense. He is, accordingly, not merely a moral example. In the soul of Jesus was his intense consciousness of being the child of God. And for this reason we call Him the Son of God, for a soul that has nothing in it but God, is a child of God.

MAN is ever being drawn into situations where knowledge attained is powerless to guide, where the human soul must cry aloud for a living God.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 130.)

In the Tenth Month, 1822, three members of the Committee, viz.: Thomas Stewardson, John Cooke and Israel W. Morris visited the two reservations and had interviews with the Indians residing upon each of them.

Well aware of the dissensions among the Indians, these Friends were very desirous that whatever was communicated to them might have the effect of bringing the two opposing parties nearer together, and inciting all to pursue those paths of peace and righteousness which should render them the happy, industrious and prosperous people. In their address to them at that time, in a Council attended by the chiefs and most of their principal men on the Allegheny Reservation, they said, "Brothers: By the short speech from our friends in Philadelphia, which you have heard read, you are informed that we make you this visit with their approbation.

"Brothers: For a long time before we left home, we had heard there was some division of opinion amongst you on important subjects; and we felt a desire to see you all together, if haply we might be instrumental, through the aid of the Great Spirit, in bringing you nearer together.

"Brothers: We are all at times sensible of the motions of Divine Grace in our own hearts, condemning us when we do wrong; but when we live in love one with another, and do what is good, it makes us feel happy and comfortable; to this we have from time to time directed your attention, without requiring the observance of any forms of worship, such as singing, &c., which may be practised without making the heart better:—but an attention to this word of Divine Grace, as it proceeds from the Great Spirit, cannot fail of bringing us nearer to Himself, and its happy effect also, is to make us love one another and desire each other's welfare.

"Brothers: You ought to consider that the Great Spirit is, or should be, worshipped by all men in sincerity and truth; we should also well consider the effects produced by any particular mode of worship; if order and decorum are observed, and if those who attend return to their homes rather improved in good desires to walk with more circumspection in future, there is reason to hope acceptable worship has been performed; but if wantonness and riot are indulged, and in secret men and women promiscuously get together for vicious purposes, you would do well to reflect whether some reformation is not requisite; for you cannot suppose that your ancestors, in establishing a mode of worship, ever expected it would degenerate into such licentiousness.

Brothers: In speaking our minds thus plainly, it is with a hope some of your wise men will endeavor to make such regulations as will put a stop to such practices.

"Brothers: You are of one nation, and should live together as brethren; and when subjects which concern the general welfare require to be considered, you should meet together, and not separately, as we are informed you now do.

"Brothers: We have heretofore told you of a bad practice which some of your Nation have been in; that is, husbands separating from their wives, and wives from their husbands and going to live with others; no good man woman can do so, and it is time you put away such an evil from amongst you.

"Brothers: We are informed some of you think, notwithstanding what you have from me in writing, that we intend to make a claim part of your land for the services we have rendered, and are rendering to you; now, brothers you must know the land you live on is your own forever, if you continue to live upon and do not sell it; and you must also know that we never can make any good claim to a part of it, because if you or your child should be so unwise as to dispose of this reservation, you can only do so to the pre-empt holders—therefore no claim can be made your land by us."

In addition to the above the Friends gave them good advice in reference to clearing and cultivating their land.

On the conclusion of their address, the Friends requested to have time for a conference amongst themselves, and appointed the next day to reply to it. At that time their chief, a Black Snake, one of those who opposed introduction of schools, first delivered to Friends the sentiments of the party whom he represented. Said he, "You spoke your sirs to us that we should be one nation people of one mind; and after you left us, remained together and became a little reunited than we had been, but not altogether as we wished to be. We informed those who favor the missionaries, You are our relatives let us be as one people; if you will remain from amongst us and hold to the Quaker way we ask no more; we will then be a people of one voice: to this they have not entirely assented, but have promised they would have a missionary among them, but would continue to meet by themselves and have their own people to exhort them. We have considered the advice of our friends and the of our own people, and we of this party concluded not to keep the Sabbath day. We understand your advice to be kind to one another, and attend to business that we may be a prosperous people; this we will endeavor to take hold of, and teach our children to do— and we understand we should be tender true to our wives, and that they should be the ways of the white people; in this respect also we intend to take your counsel, and respecting such among us as drink, to exhort counsel to them; but we of this side do not right to have our children taught to read; we do not yet see right. We of this side are glad of having you among us, and we only cline taking one article of your advice. I am now more than twenty years since Friends have been among us, and when we have received any of our children to improve in learning, we think they have also become more careful, therefore their learning has not been beneficial; and they also are apt to be proud, which we think is also against it; things give us great fear of what may happen after come upon us, if those who do not unite with us have their children taught; they outwit and defraud us of the little land we have left, almost so small that we can e it with our feet. But we have heard that we should meet together in Council to consider the affairs of the Nation; to this have both parties agreed, and we are thus nearer than before you spoke; and further, we have agreed to look peaceably at each other; and we will not interfere with them in the education of their children; this we have agreed to, and shall not interrupt them in their school learning over the river on your side.

After he had concluded his speech James Robinson, also a chief and a firm advocate of the instruction of their children in school learning, rose and expressed the views which he and his associates held in regard to these subjects. He commenced by saying, "Brothers, our friends: We are once more together, by the permission of the Great Spirit, through whose providence we are yet preserved in health. We feel rejoiced that you have seen fit to come so long a journey, quite from Philadelphia, to see us. We feel rejoiced and thankful for this. Now, friends, we beg of you to pity our situation—when you come to see how much effect your language has had on you will see we are poor Indians. It is many years since you were here, yet we remember your language to us at that time; you told us you were men of your words, not fearful of showing your faces, so you then told us." After commenting upon the wish of the President of the United States that their children should be educated, he continued, "Brothers, we feel always glad to see you; you speak such language as we are disposed to hear, because we believe you feel it from the heart, and we depend upon and have felt reliance in you.

"We understand also the situation of our children; that the title is in ourselves, and it cannot be taken from us without our consent. We are determined to pursue the education of our children, in the hope they will be benefited by it. We do not yet know fully how to cultivate our lands and raise crops of grain; we are yet to improve in this knowledge; and we are in an additional inducement to have our children educated, thinking particular times necessary to plant and sow, and our children, by education, will obtain this knowledge, and do good for themselves. As you heard awhile ago, those opposed to us will not observe the Sabbath day; our friends, the Quakers, have a regard to that day, and we think it good to observe it also, and bring up our children in the observance of it. Thus you see our situation; we will not, on our side, give up the Sabbath day; we are strong in our minds to observe it, and they are strong in their minds to observe it. If we could but see alike in this, there is nothing else to keep us separate; you are our difficulties; we feel anxious that we should be blessed to see as one, but we have not yet come to this, though we are more united than we were before, having agreed to meet in Council on public affairs. Brothers, our Friends: We are distressed in this situation; we wish to have these things righted; we wish you to assist us to come straight; we wish to advise from time to time with our true friends who live beside us, what may be for our good. Our minds, the chiefs and warriors of this party, have agreed never to have a missionary for a teacher; never shall we be amongst us, but we will keep the Sabbath day, and some of our own best men shall teach us on that day. We wish you to know we are pleased with the two Friends you have placed beside us; we intend to keep near them, and keep the chain of friendship strong. We now desire your welfare, and pray for you against to-morrow, understanding you then think of leaving us on your return. We hope the Lord in his mercy may protect us all, and that you may be preserved to get again to your families in health—and we desire to be remembered to Friends in Philadelphia—and we send our best wishes to the several Friends, men and women, that have dwelt amongst us; we hope the Lord may protect them, and we return our thanks to our friends in Philadelphia that feel interested for our welfare."

In a visit which James Robinson paid to the Friends the same evening, he expressed himself more fully than he had done in the Council, saying, "In the Council to-day we did not say all that was on our minds, being careful lest we should hurt the feelings of any. We pity our old chief [Cornplanter], seeing the situation he has got into in withdrawing very much from what he formerly thought right; but our minds are firm in the intention to pursue the education of our children, and to hold to the same principle which we have all along received from you; but we are tender of him, not saying much to him. But we intend to hold to keeping one day in the week, and that some wise man among ourselves may then instruct our children and teach them how to act. We look to you in full confidence, seeing you keep to the laws Christ made when on earth, living in love. To look back to our grandfathers, we cannot say any of them were favored with the light we see through Christ; and again, when we examine the Indian ways, and compare them with your ways, we see no foundation there to build on. But in Christ we see a light whereon to build a foundation. The Indians will worship an image or a dream, therefore we feel short in fully uniting with them, which will prevent our being entirely one people.

"We feel desirous you should know we are very much pleased with the Friend you have sent to live near us, we are fully satisfied with him, believing he does all he can for our interest, and we wish you to feel fully satisfied with his conduct amongst us. We think of all you have laid before us for our welfare, and are anxious our young women should learn to sew and spin, and our young men to labor, before we are taken from them by death. You know we have had many difficulties and troubles in endeavoring to fulfill the wishes of our friends, but we intend steadily to pursue your counsel, and in no wise give out. This is our determination. Some that set out have withdrawn, and therefore have not experienced the benefit they might have done, but I am bent to pursue your advice. Even our agent, (alluding to Parrish, the agent of Government), has advised us to fulfill your wishes. I have considered all the things you have mentioned to us. I have by me a writing, drawn by Joseph at my request, setting forth my determination never to be separated from my wife by any cause but death; and this writing I intend to keep by me."

The agent of the Indian Committee on the Cattaraugus Reservation was withdrawn in 1822. The visit and the advice of the Friends appears to have had a favorable effect. A few months after their return home, Joseph Elkinton and Robert Scotton wrote, "The division that has been amongst the natives for a long time, we think is rather in the decrease, as both parties has of late met together to consult upon the business of the nation." Among the difficulties the Indians had to contend with at this time was the trespassing upon their timber lands, and the cutting and removal of timber for sale by unauthorized persons, both Indians and whites. In order to put a stop to this, ten of the principal chiefs addressed a petition to the judges and court of Cattaraugus County early in 1823, requesting that any person thus trespassing after a certain time shall be prosecuted according to law therefore; in it they remark, "The reason that we have written to you respecting our timber is because we have not been able ourselves to prevent trespasses on our own land by our own people, as well as white men, for notwithstanding the white people are acquainted that it is against our wish to have the timber taken off by them, they pay but little attention to our conclusions, and therefore we thought we would apply to you for your assistance therein." They also complain that "four buildings or shanties have been put upon our land in which white people stay, notwithstanding it is pointedly against the laws of New York for white people to reside on our lands," and further state, "We have also found that difficulties arise amongst us by white people farming our fields on account of the land belonging to us in common, and we wish henceforward for white people not to farm Indians' land on the shares." This appeal to judges and court of Cattaraugus County for the protection afforded to the Indians by the laws of New York, furnishes a striking illustration of the rapidity with which the settlement of that region by white inhabitants had taken place; and the change produced upon the condition of the Indians thereby consequent upon the grasping after their possessions by the whites. The three young Friends who had located upon the Allegheny reservation in 1798, are stated in a recent History of Cattaraugus County to have been the first white men who had made a settlement within what are now the limits of that county, yet within 25 years from that time, the tide of population from the East had so spread into and beyond it, that a numerous community were then living in the neighborhood of the reservations; individual rights to property had been established, and a system of judicial districts and legal procedure been adopted intended to extend over both whites and Indians a responsibility to the law, and which to a greater or less extent had attracted the confidence of the chiefs, who then in accordance with ancient customs, still held the reins of government among their people.

(To be continued.)

This is peace:

To conquer love of self and lust of life;
To tear deep-rooted passion from the breast;
To still the inward strife;
To lay up lasting treasure
Of perfect service rendered, duties done
In charity, soft speech and stainless days;
These riches shall not fade away in life,
Nor any death dispraise. —Elwin Arnold.

Public Opinion.

What is public opinion? It is your opinion and my opinion and the opinion of every man who has speech with his fellows. Public opinion on great questions needs to be educated. The conscience of the average man must be developed until the conscience of that man is as sensitive to wrong as the conscience of the best man. If in this nation the spirit of pride and passion and persistence in our individual rights predominates, then the spirit of pride and passion and persistence in our own rights will predominate in the nation. I do not myself think that the spirit of persistence in our rights, pride in our rights and passion for our rights does predominate. But at times, in our impatience as a people, in our want of self-restraint as a nation, I think it comes perilously near predominating. We are not worse than were our forefathers; indeed, I like to think, and with good reason, that we are juster, kinder in our instincts and in our intentions than were they, but we have greater temptations to pride and national arrogance, consequently it requires upon our part a larger amount of moral restraint, a finer sense of our corporate responsibilities. This being so, how can we help instill into the American youth a keener sense of corporate duty? How can we make the civic and national conscience more sensitive to wrong? Along what line shall we move in order to create that proper public opinion that shall lessen the rude persistence of personal rights at the expense of other people's happiness and welfare?

We must begin in the nursery. We must try to influence our children while their minds are still in the plastic and impressionable stage. The elements of patriotism must be learned in the home. "The elements of patriotism, which are gratitude, unselfishness and responsibility, ought to be taught before the child is able to comprehend any larger unit than the family to which it owes allegiance." "Gradually as the child's horizon enlarges and it sees the family but a unit in the wider one of the town, and the town itself but a unit in the more comprehensive unit, country, the child, grown to boy, can be taught in numerous ways his relationship to his native land."

A child's paper presented a picture of an old man showing a boy a gun beneath which were written the words, "Teaching Patriotism." That picture well illustrates the pernicious notion, as has been truly remarked, "that patriotism is somehow necessarily connected with the idea of killing."

The popular picture of George Washington is that of a soldier, seldom that of the statesman, the President, the father of his country.

One would have to search far and wide throughout this land for statues of any dignity to Otis and Morris and Jefferson, to Chief Justice Marshall and Alexander Hamilton. Yet they, and such as they, were the real makers of our Constitution. One can easily find statues to General Andrew Jackson, and to I know not how many brigadier generals and major generals and lieutenant generals. In our national capital you cannot well make a child believe that the Patriot of Peace is as much entitled to admiration as the Hero of War, when on every side, in squares, parks and circles, he sees splendid statues dedicated to the man on horseback.

The fact is we have before us in this new effort rightly to educate our youth in ideas of patriotism a difficult task. It is nothing less than to transfer the emphasis in poetry, in song, in story, in biography, in history, in art, from war, with its false glamour, to peace and the nobler victories and achievements which belong to peace. We are not going to be successful in this task, start as conscientiously as we may, if in the family, directly or indirectly, the boys are taught that "it is more serious injury to themselves to suffer an injustice than to inflict an injustice." Yet much of our common home teaching is of that description. Our boy comes home sad and weeping. Johnnie or Charlie has pitched into him, as he says, "thrown him down, muddled his hat." What is the first advice of an indignant parent? "Why don't you stand up for your rights? Why don't you hit Johnnie back when he hits you?" Thus is the seed sown in early life for a strenuous insistence on rights, or even worse, an insistence on revenge. This seed is watered and tended and made to grow by the kind of so-called studies which we compel our child to engage in, the history and literature of the Greeks and Romans, the reading of Homer, Xenophon's "Anabasis," "The Doings of the Gods on Mt. Olympus," or, almost as bad, the history of the American Revolution written in such spirit as induces one to suppose that fighting for liberty is the first essential to the obtaining of individual freedom.

A rough set of robbers, cut-throats, thieves, a licentious code of life in vogue among them, is the company into which we usher our children when we introduce them to Achilles and Queen Dido, and Medea, and Alcibiades, and to the passionate and revengeful gods and goddesses of pagan days. The boy of ten or twelve has not yet the idea of evolution—cannot understand that the heroes and heroines, once admired in a primitive age, should not be admired and imitated to-day. Why then learn about them, if it is best not to know of their ways and deeds? he might answer.

Another mistake we make with our children is in allowing them to use opprobrious names when they speak of men and women of other nationalities. "Oh, he's only a Dutchman!" "I wouldn't have anything to do with him, he's a Jew." "Look! There goes a raterater!" "Watch that Dago!" Such expressions descriptive of Germans, Israelites, Chinese and Italians are used every day before parents without the slightest rebuke. Is the boy or girl who grows up with a contempt for a Chinaman or a German likely, in later years, to treat Germans, Chinese, Italians with that proper courtesy which is due to all God's children?—Thomas Van Ness.

We are indeed, weak, unstable creatures, but God is faithful, who is able to establish us and keep us from evil.—Maria Fox.

Recalling His sweat as of blood,
His moanings at midnight outpoured,
His back with deep furrowing ploughed,
His grief from His Father's own sword;
His going forth unto the hill,
His giving Himself to be nailed—
Recalling—what heart but shall thrill
To sing of the Love that prevailed?
—Thomas Lewis.

MY GRANDMAMMA.

Grandmamma wears a soft gray gown;
It's silky when I smooth it down;
I hope I'll wear a soft gray gown
When I am old like her.

Grandmamma's hair is snowy white;
It always sparkles in the light.
I hope my hair will be as bright
When I am old like her.

Grandmamma's smile is very sweet;
My papa says it "can't be beat."
I hope my smile will be as sweet
When I am old like her.

Grandmamma knows I love her well;
I love her more than I can tell
I hope little girls will love me well
When I am old like her.

—Eva March Tappan

A Place for Everything.

"To put 'em'll learn by the time you are eight to 'f you things in their places when you put them out of your hands, you shall have nice, new silk dress."

So said Mother Dows to her daughter Marion. To have a silk dress, a new silk dress, was the rosy dream of Marion Dows's ambition. "I am nine years old now," she said to herse "and in nine more I shall be eighteen. I think in that time, if I try hard, I can do the habit of putting everything in its place."

But, if things are to be put in their place, there must be places for them. So Marion made a special bag, and hung it in one special place for her knitting work, which hitherto she had laid down anywhere where she happened to be. Now she always knew where her knitting could be found; and it was easier to take a few steps, indeed quite a number of steps, to put it in place, than to hunt everywhere, high and low, when it was in its place. Then she made a place for her work-box, and was careful to put her scissors and thimble and needle-book back into a box when she was done using them. Little by little she formed the habit. When she came in from church, she put her hat and gloves in their places, instead of laying them on the sofa or bed or some chair, and when she went out on the street she didn't have to wait for them a moment. As time went on, she noticed where this article and that, which did not belong to her was kept, until, by and by, one in the family was at a loss to find where he or she wanted, Marion would be appealed to; and she rarely failed to give the desired information. By the time she was eight months she had formed the habit her orderly mother had so much wished she should form. And she had grown so capable in some ways that she was able to earn the promised silk by teaching. Of course, this dress lasted a long, long time; but Marion rarely looked at it or wore it. It she thought of the morning her mother had promised it to her, and the words would come back, "When you put anything out of your hands, put it in its place."

Marion has been a housekeeper on her own account for forty years, and, of all the lessons taught her by her mother, this of putting things in their places is one of the most valuable; for, if we put ourselves in the right places, and all our belongings in their appropriate places, we are quite sure to escape a thousand evils and secure everlasting good.—New York Advocate.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

is Unlawful Under the Gospel Dispensation.

BY C. A. STANTON.

the teaching and spirit of Christ is to bring all, of all nations, together in the bonds of mutual brotherhood. "Return not evil for evil," and so prove yourselves children of your Father which is in Heaven. God is no respecter of persons, but would that all men should come to the knowledge of the blessed truth; we reap as we sow, individually and jointly this is true. It is often said that though an evil, is an evil that cannot be aided in the present state of the world, and conclusion may serve to quiet the consciences of many whose feelings revolt at the real realities of war.

Let us examine the correctness of this conclusion, that war is unavoidable. Has the trial been made and found to be impracticable. It is to be regretted that no instance of a purely national character has yet occurred to show the practicability of the principles for which we plead; an unreasonable reliance upon an Omnipotent arm for protection and defence. There is, however, a case to which we may refer of a strong character, and sufficiently unusual for all the purposes of our argument. Pennsylvania, it is known, was settled by men who believed that Christianity forbade war by any and every pretext, and they acted in strict accordance with this belief. They tried themselves in the midst of savages. They were surrounded by men who knew nothing of written treaties, or the obligations of a banded religion; by men who were addicted to war in its most sanguinary and revolting forms; and yet for more than seventy years, up to the time that the government of the colony passed into other hands, they enjoyed uninterrupted peace. The settlers of Pennsylvania, relying upon Divine protection, placed themselves in the midst of these savages without the means of resisting aggression, and even savage magnanimity felt appeal, suppressed the war cry, and permitted them to possess the land in undisturbed peace. What a lesson to Christian nations!

How painfully, how instructively does the condition of other American colonies contrast with this! We will not attempt to portray it, but refer you to the blood-stained pages of our national history. War on whatever plea of necessity is unlawful under the Gospel dispensation. Let us make our appeal upon those inspired records which as Christians we profess to accept as a revelation from God. If these sentiments prevailed universally among professing Christians and were fully observed in practice, the fulfilment of prophecy, and the reign of the Prince of Peace through Christendom would no longer be objects of speculation and doubt. We invite the professors of the Christian religion, and especially those who are looked upon as its expounders, to a very serious and unbiassed consideration of this subject. The prophets in foretelling the coming of the Messiah, and describing the nature of his mission, present Him in the character of the Prince of Peace; "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." It is declared "He shall judge among the nations, and rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

This strong and unequivocal language clearly indicates that it was the will and purpose of the Most High that war should be eventually abolished. Then how can the followers of the Prince of Peace entertain that spirit which engenders war? If we recur to apostolic language as it is presented in the epistles to the churches we shall there meet with injunctions, exhortations and treaties in strict accordance with the precepts of their Divine Master, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good. See that none render evil for evil to any man; but ever follow that which is good both among yourselves, and to all men." Does not this include nations also? "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." If Christianity forbids those passions which engender war, and which are fed by it, and without which it cannot exist, it follows inevitably that Christianity forbids war; how could language be painted more strongly prohibiting the indulgence of the spirit which induces war? Is it not unusual to attempt a justification of it by referring to the wars of the Jews; they were under the dispensation of the law of Moses. It can be shown that the two dispensations are very different. Holy men, even during the continuance of the legal dispensation, predicted under the influence of the Holy Ghost that the time would come when nations should cease to lift up sword against nation or to learn war any more.

Now in the fullness of time when an angel was commissioned to announce the advent of the promised Saviour, the announcement was accompanied with a rapturous song from a multitude of the Heavenly host praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace good will toward men." In harmonious agreement with the language of prophecy and the ecstatic song of the angelic host, were the life and ministry of our Lord and Saviour. The law of the preceding dispensation admitted the principle of retaliation—"an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." "Christ the Prince of Peace adverts to this the express purpose of placing a prohibition upon it: "But I say unto you that ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek turn to him the other also."

While those under the law were allowed to hate an enemy, Christ's command is, "I say unto you love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you: that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven."

With a hope of enforcing our views upon this subject, and for the purpose of showing that they are neither wild nor visionary, we here offer the sentiments of persons respecting it who lived at different periods of time, and were eminent for their piety or learning: Richard Watson, bishop of Llandaff, asserts "that war has practices and principles peculiar to itself which are abhorrent to the benignity of Christianity." Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon and Lord High Chancellor of England, says that war introduces and propagates opinions and practices as much against Heaven as against earth. It lays our manners as waste as our gardens and habitations; and we can as easily preserve the beauty of the one as the integrity of the other under the cursed jurisdiction of drums and trumpets." William law, a pious minister of the Church of England and well known as the author of a "Practical Treatise on Christianity," avers that there is not a virtue of Gospel goodness but has its death-blow from war.

The British poet Southey, notwithstanding he had eulogized the heroes of his native land, was constrained to speak in terms of high commendation of those who refuse to fight, and he declares that the prohibition of war by our Divine Master is "plain, literal and undeniable."

Now should not all who are seeking to promote the present and eternal welfare of their fellow men, unite in one great and untiring effort to abolish, to banish from the earth this cruel, demoralizing and destructive scourge?

Will it not be admitted that the views and the practice of the earliest converts to Christianity, living as they did near the time of its Founder and under the teaching of the apostles or their immediate successors, are entitled to great influence in deciding this momentous question? and they establish the fact that the early Christians not only insisted that they were forbidden to fight, but that they manifested their sincerity in offering up their lives, rather than violate what they deemed an injunction of their Divine Master.

A few cases may here be cited: Maximilian, a Roman youth, on being brought before the tribunal to be enrolled as a soldier, refused, saying to the Proconsul, "I am a Christian and cannot fight." On being told there was no alternative between bearing arms and being put to death, he promptly and firmly replied, "I cannot fight, if I die." He continued firm to his principles and was led to execution.

The primitive Christians not only refused to enlist as soldiers, but those in the army who embraced Christianity immediately abandoned the vocation without regard to consequences. Marcellus, a Roman centurion, on becoming a convert to Christianity promptly resigned his commission, declaring that having become a Christian he could serve no longer. "It is not lawful," said he, "for a Christian to bear arms for any earthly consideration." He continued firm in his refusal and suffered death on that account. Cassian, who was notary in the same legion, on embracing Christianity resigned his commission, and firmly adhering to the sentiments avowed by Marcellus, like him was led to execution. Martin, another Roman, who was bred to the profession of arms, on being converted to Christianity, abandoned the army, saying "I am a Christian and cannot fight." Tertullian in speaking of a large portion of the Roman armies after Christianity had been largely spread over the world, expressly assures that "Not a Christian could be found among them."

Justin Martyr and others furnish conclusive evidence that the Christians of their day bore the most ample testimony to the incompatibility of war with the religion of Jesus Christ, and that many of them sealed their testimony with their blood. Clement, of Alexandria, speaks of Christians as followers of peace, and says expressly that they used none of the implements of war. Lactantius, another early Christian, alleges that "it can never be lawful for a righteous man to go to war."

Will not all Christians fully agree that war is a grievous violation of the principles of our holy religion? It will not be denied that the precepts and injunctions of our blessed Lord are binding upon individual believers. It becomes, then, an inquiry of the utmost importance, and we commend it to the mature and solemn reflection of all. By what human authority, by what human tribunal, can a community be absolved from the observance of those Divine laws and injunctions which are acknowledged to be binding upon its individual members?

If it be said that Christianity exonerates nations from these duties which she has imposed upon individuals, we ask for the ground upon which the assumption is based. If human authority may suspend one law of God, why may not the same authority exercise the same power in regard to every other law of our all-wise Creator? What right have we to hope for eternal life, if knowingly and habitually we violate his commandments? "If ye love me, keep my commandments." (J. viii. 14.)

SPRINGFIELD, O., Tenth Mo. 2nd, 1904.

Not Remembered, Yet Not Lost.

Bishop Hoskyns, an old time writer thus encourages those readers and hearers who, though earnest in their desires, yet sometimes fall in their efforts to keep in memory the lively oracles: "I have heard of one who, returning from an affecting sermon, highly commended it to some; and being demanded what he remembered of it, answered: 'Truly, I remember nothing at all; but only while I heard it, it made me resolve to live better; and so, by God's grace, I will.'"

There is a story to the same purpose of one, who complained to a holy aged man, that he was discouraged from reading the Scriptures, because he could fasten nothing upon his memory. The old hermit bade him take an earthen pitcher and fill it with water. He then bade him empty it again and wipe it clean, that nothing should remain in it. This being done, "Now," said he, "though there be nothing of the water remaining in it, yet the pitcher is cleaner than it was before; so though thy memory retain nothing of the word thou readest, yet thy heart is cleaner for its very passage through."

To the above may be added the following, of later date:

"What a sermon we had last Sunday!" said a poor woman, who kept a small shop, to a neighbor.

"What was it about?" asked her friend.

"I don't remember," she replied.

"What was the text?" she then asked.

"I cannot quite think," was the reply; "but I know that when I got home, I took and burnt up my had bushel."

We want more of these sermons that make people burn up their bad bushels, and destroy their rascally weights and measures; and a memory that saves enough of the sermon to revolutionize and reform the life, will serve an excellent purpose, even if it does not retain all the gracious words that reach the ear.—The Armory.

TO-DAY, IF YE WILL HEAR HIS VOICE.

Listen to the Exhortation of the Dawn,
Look to the Day,
For it is Life, the very Life of Life.
In its brief course lie all the Verities
And Realities of your Existence,
The Bliss of Truth, the Glory of Action,
The Splendor of Beauty.
For Yesterday is but a Dream,
And To-morrow is only a Vision,
But To-day,
Well lived, makes every Yesterday
A Dream of Happiness,
And every To-morrow a Vision of Hope,
Look well, therefore, to the Day—
Such is the Salutation of the Dawn.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Beautiful is the Splendor of the True.

This aphorism of Plato was quoted and ably enlarged upon by Pere Hyacinthe in his three celebrated lectures in the Cirque d'Hiver in Paris in 1878. Here is a seed thought. Now, there is no character that can compare in beauty and symmetry with that of Christ. He was the splendor of the true Truth itself. His spiritual life was beauty, transcendent, if not transcendental.

Artists have shown the beautiful Nazarine lad, the wise boy before the learned men of Jerusalem. Born of the Holy Spirit his thoughts had the life-giving breath of the Holy Inspiration. This, his inbred power, Christ promised to his followers in every hour of need, the right word in the right time and place, the apt expression. Poetry has been defined as the expression that no change can improve. Our poets are spoken of as our prophets. Tennyson, Wordsworth and all true poets accept that they cannot command at will the affluents. Wm. H. Seward was one of those thinkers that denied to man the creation of ideas—original thought.

The Holy Spirit gave to George Fox, when a young man, a sight of the medicinal properties of minerals and plants. He thought of healing diseases of the body, but was called to minister to the souls of men. Plato believed that poetry, prophecy, and the high insight are from a wisdom of which man is not a master. He declared also that no man could see celestial beauty in its full brilliancy and life. God shut Moses in "a cleft of the rock," and covered him with his hand. "Thou shalt not see my face, for man shall not see me and live." God made all his "goodness pass before" Moses (Ex. xxiv: 17-23). True beauty, true goodness, true justice, true love—that God is.

Christ's character as it unfolded was beautiful under the limitations of his humanity—unalloyed, transparent beauty in degree, the beauty of the Son of God in the flesh—spiritual, or soul beauty; all children and all child-like, unprejudiced people were attracted and were happy, rejoicing in his presence and love. True womanhood ministered to him. The beautiful qualities, attributes and offices of Christ will unfold more in all coming ages as his true church unfolds. There is a great advance in this from the Gospel according to Matthew to that according to John, the beloved.

Art, science and philosophy never will outgrow the splendor of Truth in its beauty, as it will, by the illuminating power of the Holy Spirit, be more and more seen in the fuller light coming to the record of Christ in the Bible.

The last act at the Supper was a beautiful simple object lesson. "If I then, the Lord and the Teacher, have washed your feet, also ought to wash one another's feet" (J. xiii: 14.)

What the World Ows to Quakers.

How many among the tens of thousands people who travel by rail every day know they owe the introduction of the "iron horse" into England to the Quaker? Not many, it is presumed. Yet it is an incontrovertible fact, nevertheless. Stephenson, of course was who actually built the first locomotive and he was no Quaker; but it was Friend Ward Pease, of Darlington, who found money for the preliminary experiments, who later on financed the first line—that between Stockton and Darlington—ever built British soil. Afterwards Friend Ellis, of Custer, started the now mighty Midland. Friend Bradshaw inaugurated a "guinea" to tell the public when and where the train started, and their destination. And Friend Edmundson, foreseeing that the cumbersome method of "booking" each individual passenger, continued from coaching days, was to be he quickly superseded by some more rational and affective system, set to work and devised the railway ticket, and invented the machine for stamping it.

When the Quakers first became a powerful land there was no such thing as total abstinence. Beer—good beer—and plenty of it was held to be essential to the welfare of British people. So the Quakers, with their accustomed enterprise and energy set to work to brew good beer, and plenty of it; and result was the growth of such world-famous malter firms as the Walkers, the Allens, Ratcliffe, the Hanburys and Buxtons of Stafford, and the Barclays and Perkins of Newark. Afterwards temperance reform was forced to the front. The Society of Friends came to believe that brewing was a most illegal trade, and they quietly withdrew from the business. They also looked round to some other beverage which might in time become popular with beer and supplant it. They found it, or thought they found it, in cocoa and Friend Cadbury of Birmingham, Friend Fry of Bristol, and Friend Rowntree of York founded the cocoa factories which still bear their names and are conducted by their descendants.

Friend Bryant stuck a bit of phosphorus on the end of a sliver of wood, and showed Friend May. The great matchmaking firm of Bryant & May was the result.

Friend Reckitt invented a blue for ironing a good color to white clothes after they had been washed, and laid the foundation of a large fortune.

Friend Huntley thought that an improved cake might be made in the little round home-bake, the Quaker housewives were so fond of, and that there were elements of a commercial success to the idea. Friend Palmer thought so, too. And between them they started at Reading a tiny bakehouse which blossomed out in time to the vast business of Huntley & Palmer.

When the question of bringing Cleopatra de from Alexandria and setting it up in don was first mooted, the objection was ed that no engineer could be found bold to tackle the task of lifting the mighty oolith. Friend Tangey undertook the job, successfully; and afterwards Friend Dixie ed it on its pedestal by the banks of the mes.

was Friend Elizabeth Fry who started on reform in England, visiting, fearless alone, the frightful "women's ward" Newgate, though warned beforehand that savage inmates would likely tear her limb limb. Many of this noble woman's imiate descendants are occupying important ions in Britain to-day, among them being Theodore Fry, the well known politician, head of the great iron manufacturing firm eodore Fry & Co., Limited, Sir Edward the famous ex-judge of the Appeal Court, Louis Fry, M. P., for the Northern Divi-of Bristol.

Britain's Banking system was the wonder enry of the world a century ago, and that as so was due almost entirely to the Quak-Overend, Gurney & Co., was a Quaker So is Barclay, Bevan and Co., the found-firm being a direct descendant of Robert Barclay, the "Laird of Ury" imalized by Whittier, the "Quaker poet." itish farmers never had an enduring plow-untl Friend Ransome of Ipswich made one of "chilled" iron, thereby laying foundation stone of yet another greater business. Friend Abraham first found the secret of casting in iron, from the h, and the huge foundries at Coalbrook-ams famous through three generations, were result.

ue porcelain, as the word is now under-nd, was not made in England until about middle of the century before last, when d Cookworthy discovered the china-clays ights of Cornwall.

Friend Lister became a doctor, and was fied at the deaths in hospitals after opo-ns; so set to work to find a remedy. The result was that greatest discovery of the antiseptic surgery, and plain "Friend r" became first "Sir Joseph Lister," and ward "Lord Lister."

Friend Bright left the world better than he id it, both morally and socially. So, too, r. Birkbeck, the inventor of mechanics' utes; Neal Dow, the temperance reform-nd William Edward Forster, of Education fame. All these were of Quaker stock. The Italian Marquis of Mortda, the famous ist, was once plain Thomas Hanbury, mer and chemist.

Robert Fowler, who was twice Lord May-London, came of Quaker ancestry. So, did Sir Walter Scott; Lord Macaulay, the mother was a member of the sect; Sir y Rawlinson, the decipherer of the Egypt-uneiform inscriptions; Sir Samuel Cun-ber founder of Atlantic Steam Navigation; J. P. Lindhurst, the great lawyer; Bolton, who hnt the steam-engine of Watt into gen-ense; Dr. Tregelles, the Biblical scholar; am Lincoln, America's martyred Presi-Doctor Birch, tutor to our King Edward and Sir T. Fowell Buxton, the indom-nd fearless champion of the slave.

After all, our material debt to the Quakers, immense though it is, is insignificant when compared with our moral one. They were the first "passive resisters," and through and by passive resistance—real passive resistance they won for us, in great part, the civil and religious liberty we now enjoy. The sufferings of individuals were frightful. Even women were not exempt. Mary Clark, the wife of a respectable London Tradesman, was publicly flogged, and that in the most savage manner conceivable. Mary Fisher underwent "many grievous scourgings and indignities." Mary Dyer was hanged. These were the "Three Marys of Quakerdom. But they are types only. There were hundreds, nay, thousands, of others—martyrs every one of them.—From "Pearson's Magazine."

Standing Behind His Message.

Under the above title an editorial in the Presbyterian on the true ministry contains paragraphs as follows:—

It is a ministry in which man is nothing and Christ is everything, in which the preacher is lost in the gospel, and in which God is conspicuous as the Source and Life of every message that should be always coveted by the Church. She has witnessed her brightest and most glorious periods when the pulpit has been radiant with the splendor of Calvary and the brilliance of heaven's enlivening fire. Revivals of religion have followed, sinners have been converted, saints have been edified and progress has been made along all the lines of Christian work. On the other hand, when Rationalism has gotten possession of the minister, when philosophy has become his dominating power, when genius has been in the ascendant and has dazzled the pew, when "topics of the times" have been the pabulum upon which the people have been fed, when secularism has crept into the sacred desk and essays upon subjects of a public character have been the rage, and when formalism and ritualism have taken the place of the Gospel homily, she has suffered greatly as a spiritual and saving agency. Man has then enthroned himself in God's seat, and worldliness, man-worship and time-serving have crept into the membership and the religion of Jesus Christ has become more of a name than a reality.

To-day there is a special call for less of man and more of Christ in the pulpit. There is a craze for popular preachers, or men who can tickle the public ear, fill the pews and cause things to "boom." All sorts of methods are employed to draw the crowd. Anything is deemed legitimate that will win recognition and make a church the centre of interest in a town or city. Committees scour the land for the available pulpit star. Big salaries are voted to those who can preach in the most approved sensational style and with the greatest magnetic power. No wonder, under these circumstances, so many ministers are led to think more of themselves than of their Lord; more of the themes that are to be found in daily occurrences, or that are suggested by the latest excitement of the day, than of those which come through a spiritual study of the Bible, and more of how they can elucidate and enforce their points by pyrotechnic displays of rhetoric and the flashlight illustrations of the hour than by Scriptural arguments and similes which bear the stamp of the divine imprimatur.

Ministers are affected by their environments, and are liable to the temptations and allurements which beset them. They hear so much of a preaching demanded by the spirit of the age and are so pressed by the competitions of the churches that many of them feel that they must adjust themselves to existing conditions, or lose their grip upon the public, and so they often descend to means which their love to Christ and souls disposes them to forego. But they should remember that they are amenable to God, not to the people, and that it is theirs to exalt God, His Word and the cross of Jesus Christ at all hazards. Those who are faithful to their mission may not be advertised so much in the dailies, nor make such flaming bids for an audience, nor get such flattering "puffs," yet they go on steadily, from year to year, in their work, moulding character, starting holy and beneficent influences, upholding a pure Gospel, glorifying God and building their congregations upon enduring foundations. It is not only one's duty, but his best policy and greatest honor, to plant himself behind his Lord, and move forward to the conquest of the world in Christ's name.

Items Concerning the Society.

James Henry Tucker is said to have visited neighborhoods of Philadelphia, on his way home to N. Dartmouth, Mass., from Kansas Yearly Meeting.

In Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, on the 7th instant, members who attend meeting at Haverford, Pa., were granted the re-establishment of a Monthly Meeting for themselves, to be held in Haverford Meeting-house. Its members, probably some 120 in number, will be set off to Haverford Monthly Meeting from Western District Monthly Meeting of Philadelphia. This, with that at Lansdowne, makes two new Monthly Meetings set up in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting within the year.

Persis Halleck and Rebecca Mekeel were at West-town School last First-day, and attended Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting on Second-day; at which meeting Thomas Whitson was present, liberated by Birmingham Monthly Meeting for service in that and in Caln Quarterly Meetings. Zebedee Haines was also present, having held a large appointed meeting the afternoon before at Mount Laurel, N. J. William C. Allen, John M. Watson and others also engaged in religious labor in the Quarterly Meeting. Two men ministers were liberated to visit the women's meeting under religious concerns.

In California, and here in South Africa, I have frequently found it necessary to explain the term, "A member of the Society of Friends," by use of the better known phrase "a Quaker." The former is often supposed to apply to some friendly or secret society, and therefore does not, in such cases, carry with it the dignity and respect of the latter. Perhaps this idea, or lack of knowledge, belongs mainly to Episcopalian and others who do not usually read Nonconformist literature, but the fact remains that in out-of-the-way places the name "Quaker" is often better understood and appreciated than the name "Friend."—Letter in the London Friend.

Notes in General.

It is stated that of the versions of the Bible now in common use numbering 478, nearly all, 456 have been made by missionaries.

It is said that women will lose salaries of $30,000 in New York City alone by the new Roman Catholic rule which puts them out of the choir.

"The gospel of St. Matthew" is now issued by the American Bible Society in a Syriac dialect that is declared to be nearly the same as that spoken in Palestine in the time of Christ.

Over eighty denominations now recognize the Christian Endeavor Society. There are now over 3,822,300 members of the Society and a million and a half in societies bearing other names.

The old John Street Methodist Episcopal Church, known as "the mother of Methodism" in this country, and the oldest Methodist church in the United States, celebrated its 136th anniversary last First-day in New York City.

Pope Pius X. is fond of sitting for his portrait, and since his election has posed for over twenty oil paintings of himself, and for about thirty bronze and marble busts. He has besides granted sittings to a number of photographers who have taken him in a hundred or more different poses. The pope is not easily pleased in the matter of a portrait, however.

Home as a School of Lies was under judgment by Dr. Witmer at the Bucks County Teachers' Institute, who spoke on "The Imagination and Children's Lies." "Sometimes," he said, "children's falsehoods are not lies, but simply the result of an untrained imagination. The first lesson which a child receives in preparation for life in the home, where adults overstep the bounds of truthfulness to meet social conditions."

A paper has a story of a boy and his sister who came to the polls determined to "vote for their Pa." A local artist sketched on a blackboard an outline of the two children, with this inscription: "Voters, attention! Please vote for our Pa, so he won't go to Saloon!" In vain did the other side try to dampen the enthusiasm. The children triumphed, and the prohibition bond was elected by thirty-two majority. And so Jimmie did vote for his pa, and won.

"On the Princeton side of the field the scene was pitiful. Several of the players were heart-broken, while F., the Tiger captain, cried and moaned like a person in agony."

This is taken from the New York Sun's report of the football game on a Seventh-day in which Annapolis defeated Princeton, the 1903 football champions. Within the last half dozen years it has come to be the highest form of athletic etiquette for the captain of the defeated team to leave the field in tears, and accordingly F. is no more to be blamed than many of his present players for following the fashion. But we must not be bred in the present over-emotional athletic era whether such doings are not babyish, silly and truly unsportsmanlike, says the Independent.

The aborigines of Africa are divided into tribes. They are distinguished by their physical features as well as by certain tribal marks and differences of dialect. Unity is almost impossible on account of tribal animosities which cause constant feuds, that make seriously against the prosperity and growth of the country. Continual tribal wars in the interior have resulted in the depopulation of whole sections and in the extermination of thousands of families. Africa is the most thinly populated of the continents, there being only thirteen persons to the square mile. Liberia is never without tribal wars. The natives are always fighting, to the detriment of the country. Gold, ivory and cattle, which formerly came to the markets of Monrovia, have been diverted into other directions because of better protection to life and property.

The Methodist Protestant in a recent editorial says what we could repeat for our own Society: "That which distinguished Methodism in the past and gave it its power among men, was its hostility to anything that savored of worldliness.

It did not follow the fashions of society for the reason that such things interfere with the activities of religion and weaken the influence of piety in the estimation of others. They shunned worldly amusements, because they were a menace to a consistent Christian life. When a man or a woman leaves Methodism to get into a more fashionable church, it is not religion they are after, but the gratification of an unworthy ambition. If membership in some particular church is a prerequisite to get into a certain class of society, then the society is not worth the price it demands as an entrance fee, and the church has veered sufficiently from its simplicity there is in Christ Jesus that it has lost its character as a saving, religious force. It may be a pleasing, religious club, but it is not a church of Jesus Christ."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The candidates for President and Vice President of the United States of six different political parties were to be voted for on the 8th inst.; namely, those of the Republican, Democratic, Prohibition, People's, Socialist and Socialist-Labor parties respectively. In twenty-seven States a Governor of the State is to be elected.

A dispatch from Washington of the 1st, says: Secretary Hay and Ambassador Jusserand to-day signed a treaty providing for the settlement by arbitration of any possible disputes between the United States and France. The treaty is drawn on the lines of the Anglo-French arbitration treaty. It must be acted on by the Senate of the United States before it becomes operative. A dispatch from Paris says:

The news of the signing of the arbitration treaty between France and the United States in Washington to-day is received here with the warmest expressions of approval, particularly in Government circles. The treaty is regarded not only as a strong bond between the two republics, but also as an important extension of Foreign Minister Dolclaux's series of peace treaties.

A dispatch from Washington says: Negotiations have been initiated for a treaty of arbitration between Germany and the United States.

In a recent address Judge Alton B. Parker said: "We hear much from time to time and from many different quarters about the necessity of being prepared for war. This demand is so insistent that the citizen is sometimes tempted to ask whether, after all, it would not be more timely and more helpful to humanity if we should consider the other question of being prepared for peace. So far as periods of time are concerned, it has an importance entirely disproportionate to that of war. The human dependence was achieved, we have been engaged in foreign wars during only four of them—the remaining 117 having been found at peace with our neighbors. If arbitration had then been recognized as a policy, we might have eliminated those four, and the disparity between the years of peace and the years of war certainly diminishes us where our interest lies."

Dr. H. W. Wiley, of the Agricultural Department, has lately stated in regard to certain chemicals used to preserve articles of food from decay, &c. Borax and boric acid are regarded by most experts as the best harmless preservatives of the articles usually employed. Whether this is a true view of the matter or not remains to be determined by subsequent experiments. It is evident, however, from the results of experimental work that the miscellaneous and premeditated use of these antiseptics in food is reprehensible. It is evident that eating small quantities of borax in food, occasionally, would not prove of any lasting injury to the ordinary citizen in good health, but the weak and feeble must be protected, and it is entirely within the grounds of reason that even a very small quantity of an antiseptic of this kind would prove very harmful to a disordered stomach.

A special train carrying President Oscar G. Murray, of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and party has lately made a run over the Chicago division, of 131 miles, in 126 minutes.

An air ship called The California Arrow, has lately been on exhibition at the St. Louis Fair grounds, and has made several successful ascensions which it appears to have been made under the control of the aviator. It consists of a cigar-shaped balloon with a gasoline motor propelling revolving blades.

An electric locomotive built for the New York Central Railroad Company, has lately been tried on a four mile track, and without coaches attained a speed of seventy miles an hour. With six coaches the locomotive reached a speed of fifty-five miles an hour.

On account of complaints respecting the purity of air in the recently opened subway in New York City, August Seibert has made a scientific investigation. Eighteen per cent. of oxygen, he says, is the low amount of oxygen that air can contain without poison those who breathe it, and air containing 14 per cent actually dangerous.

In all twelve tests were made, and these were varied by the wind test, and the investigation demonstrates that at eleven stations the average percentage of oxy was slightly above 12. At the City Hall loop station was 17 per cent. During the five days in which tests were made the surface air was dry and cool, and showed a percentage of about 20 parts oxygen.

Seibert adds: "I have only examined the air in the stations or platforms, never inside the trains themselves, where quantity of oxygen would vary so greatly in proportion to the number of persons in the car. I am convinced, that on any of the expresses at the end of minutes the air contains less than 11 per cent. of oxygen and that the quantity rapidly decreases in direct proportion to the length of the ride."

During the first 24 hours it was opened, it is said 350,000 persons traveled upon this underground. Some cases of sickness are reported supposed to be due to the want of pure air and better ventilation.

Fog-horns in Japan are upon the Port Arthur coast, have been made by the Japanese forces.

Russia and England are completing plans for an investigation of the recent firing upon British fishing vessels in the North Sea. It has been agreed that the Commission of inquiry shall meet in Paris, and the first session is expected to be on the 16th inst. It is stated that the Commission will be composed of British, American, Russian and French admirals, one from each of these four to select a fifth admiral.

A despatch from Edinburgh says that the members of the Free Church have taken steps to put in operation the decision of the House of Lords, giving them control of Free Church property. They have agreed to get together and hand over all the church property, including Assembly Hall, three colleges, at Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen, all the missions abroad and the church buildings, masses in Scotland, numbering 1100 and valued at $600,000.

NOTICES.

Wanted.—A woman Friend, with experience, to do a position in a Friend's family as housekeeper or companion.

Address "A."

Office of "THE FRIEND."

Westtown Boarding School.—For courses of persons coming to Westtown School, the stage meets trains leaving Philadelphia 7.16 and 8.18 A. M. 2.60 and 4.32 P. M. Other trains are met when required. Stage fare, fifteen cents; after 7.30 P. M., twenty cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, West Chester, Phone 114a.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY, ST.

Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., Ph.

—Open on week-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 1 P. M. to 6 P. M.; also on evenings in which Friends' Mutual Lyceum meetings are held, from 7 to 7.45 P. M. Books as follows have been added to the Library: D. S. C.—Journey to LaSas and Central Tibet.

HALL, G. S.—Adolescence. On recovering consciousness after a surgical operation, he was heard to say: "Thou wilt keep me in perfect peace whose name is stayed on thee, because He trotheth in thee." L. H. on her dear Savior, she was enabled to realize the fact that it was not by works of righteousness which she had done, but according to his mercy He had washed of regeneration and renewing of the Ghost.

REED, C. A.—North American Birds' Eggs.

MORGAN, G. C.—Life of the Christian.

STEVENS, M. L.—From Saranac to the Marquesas Islands. A.—Health, Strength and Power.

STORY, A. T.—Story of Wireless Telegraphy.

DIED, on Tenth Month 17th, 1904, in West Chester, Pa., SINDY TEMPLE, in the sixty-fifth year of her age. She was a member of West Chester Particular Annihilation Monthly Meeting of Friends, and until a few months past was a member of the same. Her attendance at her meetings, and her cheerful and constant attendance at her surgical operation, she was heard to say: "Thou wilt keep me in perfect peace whose name is stayed on thee, because He trotheth in thee." L. H. on her dear Savior, she was enabled to realize the fact that it was not by works of righteousness which she had done, but according to his mercy He had washed of regeneration and renewing of the Ghost.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

OL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 19, 1904.

No. 19.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

scriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

sent from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.

articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"No Message."

return from labors in a distant locality accompanied by an excuse from writing originally, on the plea that there is "no message," an excuse that should oftener have been heeded, when instead of a message there has been only a permissible or possible topic. The great slaughter of meetings for Divine worship also is going on, because possible topics are taking the place of Divine messages. And because where the carcass is there the eagles are naturally gathered together, they may feed on human discourse rather than on the speaking Word of life,—the muller of the gathering eagles is popularly accepted as the testimony of Life. But these eagles are not to be mistaken for the doves of the Spirit flying in their windows, which are prominent in the day when "the isles wait for Him," "the Spirit of the Lord God is upon his messengers, to preach good tidings unto the isles." (Isa. lxi: 1, 8, 9.)

A picture of a scene in Philadelphia has been publicly criticised because in the foreground a messenger boy is represented as running, an action too unusual to be credible. Messengers are required to account for the time they occupy in delivery. And as the king's business requires haste," or no matter how long the way, the runners are likely to be entrusted with the more messages, the more the record they have gained for promptness. If our own running on a message to be delivered has so quickly been succeeded by another, it is this: that the further the message of our people depends upon their faithful writing and prompt execution of the messages of the Word of life, withersoever they lead us.

We have done much at saying: "No message, no messengers, though many runners may run." Now it must equally be said: "No messengers, no message." For if the Society of Friends is losing its message to the world, it is for lack of bearers of it. This involves the bearing of the cross on which the message is nailed.

And if one asks, what is the Society's message, the answer is, "As for thee, it is thy message." Only as each one apprehends that for which he is individually apprehended of Christ, does he spell in the living epistle of our testimony the word that he was to fulfil. And the make up of the faithfulness of all is the message which the Society carries. There is no more need to say, "What shall this man do?" And no more right to say, "What shall the Society do?" when thou dost not plant aright thy share in the message or testimony of truth given to thee to execute. How thy part shall fit in to complete the message for our day, must be left to the living Messenger of the Covenant to arrange in its own place of emphasis.

His word for all of us as disciples is, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world." But He came into the world, he declared, that He might "hear witness for the Truth." And "every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." There is no excuse but that every one should find his message. It is often learned little by little through obedience in little things, till the message is rounded up full of the increase of God. There is no one who is not designed for a messengership to the world, and to be himself the message that he stands for.

Wherever we may live as members scattered or gathered, it is idle and idleness to say, "No message!" We shall stand accountable for the message which we should have been given. And of those who are vigilant and diligent to fulfil their course, the language is, "They are messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ."

IN Quakerism, the blessed experience of the forgiveness of sins was not to be assumed to have taken place merely because one had repented and believed, but was to be the subject of the clear testimony of the Spirit to the seeking soul. The transaction was with God; and the other party was to hear from Him, and know that "the Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God," before professing regeneration.—W. P. Pinkham.

Priests, Preaching and Ordinances.

BY RICHARD CLARIDGE.

The testimony of truth is not simply and definitely against all priests, preaching, and ordinances; for, first, we believe in Him "who is a Priest forever after the order of Malchizedec (Heb. vii: 21); the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus (Heb. iii: 1). And we also own all such Priests as are made by Him, spoken of in Rev. i: 6 and v: 10, "Priests of God." All that have received the holy unction, all who are anointed and consecrated unto God. Those lively stones that are built up a "spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ; a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that show forth the praises of Him that hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Pet. ii: 5, 9). But we cannot own those priests who are neither called of God, nor do derive their authority immediately from Him; but being called and ordained by men, who derive their succession through the papal line, do go forth and preach by virtue of a mere human call, power, and authority, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, and making merchandise of their own imaginations, divining for money, and preparing war against those that cannot put into their mouths. These are the priests which we do not own and cannot own, because the Lord owns them not, neither have they any ground for their order and function in the writings of the New Testament.

Dr. Whitaker, Regius Professor at Cambridge, in his answer to Campian the Jesuit says, that this name "priest" "is no where in the New Testament accommodated to the ministers of the gospel;" and that "Christ left a ministry, not a new priesthood to them."

And in reply to Dureau's the Jesuit, he asserts, that "seeing the gospel gives the name of priest to none but Christ in its proper signification, but by a common use of that name calls all Christians priests, the papists do absurdly and very wickedly in claiming that peculiarity unto themselves, which is equally granted to all Christians."

Dr. Fulke, speaking of the word priest says, "It is commonly taken to signify a Sacrificer, such as is Hiericus in Greek and Sacerdos in Latin, by which names the ministers of the gospel are never called by the Holy Ghost. After this common acceptance and use of this word (priest) we call the sacrificers of the Old Testament and of the Gentiles also; because the Scripture calls them by one name, Cohannim or hieries, we thought it necessary to observe that distinction which we see the Holy Ghost so precisely hath observed. Therefore where the Scripture calls them presbyteroi, we call them, according to the etymology, elders and not priests; which word is taken up by common usurpation to signify the sacrificers of Jews, Gentiles or papists; or else, all Christians, in respect of spiritual sacrifices. And although Augustin, and others of the ancient Fathers, call the ministers of the New Testament by the name of Sacerdotes and Hiercis, which signify the ministers of the Old Testament; yet the authority of the Holy Ghost, making a perfect distinction between those two appellations and functions, ought to be of more estimation with us.

"Christ alone remains a priest forever; and that we may not derogate from Him, we give the name of priest to none of our ministers, says the Helvetic Confession."

The preaching we plead for is from the immediate openings of the Spirit of Truth, according to the Holy Scriptures; and therefore we wait upon the Lord in silence, with our minds gathered and retired to the manifestation of His Spirit in our hearts, from our own wills, wisdom, reasonings and studies, that we may receive from Him before we open our mouths in testimony or declaration unto others. This is pure, primitive, apostolical preaching, and the contrary thereunto we disown, in all whoever they are, and with whatsoever arts or devices they endeavor to set themselves off, to palliate their usurped, and consequently unwarrantable and fruitless ministry.

The ordinances we contend against are only the traditions and inventions of men, in things pertaining to God, His worship and service. For this is that which we ought to have special regard unto in all articles of faith to be believed, and in all acts of worship to be performed, namely, That they are of God and Him only. For if there is any thing of human mixture in faith and worship, neither that faith nor worship are truly divine. They must be of God, or cannot be justly entitled to that appellation.

By human mixture, I mean the figments and devices of men, in their adding to or taking from, or blending with the institutions and appointments of Christ. As for instance, Prayer is an ordinance or institution of Christ; but if men shall undertake to pray, either by a precomposed form of their own, or of others, or by extemporary help of mere memory, or any other natural or acquired abilities, they offend in one or other, if not in all the fore-mentioned particulars. The like may be said of preaching, singing, and any act of worship whatever, wherein man's carnal will is the chief spring, and his natural will the principal director of the motion.

But it may be asked, how we may pray, preach, sing, etc., that our prayers may be heard, and our preaching and singing may be acceptable to the Lord?

I answer, when we perform these actions by the immediate inspiration and assistance of his Holy Spirit, who thereby taught and enabled his people in all ages and generations past, and is nigh and ready to teach and enable us now so to do, as we in faith and humility wait upon Him.

And blessed forever be his holy Name, a remnant have had a large experience of his divine power and presence in that respect, and can give in their testimonies, that immediate revelation was not confined to the apostolic age, but that God, who changes not, is the same that he ever was, according to the measure of his divine Gift, to all that truly believe and humbly wait for his spiritual appearance.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

To All Young Friends.

One paragraph in the very readable article, with the above caption, in THE FRIEND of Tenth Month 29th, has occasioned some uneasiness in the mind of the writer.

"We are, as a religious Society, no longer secluded and apart from other sects; from our babyhood we study, play and make friends with children whose parents belong to other denominations—and it is well that it should be so—<sup>58</sup>—it is good that the great universal Church of Christ should be knit together, even by the hands of little children." We are aware of the delicacy of the point involved in this declaration. We appreciate how desirable it might be for the "great universal Church of Christ to be knit together" in Him. But it seems to the writer, questionable if the Church of Christ has been, or in the nature of the case can be "knit together" in Him, by the hands of little children, in social intercourse. From observation extending over many years, my opinion is that the tendency of this mixed companionship for our young children, is to draw them away from Friendliness, and to a form of worship more attractive to our human nature, more pleasing to eye and ear, with less of self-denial and cross-bearing in it, until the "knitting together" is generally into the fabric of some other denomination, to the loss of our own.

I would not have us too exclusive. We do not want to say, either by words or actions, "Stand by thyself, come not near to me, for I am holier than thou." God has placed us among our fellow-men, and has given us opportunities to maintain before the world the Truth as we profess it. Herein lies our mission; and how shall we be best equipped for it? Not, we fear, by indiscriminate mixing with others. We may remember the words of the prophet Hosea of old, "Ephraim hath mixed himself among the people." Strangers have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not."

Our interests, and the welfare of our religious Society, are closely connected with the vital question of the education of our children.

Appreciating this, the Society of Friends long ago established and has maintained its own schools, in order that our children might "study, play and make friends" with children of its own membership; and many of us can testify to the wisdom of this plan; whereby we were sheltered and shielded from many harmful things that abound in the world, until our impressionable minds were somewhat matured, and we better able to appreciate and understand the doctrines and principles of our profession. Were this care more general and more pronounced in our Society to-day, would we not be more deeply concerned to guard our children, especially in "babyhood" and early childhood, from indiscriminately "making

* The editor is relieved to have our contributor's qualification of this concession which had not caught his attention.

It is sad for children in neighborhoods where it makes no evident difference in point of spirituality, whether they imbibe the savor of non-members or of members resident there.—Ed.

friends" with children of other denomination or of no religious profession at all?

We are so greatly influenced by our associates, by our environment, that, often unconsciously, but none the less surely does it influence tell upon our lives and the lives of our children. There are, no doubt, instances where this social mingling toward results others being drawn toward Friends; but a general trend of the childish mind, under such circumstances, is toward the more fashionable, the more showy, the more popular forms of worship and religious observance.

Quakerism is, in its ultimate analysis, a religious theocracy, and were we as faithful our Israelitish prototype of old was commanded to be in instructing the children of Israel what beneficent results might accrue to Church?

"And these words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt diligently teach them unto thy children, and thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest thine house, and when thou walkest by way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." (Deut. vi: 6, 7.)

The writer is a lover of children and abundant faith in the keen insight and the rect intuition which often leads them to a correct judgment where older reason fails.

But let us not needlessly expose them to temptation. Let us throw around them every protection, every safeguard that a deep loving concern can devise, by religious environment, by careful association, and by keeping close to them ourselves in affectionate, sympathetic, watchful and faithful attention to their daily needs, spiritual as well as temporal. Under such influences with the Divine blessing, our precious children will develop more quickly into those strong symmetrical Christian characters that adorn the profession, and make and win others to the faith of our fathers.

JESSE EDGERTON

BARNESVILLE, O., Eleventh Month 7th, 1904.

WHEN A RELIGION IS GOOD.—To the question "Is my own religion good and how I know it?" Charles Wagner says: "A religion is good if it is vital and active, nourishes in your confidence, hope, love, a sentiment of the infinite value of existence if it is allied with what is best in you, against what is worst, and holds forever before the necessity of becoming a new man; makes you understand that pain is a deliverance if it increases your respect for the consciences of others; if it renders forgiveness more fortunate less arrogant, duty more dear, than beyond less visionary. If it does these things it is good, little matter what its name; ever rudimentary it may be when it fills office, it comes from the true source; it is you to man and God."

WHEN ANY matter is trusted wholly to the will of God, and the hand of human guidance is in no way put upon it, there can be no rest, for nothing is being cherished save will be done."

Be swift to love, O heart, be slow to hate. While thy love tarrieth it may be late, Too late to cheer and bless the soul next. Too late to lead it to the life divine.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 138.)

Joseph Elkinton and Robert Scotten transferred to the Committee Ninth Month, 1823, communication from two of the Indian chiefs were favorable to the efforts which were made to improve their condition, that contains much information respecting them at that time; portions of which were included by the Committee in their report to the Yearly Meeting in 1824. The following passages are taken from this communication: "Brothers, Quakers, it was the wish of the chiefs and warriors, generally who are favorable to your being amongst us, that we should now address you, so we wish you to consider this as the voice of us all. We have taken a general consideration of what is doing for Indians by the Quakers and Quakers, and we at Allegheny disposed still to cleave to your precepts; wish you to continue your labors amongst and instruct our children, as they are the sons who will shortly have to take the reins of government amongst us. We shall rejoice to see individuals of our children grow up and their hearts be upright, as the hearts of our fathers, the Quakers, are. We know that the book is taken for a criterion by both sides and there is one difference in the manner of your performing worship: the missionaries sing and you do not. We anxiously desire that our children may feel gratitude flow from their hearts to the great Spirit daily for the favors bestowed, as you do."

"A number of us rest from our labors on the First day of the week and meet together to worship and have one or two of our best men to give us advice at such times. Brothers, the Quakers, at Philadelphia, old men:—people are pleased that we feel inclined to adhere to you as our friends. You do not lie, for the President before came amongst us, told us that he had a number of people, who were Quakers and did not know and whatever they said dependence might be placed thereon. You have told us you did not want land we left, you did not want our money, neither were you seeking our skins when you came amongst us, and we believe, because whenever you have visited us, we have still left your papers stating such things, in our possession."

"Brothers, the Quakers, make your mind up, for we shall endeavor to have your advice attended to, and we become a useful people and we much wish that our children may become valuable citizens. We believe the real number of Indians having dwindled away to almost nothing, has been by their irregular and improper conduct, and sufficient attention not being paid to the marriage agreement, that which we desire may no longer be the case amongst us; we are anxious that our people should be orderly and feel gratitude flow from their hearts daily to the great Spirit for favors; we also wish you to know that our children, who now live beside us, we love and will give you choice of, and hope they may long continue with us. Ever since Joseph Elkinton has been here, your desires for us in various respects, such as schooling, industrious habits, etc., have been repeatedly told us by him, and we think great improvement has been made by us in the several respects. He has attended faithfully to the school, whether few or many scholars, and that branch has been progressed in by our children. We have never yet seen him act amiss. We love him much and hope he may continue long with us, as he is now acquainted in great measure with our language and has often been a mediator when difficulties have arisen between any of the bad white people and our nation, and since Robert Scotten has come amongst us we have never seen him act incorrect, and believe him to be a very good man, and hope they may both tarry with us. We wish you may take your minds entirely easy about your two people who are amongst us. We wish you to know, Brother Quakers at Philadelphia, that we have placed one of our people under the direction of Robert Scotten to learn the wheelwright trade, and we also wish you to know as individuals come amongst us from you for to instruct us, that we shall use endeavors to have our people profit thereby."

In order to encourage the Indian women in habits of industry, premiums had been offered to them by the Committee for raising and spinning flax, and considerable work in this line had been done by several of them. In the Fourth Month, 1823, a sub-committee was appointed to consider what could be done to further the improvement of the women, who reported that if a small family could be employed on the farm at Tunesassa, who by example and otherwise could instruct them, it might answer the end designed. A few Friends were accordingly named to take steps to procure the services of suitable Friends for this purpose. A request from one of the chiefs, that they might have a woman Friend to instruct their daughters, was also received about this time.

While these efforts were being made to obtain a suitable family, Joseph Elkinton returned to Philadelphia with the expectation that he should feel released from further labor among the Indians at this time, but in a few weeks after his return, information was received from Robert Scotten that an unhappy circumstance had taken place in the reservation by which the minds of the two parties among the Indians had become much agitated, and that those Indians who followed the advice of Friends thought they were not safe in living among the others, and proposed to move to the Cattaraugus or Buffalo Creek Reservation, and also that the offers made to the Seneca Nation to remove from New York State to the westward had been so far accepted, that some of their people were to go to the new location to reside there during the winter, in order to become acquainted with the soil and climate. Upon receiving this information, Joseph Elkinton felt best satisfied to return to Tunesassa and resume his endeavors for the improvement and benefit of the natives there. He was able to inform the committee in conjunction with Robert Scotten, under date of Ninth Month 21st, 1824, that "the division amongst the Indians appears very much subsiding, and there is little probability of their accepting the land at Green Bay. Those who appeared most desirous of so doing are very quiet about it latterly."

Second Month 17th, 1825, Joseph Elkinton notes that Elizabeth Robson, (a minister) from Liverpool, Jane Bettle, from Philadelphia, and Solomon Lukens, companions to her, arrived at Tunesassa. Having previously heard that they desired to have meetings amongst the Indians, Joseph Elkinton had made arrangements therefor.

On the 20th, Joseph Elkinton notes:—Went to Cold Spring this morning, where we had a large meeting; perhaps one hundred and twenty or forty Indians and a number of white people collected. A very exercising time, indeed. Elizabeth Robson sounded some close doctrine in their hearing, which I interpreted for her, after which she appeared in supplication.

On the 21st, according to her request, Elizabeth Robson held another meeting at Tunesassa, at which there were probably from forty to sixty Indians, a lively season, both in testimony and supplication. Encouragement flowed sweetly, and, I trust, it was a strengthening season to some present. After the close of the meeting and before we separated, Robson came to me and said I must interpret a few words for them to Friends, because they felt so thankful, to which I assented. Blue Eyes made an address to Friends expressing long the thankfulness they felt for having had the opportunity, and desired their preservation on their journey. Considerable more was said, not here noted.

On the 22nd, Elizabeth Robson feeling concerned to have a meeting with the white people in the neighborhood, it was concluded to hold one at P. Tomes', over the river. Information was given, and in the afternoon we had a pretty general collection of white folks at meeting. Elizabeth was much favored to minister to their peculiar states, even in a very remarkable manner sounded an alarm amongst them. In the evening Friends visited the school, much to their satisfaction, I believe.

On the 23rd, Friends prepared for the prosecution of their journey, toward Ohio and Indiana. Before they left us encouragement flowed from Elizabeth, which was tendering, after which they bade Robert Scotten farewell. I accompanied them part way on their journey, the roads being so difficult for travel in this country; I did not feel easy for them to set out alone. Rode to Lears' tavern, where we put up, a distance of perhaps twenty-one miles, and were favored to get along as comfortably as could be expected.

On the 25th, I parted from my dear friends, one of whom mentioned a few words to me, which were as a cordial to my spirit.

(To be continued.)

THE truth cannot be burned, beheaded or crucified. A lie on the throne is a lie still, and truth in a dungeon is truth still; and the lie on the throne is on the way to defeat, and the truth in the dungeon is on the way to victory.—Wm. McKimby.

The world wants men—large-hearted, manly men; Men who shall join in chorus and prolong The psalm of labor and of love. The age wants heroes—heroes who shall dare To struggle in the solid ranks of truth; To clutch the monster, error, by the throat; To bear opinion to a loftier seat; To blot the error of oppression out, And lead a universal freedom in.

LET US BE PATIENT.

JOSIAH MOODY FLETCHER.

Let us be patient with our lot,
 And hopeful of the morrow,
 Remembering there liveth not
 A soul exempt from sorrow;
 And even should the cruel hand
 Of Poverty oppress us,
 Its griefs we better can withstand,
 If hopeful hearts possess us.

Contentment cometh not from wealth,
 Nor ease from costly living;
 The best of blessings, peace and health,
 Are not of fortune's giving;
 A happy heart dependeth not
 On fortune's fickle treasures,
 But rather seeks a lowly lot,
 Content with simple pleasures.

The ways of God are just and wise
 To every living creature,
 In every ill there underlies
 Some compensating feature.
 And when the lowly feel the rod
 Most sorely on their pressing,
 Full often is the living God
 Most lavish in his blessing.

A Summary of the Doukhor Situation.

BY FRANK YEIGH.

Nearly five years have passed since the strange migration of the Doukhobors from Southern Russia to Canada. Never before had a whole tribe or sect left their mother land and journeyed, in touching faith, six thousand miles to find and found a new home where they would be free from prosecution. When these Russian "Quakers" landed in St. John, New Brunswick, public opinion was divided as to their suitability as settlers. They were admittedly poor, having been assisted in their passage by Friends in England and the United States, and they were as admittedly ignorant, only four per cent being able to read or write. They held in addition strange views as to their attitude toward government authority, such as a determination not to bear arms—a belief that had caused much of the prosecution to which they were subject in Russia.

After a five years residence in Canada, it is interesting to note their condition and the progress they have made. The verdict thus far is a more favorable one than was thought possible in 1899. They are fast losing many of their antiquated Russian ideas and prejudices and becoming correspondingly Canadianized. At first the men refused to comply with the law as to taking out homesteads individually; now they are doing this to a large extent, thus removing one of the grounds of complaint against them. The credit for this and many another change in their attitude is due to Peter Verigen, an ex-Siberian exile, who reached Canada a year ago and who was recognized at once as their leader, as he had been in Russia before his exile. Shortly after his arrival, he set a good example by sacrificing his long Russian-grown beard and exchanging his Russian clothing for the Canadian article and style. Thus the tailor transformed him in an hour into a sturdy western Canadian, so far as outward appearances went. He came on the scene soon after the fatuous "pilgrimage" of a few hundred deluded peasants, and was thus able to exercise a restraining influence far more effectually than any government official, of whom they were distrustful. Their opposition to the use of animals in any form had died away and they are buying the best of horses and cattle. To-day the Doukhobors own three steam threshing outfits and some portable saw-mills, they are buying the most up-to-date harvesting machinery, they are improving their homes and their villages, and in many other ways showing satisfactory progress. Educationally, a goodly percentage of their children are attending schools, some being taught by Quaker teachers, in buildings erected by the Doukhobors. Religiously they are welcoming an ever increasing number of missionaries. Many of the men work on railways, and others among them have taken contracts for railway construction direct from the railway companies. The farmers are rapidly improving their agricultural holdings and can secure unlimited credit from tradesmen, such is their reputation for commercial honesty. A recent government report says: "The Doukhobors of Saskatchewan are good people and have good horses and cattle and grow good crops." Another report: "In the Swan River country they have made remarkable progress on their farms, and have purchased hundreds of good horses and a large number of binders and mowers."

Such are some of the evidences that these foreigners are bidding fair to become good settlers and good citizens, and that their children will speak English and gradually absorb Anglo-Saxon ideas of life and government.—Free Methodist.

OUR hindrances are often our best helps. The very routine of our daily work may be a salutary spiritual discipline. That is not the purest soul which is sheltered from all exposure to temptation, but the one that is continually braced in an attitude of resistance to the manifold forms of evil about it. Inward peace is not the result of quiet hours of lonely brooding, but of the coming of a divine life into the heart with power to bring all of its affections into perfect harmony with the divine will. We do not find the noblest type of piety among those races which have their home where every prospect pleases the eye and where the means of existence are to be had without effort, but among those active people who have conquered adverse natural conditions and are constantly stimulated to endeavor by the difficulties that they have to overcome. Spiritual beauty is to be greatly desired, but it is loveliest when it is the crown of strength. The best illustration of a Christian life is not a carefully tended exotic in a conservatory; better far is it represented by the rose that blooms amid the Alpine cliffs and at the edge of the glacier, or by the vine whose fruitfulness results from frequent pruning by the husbandman, or the oak that wrestles with the tempest and grows the tougher and more glorious by the conflict. Strength becomes beauty when love consecrates it to service.—Exchange.

Shrink not to do the little thing;
 With praise of such does heaven ring;
 Shrink not to speak the little word
 Of kindness oft the sweetest heard;
 Shrink not the smallest mitre to give;
 If 't is your best, God will receive.

—Apples of Gold.

Watchman, What of the Night?

FOR "THE FRIEND."

In the ocean of the eternities, what is the latitude and longitude of primitive Christianity as George Fox sought to revive it?

Its somewhat distinctive features were: the Headship of Christ, the universal priesthood of believers; silence as worshipful, surrendering the religious activities to the direction of the Holy Spirit, the gift of Christ; the solemn obligation resting upon all the Christians to be implicitly obedient to the intimations of the Holy Spirit, not only in the times of public worship, but at all times; everything in teaching or practice that do not harmonize with the spirit and exposition of the Holy Writ is to be condemned, the avoidance of everything that doeth or maketh a lie.

Broadly stated, are we not as a church militant drifting away from the just stated cardinal features? Instead of a theocracy we are a monarchy. Like the nations around us we adopted a one man leadership. Instead of a free circulation of the Divine Spirit through the whole body spiritual, and all standing "minute men," ready promptly to obey and exercise the various gifts, we have a program and the actors preordained, silence becomes a thing to be avoided. In some cases the call is for trained, man-made theologian intellect and reason are exalted, the immediate and perceptible guidance of the Holy Spirit as a gift attainable by all is ignored if not denied.

Now it is an axiom with historians that the present is the sure outcome of the past—it is built upon past events. We must accept that the soil had been prepared prethoroughly for the present crop, or it would not have sprung up into widespread luxuriance here and in England.

Let us rehearse the matter. How far do we have an accountability rest on the whole Society of Friends, and has not the good Father waited on the theocracy for much more fruit and more loyal obedience? Has the cry gone for kings like the nations around?

First, as to the Headship of Christ, has been Head over all to his Church and people George Fox said: "We are nothing, Christ is all." Have not too many dropped corporate responsibilities upon the Select Meetings? meetings for worship as well as for business how far have the higher seats been looked for the control, instead of Christ and the Holy Spirit He promised?

Secondly, what proportion of the membership have been faithful to the universal priesthood of the believer that they were a part. Has the silence been made a live, worshipful, reverent silence by each one prayerfully seeking in his own heart to worship God in spirit and in Truth? Christ said that the Father sought such to worship Him. Did not a major part of the Society throw away their right to be kings and priests? Were we accepting a temple worship by proxy, an priesthood of the few instead of filling up "Our contributor may properly say "we" for organizations where his experience has lain. But there yet of the "seven thousand in Israel" steadfast at large, members and bodies who do not profess for themselves that it shall be "we" that are thus separated from Quakerism.

as minute men, ready cheerfully to do that the Spirit called from any disciple? Lord loves a cheerful giver. primitive Christianity restored all become kings and priest, Christ's headship is acknowledged by all—the guidance of the Holy Spirit accepted at all times and by all. "We are King, Christ is all." "Ubi Christus, ibi caesa." H.

Principle and Business.

We are told, says the Chicago Evening Post, considerable surprise was shown by officials of the Navy Department on the receipt of a letter from a Quaker leather-maker of Philadelphia, which ran after this fashion: "Replying to thy inquiry for the price on us for the Navy Department, we would say as members of the Society of Friends we advocates of peace and feel it more content with our principles not to attempt to use money through sales to the War and Navy Departments. We are naturally glad to do so, and would say it is purely a question of principle with us."—[J. E. RHOADES, PHILA.]

Most of us can understand the surprise of navy officials. It is by no means a com- occurrence for men to put principle be- business. In the vast majority of cases, it comes to a choice between the two, and we do not suffer seriously.

What we do not all seem to understand is the real motive which dictated the forgoing course. We know that a man's principles, his religion, ought to be superior to every other thing. We know that they should govern in business as well as in his home and in the street, that they should be as strong and firm on Monday as on Sunday. And we also know that this ideal condition is not what we get all general.

Let us take it for granted that the Quaker merchant refused to bid on belts for the navy for no reason other than the one stated. I could not believe that war is an unnecessary evil and at the same time make money out of war or anything connected with or intended for war.

Now, we may not agree with this. We may differ that man not a good citizen who refuses to sell supplies to the army or navy of his country. We may believe that he should be insured and not praised for having principles or beliefs greater and bigger to him than the army or the navy.

It surely we can admit that it was a noble, praiseworthy thing in this day of commercialism, of industrial strife, of the reign of expediency, to find a man whose principles are not for sale. We may call this man foolish, or un-patriotic, or anything else we please, but we cannot call him insin-

The supreme test of principle, of religion, in the market. There the eyes of the world are upon us, there we are judged. We are measured by what we practice, not by what we preach. The religion, the morality, the principle that does not accompany us into the streets of trade and barter is not worth holding or teaching.

There are few severer tests of character than that of choosing between principle and

FOR "THE FRIEND."

"It Is As It Is."

"Is it well with thee, is it well with thy husband, is it well with the child, and she answered, 'It is well;' nevertheless the child was dead.

How oft we are wont to consider all is well—"it is well," and so many may be deceived, it may be as it were hidden; the prophet said, "The Lord hath hid it from me." There is a witness within un-deceived and undeceiving, a Light, "whereunto we do well to take heed." A light shining in a dark place, if allowed to shine, the whole becomes light. Is there any little nook and corner left, any little reserve? Then the whole has not become light. Any assumed condition or position, or the old nature, or the spirit of self, or the world, or modern sentiment, then the Lord does not reign. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." Can there be any taint of the vessel or the oil of the vessel be effected thereby? Then the vessel cannot say, "thus saith the Lord," for there will be death in it, for any thing of the flesh cannot live, and if the vessel cannot truthfully, wholly say, "thus saith the Lord," then at its own peril says it aught.

This covers all the religious sentiment and profession, rules and regulation. It is comfortable to the flesh to fall short of this, in whatever different measure may be the condition of each one, and take up with a false rest. The enemy attains more in one than another according to their willingness. How desirable to think still "all is well," when in reality the child, the new creature in Christ Jesus, is dead or so dwarfed that the Life is hard to discern. Yet how persistently there is a holding to the condition, apparently more firmly than the children of Light, "for the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light."

It is as it is! Is all well? The Lord cannot be deceived, and the honest witness in our own heart cannot be. Blessed be his holy name, there is a way provided to those who want to know the revelations of his Holy Spirit. "He came unto his own, but his own received him not." How could it be? his and yet not know him, not receive him? and yet true it is. There are times and ways, appearances in which the Lord presents himself, too lowly, humbling and unacceptable to his professed disciple, and so he fails of the promise, "to as many as did receive him to them gave He power to become the sons of God." Finally the woeful language becomes ours by condition, "Alack, master, for it was borrowed!" The gifts a qualification, his holy spirit but borrowed, loaned to us, misused, abused, it becomes no longer fit for use, and though there will be an effort, a struggling laboring effort, to go forth as formerly, yet as with Samson it can not be.

"Sell all that thou hast." "He was found sitting at Jesus' feet, clothed and in his right mind." Oh how precious! And then as the language is applied, "It is as it is," how could it be better? It is Truth and verity, spirit and purity, and though none recognize it, yet the Lord owns it, and "where I am there shall ye be also." The dying testimony of James Naylor seems pertinent and a precious legacy: "There is a spirit which I feel, that delights to do no evil, nor to revenge any wrong, but delights to endure all things, in hopes to enjoy its own in the end. Its hope is to outlive all wrath and contention, and to weary out all exaltation and cruelty, or whatever is of a nature contrary to itself. It sees to the end of all temptations. As it bears no evil in itself, so it conceives none in thoughts to any other. If it be betrayed, it bears it, for its ground and spring is the mercies and forgiveness of God. Its crown is meekness; its life is everlasting love unfeigned; and takes its kingdom with entreaty and not with contention, and keeps it by lowliness of mind. In God alone it can rejoice, though none else regard it or can own its life. It is conceived in sorrow, and brought forth without any to pity it; nor doth it murmur at grief and oppression. It never rejoiceth but through sufferings, for with the world's joy it is murdered. I found it alone being forsaken. I have fellowship therein with them who lived in dens and desolate places in the earth; who through death obtained this resurrection, and eternal holy life."

CYRUS COOPER.

SALEM, Ohio, Tenth Month 16th, 1904.

It is a mistake to assume that a change in theology is change in religion. Changes in theology may sympathetically effect changes in religion, but quite marked change in theology may lead to only slight changes in religion. Theology is a mental concept, and religion is the obedience of the heart and will to God.

The demand for a reasonable religion is frequently made, which clearly is a demand for a religion of the reason, a religion level to the reason, and that seems to be equivalent to a logical theology. Religion and a system of religion are quite distinguishable. A system of religion is creedal, while religion is experimental. Theological unrest must be distinguished from religious unrest, and opposition to theology as taught must not be accounted as essentially irreligiousness. The best and most Christian of men reject a considerable part of the theology of a few generations ago.—The Examiner.

ONE does not know the Book until his own inner life responds to and appropriates this subtle influence in which it was written. We have much to learn in learning how to understand the Bible. Words at their first and highest are only symbols, and they bring no vital message until spiritual insight penetrates beneath the symbol to the spiritual reality for which it stands.—The Watchman.

When I am dying,
How glad I shall be
That the lamp of my life
Has burnt out for Thee.
That sorrow has darkened
The path that I trod,
That thorns and not roses
Were strewn o'er the sod;
That anguish of spirit
So often was mine,
Since anguish of spirit
So often was thine,
My cherished Rabbi,
How glad I shall be
To die with the hope
Of a welcome from Thee.

TEMPERANCE.

The matter under this heading is furnished to THE FRIEND on behalf of the "Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia," by Benjamin F. Whitson, 401 Chestnut St., Phila.

HOPE ON.

Hope on! the darkest night will pass,
The morning break in gold and gray,
And ev'ry stream fair heaven will bless
When it is day!

Hope on! grim winter surer will go,
Glad spring return with gold and green!
And earth will bloom again below
A sky serene.

Hope on! what though the way seems dark,
The doubts will fade, the troubles end,
And pressing onward to thy mark
The path will mend.

For, though it fail thee, hope will keep
The heart at rest, the spirit bright,
And ever thus the soul shall leap
To new delight.

—Charles W. Stevenson.

"To them that love God, all things for good work together."

To those who love themselves, all things mutually repel each other, and work apart, whatever happens.

When the different segments of the same circle cannot be made to match up, the center is afloat.

When the various elements of the same reform are helping one another forward, the train is express and on the main line. When they are shunting back and forth, banging and splintering, they are side-tracked with a switch engine and there is no train at all.

Things that are done for the love of God work together. They need not, and they do not, have the same form. They need not, and they do not, speak the same language. Endless differences of opinion may divide them theoretically; countless shades of definition may perplex them; accents, emphasis and ratios may elude them, but at the point where opinion, speech, definition, accent and discussion condense into work, they are, like the American Union, one and inseparable.

Self-love is the snare of the reformer. Opinion is a pride-breeder, and sometimes puffs up one so that, in biblical phrase, it repents him that he has made the reform, and when one comes to think of himself as a creator, he gets too big to mix, too inflated to be useful.

It was no accident when Jesus put for the first beatitude, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." The great victories of character are simple, but they are not cheap and easy. It takes good stuff to be uplifted and yet "poor in spirit."

Many a man of good ability and good intentions has got to be a low-lived truculent self-seeker because he lacked the nerve in the beginnings of success to face himself and grapple until the daybreak for a spirit of humility—that is to say, of charity, generosity, breadth, honesty.

Party-love works the same way, more insidiously. Many a clear-eyed, patriotic editor, years ago, saw his party turning to the base uses of a boss and the political vermin that breed upon a boss, and thought it all over and—kept still for the sake of harmony, and lost his best chance to serve his country, and got an office and got rich, and was little when he might be big.

The love of God, that is to say, the centralization of mind, heart and strength on the eternal sources of things, as opposed to temporary symptoms, expediencies is the glory and the power of the reformer. So organized, he escapes the foolishness of trying to follow the cross lights and babel noises of the passing hour, and uses his arithmetic for better purposes than the calculation of chances.

This, too, saves his work from becoming a petrified method. This, too, saves him from bigotry and uncharity. This, too, makes him broad, adaptable, available. This, too, saves him from fainting or rebelling at the terrific but inevitable loss of power between the fire-box and the wheel of progress, and prepares his mind for the great gulf fixed between theory and practice in this unfinished world. This, too, gives him quietness and confidence while he learns to labor and to wait.

The pathos of existence is oppressive at the best, but this waiting is the sweat-box that tries the temper of us all. Prophetic souls see visions that are so impossible to be realized in their time as to seem ridiculous to the crowd. Later, some Sinai-climber carves the same visions into a law, and then the struggle comes to give the law breath of life in what we call civilization. The vision is so far it seems mere figment. The Sinais seem to rise from the plain, sheer and unscalable. People and priests alike pervert and disobey the law. But all the while there is a stratum that is doable. This level all who love God find.

This conviction is not new to The New Voice, but it became preeminent exactly two years ago when its editor [John G. Woolley], quit the platform and came to this office to announce the doctrine of this editorial, empty the inkstands of their gall and vitriol, and break the pens with which mistaken zeal was trying to tattoo "the body of Christ" with the trademark of the Prohibition party.

We had not, and we have not, weakened nor relaxed a single muscle of our energy in favor of the views for which distinctively the paper has stood from the beginning. There has to be an organization standing for the last word of reason, science, and religion against the legalization of the beverage liquor traffic for money. But we have seen clearly and do see more and more clearly, that the party requires some agency more flexible than itself, in order to muster and utilize the working prohibitory sentiment of localities. With the high pitch of its voice, and the rigidity of its contention, it is not a good hand at making the most of motley crowds of local "temperance" people. It is the best of teachers, but the worst of truant officers.

The cure for this is not in hauling down our colors, and trying to be something else, or something easier; but it is in a more cordial and effectual co-operation with the working parts of which our party is, or should be and could be, the organized whole.

The weakness of our party in practice is that it has no work for the humble man to do at the place where he is, except to push the propaganda. Too often he does not hurt the saloon there. Too often he hurts the church there, by refusing to help it to do the best it knows or understands. And too often he hurts his own influence in his own community, not by trying to do the impossible for nothing is impossible—but by refusing to help the possible because it is not all.

The cure for this is for our people everywhere, while they keep pushing the propaganda to work with their neighbors at it then-and-there-achievable. Local opinion is not a doctrine, but a fact. The people in a given locality have the option, under the law, or in spite of the law, to permit the saloon. We must extend the option to prevent the saloon, and this is only possible local co-operation in practice, to the full extent that principle will allow, passing over lightly as possible the interlocutory backlogs in calm and confident anticipation of the final decree, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things."—New Voice (Editorial, Ninth Month 22nd, 1904.)

TREACHERY AT THE TABLE.—After quoting many kinds of recipes from a large number of popular Cook Books, The New Voice comments as follows:

Note the conspiracy of the cook books force alcohol into every pantry and upon every table. "A glass of sherry," or "a glass claret," "a half-pint of brandy," "a tablespoonful of rum," "a gill of whisky," "other like ingredients may go into any one numberless cakes, puddings, pies and sauces while whole soups are made of wine.

This is certainly a remarkable phenomenon of advanced civilization. Here is a powerful drug, capable of producing and actually producing, numerous diseases, and worst of having an insidious power, like opium or hashish, to create a destructive appetite itself—an appetite that is universally admitted to produce more poverty, crime, disease, sorrow and degradation than any other sin cause. Where that appetite is established woman is everywhere the chief sufferer, directly in her own life and indirectly through her children.

Yet here is woman offering this fascinating and deadly drug to trusting guests and own cherished family at her own table!

Will not future ages wonder at such a mark of barbarism in this? What would an American say to having opium served with his meal in China, or hashish in Turkey?

It will be urged in apology for the cause that the quantity of liquor in one dish is great, that much of the alcohol evaporates in the cooking, so that often there is little except the taste. In fact a recipe sometimes prescribes brandy, gin, or rum "enough to taste."

Even supposing all this were true, yet question recurs, is it well to foster a taste for a powerful narcotic that according to level-headed statesman like Gladstone, "produced more misery than war, pestilence and famine combined."—and to do this amusement and entertainment?

Home is the last refuge of character. goodness or temperance fails there, it is everywhere and altogether. Woman is priestess of purity. When reverence for it is gone, little reverence is left for any an or divine. We are fighting a battle national, social and individual life against destroying saloon. When woman brings her home and sets upon her table the very things that work the ruin in the saloon, the stuary is violated. The young man who met at her board the odor and the flavor the various wines, the brandy, whisky, gin and rum called for by the cook-books can get again feel any horror of these in the on. The saloon can only offer a greater unity of the very same things. If any such ministry woman sets the sanction of womanhood and the seal of the sacred of home upon the deadliest evil of modern civilization.

Cheerfulness While at Work.

Employees can often make their situations better, get more salary, and win promotion by being cheerful and bright, besides having a happy, pleasant time themselves. Emory tells how this worked in her own case:— I started out to my work one morning, determined to try the power of cheerful thinking for I had been moody long enough. I said to myself, 'I have often observed that a joy state of mind has a wonderful effect upon my physical make-up, so I will try it upon others, and see if my right thinking could be brought to act upon them.' You see I was curious. As I walked along, more and more resolved on my purpose, and persistent that I was happy, and that the world was doing me well, I was surprised to find myself up, as it were, and my carriage became erect, my step lighter, and I had the sensation of treading on air. Unconsciously I was smiling, for I caught myself in the act of it twice. I looked into the faces of the men I passed, and there saw so much trouble, anxiety and discontent, even to peevishness, my heart went out to them, and I wished I could impart to them a wee bit of the sunbeams I felt pervading me.

When I arrived at the office I greeted my bookkeeper with some passing remarks, and for the life of me I could not have made out different conditions; I am not naturally cheerful; I immediately put us on a pleasant footing for the day—she had caught the religion. The president of the company I was employed by was a very busy man, and much occupied over his affairs, and at some remarks he made about my work I would ordinarily have felt quite hurt (being too sensitive by nature and education); but on that day I had determined that nothing should mar its brightness, so I replied to him cheerfully. His brow brightened, and there was another pleasant foot established, and so throughout the day I was allowing no cloud to spoil its beauty for others about me. At the kind home where I was staying the same course was followed, and where, before, I had felt estranged and wanted sympathy, I found congeniality and warm friendship. People will meet you half way if you will take the trouble to go to them.

So, my sisters, if you think the world is treating you kindly, don't delay a day, say to yourselves: 'I am going to keep my face in spite of the gray hairs, and, even if I do not always come my way, I am going to be cheerful for others, and to shed sunshine across the pathway of all I meet.' You will find happiness springing up like flowers around you, you will never want for friends or companionship, and, above all else, the peace of God will rest upon your soul."

Sunny people dispel melancholy, gloom, worry and anxiety from all those with whom they come in contact, just as the sun drives away darkness. When they enter a room full of people where the conversation has been lagging, and where everybody seems bored, they transform the surroundings like the sun bursting through thick, black clouds, after a storm. Everybody takes on a joyous spirit from the glad soul just entered. Tongues are untied, the conversation which has dragged becomes bright and spirited, and the whole atmosphere vibrates with gladness and good cheer.

This power to scatter sunshine, and to radiate gladness and good cheer, everyone should cultivate.

There is nothing else which you could put into your life, except service to others, which would pay you so well as the cultivation of sunshine in your business or profession, and in your social relations. Business will come to you instead of having to be sought, friends will seek you, and society open wide its doors to you. A cheerful disposition is a fund of ready capital, and a magnet for the good things of life.

Ruskin says: "Do not think of your faults; still less of other's faults. In every person who comes near you, look for what is good and strong. Honor that; rejoice in it; and, as you can, try to imitate it, and your faults will drop off like dead leaves when their time comes."

If you make up your mind firmly that you will never again speak unkindly of any one, and that, if you cannot find anything good in them, and cannot see the best side, you will see nothing and say nothing, it will make a wonderful difference in life for you. You will be surprised to see how soon everything will respond with a message of joy and peace. Your vinegary countenance and cynical remarks will be cast off as an ugly mask which has been hiding your real, wholesome, happy self, and the blessings of human experience will be yours. —Success.

Items Concerning the Society.

On First-day afternoon, the 6th inst., the sequestered old meeting house at Mt. Laurel, N. J., was the scene of an occasion of marked interest to many Friends of that section; being that of an "appointed" meeting for worship, held at the request of Zebedee Haines, a minister from New Garden Monthly Meeting, Pa. The half of the house occupied was filled with people from the immediate and adjacent neighborhoods; at least five Friends' Meetings being represented in the congregation. The company assembled in a manner that seemed to indicate that they had been drawn thither under a sincere desire for their soul's good, which probably gave rise to the marked solemnity which was observed throughout the meeting. The vocal exercises were introduced by a fervent supplication for the inbreathing of the Holy Spirit upon the people, that the various individual states might be reached, and closed with the repetition of what seemed the joyous refrain throughout their course "Jesus! Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever!" the doctrine of whose saving grace, in its various phases, had been powerfully and lovingly declared in the main testimony of the occasion. The countenances of many, as observed at the close of the meeting, indicated that hearts had been affected, and, let us hope, covenants renewed with Him who has been declared to be a covenant keeping God. The inspiration derived from the meeting was felt to be one of hopefulness, especially for the young, many of whom went forth at the close of that beautiful autumn afternoon, to renew their life on the morrow with the deeper sense of responsibility and the quickened zeal which had been imparted by the message of the hour to their individual souls.

W. L. M.

The following account is received of the North Carolina Yearly Meeting of Conservative Friends assembled at Cedar Grove, Woodland, Northampton County, from the 26th ult. to the 31st inclusive. The meeting for Ministry and Oversight convened on Fourth-day afternoon the 26th, followed by a General Meeting on Fifth-day. The Yearly Meeting for business had its sessions on Sixth, Seventh and Second-day following with Meetings for Worship first; and on First-day three Meetings for Worship. That in the forenoon was much crowded and overflowing, that in the afternoon was for young people and the one at night was in the Baptist Meeting House. The gospel stream of living ministry flowed sweetly and much excellent counsel was handed forth through the different sittings, and young and old were tendered together. A noticeable feature throughout was the interest manifested by young Friends. We were tenderly admonished not to look to man, but to put our Trust in the Lord. There were several ministers from other Yearly Meetings with companions present and Friends from a distance and the meeting issued twelve minutes of acceptable attendance. Three Epistles were received from other Yearly Meetings to whom, and to four others on the American Continent an Epistle was sent. The Queries and Answers were read, also, the Unanswered Queries and Advices, a Representative Meeting appointed, and committees on Education, Book and Tract, Peace, Finance, Temperance, and all the business transacted in much unity and brotherly Love, waiting on the Lord for guidance and counsel, to whom Glory, Honor and Praise alone belong. The meeting adjourned to meet again next year at same place on the second Seventh-day in Eleventh Month. M. O.

Notes in General.

A grand prize was awarded to the publishers of the Standard Dictionary by the Commissioners of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. Also, a gold medal to the publishers of the Webster Standard Dictionary.

One of Prime Minister Balfour's fine statements: "Those great national struggles which, though now and again they might be necessary, always left a deplorable mark, and always retarded the progress of humanity and civilization."

In 1816, Dr. Channing in a sermon preached to the Congregational ministers of Massachusetts on war, said: "Let us prove that courage, the virtue which has been thought to flourish most in the rough field of war, may be raised to a more generous height and to a firmer texture in the bosom of peace."

A native trader from Timbuctoo, visiting Bathurst, took home a card with a Bible text written in Arabic upon it, and on his next visit to Bathurst he purchased an Arabic Bible, which excited great interest among his countrymen who listened to the contents of the book. As a result eighteen copies of the Arabic Bible purchased by the Foreign Bible Society have been sold to him for his countrymen.

The London Examiner states that up to Ninth

Mo. 22nd, 31,690 passive resistance summonses have been issued, 1140 sales have been made and 33 resisters have suffered imprisonment. R. J. Campbell and other prominent ministers are among the most recently summoned. At Dr. Clifford's house two solid silver presentation trowels were seized under a distress warrant. Albert Spicer, J. P., has also had goods distrained upon. J. H. Joutet's microscope was seized and will be sold.

ESSENTIALS FOR CHURCH UNION are thus tersely expressed by (1) The Churchman, and (2) by the Bishop of Liverpool, respectively:—

I. The great purpose of re-union is to subordinate the secondary and the accidental to the fundamental and essential teachings of Jesus Christ. Concordant work can go on with the widest divergencies of practice.

II. Re-union must exclude no Christian body in which the fruits of the Spirit are manifest.

Queen Alexandra administered a severe and richly deserved rebuke to the gambling set among the aristocratic ladies in London society, when she refused to attend the Epsom races on the day specially famous as "ladies day." Her absence robbed the occasion of its interest and eclat, and was a source of consternation to the assembly of ladies. It is said further that the Princess of Wales is in entire accord with the Queen in this matter, and that her absence was for the same reason.

The University Extension Society sends us announcements of a series of lectures to be held at Fifteenth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia. Such of them as it is proper for THE FRIEND to announce are:

A lecture by Carleton Noyes, of Harvard, on "Literature as the Interpretation of Daily Life," Second-day evening, Twelfth Mo., 12th.

A lecture by Henry Vandyke, of Princeton, (which is not unlikely to be treated from a right standpoint) on "The Moral Law in Art," Third-day afternoon, First Mo. 30, 1905.

A course of six lectures to be given on Third-day afternoons, beginning First Mo. 10th, by John Cowper Powys, of Oxford University, on "Representative American Writers."

The season will close with a course of six Third-day afternoon lectures, beginning Second Mo. 21st, by Gray Carleton Lee, on "Spain and France in North America."

The following is sent to us by Lawrence F. Flick, M. D., president, 325 Pine St., Philada.: "The Free Hospital for the Poor Consumptives has been compelled to go in debt twenty-five thousand dollars for a power house and an administration building for the White Haven Sanatorium. These additional buildings were needed, and will enable the institution to do better work. They will also add thirty-two beds to the capacity of the institution, which up to the present time has been one hundred beds. Since its establishment three years ago, the White Haven Sanatorium has treated 876 patients. Admission to the White Haven Sanatorium is free, and strictly in the order of application and registration. In many cases the Society even supplies clothing to the poor who are admitted. The results of treatment have been excellent and compare favorably with any produced in the world. At least 75 per cent. of the patients admitted are restored to a condition of physical health."

It has been the policy of the Society to keep out of debt. In pursuit of this policy I am now trying to raise the twenty-five thousand dollars for which we have fallen behind. I appeal to you for assistance in this matter. I deem you must take note of the advanced position which Pennsylvania occupies in the crusade against tuberculosis. Kindly give me such assistance as you can and as will show your sympathy for our cause and for the poor whom we are endeavoring to help.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES—The late election resulted in the choice of Theodore Roosevelt for President by a very large majority. Thirty-one States out of the forty-five have chosen a majority favorable to the candidates of the Republican party, and it is announced that they will receive a greater number of electoral votes than have ever been given.

The House of Representatives of the 59th Congress will be controlled by the Republicans, about 246 of its members, out of a total of 385, belonging to that party. In the Senate there will also be a large majority of Republicans.

The President has declared that under no circumstances will he be a candidate for or accept another nomination for the Presidency.

A very severe storm, accompanied by rain, snow and high winds, swept over the Atlantic coast on the 13th instant. This is said to not have been equalled at this period of the year since 1885.

A Pennsylvania Railroad train lately ran from Crestline, Ohio, to Fort Wayne, Ind., a distance of 131 miles in 113 minutes.

By the Annual Report of the Auditor for the Post Office Department it appears that the deficit in the postal revenues during the last fiscal year was $8,579,492.

Dr. Henry Kraemer, professor in the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, has been conducting experiments with copper sulphate and metallic copper as germicides of high efficiency against the typhoid fever and cholera bacteria that infest drinking water in centres of population where filtration has not yet been turned to practical use. The proportions have been a strip of copper three and one-half inches square to every quart of water. The strips were first cleaned with pumice. The reduction in disease-bearing micro-organisms in the period was between 75 and 90 per cent. The germicidal efficiency of such a simple instrument as copper foil ought to make a successful appeal to those who find the process of boiling their drinking water too troublesome to undertake, in spite of the repeated warnings of the highest medical authorities, not only in Philadelphia, but wherever common sense and common sense actually polluted water. For myself, I am going to use the copper foil in the drinking water at home.

Encke's comet has been seen through the large telescope in the observatory at Washington. The path it is pursuing is said to be that which was predicted for it upon its return.

A despatch from Washington says: Secretary Hay has received assurances from Great Britain and Mexico that they stand prepared to negotiate arbitration treaties with America on the lines of that recently concluded between France and the United States. Consequently the State Department will proceed at once to complete the whole fabric of treaties, so as to have them ready for submission to the Senate when it meets again.

Preliminary returns to the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture on the production of corn in 1904 indicate a total yield of about 2,453,000,000 bushels, or an average of 26.7 bushels per acre, as compared with an average yield of 25.5 bushels per acre, as finally estimated in 1903. 26.8 bushels in 1902, and a ten-year average of 24.2 bushels. The preliminary estimate of the average yield per acre of potatoes is 110.4 bushels, against an average yield of 84.7 in 1903, 96.0 bushels in 1902, and a ten-year average of 81.0 bushels. The preliminary estimate of the average yield of 1.54 tons of hay is 1.52 tons against an average yield of 1.54 tons in 1903, 1.50 tons in 1902, and a ten-year average of 1.35 tons.

A despatch from St. Louis of the 11th says: As the result of a scientific experimental balloon ascension made to-day from the aeronautic concourse on the World's Fair grounds, the practicability and utility of wireless messages could be received, both as to altitude and distance, were satisfactorily tested. More than twenty messages were transmitted from the World's Fair wireless tower.

It is stated that experiments have been carried on at the Agricultural Experiment Station, Annapolis, Md., which show that electricity has very marked effects on the growth of both seeds and plants. Seeds of several kinds of vegetables were planted in insulated boxes, where they were subjected to electrical currents of various kinds and intensities. The result showed that an alternating current of low intensity was the most effective stimulant, increasing the growth in some cases as much as thirty-seven per cent.

FOREIGN—The Japanese General besieging Port Arthur has offered terms of surrender to the Russian Garrison.

The bombardment is reported to have lately been increased, inflicting great damage, and that the besieged were in sore distress.

A despatch from London of the 10th instant says: Russia has refused to entertain overtures made by Japan to end the war in the Far East. Though a failure of effort has given rise to a widespread belief that a withdrawal has been opened for intervention. The United States, Great Britain and France are expected to take the step. While Russia has refused to accept a direct proposal from Japan, it is thought that representations made these Powers might succeed. There is a prevalent belief that President Roosevelt will give the initiative. A despatch from St. Petersburg of the 13th instant says: Russia is facing a great internal crisis, which, in the minds of intelligent Russians, overshadows in importance all questions relating to the war and foreign politics. New, broad and liberal movement seems not only in the way, but gaining momentum daily, and the best feature of it is that it is entirely divorced from any radical revolutionary propaganda. Prince Mirsky, the Minister of the Interior, has given the impetus to the movement, but has done so against the most powerful influence. The Russian policy as regards Finland, if not reversed, has been greatly ameliorated, and the Finnish National Diet will meet next month. Prominent Finlanders are expected to return to their own country or to go abroad if they desired to do so. The oppressive activity of the police throughout the empire has been largely relaxed; banishment by administrative order has been abolished; hundreds of political prisoners banished to Siberia have been recalled; the Jews have received assurances of a dawning of a brighter day, and the method of treating student demonstrations has been radically changed, suspicion being substituted for Cosack charges.

A bill for the separation of Church and State has been introduced into the French House of Deputies. Charles de Freycinet, Premier, returned from Paris, under the name of the Premier, the officials of the Government in the various departments have so strictly enforced the law in regard to religious association that six congregations of monks now remain in France, these are daily expecting expulsion.

In a recent speech in London the Foreign Minister declared that the Premier is unable to conceive of a more noble punishment than the remorse of a Ministry who, loss of temper or desire of popularity, brought upon country "the scourge and calamity of needless war." It is his hope that the Russo-Japanese war may "give stimulus to the existing desire for some less clumsy method of adjusting international differences." He also said, "That great statesman, John Hay, recalled marked that war was the most futile and fallacious human folly."

The action of the British Government in referring consideration of the attack of the Russian war vessels upon fishing vessels in the North Sea, notwithstanding a popular excitement, is an evidence of great calmness and self-control.

A despatch from Copenhagen says: The Danish Government will accept President Roosevelt's invitation to participate in a second Peace Conference. The Government considered it particularly desirable to employ a neutral method of adjusting international differences. The Danish Government declared, is glad of the opportunity to enter into a treaty.

A despatch from St. Petersburg of the 9th says: The Russian Government is anxious to join the troops for Manchuria noticeable in the south of Russia is becoming widespread throughout the country. Riots have occurred in places consequent upon the effort to send the forces to the Far East.

A severe earthquake occurred in the island of Sumatra on the 15th instant, by which 78 persons and more than 150 houses were overthrown.

NOTICES.

Westown Boarding School—For courses of persons coming to Westown School, the steam train leaves Philadelphia at 7:16 a. m., on the 22d of each month. Other trains are met when required. Stage fare, fifteen cents; after 7.30 p. m., two cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph West Chester, Phone 114.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY,

MARRIED, at Friends' Meeting-house, in West Pa., on the fifteenth of Ninth month, 1904, FRANK M. GOODWIN, of Greenwich, N. J., and SUSAN SMEDLEY FORSTHYE, of West Grove, Pa.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 26, 1904.

No. 20.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,

PHILADELPHIA.

South from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,

No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

FRIENDS' CITY HOME.—In another column we found an account of the Friends' City Home Association of Philadelphia. It was understood by its promoters that the first would be a hard one to pass through. Now that the commendable enterprise is launched and under full headway, its managers will feel much encouraged. Here a home of excellent social life are found by young people who are earning their livings in the city. A household of this class it is a privilege to be a member of, and their relatives at home may well feel grateful for the moral protection afforded those whom the paternal home no longer covers.

Recruiting for the Pulpit.

We have seen something of committees of early Meetings going about among subordinate meetings to "stir up spiritual gifts,"—a practical aim being to rehabilitate the ministry. Now the same object of endeavor is pressed after in other denominations. We told of an important conference held this month at the Vendome in Boston, because of marked falling off in the number of college students seeking to enter the ministry. A number of prominent educators, editors and clergymen of the leading denominations took part in the discussion, and set on foot what is intended to be a series of conferences to be held in the principal cities of North America, to encourage young men to study for the ministry.

These men might seem to have looked to a wrong set of universities for the source of supply,—or to have forgotten the transcendent University of all,—that of the Universal and Saving Light and Spirit of Christ, which raised up all true Apostles and ministers in the beginning. Let them set the college students and others upon being led by the Spirit of God, and without once saying "minister" to them, they will get as a harvest seven-fold more than all that human leaders can stimulate to choose the ministry for themselves. No man can truly take this function unto himself, but he that knows what Divine calls are unto himself, through heeding them in little things and larger, as they come. The University of Spiritual Obedience, that is the training-school of Christ which is the school of supply, for a ministry which is his.

The Courtesy of the Truth Transcends the Conventional.

On three grounds that minister was correct who, thinking we had applied for the use of his meeting-house (which we had not) for a Friends' meeting, sent reply that Friends would not allow a Methodist minister to conduct his manner of worship in one of their meeting-houses, and why should they request the loan of a Methodist place of worship to preach in?

Within the scope of retaliation his position was deemed by us as entirely consistent; also on the ground of interchange of courtesies, where courtesy, or reciprocity in goods manufactured on the same basis, is the highest law governing a case; thirdly, on grounds of fidelity to a trust, where funds to erect a building were bequeathed or contributed by former donors for the inculcation and maintenance of the doctrines, tenets and ministry of that special church. The letting in of that which might be a diversion from some of the positions of Methodism, might well seem to be unfaithfulness to a pecuniary trust. We are prepared to respect such a view, both as to their meeting-houses and ours.

But as some of our members are at times a little bewildered on the score of courtesy, when propagators of other creeds or views, who would have given us a hearing in their meeting-houses, are yet not granted recognition in the ministry under our roofs built for a radically different ministry, we are willing to call their attention to this radical difference. So far as the ministry is concerned, the other denominations stand on the same basis together, acknowledging the same manner of call to its exercise, the same qualification, the same line of preparations, the same human discretion of times, themes, teachings, composition, prearrangement, predetermination; coupled with regulation to fixed hours for its exercise whether under a sense of the witness of the Spirit or not—hoping indeed for the assistance of that Spirit on general principles, but not depending on realizing His authority as a sine qua non for submitting to speak a message, or to pray, or to praise.

Now a Society that is built, and a house that is built, for a testimony to the spirit of prophecy as the only true basis for the exercise of public ministry—and at moments not at our command, but of the immediate openings of "the true and holy Witness,"—that Society disowns itself and its meeting-house from its one legitimate position in Christendom, when it recognizes the validity of the lower and human plane of public discourse for the ministry it consents to stand for and sit for. Its houses also, its property also, was bequeathed or designated for its unique position and exclusive testimony for the ministration of the Spirit, and for no other. To admit its use otherwise, is a diversion of a trust. It is not because the proffered preacher might be a Methodist or a Presbyterian—it would be still worse if he operating in their principle of preaching claimed the name of Friends—it is not because of the sectarian name, that we would have no spiritual right to acknowledge by public position his as a gift in the ministry; it is because by placing representatives however able, of a stated and concocted ministry, whether they be labelled Friend or other, in the place dedicated to the prophetic order of ministry, we misrepresent what the Society of Friends stands for.

If now we were on a common basis of ministry and worship with others, there might be no higher law than that of common courtesy to govern interchange of opportunities.* But where courtesy would call for a waiver of the higher Truth and fundamental principle, Truth must be in dominion above courtesy—though never above Love. The Truth, in the love of it, is the divinest courtesy which a restored Quakerism could manifest to the churches of Christendom, in its keeping to that platform from which it can say to them all, "Friend, come up higher!"

*Among bodies holding our name and the same ground as regards worship, reciprocity of houses is on the one side barred by special doctrines, while through latitude of creed it is not barred on the other.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 147.)

In the Third Month, 1825, Joseph and Abigail Walton, members of Fallowfield Monthly Meeting, and Mary Nutt, a member of London Grove Monthly Meeting, offered their services to the Committee, which were accepted. The latter had particularly in view the instructing of the Indian women in the arts of domestic economy. A letter was sent by the Committee to the Indians introducing them, and bespeaking for them a close attention to the advice which they might give them, and expressing the hope that their women and girls would improve the opportunity thus afforded them of acquiring a knowledge how cleanly, economically and comfortably to conduct their household affairs. In this letter the Committee thus earnestly express themselves to the Indian men: "Brothers, we are your true friends and speak plain to you. Should you let the present opportunity pass without improving it, it will be very discouraging to us. You know it is now many years since we have been urging you to exert yourselves for your own and your children's good, and we think it is high time that you should open your eyes and act like wise men; had you attended to this important subject as you might have done, by this time you might have had your land in such a state of cultivation that beside affording you comfortable livings, would have enabled you to have sold cattle and grain in abundance, and you might have clothed yourselves with articles of your own manufacture and supplied yourselves with all other necessary things."

There was at this time an increasing pressure brought to bear upon the Indians to induce them to part with more of their land; on the other hand they were strongly urged by Friends to look towards a division of them, at least of the Allegheny Reservation, and to hold it in severalty as a means of keeping possession of it. The Friends at Tunesassa wrote, under date of Seventh Month 7th, 1825: "An interview was obtained with Red Jacket by one of our number some time since, and it was strongly recommended to him to use his endeavors to have the Allegheny Reservation divided into severalty; he so far acceded to the measure as to say he would mention the subject at the general council for consideration, but we have understood that it was not done by him publicly at that time."

"Several of the natives appear anxious that a partial division should be effected if a general one cannot be obtained, so that they and their children might be secured in the permanent possession of their farms. It would be very desirable if something could be done that would prove advantageous to them in regard thereto, but a peculiar difficulty exists on account of a part of the nation being so unwilling to have it divided."

They also inform the Committee at this time that the Agent of the United States Government, in a late general council of Indians held at Buffalo, stated that the pre-emption holders [The Ogden Land Co.] were very desirous to obtain their land, and it was his advice that they should dispose of their several reservations, with the exception of the one at Buffalo and one at Allegheny, and that all the Indians should settle on these two reservations, which "would have a tendency to satisfy the pre-emption holders." A few months later they wrote that the Indians had become much alarmed because of information they had received, that if they were not disposed to sell their reservations, "the pre-emption holders would take possession of those parts of their lands which were not occupied by Indians;" and they also say: "We have been informed bribes have been offered to different individual chiefs to induce them to use their influence to have some of their present reservations disposed of." In view of these circumstances, the Committee express in their report to the Yearly Meeting in 1826, their belief "that the situation of these poor people is at this time in various respects peculiarly critical." A few weeks later, in an address to the Indians dated Fifth Month 4th, 1825, the Committee recommended to them, in order that their land may be secured to themselves and their posterity and not be subjected to the danger of a sale by a few individuals, that they should agree at a general council, that in addition to the consent of all their chiefs, the "consent of a majority of the nation should be necessary to make any contract respecting your lands or any part thereof." The important safeguard here proposed was not adopted, however, until years afterward, when sad and costly experience had taught them its value. After abolishing the government by chiefs in 1848, a provision was inserted in the Constitution of the Seneca Nation then adopted, declaring that in addition to the approval of three-fourths of the legal voters, the consent of three-fourths of the mothers of the nation should be requisite to give validity to any agreement for the sale of their lands.

In the meantime, the efforts of the pre-emption holders to obtain a cession of some of their reservations were continued, and in Eighth Month of the same year, 1826, were successful in inducing the Indians to relinquish nearly one-half of their lands. This purchase included the Canadea Reservation, on the Genesee River, containing 8,800 acres; a part of the Buffalo Creek Reservation, containing 33,637 acres; a portion of the Tonawanda Reservation, containing 33,409 acres, and a strip of the Cattaraugus Reservation, containing 5,720 acres; in all 81,566 acres. For this the sum of $48,216 was to be invested, and the interest on it, about $2,500, was to be paid them as an annuity. In mentioning this transaction to the Committee the Friends at Tunesassa wrote, under date of Ninth Month 6th:

"The chiefs have but recently returned from Buffalo, and we have already heard of some dissatisfaction having been expressed by some of the natives on account of the land having been sold and money received by the chiefs."

This important event in the history of these Indians not only produced feelings of dissatisfaction and discouragement to them, but affected the minds of the Committee with similar sentiments, as is shown by the following allusion to it in their report to the Yearly Meeting in 1827: "As relates to the general improvement in agriculture, etc., we have little to communicate; the circumstances attending these people at this time not being calculated to encourage them to exertions of this kind. As since our last report the Seneca Nation has been induced to part with very large bodies of their lands in different places to the pre-emption holders, and it is to be feared that this may be a prelude to their parting with the remainder at no very distant day. Notwithstanding this and other discouragements which have occurred the Committee have persevered in their attention to the services required to their appointment, believing that by continuing to do so, so long as there remain any prospects of benefit to these poor, injured people the object contemplated by the Society will be best promoted."

The dissatisfaction of a part of the Seneca Nation with this sale resulted in a visit to Washington by Red Jacket and Captain Johnson, who had an interview with John Quincy Adams, then President of the United States in which they stated that the treaty was fraudulently obtained. The President communicated this statement to the Senate, who upon consideration refused to ratify it by a vote of 12 to 20. But, on the fourth of Fourth Month 1828, that body adopted the following resolution in explanation of their action, viz: Resolved, "that by the refusal of the Senate to ratify the treaty with the Seneca Indians, it is not intended to express any disapprobation of the terms of the contract entered into by individuals who are parties to that contract, but merely to disclaim the necessity of an interference by the Senate with the subject matter." The President shortly afterwards appointed Richard M. Livingston, of Saratoga, N. Y., to examine into the matter, who met the Indians in council at Buffalo in the Sixth Month, 1828, and in the following month made a report of his examination to the authorities at Washington. Nothing, however, appears to have been done to stop the operations of the bargain and sale. Nearly sixty years afterwards, the Seneca Nation brought a suit law to recover possession of these lands, chief on the ground that the treaty had never been formally ratified. This suit was finally decided in 1891 by the Court of Appeals, which held that the transaction of 1828 was a valid one, and that the Indians could not therefore either recover possession of these lands or an additional pecuniary equivalent.

In a letter to the Committee dated in the Twelfth Month of this year Joseph Elkint remarks: "The continuance of the school upon its present plan we consider a very important part of the concern amongst the natives, the children have an opportunity not only learning their books, but likewise becoming acquainted with the manner in which we cultivate the ground."

In the Fifth Month of this year Mary Nutt arrived at Tunesassa in company with Joseph S. and Abigail Walton, and on the fourth of Seventh Month she opened a school to instruct girls in sewing, spinning, knitting, etc. A number who were present at the opening was but 6, yet more afterwards came, and in the Ninth Month, 1827, the Friends reported that since the commencement of the school the scholars had spun tow and flax for 176 yds of cloth, wool for 53 yards, 78 cuts of sewing thread, had knit 49 pair of stockings, 11 pair of mittens, and made 12 straw hats.

Robert Scotten was engaged at this time in structing the boys in the use of tools, particularly those used by wheelwrights.

Joseph Elkinton, in order to promote the advancement of the natives in industry and agriculture, about this time encouraged the formation of a society among them, known as the Aboriginal Agricultural Society of Allegheny, and assisted them in preparing a constitution and by-laws to govern it; thirty-four of the Indians met at the organization of the society, and most of them paid a small sum to treasury, which was to be used in awarding premiums. The following is a list of some of the premiums: Any member raising 60 bushels of rye in one year to receive $2, the same amount to be paid to any one raising 250 bushels of corn, or 200 bushels of flax, or 20 bushels of spring wheat, or shearing 30 pounds of wool from his own sheep in one year; to any one building a frame barn 30 feet by 40 feet with suitable stables, etc.; $5 premiums were also offered to those who raised a certain amount of hay, cleared, fenced and prepared or seed 4 acres of land, those who digged a well 15 feet deep, etc. This Society was dissolved after an existence of less than three years.

In the latter part of Eighth Month, 1825, Joseph Elkinton and Joseph S. Walton visited several natives on their farms in order to advise and instruct them in regard to sowing rye wheat, etc., recommending them to sow in the fall of the year, instead of the spring. They were generally in the habit of doing so. The Friends found most of those they visited willing to accede to their suggestions, though preferring their former methods. In these interviews they had the opportunity also of speaking upon other subjects in which they could exercise an influence upon them for good. On one visit, an Indian of about thirty-six years of age, informed them that about two years previously he had gone on foot from Allegheny to Buffalo, a distance of about seventy miles in one day.

Some statistics were obtained from different individuals in regard to the amount of their land, their crops, number of animals, etc. An examination of these shows that of eighteen persons inquired of, the average number of acres under cultivation was from seven to eight. The number of cattle, including oxen and cows, belonging to each farmer was from five to five, and of hogs and pigs, about seven. The census returns for 1890 show that there were one hundred and twenty farmers on the Allegheny Reservation at that time who cultivated on an average about 24 acres of land each, and together owned one hundred and forty horses. Each farmer had on an average from three to four head of cattle and one to two swine apiece, and produced thirty-seven bushels of potatoes, fifty-nine bushels of corn, thirty-nine bushels of buckwheat, together with flax, oats and hay.

(To be continued.)

BEGIN the day in a spirit gathered unto prayer, and "many burdens will slip away and many dangers will be averted that might have overtaken us," but for this drawing to and from the throne of grace.

"It will rest thee to pray,
Then forward, for daylight is feet."

Letter from James Parnell.

To my Dear Friends, Brethren and Sisters in the City of London (1655).

To ye translated ones my love from the Life doth flow; you that are translated and renewed in heart and mind, you that are separated and redeemed from amongst the children of this world, and the pollutions and abominations that they live in; in whom the works of the new creation, wherein dwelleth righteousness, are established; who are beautified within, who are adorned within, who are comely within, who are purified and cleansed within by the precious blood of the Lamb, with whom you are crucified, who are in Him, who have put on the wedding garment, and are admitted to the table of the Lord, and are partakers of the Holy Union.

Oh, ye blessed of the Lord, ye babes and children of the Most High who dwelleth in purity and reigneth in majesty, who has established and set up His throne in your hearts, in you is my joy and great delight; yea, I remember you when ye were tender and springing up, but by waiting upon the Lord you have renewed your strength, and the more is my joy made full in you, and ye are made precious in my sight; ye that are inward Jews of the heart circumcision, redeemed from kindreds, tongues, languages and people, who are come to the Heavenly Jerusalem there to worship the Father in spirit and in truth, whom He hath chosen to bear His Holy Image which hath been so much defaced in this world, and in you to exalt and glorify His name of Holiness amongst the heathen, and them that know Him not, now in this day, wherein He is visiting the earth with judgment and with mercy and with a mighty power to call to an account the inhabitants of the earth: And blessed are ye that have hearkened unto His voice; ye shall sing and rejoice when others shall weep and mourn and howl; though amongst them your portions are scourgings, scornings, mockings, deridings, backbitings, revilings, persecutions, stripes, imprisonments, yet have you learned to account these as riches, who know the Comforter within you, and your Redeemer to live with you. I do rejoice in all these things, being now made partaker of them. I am not unknown to you, my voice ye know of old. Oh, how do I long to see your faces, but in that I am straitened for a time. My life is bound up in many of your hearts, which makes me I cannot forget you; my spirit cannot be separated from you though my body is kept in strait bonds. But the straitness will be broken when He hath perfected His praise in them, who is my only Keeper and Supporter.

O ye simple doves, who sit without guile in your mouths! how I am ravished with the love of you, when I behold you in spirit! you that have given up unto the death, to the famine, to the sword and to the fire, and have patiently submitted unto the Father's will and willingly sacrificed up your darling; your faith is unto you imputed for righteousness; and the God whom you have trusted and believed in, will make you rich in Him and give you substance incorruptible and an inheritance that never fails; in measure you can set to your seals of what is written unto you.

But some have hearkened unto the evil spirit, which hath brought evil tidings of the Good Land, and such have turned back into Egypt and joined with the magicians thereof to harden Pharaoh's heart against the innocent and filled the mouths of the heathen with blasphemous speeches. But let them go on; he that is filthy let him be filthy still; for He cometh quickly whose reward is with Him, to give unto them according to their doings. But all things work together for the good of you who stand in the faith, who are not moved with the winds that blow, nor the storms that come against you, who eye the hand of Providence in all these things, which bringeth good out of evil to you-wards, who abide in the Truth and stray not.

So as you have tasted, felt, known and experienced of Him, so trust ye in Him and remain in your sure confidence which is begotten in you by His word. And be ye as lights in the dark world both by word and by conversation that in all things ye may be approved by the Father in your consciences, as faithful and obedient children, every one in your calling, wherein you are called, that the price thereof you may obtain in the end of your race. O lift up your heads and look up to the Father, and see how He has tendered you, and how His love has been tendered towards you all along, who hath not left you without instructors and nursing-fathers, who have watched over you with tender care. In much love and tenderness I am drawn forth towards you little ones, which springs from the Root of the Vine because you bear my Father's image.

Long have I waited to write to you, and lately I had an opening of you which caused me to visit you with this epistle, for ye have been oftentimes in my remembrance though I could not write; and now you must read me in that love which tongue cannot express, and in that epistle which is written in your hearts without either paper or ink by the immortal Word of Life, and there my name you will know.

So, the Lord God Almighty, the Keeper of Israel, overshadow you, and in His holy presence keep you pure and innocent, that you may pour forth His praise in the earth and shine as the sons and daughters of Zion, into whose blessed protection I you commit, and do lie down with you, who am a sufferer in outward bonds by the will of man for the Innocent Sord's sake, but at liberty with the Faithful, who am called JAMES PARNELL.

Written from Colchester Castle, Eleventh Month 12th, 1655.

LOVE BETTER THAN FORCE.—The highest human victories are moral. To use the fist is the triumph of the physical man, to conquer and use the brain is the victory of the intellectual, but to bring every thought and feeling and fancy of the soul into enduring captivity to the obedience of Christ—this is the best, highest and last conquest of the moral man.—Thomas C. Easton.

THE CHURCH AND REFORM.—There have been times in the history of the church when she has wrought mightily in great reforms, but the dominant characteristic of the church to-day is timidity; her dominant policy is to be as noncommittal as possible and her aim to keep out of trouble as far as possible. So long as that attitude is maintained the church will never have any force, no reforms will be effected.—Lorimer.

Selected for "THE FRIEND."

George Fox as a Minister.

BY WILLIAM PENN.

I. He was a man that God endued with a clear and wonderful depth; a discernor of others' spirits, and very much a master of his own. And though that side of his understanding which lay next to the world, and especially the expression of it, might sound uncouth and unfashionable to nice ears, his matter was nevertheless very profound; and would not only bear to be often considered, but the more it was so, the more weighty and instructing it appeared. And, as abruptly and brokenly as sometimes his sentences would seem to fall from him, about Divine things, it is well known they were often as texts to many fairer declarations. And indeed, it showed beyond all contradiction, that God sent him; in that no art or parts had any share in the matter or manner of his ministry; and that so many great, excellent and necessary truths as he came forth to preach to mankind, had nothing of man's wit or wisdom to recommend them. So that as to man he was an original, being no man's copy. And his ministry and writings show they are from one that was not taught of man, nor had learned what he said by study.

Nor were they notional or speculative, but sensible and practical truths tending to conversion and regeneration, and the setting up of the kingdom of God in the hearts of men. And the way of it was his work. So that I have many times been overcome in myself, and been made to say, with my Lord and Master upon the like occasion, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent of this world and revealed them to babes." For many times hath my soul bowed in an humble thankfulness to the Lord, that He did not choose any of the wise and learned of this world to be the first messenger in our age of his blessed truth to men, but that He took one that was not of high degree, or elegant speech, or learned after the way of this world, that his message and work that He sent him to do, might come with less suspicion or jealousy of human wisdom and interest, and with more force and clearness upon the consciences of those that sincerely sought the way of Truth in the love of it.

I say beholding with the eye of my mind which the God of heaven had opened in me, the marks of God's finger and hand visibly in this testimony, from the clearness of the principle, the power and efficacy of it, in the exemplary sobriety, plainness, zeal, steadiness, humility, gravity, punctuality, charity and circumspect care in the government of church affairs, which shined in his and their life and testimony, that God employed in this work, it greatly confirmed me that it was of God, and engaged my soul in a deep love, fear, reverence and thankfulness for his love and mercy therein to mankind; in which mind I remain, and shall, I hope, through the Lord's strength, to the end of my days.

II. In his testimony or ministry, he much labored to open truth to the people's understandings, and bottom them upon the principle and principal Christ Jesus the light of the world; that by bringing them to something that was from God in themselves, they might the better know and judge of Him and themselves.

III. He had an extraordinary gift in opening the Scriptures. He would go to the marrow of things, and show the mind, harmony and fulfilling of them, with much plainness, and to great comfort and edification.

IV. The mystery of the first and second Adam, of the fall and restoration of the law and gospel, of shadows and substance, of the servant's and son's state, and the fulfilling of the Scriptures in Christ and by Christ, the true Light in all that are his, through the obedience of faith, were much of the substance and drift of his testimonies. In all which he was witnessed to be of God; being sensibly felt to speak that which he had received of Christ, and was his own experience, in that which never errs nor fails.

V. But above all he excelled in prayer. The inwardness and weight of his spirit, the reverence and solemnity of his address and behaviour, and the fewness and fulness of his words, have often struck even strangers with admiration, as they used to reach others with consolation. The most awful, living, reverent frame I ever felt or beheld, I must say was his in prayer. And truly it was a testimony he knew and lived nearer to the Lord than other men: for they that know Him most will see most reason to approach Him with reverence and fear.

VI. He was of an innocent life, no busy-body nor self-seeker; neither touchy nor critical. What fell from him was very inoffensive, if not very edifying. So meek, contented, modest, easy, steady, tender, it was a pleasure to be in his company. He exercised no authority but over evil, and that everywhere, and in all; but with love, compassion and long suffering. A most merciful man, as ready to forgive, as unapt to take or give an offence. Thousands can truly say he was of an excellent spirit and savour among them; and because thereof, the most excellent spirits loved him with an unfeigned and un fading love.

VII. He was an incessant laborer; for in his younger time, before his many great and deep sufferings and travails had enfeebled his body for itinerant services, he labored much in the word and doctrine in England, Scotland and Ireland; turning many to God, and confirming those that were convinced of the Truth, and settling good order as to church affairs among them. And towards the conclusion of his travelling services, between the years 1671 and 1677, he visited the churches of Christ in the plantations in America, and in the United Provinces and Germany, as his Journal relates, to the conviction and consolation of many. After that time he chiefly resided in and about the city of London. And besides his labor in the ministry, which was frequent and serviceable, he wrote much, both to them that are within, and those that are without the communion. But the care he took of the affairs of the church in general was very great.

VIII. He was often where the records of the business of the church are kept, and where the letters from the many meetings of God's people over all the world used to come. Which letters he had read to him, and communicated them to the meeting that is weekly held for such services, and he would be sure to sit them up to answer them, especially in suffering cases, showing great sympathy and compassion upon all such occasions; carefully looking into the respective cases, and endeavoring speedy relief according to the nature of them. So that the churches, or any of the suffering members thereof, were sure not to be forgotten or delayed in their desires, if it were there.

IX. As he was unwearied, so he was undaunted in his services for God and his people. He was no more to be moved to fear than to wrath. His behaviour at Derby, Litchfield, Appleby, before Oliver Cromwell, at Launceston, Scarborough, Worcester and Westminster Hall, with many other places and exercises did abundantly evidence it, to his enemies as well as his friends. . . . And truly I must say, that though God had visibly clothed him with a Divine preference and authority, an indeed his very presence expressed a religious majesty; yet he never abused it, but held his place in the church of God with great meekness, and a most engaging humility and moderation. For upon all occasions, like his blessed Master, he was a servant to all; holding an exercising his eldership in the invisible power that had gathered them, with reverence to the head, and care over the body; and was received, only in that spirit and power of Christ as the first and chief elder in this age; whereas he was therefore worthy of double honor so for the same reason it was given by the faithful of this day, because his authority was inward and not outward, and that he got and kept it, by the love of God, and power of an endless life. I write my knowledge and not report and my witness is true, having been with him for weeks and months together on divers occasions, and those of the nearest and most exercising nature; and that by night as by day, by sea and by land; in this and foreign countries; and I can say, I never saw him out of his place, or not a match for any service or occasion. For in all things he acquitted himself like a man; yea a strong man, a noble and heavenly minded man; a divine and naturalist, and all of God Almighty's making.

I have been surprised at his questions; answers in natural things; that while he was ignorant of useless and sophistical science he had in him the grounds of useful and commendable knowledge, and cherished it ever where; civil beyond all forms of breeding; his behavior; very temperate, eating little and sleeping less, though a bulky person.

Thus he lived and sojourned among us. As he lived, so he died; feeling the same eternal power that had raised and preserved him in his last moments. So full of assurance was he that he triumphed over death, and even in his spirit to the last, as if death were hardly worth notice, or a mention; commending to some of us with him, the dispatch and dispersion of an epistle just before given forth by him to the churches of Christ throughout the world, and his own books; but above all, Friends; and of all Friends, those in Ireland and America; twice over saying, My poor Friends in Ireland and America. . . .

In a good old age he left us, after having lived to see his children's children in the Truth many generations. He had the comfort of short illness, and the blessing of a clear ser-the last; and we may truly say with a man God of old that being dead he yet speaketh; I though now absent in body he is present spirit, neither time nor place being able to interrupt the communion of saints, or dissolve fellowship of the spirits of the just. His works praise him because they are to the praise Him that wrought by him; for which his memorial is, and shall be blessed. I have done to this part of my subject, when I have said this short epitaph to his name: "Many has done virtuously in this day; but, O George, thou excellest them all!"—Rise I Progress of the Society of Friends.

A Mother-Made Man.

A well-known man was introduced at a public meeting as a "self made man." Instead of appearing gratified by the tribute, seemed to throw him, for a few moments, a "brown study." Afterward they asked the reason for the way in which he received the announcement.

"Well," said the great man, "it set me to thinking that I was not really a self-made man."

"Why" they replied, "did you not begin work in a store when you were ten or eleven?"

"Yes," said he, "but it was because my mother thought I ought early to have the educating touch of business."

"But then," they argued, "you were always such a great reader."

"Yes," he replied; "but it was because my mother led me to do it, and at her knee she made me give an account of the book after I read it. I don't know about being a self-made man. I think my mother had a great deal to do with it."

"But then," they urged again, "your industry was your own."

"Well, I don't know about that. One day, a barrel of apples came to me to sell out by speck, and, after the manner of some storekeepers, I put the specked ones at the bottom of the best ones at the top. My mother noticed and asked me what I was doing. I told her and she said, 'Tom, if you do that, you will be a cheat.' And I did not do it. I think my mother had something to do with my integrity. And, on the whole, I doubt whether I am a self-made man. I think my mother had something to do with making me anything of any character or usefulness."

"Happy," said Dr. Lorimer who told the story, "the boy who had such a mother; and the mother who had such a boy so appreciative of his mother's influence."

ANY sincere, judicious and disinterested persons, who have witnessed the work of God's redeeming them from a vain conversation, have been obliged to relinquish the forms and ceremonies of religion wherein they had been educated, and to frequent the meetings of the people called Quakers, where, as some of them have declared, in an inward retirement waiting upon God in silence and humility, they have come to experience Divine comfort and refreshment, and that solid satisfaction of soul, which they never could attain by their own willings, runnings and performances. — Proselytes as these come in at the right place.—Preface to Life of Richarda Claridge.

First-day Excursions.

The Record-Herald, of Chicago, gave the following report of the meeting of the American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents, held at Old Point Comfort, Virginia, recently:

"The clergy, religious organizations, Sunday observance leagues and kindred societies throughout the country have united in a determined effort to induce the railroads to discontinue Sunday excursions.

"The first battle in the campaign was fought out at the Hotel Chamberlin at the first session of the American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents, where a resolution was introduced to do away with Sunday excursions, and was referred to the various territorial associations. Those who are still in favor of such excursions look upon the matter as defeated, while those who are for reform declare that a decided step in advance has been taken.

"For the comfort of the religious and moral elements in the country, it can be said that many of the most influential passenger men in the United States went on record in the meeting as being unalterably opposed to the operation of excursion trains on the Sabbath.

"General Passenger Agent Smith, of the Lake Shore, declared that the protest which had been filed with him as secretary of the organization came from sources which could not be ignored nor treated lightly. The better element of the entire country, he said, was protesting against the desecration of the Sabbath, and was also demanding that railway employes be given one day of rest where possible.

"George King, of the Michigan Central, said men as well as machines must have rest, and that superior officers had no right to compel to work seven days in the week because of a few paltry dollars. The Michigan Central had refrained from running Sunday excursions for years, only to resume under pressure of competition. This business brought the company about $150,000 annually, but the officers were ready to discontinue the excursions whenever others would join.

"General Passenger Agent Boothby, of the Maine Central, opposed the resolution on the ground that the people demanded recreation Sundays.

"C. L. Stone, of the Louisville and Nashville, and D. B. Martin, of the Baltimore and Ohio, both roads of large Sunday excursion business said the question was not religious nor moral, but a matter of business to be determined by conditions.

"S. H. Hardwick, of the Southern, made a strong plea for Sunday observance. He said his road had discontinued Sunday excursions because of the moral and financial sides.

"It does not pay," he asserted, "and then I have still the old-fashioned idea of the Sabbath day. I also believe that a man is a better man on Monday if he has had rest on Sunday. Some of the greatest and most progressive roads in the country already have taken the initiative, and the rest of you must follow in time. It is in the line of progress and moral advancement, and the reform cannot be stopped.

THE only dignified life is a useful one.

The American Standard Revised Bible.

The Anglo-American version was begun in 1870 and completed in 1887, the ablest British and American scholars of many religious denominations and educational institutions having engaged in its preparation. The version itself was a vast improvement on all preceding English versions. Unfortunately however, the full worth of the work done by American scholars was not recognized, since the British revisers did not incorporate the result of these laborers into the text, but an appendix, rather hastily prepared with the preferences of the American committee, was printed with the version.

When their work was completed, the British revisers disbanded, while the American committee kept up their organization and continued revising the appendix, and indeed the whole of the Bible. They agreed, however, not to issue any American version until after fourteen years had elapsed, and further pledged themselves to use their influence in securing a wide circulation, in America, for the Anglo-American version. Both of these pledges were faithfully kept.

During these fourteen years and more British and American scholars gradually came to the conclusion that the American revisers were nearer the meaning of the original languages than their British co-laborers. It was determined, therefore to issue an American Revised Version.

Nearly every other version was marred by mistakes. The American revisers sought to make the Bible—a book for learned and unlearned people—intelligible. Accordingly they omitted archaic and unintelligible words. The following are examples:

Chiel, grissled, hen, marsh, minish, sith, strake, stroved, collops, chapter, huzen, fellor, clouts, hough, reins, seeche, holpen, bewray, astoned, usury, prevent."

Words misunderstood are replaced by others newer and better, so that the meaning of the scriptures is more clearly brought out.

"Daysman" becomes in the American version "mediator"; "conches," "sittings"; "chargers" "platters"; "occupiers" "tradesmen"; "seeche" "boil"; "chapters" "capitals"; "fan" "winnow"; "wist" "know"; "demons" "devils" "hungored" "hungry"; "quiek" "living."

To continue with illustrations, in the American Revised Version, "trode" is used for "trode"; "two" for "twain"; "knew" for "wist"; "know" for "wot"; "convenant" for "testament"; "teacher" for "instructor"; "grain" for "corn"; "grain of mustard seed" for "mustard seed"; "poured out" for "shed"; "quakers" for "victuals"; "reasonings" for "pleas"; "sittings" for "tempt"; "drove" for "purged"; "hate" for "hate"; "land" for "land"; "show" for "show"; "guard" for "watch"; "forbearance" for "temperance"; "to sit at the feet of the teachers" for "hear the teaching of the teachers"; "gift" for "toon."

Not only have the American revisers done good work by modernizing the text, but the Bible a more intelligible book, with explanations as well as changed to a better one. One important word ("Hebrew") is used for "old" and "God" wherever the word occurs in the original. It is a well-known fact that it was a superstitious veneration for the memori-name that kept the Hebrews from pronouncing this world.

"Sheol" is used for hell, pit and grave when the abode of the dead is intended. In this the English revisers were inconsistent, since they began to introduce the term, but used it only twenty-nine out of sixty-five times. The American committee makes use of the term throughout.

In the American Revised Version "Holy Spirit" is always used for "Holy Ghost;" a vast improvement.

This version is in closer conformity to the original languages. It removes words that puzzle the ordinary reader and even the scholar—such as "dragon," "arrowsnake" of the British version. The American version has received words of warmest praise from ministers, teachers, Bible scholars, reviews, and the religious and secular press on both sides of the Atlantic.—Boston Transcript.

The Son of Man.

Is the fact that Jesus Christ was born of the Holy Spirit sufficiently dwelt on? The first Adam received "the breath of life" from Jehovah God "and became a living soul" (Gen. ii: 7). Jesus received from the virgin Mary his outward body with its heritage, but above all a new breath of life by the Holy Spirit "and the power of the Most High that shall overshadow thee" (Luke i: 35). A new incarnation, the second Adam.

Disobedience eclipsed the spiritual life of the first Adam, perfect obedience sustained the spiritual power of the second Adam: "I can of myself do nothing; . . . I seek not my own will, but the will of Him that sent me" (John v: 30).

Christ Jesus "humbled" or limited himself by his human organism with its inheritances flowing back to the fallen Adam. He did not outrun the possibilities of a redeemed humanity, or He would have ceased to be our pattern—"one that hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Heb. v: 15).

George Fox had a young heart that was preserved to a very eminent degree from defilement, so that born again of the Spirit he came under the blessing for the pure in heart (Matt. v: 1). This communion with the Father and the Son led him into foreknowledge, wisdom and preaching, healing power. Christ's boyhood was sinless and He held high communion. Near Nazareth caravans passed and repassed. There were evening discussions over rabbinical subtleties interspersed with fragments of Greek thought and traditions, or teachings from Alexandria and the East. Jesus as a boy was an intelligent listener. Hospitality graced their humble home. The Holy Spirit was with Him as a solvent to separate and cleanse the good and cause the crystals of truth to shine. The doctors at Jerusalem were amazed at their brilliancy.

The second Adam lived a full human life to vindicate, by restoration, God's magnificent liberality and infinite generosity in creating beings capable of becoming sons of God and his guests (Rev. iii: 21, 22.)

A perfected man can be a child of God. The perfected Church is the bride, the Lamb's wife—the New Jerusalem (Rev. xxi: 9.)

Friends' City Home Association.

At the second annual meeting of the Friends' City Home Association held at the Home, 1623 Summer Street, Tenth Month 26th, 1904, about twenty Friends were present.

The Committee of Management submitted a report of their proceedings for the year, which was satisfactory. The suggestion made in the report, that annual subscriptions should be solicited from interested Friends was approved and referred to the incoming Committee of Managers to carry into effect.

It was also concluded to authorize the committee to add to their numbers, if in their judgment it would seem proper.

The report of the Committee of Managers and Treasurer are appended. The report is as follows:

The Committee of Managers of Friends' City Home Association appointed Tenth Month 29th, 1903 to serve for one year, submit a report as follows:

The year now closing has proved an interesting one for the City Home Association. The house No. 1623 Summer Street was opened so late in the season that there was some delay in getting it fairly started, but by New Year's, 1904, most of the rooms were occupied.

They continued so until the time of summer vacations, when many of the patrons sought other temporary quarters, so that the house had but few occupants during the Seventh, Eighth and Ninth Months. The records show that since the opening on Tenth Month 1st, 1903, about forty-five separate persons have availed themselves of the accommodations offered, for a longer or shorter period.

In addition to the above, there were quite a number who came as transient guests, spending a night or more, as well as some who took meals with us. These visitors were always welcome and the financial assistance from this source was not inconsiderable.

With our house now better known and timely notice having been given of its objects, we have begun this autumn with a more promising outlook, and the twenty beds available for use are now nearly all occupied with those who expect to be with us through the winter.

As indicated in the report of a year ago, the managers fully appreciated that the expenses of conducting the home would be greater than the amounts received from those who would live in it, and we greatly acknowledge the liberality of Friends in providing means for its equipment, and to meet the deficiency in carrying it on.

It is too early to express a confident opinion on the subject, but in the light of the year's experience and the opening of the present season, we may expect our concern to be largely self-supporting in the future, and suggest the plan of annual subscriptions of small sums, that such a condition may be secured.

The detailed report of the Treasurer will give the particulars of the receipts and expenditures.

Reference was made in the report a year ago to the house being placed under the care of Sarah H. Bailey. She continued in this position until the Fifth Month last, when upon her resignation Mary Wildman succeeded her and is now in charge of the City Home.

We are indebted to the faithful service of these Friends for much of the success that has accompanied its management.

On behalf of the committee.

JOEL CADBURY.

Friends were appointed to bring forward names at our next annual meeting of Friends constituting a Committee of Managers.

The committee appointed at our last meeting proposed the following Friends to serve as managers for the ensuing year: Benjamin Vail, Joel Cadbury, Benjamin F. Whitson, C. Virginia Sellow, Deborah P. Lowry, Florence A. Elliott.

The nominations were approved and they accordingly appointed.

The meeting then adjourned. After the adjournment of the meeting, some of those present availed themselves of the opportunity of inspecting the separate rooms of the Home.

Report of John Way, Treasurer of City Home Association since its establishment:

Received Sundry Contributions,	$3318
Interest on Deposits,	7
Income from Transients,	$428 71
Income from Boarders,	2284 05
Sundry Receipts through Home,	8 99
Temporary Loan,	2700
Total,	$6548

Payments:—

Rent, 1623 Summer Street to Tenth Mo. 1st, 1904,	$1166
Salaries and Wages, to Tenth Mo. 1st, 1904,	1168
Household Furnishing and Equipment,	1782
Provisions to Tenth Mo. 1st, 1904,	1713
Ice do	38
Gas do	90
Sundry Expenses,	112
Coal and Wood,	159
Printing, Stationary, etc.,	62
Sundry Household Expenses not otherwise classified,	235
Balance on hand,	18
Total,	$6548
Bills Payable, temporary loan, $500 00
J. S. Lowry & Son, Coal,	109 53
Total,	$609 53

The following "Observations of an American Envoy" have at times been published but the time seems to call for their repetition.

After transacting some business with member of the Society of Friends in London he said, "I admire your Society: the principle contains all of Christianity I have any idea but I am sorry to see that some of you lose your badge, and I do not see how you retain your principles and forego your peculiarities, your marks of self-difference from the Spirit of the world. are lights; the world should come to you, not you go to the world. You may gain them, but they will scatter you."—Gleanings at Seventy-five.

A GOOD FIGHT.—When Thomas Lloyd first Deputy Governor of Pennsylvania, dying, he said: "Tell them I have fought for strife and contention, but for the greater Lord Jesus Christ, and the simplicity of the Gospel."

The whole creation is too poor
To make us fully blest.

utes of Exercises in Iowa Yearly Meeting. In the early part of the meeting the language of the prophet was revived, "Ho, every that thirsteth come ye to the waters," and were directed to the same Saviour who told woman of Samaria at Jacob's well, that she known who it was that spoke with she would have asked of Him and He would have given her living water. He is just as as He ever was to give freely to all will come to Him of this water which things up unto everlasting life. Earnest desires were felt and from time to time expressed to be blessed in our coming together at time, and that we look to the Lord Alty for our support and guidance from to day and from hour to hour, remembering that we must exercise continual vigilance faithfulness throughout life if we would obtain our spiritual growth, for our out-ld life is sustained by our daily material ld, so we must continually look to our vely Father for spiritual bread.

The consideration of the state of Society visioned a deep exercise of spirit and the deficiencies revealed in the Answer to Queries gave rise to the question, "Is it The solemnity that overspread the meet-at this time was felt to be an earnest of desire, that though our failings are many will still strive to overcome them in the le of our Lord.

to the temple of the Levitical dispensation was an outer court where the people dled, while the high priest entered the inner tuary and offered sacrifices for the sins of eople, a veil being between the sanctuary e people; but when the Lord and Saviour s Christ was sacrificed on Calvary, the e of the temple was rent in twain. Thus iffing the way is opened through Him spirital High Priest, into the Holy place, e ever liveth to make intercession for us, with his own blood cleanse us from all. This cleansing operation which we must bmit to (for we have all sinned and fallen t of his glory), is comparable to a refiner e fire that consumes all that dims and defiles, owing the dross until we reflect the Mas- e image. In this condition we are dead to e world but alive unto God, and our vety- lutions whether we eat or drink or what- e we do will be to his glory. Our love will n to all his creatures and we shall be vey y to extend the helping hand where we ur brother in need. The young were ten- e exhorted so to yield themselves in the e of their lives, being assured "His e is easy and his burden light. The call e all from the least to the greatest, none e excluded. "For the grace of God that e salvation hath appeared unto all men." e will appear to all that seek Him in sin- e and are willing to humble themselves ecome as little children, trusting in child- e simplicity to the guidance of our Heavenly e, who draws us unto himself by his e in our hearts, to which if obedience e pace with knowledge, we shall grow in e until we become pillars in his church; e we overcome the trials and temptations e beset us through the workings of his e in our hearts we mount as it were step e up and round by round, growing stronger e stronger, learning in the school of Christ.

Our spiritual life is also comparable to that of a plant—first the seed in the soil, then the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. Thus we see that a faithful performance of the functions of life here is the best preparation for the life hereafter.

It has been with feelings of humility and gratitude to the great Head of the church that He has permitted us to transact the business that has come before us in harmony and brotherly love.

Steps in the Christian Experience of Richard Claridge.

I. To forsake the communion of the Church of England, wherein he was not only educated from his childhood, but had been a preacher of some account more than twenty years.

II. To join in society with the people called Baptists, who gladly embraced a man of his character and abilities; and among whom he also exercised the ministerial office for some years.

III. To desist from preaching among the Baptists, and finally to withdraw from their communion.

IV. To frequent in silence the meetings of the people called Quakers, about which time he met with a variety of exercises and temptations, both from the world without, and the grand enemy of souls within.

V. To come forth in a free and public testimony to the sufficiency of the universal grace and light of Christ; and to declare unto others his own experience of its powerful operation;

VI. Till he became enabled in humble gratitude experimentally to say, "I bless the Lord, my heart is fixed in his blessed truth, and I have his comforting presence with me. O what great things He hath done for me! Who hath redeemed my soul from death, and my feet from falling; and made his cup of love to overflow, and with honey out of the Rock hath he satisfied me. Endless praises be ascribed to Him, for his mercy endureth forever."

Items Concerning the Society.

We have received a copy of the engraving entitled "Penn's Treaty with the Indians," on India paper, from the original Boydell engraved plate, made in 1775 from the original painting of Benjamin West. The sheet is 30 by 24 inches in size. Copies are now offered by E. P. Smith, 45 East Penn street, Germantown, Philadelphia, at $3.00 by mail.

This is said in a recent Boston paper concerning Sybil Jones, wife of Eli Jones, of Maine, and mother of Richard M. Jones of the William Penn Charter School in this city:

"At the last meeting of the Social Science of Newton, Frances Hornbrooke gave a sketch of the life and work of Sybil Jones, the Quaker missionary. The paper was greatly enjoyed, . . . the personal touch that Mrs. Hornbrooke was able to give, Sybil Jones having been a relative. This devout woman had many talents, being born an orator, although none of her speeches have ever been published. She exerted a great influence over the ignorant and criminals, reforming many men in prisons, and when in Liberia she gained the love of the women there to such an extent that they painted their faces white to be like her. She was the first to speak on temperance before English audiences. Her life and work so impressed Whittier that he wrote a poem dedicated to her, which Frances Hornbrooke possesses and gives in her sketch. Its value is priceless as it has never appeared in any published edition of Whittier's works."

Eliza H. Varney writes of her present visit to North Carolina: "We found many more lovingly concerned Friends, both older and younger, than we had anticipated. The meeting-house (at Woodland), was full every day, and a very solemn covering spread over the whole assembly in every meeting. And the ministers were evidently deeply baptized for the work and service before them. The ministers when we were by ourselves said they never had witnessed anything like it before,—such love, unity, fellowship, tenderness and contrition of soul; and the solemnity that rested over the congregation was to be felt. It was thought that there were over five hundred persons present on First-day.

"Before this sifting of his people as from sieve to sieve, we had, I believe, in many places and cases become too unconcerned and lukewarm, and when in meeting-capacity all did not perform that true spiritual worship which is well pleasing to our Father in Heaven; and that he permitted such things to come upon us as a trial of our faith and patience. Truly in the present day He is leading Israel in ways and paths we know not of. . . . It has also appeared to me even more than before, that both Yearly Meetings will do better to be separate and do more good in the world than they will to be together and live in contention, which is a great drawback in the Christian world to-day."

We welcome the announcement of a cheap, or $2.00 edition of President Sharpless's "A Quaker Experiment in Government," published by Ferris & Leach, 29 N. Seventh street, Philadelphia. For its interesting information. We quote the announcement:

"The History of Pennsylvania from its founding by William Penn in 1682 to the Revolution, shows Quakerism as tested in the practical direction of affairs. This period has been much misrepresented by critics of the Society. They have treated it as a proof of the impracticability of Quaker principles. The only authoritative statement of the other side in this controversy is this book by President Sharpless. In its present shape it contains not only the early volume issued under the title, 'A Quaker Experiment in Government,' taking the history up to the year 1756, but also the latter volume, 'The Quakers in the Revolution,' the still later chapter written for the Haverford Edition, on Friends in Public Life since the Revolution, and the Preface to the Haverford Edition replying to the critics of the earlier editions and of Quaker principles in general. Added to all this it has all the illustrations collected at great expense for the Haverford Edition, covering the persons and places connected with the early history of Pennsylvania.

"There is nothing of the apologetic tone in President Sharpless's view of this period. He treats Quaker principles in practice not as something to defend but as a glorious record, the epic of Quakerism. Failure there was in a sense—the failure to reach an ideal. Judged by this standard all governments have failed. But there was a glorious success and an enduring light to mankind in the Quaker influence on Pennsylvania. Let all Friends of this generation honor it."

Notes in General.

The Roman Catholic Cathedral in Baltimore which is approaching the one hundredth anniversary of the laying of its cornerstone, was paid for in part by the proceeds of a lottery. There were 12,500 tickets sold at $40 each, the lottery yielding, after all expenses were paid, $75,000.

In the yearly report of "The Brotherhood of the Orthodox Church in China," the Russian Archbishop of Manchuria declares without hesitation that the present war, its terrible sacrifices and Russian humiliations is the result of the Russian administration in the Far East, which has been discreditable in many ways.

Zion's Herald believes that if the churches in every city would unite to prevent crime, especially juvenile crime, it would not be many years before an impression would be made. The religious press seems to be working up to this all-important question. Will the sleeping churches respond and unite against the increase of crime which is assuming such frightful proportions is a question awaiting an answer.

The Marquis de Fontenay finds that it requires from $50,000 to $70,000 for the "Church" to declare one to be a saint. The Pope was recently startled to find that there have been several candidates who had fulfilled all the qualifications for canonization, but from whom this supreme honor of the Roman Catholic Church had been withheld, in some cases for over one hundred years, merely because their families could not pay the extravagant fees and expenses pertaining to the final ceremonial.

The American Bible Society is thus addressed by its agent Loomis in Japan: I am now much interested in the work among the sick and wounded soldiers. Last week I spent two days visiting the hospitals in Tokio. I went also again yesterday. We have now donated more than 32,000 Testaments and Gospels to the Japanese soldiers, and the most of them have come to the sick and wounded in the hospitals. It is reported that there are already 45,000, and more are coming all the time. A request has come this morning for five thousand. The applicant writes, "Soldiers are begging for them." Another missionary, to whom I had sent five hundred copies, writes, "The soldiers are very glad to receive them, and are very ready, in many cases eager, to be instructed."

Permission has been granted by the war department to distribute Scriptures to the sick and wounded whenever the arrangements can be made with those in charge of the hospitals.

A grant has been made of 10,000 Gospels to put into "comfort bags" that have been made for the soldiers, and are to be sent to the front; also 3,000 Gospels and Testaments for the Bible class, to be used by the representatives of the Bible class, Men's Christian Association who have gone to Arung. The total donations thus far have reached about 50,000 volumes.

The publication for the last six months were 48,000 Gospels of Matthew, pocket edition.

Hartford Theological Seminary has come into possession of a most valuable collection illustrating the life of Palestine, through Professor Lewis B. Paton, who spent a year as director of the American Institute of Archeology in Jerusalem. It is the most complete collection illustrating the life of the Hebrews, both in Old and New Testament times to be found in this country. Professor Paton is arranging a course of lectures on Hebrew social life.

The Bible Society has sent a grant of two hundred Wenli New Testaments to Chou Fu, the governor of Shantung, province China, who rules over 35,000,000 people. This important official, who is also a scholar of high repute, has expressed a strong desire for a better understanding between the missionaries and the Chinese authorities.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The twelfth National Irrigation Congress has lately been in session at El Paso, Texas. In the opening address Senator Clark of Montana said: "Sufficient has already been accomplished to arouse a national interest in the importance of this work. Whatever benefits one section of this republic cannot fail to benefit the whole country, and this scheme is not a sectional one, as the welfare of more than one-half of its entire area is involved and the indirect contribution to the national prosperity of the other half is incalculable. The East must depend upon the West for its food supplies and the West for a market for its manufactured products. That enriches the country—genuine American reciprocity."

A telephone that records sounds so that they can be transmitted again has lately been shown and its mechanism explained at the Franklin Institute in this city by Dr. Z. H. Ball, of New York, secretary and general manager of the American Telegraphone Company. The instrument, known as the telegraphone, is the invention of Valdemar Poulsen, of Copenhagen.

It is said that the number of Slavic Jews in this city now numbers nearly 100,000. It is stated that Great New York is estimated to have 700,000 Jewish inhabitants, and Philadelphia probably comes next in point of numbers of Jews in an American city. There is a constant immigration, started by the persecutions of the Russian Government in the early eighties and reinforced in the nineties. The Roumanian Government likewise made exceedingly unkind laws for the Jews, as a consequence a large number are coming from under its dominion. In Austria-Hungary there is unrest and hardship, and some emigrate from there, too. The Jews from these three countries chiefly are classified under the head of Slavic Jews.

The steamship Ohio, formerly of the American Line of transatlantic steamers, has been fitted up at Seattle, Oregon, with a comprehensive exhibit of American manufactured goods, and is to be sent to the Far East in order to bring to the notice of business men in those countries the character and value of the goods manufactured here. It is stated that the itinerary of this trip includes Yokohama and Kobe in Japan, Hong Kong, Shanghai in China, Manritius and Manila, Colombo, Ceylon and Singapore, India; Cape Town and Pretoria, Delagoa Bay and Johannesburg and the Australian ports of Melbourne, Adelaide and Sydney. The return will bring the Ohio back by way of Honolulu, Valparaiso and across to the States by the Panama route.

The entire trip will take no less than six months. Recently a Congressman in Massachusetts desirous of having one of his political friends appointed postmaster at Haverhill wrote to President Roosevelt demanding the appointment of the man whom he had proposed as his right. In his reply the President said: "The Senator who do not 'select' postmasters in any State while I am President. I consult them always, and in the vast majority of cases act on the recommendations they make; but the selection is mine, not theirs."

A despatch from Washington of the 10th says: As the result of an investigation made by the Assistant Attorney General Day in Alaska, the President today removed from office Frank H. Richards, Marshal for the Second or Nome Division of Alaska, and asked for the resignations of Judge Alfred S. Moore, of the Nome District, and Melville C. Brown, of the Juneau Division. The Alaska courts have been under suspension for a long time, and the President's removal of judges is the first of the kind connected with the Alaska affairs. It is understood that he intends to make personal appointments to office in Alaska, selecting men whom he is certain are above suspicion.

A bridge connecting Manhattan with Brooklyn has lately been opened, greatly benefitting public travel in Greater New York. Its entire length is 7200 feet and it spans a considerable distance is 135 feet above the river. Excluding the cost of real estate it is stated that the bridge represented an expenditure of $11,000,000.

It is announced that in several sections of the Southern States strong anti-lynching sentiments have lately been made public; and action taken by the police officers accorded in better condition than in the Philippines.

William E. Curtis, who has lately spent some months in the Philippines, has published statements respecting conditions there, widely different from those lately made by H. Parker Willis. The former says: At the present date there is no spot where the agricultural population is in a better condition than in the Philippines. The only difficulty is the lack of labor. The revenues are three and four times as large as they ever were. Since the enforcement of sanitary laws and regulations, the construction of sewers and purification of the water supply, the death rate has decreased fifty per cent. Every Governor of every province, every Mayor of every town except Manila, and almost every provincial and municipal official is a native Filipino. More than 8000 natives are on the pay rolls. Manila is comparatively free from crime, disorder or drunkenness. Few cities of the size are so well governed, or are so free from adoptions or vicious classes. There is a surprisingly small amount of crime and vice. Four thousand schools have been established, and 200,000 children are being educated. Twelve hundred schools have been built, the cost of the same recovered in the last year or four years by a show in Spanish rule; and that the other revenues have improved in a similar ratio. The islands are self-supporting, and pay the expenses of their Government excepting the maintenance of the 11,000 regular troops now on duty there, and an spending between three and five million dollars. The islands have fine harbors, railways, highways, water works, electric plants, buildings and other public improvements."

FOREIGN.—The bombardment of Port Arthur has continued with great destruction to the buildings and fortifications in the besieged city.

A despatch from the 18th from St. Petersburg says: Rio and desertions continue in connection with the mobilization of the reservists, especially in Poland. Hundreds of the reservists cross into Germany and Austria every week.

Italy has empowered its ambassador at Washington to conclude a treaty of arbitration between it and the United States, and has also instructed him to notify the President of its acceptance of his proposal for a second Peace Conference at The Hague.

The King and Queen of Portugal have been making visit to England returning that made to Portugal by King Edward last year. A treaty of arbitration between England and Portugal has lately been signed.

A inquiry has been begun at Hull, Eng., by the British Government respecting the firing upon British fishery vessels by Russian war vessels in the North Sea. The information obtained by this inquiry is to be made the basis of the British case before the international commission sitting in Paris.

A despatch from Vienna states that Austria-Hungary will be represented in the proposed Peace Conference The Hague.

A despatch from Washington says: The Netherlands accepts the suggestion that the Peace Conference be convened at The Hague. Nearly all of the Powers indicated that they accept the President's invitation principle, leaving to be mentioned the arrangement of programme and the limitations to be placed upon its work.

During the first two months of this year it is said 22,000 persons have left Ireland for the United States. There is, it is asserted, no greater menace to Ireland's future than this drain by immigration, and never before have the Irish people made such a determination to leave their country. The same conditions, though modified form, apply to Cornwall, Eng., where the mining industry is greatly depressed.

The eleventh annual report of the Bureau of Labor of the Department of Trade shows a net decrease in the first throughout the year of 1904. It is stated that the population had their wages changed during 1903. Of these 600 obtained increases amounting to about $1,500 ($200 a week, while $75,000 were reduced in amount at $29,000 ($189,794 a week).

NOTICES.

An intelligent elderly woman Friend desires a comfortable home in Friends' Family in return for light duty and companionship.

Address "E. F." care of "THE FRIEND"

Wanted.—Two bright boys from sixteen to twenty years old to learn plumbing supply business. Good opportunity for persons suitably qualified for mercantile life.

Hailes, Jones & Cadbury Co.,
1136 Ridge Ave., Philad.

Cala Preparative and Particular Meetings will be held in the parlor of Elizabeth B. Colley, at Coatesville, Pa. the first First-day in the Twelfth Month, 1904, to the First-day in the Fourth Month, 1905, inclusive, and the First Monthly Meeting will be held at Marshallton Pa. of Cala in the First and Third Months, 1905.

Friends' Meetings for Worship in Wilkins convenue at 10.30 A. M. on First and Fifth-days. No Meeting on Fifth-day at same hour.

Friends' Educational Association.—A meeting will be held at No. 140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia on Seventh-day, Twelfth Month 3rd, 1904, at 2.30 which all interested are invited to attend.

PROGRAMME:

"The Training of Children in the Duties and Obligations of Citizenship," Joshua L. Baily, Francis R. Coffin, Discussion by Isaac Sharpless, Ruth S. Goodwin, H. W. Cadbury, Thomas K. TERESA WILDMAN, Secretary.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 3, 1904.

No. 21.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 307 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

(South from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world.—1 John ii: 15.

THESE are words of great extent. The world is nothing more than a multitude of people who love themselves, and who love the creature without respect to God. The desire of authority,—the love of a reputation we do not merit,—dissipation in company,—the seeking of such things as gratify our senses,—idleness, and remissness in all Christian exercises, and a want of application in searching the truths of the gospel,—all these things are the fruits of the world. It lives in us,—we desire to love, and dread its neglect. Blessed was that apostle to whom the world was crucified, and he unto the world.—An utterance by Sam'l Balderston.

SOME of our young men seem to be undervaluing (as says a correspondent) to place an undue dependence on intellectual superiors, rather than upon the superiority of God.

SIN consists in not moving with God,—whether this be in not moving at all, or in moving out of the line of his moving.

INFORMAL RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.—“Is it to be supposed there is no religion where there are no phases?” We heard an educator ask: and he went on to say: “There is no subject school that is not packed with potential divinity.”

In what is called religious instruction there usually: “Defect of Experience; Excess of Statements.”

In the religious teaching of a child we have do with,—

- (1) “His spirit of wonder.
- (2) “His sense of Dependence,”—a dependence amongst all things, as knowledge brings them to view throughout creation; and his dependence wherever he turns.
- (3) “A sense of spiritual mastery,” the Divine mastery throughout creation, the mastery of the human spirit over lower things, the “I have overcome the world” of Christ and his Faith.

SOME hearts are reached by one aspect of Christ's crucifixion, and some by others.

To some it is enough to behold it as an exhibition to the world of his agony for sin,—a proof of Love to win us. Let these be true to that which suffices to reconcile them to God.

There are others who need to feel there is something more in Christ's suffering than advertisement or testimony. Behind the surface of suffering which we can see, the deep labor of suffering works a work in the spiritual realm, a work that changes conditions for us among spiritual forces, a work that prepares deliverance for those for whom it is wrought. For a child of faith, the superhuman suffering of a Redeemer's love works a quenching of all suffering not necessary to the fulfilment of Love.

Division by Intrusion.

Not long since a long-standing representative minister of a large Yearly Meeting under the name of Friends was asked, “What distinction there is between the theory of the ministry as at present accepted by the larger system of Yearly Meetings, and the other denominations of Christendom generally—what distinction, not in the doctrines preached, but in the conduct of preaching itself, the preparation of sermons, the rule for the delivery of vocal exercises in worship, the choice of the individual in his own practice, and the discretion of the church as to who shall perform the preaching, or conduct public worship?” His answer was, “There is no distinction whatever between our theory and basis for the conduct of the ministry, and that of other denominations in general.” And he went on to say, “To illustrate it by my own practice: After the Sabbath exercises are over, or else on the next morning, I look up the chapter in the Bible that contains the lesson for next First-day morning's Sabbath School. I read it over, and select from it a topic that seems to me best adapted to the needs of our neighborhood to be instructed on; and I make that subject my study by thought, by the Scriptures, and by other books, until I am pretty well charged with its contents to deliver them in next meeting, after the stated preliminaries of song, reading and prayer are gone through.” This I take it is the prevailing method with us now-a-days, among Friends who aim to hold a congregation in their respective neighborhoods.’

Could anything assert a more a clear-cut parting of the ways, than this wedge of separation between our accepted foundation principles of ministry and worship for two centuries, and the latter-day swing-off from them back again to what the Society came out of? And yet our friend insisted on calling those who thus swing off, the loyalists, and those who abide steadfast to the doctrines established from the beginning, “the separatists”—the former “in unity” because loyal to the machine, the latter “separatists” for remaining loyal to the principles.

Thus we are becoming taught a meaning for the word “separatist” which links it with steadfastness to principle—which gives it the honor which the apostle applied to the word when he announced himself as “separated unto the gospel of God.” To be “separated unto” the steadfast principles of our profession means the closest unity with them, though they whose arks drift off with the current do as they may.

The list of fifty-seven under contract as stated preachers in one Yearly Meeting, 53 in another, and so on—and where fewer have a foothold, the confession expressed to us a few years ago, “It is not scruple about the principle, that keeps the paid preachers so much out of the limits of our Yearly Meeting, but the scarcity of money to pay them,” confirms to our mind the statement of one of them travelling in England, when he said, “The paid pastorate system in our American Yearly Meetings has come to stay.” To this we would add, “so long as it has staying qualities.” It may indeed stay in organizations, but it cannot stay in Quakerism. Its principle is out of Quakerism to begin with. We have seen other elements placed in receptacles to stay, but they ate holes through their vessels and ran themselves into the ground, by disintegrating the very organism into which they came to stay. “The new wine doth burst the bottles and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred—or shall perish” (Mark ii: 22; Luke v: 37). By stitching an incongruous system upon a fabric otherwise developed, "both the new maketh a rent and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not with the old."

It is these new tailorings that make rents in our covering of unity; it is these entering wedges of innovations that split the beam, and then blame the smaller sliver which they themselves have split off, and separator calls it the separatist.

These siftings must have their day, but we are not jostled from the belief that the original fundamentals of Truth entrusted to our profession at the beginning, alone have the staying qualities—have come to stay, as the word abiding forever through the wreck and ruin of mundane systems and growths; and that all that is wanted to demonstrate their victory to the world as the religion of the future, is that we, who stand as if representatives of them, hold them in the life and love of Christ; and in our exercise of them measure up to the fulness of the abounding grace which will thus come. Let us not be afraid of the life, but let us be afraid of anything short of it. They that live of the gospel, will preach it.

THE best proof of the divinity of the Christian religion is the daily life of the Christian himself; not his words and professions, but his conduct and spirit; not his Sunday garb and service, but his every day tone; not his church ways, but his home walk. In the first of the first century, the world saw the incarnate God—the Word of God—"made flesh and dwelling in the human form among men. The nineteenth and twentieth centuries need no less than this. They must see "God manifest in the flesh"—that human eye may now behold, and human hands may now handle, the Word of Life; that the supernatural may be brought within our easy reach; that to all inquiries the church may now say as Jesus said to the disciples of John: "Go, tell the things which ye do hear and see;" "greater works than these"—works of healing in the spirit, evil passion subdued, bad habits broken, burdens of sin removed, blessings of spiritual life bestowed, steadiness of purpose and experience through all outward vicissitudes made clear to a witnessing world. A life thus setting forth the power of Christ in this present time is worth more than all the books of argument and all the sermons and lecture courses of a century in favor of Christianity. It is another Word of God, a living "epistle read and known of all." It is a silent, present, unshadowed, unanswerable demonstration. It makes doubt impossible. Men simply feel its force, and are silent; then turn to pray.—Vincent.

INSIST on that good thing manifest in thyself, and committed unto thyself, and never imitate. Thy own gift thou can present in every hour of its season, with the accumulated force of a whole life's cultivation; but of the adopted talent of another thou canst have only a contemporaneous half possession.—Revised Extract.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 155.)

In the Third Month, 1826, Joseph Elkinton notes in his Journal that he was called upon by six of the chiefs of the nation, who desired him to prepare a petition to the New York Legislature requesting that a law should be passed inflicting a penalty upon persons who supplied liquor to the Indians. This document was accordingly prepared and signed by the chiefs present, and was afterwards taken to a council, where other signatures were obtained.

Another subject which exercised the minds of the thoughtful Indians at this time was the cutting of valuable timber by the white people. This was often done by the connivance of individual Indians, who received some money for it, and who also for a small gratuity allowed the whites, who were engaged in this business, to erect buildings on their land, thus sacrificing the interest of their nation to their personal advantage. A petition to the Legislature of New York to enact a law which would prevent these evils was adopted by a council on the seventeenth of First Month, 1827, which contains the following paragraphs:

"Brothers, our land is held in common. We have been recommended by those whom we believe to be our friends, to divide our land among us, but we have not yet become united in sentiment as to the propriety of our doing so. Some of us have been in favor thereof, whilst others remain opposed thereto; and seeing we are thus situated, we desire the assistance and interference of our brothers, the Legislature of the State of New York, on our behalf.

"Brothers, we know you have enacted laws in our favor heretofore, and desire you will be patient with us. There are some of us who desire to be useful citizens of the country we inhabit, whilst others of our nation are too much given to idle and dissolute habits, which is cause of regret to others of our people.

"Brothers, you have heretofore been pleased to make a law in order to prevent trespasses from being committed on our lands, making it a penalty of $25 for every tree that a white man shall cut upon our reservation, and in order to evade that law the trees are cut down by Indians, after which white men work at them themselves, draw them off and convert them to their own use, and we therefore lose our timber.

"Brothers, our land is owned in common, our children have a claim thereon as well as ourselves, and unless a stop is put to our timber being taken off, were will future generations of our people look to for timber to build with upon our reservation? and we have been told that we would not find it so easy to purchase from the white people as the white people do from us.

"Brothers, we desire you to make a law prohibiting white people from taking off timber from our reservation that has or may be purchased from individuals of our nation, whilst our land is owned in common, believing an advantage would be derived to your petitioners thereby, and no disadvantage would in the end be experienced by our white brethren."
The minds of the Friends at Tunesassa during the year 1827 were much discouraged. The number of boys attending the school had been reduced to four, and at times the school was closed for want of proper attendance. The girls' school was attended by seven or eight children. Joseph Elkinton notes in his Journal: "The Indians are thinning out from Allegheny. Many that were here ten years ago are not here at present; some deceased, and others moved to the Cattaraugus Reservation. It appears to me a dull time among them in regard to their taking hold of improvements; they appear to be much fixed in their own way. The young Indians are not as promising as would be desirable; too few of them take hold of business regularly; indeed, there are no instances that I know of where a young man goes steadily to his business and work all day and every day at his own home. The Indian character is fond of roving about upon foot or horseback and dressed up finely; and they do not regard working daily and all day as they should."

An interesting case is referred to about this time by Joseph Elkinton, which no doubt afforded Friends much satisfaction. It was that of John Boan, an Indian, who had become deeply concerned for his spiritual welfare, an "who," Joseph Elkinton remarks, under date of First Month 21st, 1828, "came to our house evening before last and tarried overnight. He appeared in a tender frame, and such an opportunity as I had with him I never remember to have had with a native before. He appeared desirous to express himself in regard to the views he had of repentance from bad deeds, and desires that he might be preserved in the way that was agreeable to the Great Spirit."

"He is a steady, regular Indian of the Onondaga tribe, married to a Seneca woman [I believe] and has a number of children, some of whom have attended to the instruction afforded by Friends in the way of school learning." A few weeks later Joseph Elkinton writes: "He appears to be nearly united to Friends, and passes by where Indians meet to perform their accustomed services of speaking, etc., to come to sit with Friends at Tunesassa, and evidences that he has in mercy been visited by the Great Head of the Church. He is the head of a family of several children, the oldest, perhaps, about sixteen or eighteen years of age; quietness and peace have been felt to be an inmate at his habitation. I brought his wife and some of his children to sit with Friends at Tunesassa the day previous to our leaving there. He informed us that his wife left him at liberty to pursue the course he considered his peace to consist in."

In view of the indifference shown by the Indians as a body towards embracing the means of assistance which Friends had continued to offer them by maintaining a school for the children and in other ways, it was thought best at this time, after consulting with the Committee, to withdraw, at least for the present, from the settlement of Tunesassa, and lease the farm and buildings there, on the shares, to a steady young man, who, with his wife, would reside there and who would also take charge of the saw-mill. Joseph Elkinton, Robert Scotten and Mary Nutt accordingly returned to their homes, leaving there on the twenty-fourth of Third Month, 1828. Previo their departure, Joseph Elkinton endeavored to have a school started under the care of one of the Indians, but without success. In addressing the Committee, under date of Twelfth month 5th, 1827, they remark: "Not any of the white settlers on the Allegheny Reservation at present that we know of."

After an absence of several months, in which Joseph Elkinton had "passed through much exercise of mind in regard to returning to Tunesassa," he remarks in his notes Ninth month 30th, 1828: "I met a special meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs and therein referred for their solid consideration to return again to Tunesassa this fall and attend there to the concern and liberate Joseph S. and Abigail Walton from their situation. I had great cause, indeed, after having so done." His offer was accepted, and on the twenty-sixth of the first month, 1828, he again arrived at the end of his labors. Joseph S. and Abigail Walton left a few days afterwards, and Joseph Elkinton boarded with the family who had been in charge of the farm.

Early after his return, Joseph Elkinton took an opportunity with the chiefs of the two parties among the Indians, informing them that he had not come among them again with the view of teaching them himself, and endeavored to encourage them to use their influence in setting a school for their children under the tuition of one of their own people. In this way was successful, and a school attended by twenty children was kept during a part of the winter of 1828-29 at Oldtown, by James Pierce, a young man of about twenty-three years, who had received his instruction at the school taught by Friends. A salary was to be paid to the teacher by the parents; and in order to encourage them Joseph Elkinton agreed to pay himself for the tuition of six children. His school was resumed in the winter of 1829-30.

In the winter of 1830-31 another school was opened by the natives, about six or seven miles up the river from Tunesassa, and was attended by thirty to forty scholars. Joseph Elkinton remarks in reference to it, which was taught by Joseph Pierce, one of his former scholars: "It is pleasing to behold the interest of individuals of the natives take in having schools amongst them, and I believe that the concern has gained ground; although it has taken a considerable time in having been brought about, it is evident that the labor of Friends amongst these people has not been in vain, notwithstanding many have made so little improvement; yet when we contrast their present with their former situation, when Friends first came among them, surely there is cause to believe that all has not been bestowed in vain." Joseph Elkinton also observes: "The school at Oldtown continues in operation; it is taught the present winter by Maris B. Pierce, a younger son of John, and is a capable young man. He is to receive $10 per month."

This young man was subsequently sent by his father to an academy at Freedonia, N. Y., and afterward to other schools; he finally entered Dartmouth College, whence he graduated in 1840. According to an account published shortly after his death in 1874, it appears that, at the close of his collegiate course, he returned to his people and settled among them on the Buffalo Creek Reservation. He was soon after appointed United States interpreter, and in addition to his official duties, engaged in teaching one of the Indian schools. He afterwards resided on the Cattaraugus Reservation, where his temperate habits, excellent education and business capacity enabled him to be eminently useful to his people. Both he and his wife, who was a white woman, were employed for many years as teachers among the Indians. He was a member of the Presbyterian congregation and died much respected.

In the Eleventh Month, 1829, Joseph Elkinton alludes to a general council lately held at Buffalo, where "the disposition that has been prevalent with one part of the nation to have the other removed from Allegheny, appears to have received a check from the inability of Red Jacket to divide the reservations into two parts as had been talked of."

A few weeks later, viz: on the twentieth of First Month, 1830, Red Jacket died. This remarkable man was endowed with great powers of mind and a command of language which enabled him for a considerable part of his life to exercise a great influence among his people, especially that part of it which was attached to their ancient customs and religion. He was foremost in resisting the encroachments of the whites, and also in opposing the missionaries, whom he regarded as little better than secret enemies to his people. Yet, as many noble specimens of his race have done, he became a victim to the excessive use of strong drink, and at times was a sad spectacle in public of its mastery over him. Conscious of his disgrace and the loss which he had sustained, he gave the following touching answer on one occasion to an acquaintance who understood the Seneca language, and who inquired of him if any of his children were living. Fixing his eyes upon her with a sorrowful expression of countenance, he replied: "Red Jacket was once a great man and in favor with the Great Spirit. He was a lofty pine among the smaller trees of the forest. But, after years of glory, he degraded himself by drinking the fire water of the white man. The Great Spirit has looked upon him in anger, and his lightning has stripped the pine of its branches."

Joseph Elkinton returned to the neighborhood of Philadelphia for a few weeks early in 1829, and on the twenty-ninth of Fourth Month in that year was married to Mary Nutt at Concord, Delaware County, Pa. Soon after their marriage they proceeded to Tunesassa, where they continued to reside until about the middle of the year 1831. At this time, feeling himself released from further service among the Indians, he and his family took up their residence in Philadelphia. The farm and buildings at Tunesassa were leased to two white men, who took charge of them for a few following years, during which time no Friends resided at Tunesassa.

(To be continued.)

THOSE who would go to Heaven when they die, must begin their Heaven while they live.—Henry.

The sacred Scriptures teach us the best way of living, the noblest way of suffering, and the most comfortable way of dying.—Flavel.

Ways of Saving.

We have been much interested, says the Christian Instructor, in reading in a recent number of Printer's Ink an account of the methods and arguments by which people are induced to save their money, as related by an official of one of the large banks. In a general way everyone knows that the accumulative power of trifles is immense; every one knows that the bee stores up honey little by little; every one knows that the squirrel hides away nuts one by one for the winter supply. The coral strand is not built up in a day, but the atoms of the body of the coral insect keep piling up through the ages, and lo! the result is a reef big enough to wreck the largest vessel.

No, the difficulty is not to establish the truth of this principle, but it is to induce them to save the first little mite and to keep on saving, and so reduce the whole matter to a science and a habit. The writer alluded to above speaks thus of some of the ways men have adopted to add to their savings account:

"One man saves money by never spending a cent. When he buys a newspaper he gives the boy a nickel and gets back four pennies. These go into his steel bank. His account has run up to astounding proportions. Another man has a baby and figures that it is worth at least a dollar a week to him. He puts all his spare change into a steel bank for a fund to send the child to college. He says that he was never able to save money before. A third man found out that when he owed other people money he paid it somehow. He saw no reason why he shouldn't owe money to himself, so he begins by owing himself one dollar the first week, two dollars the second, three dollars the third, and so on, until the tenth week is reached. Then he drops back to a dollar. Others put into the little bank every coin of a certain date, such as 1892. Another man allows himself twenty-five cents lunch money per day, ten cents carfare and twenty cents for cigars. If he smokes only three five cent cigars he puts the odd nickel in his bank. If he omits pie at lunch, that piece of pie goes into the bank. Dozens of our depositors have bought safety razors, and put a quarter into their banks every time they shave themselves. One man gives his wife every dime he brings home at night, and this system ran up an account of more than $100 in one year." Another man is said on his pay day to put a silver dollar in his bank, the next day a half-dollar, the next a quarter, the next a dime, the next a nickel, the next a cent. This makes $1.91 a week, and by sticking to his system he has rolled up a good account.

A GREAT President of the United States drew a contrast between the hot enthusiasm of an emotional hour, and the permanent level of our common life. "I have seen the sea," he says, "lashed into fury and tossed into spray, and its grandeur moves the soul of the dullest man, but . . . it is when the storm has passed and the hour of calm settles on the ocean, when the sunlight bathes its peaceful surface, that men take the level from which they measure all terrestrial heights and depths."

WAR is a trade for Barbarians.—Napoleon Bonaparte.

The Ministry of the Spirit.

BY WILLIAM PENN.

And now, friends, you that profess to walk in the way that this blessed man [G. Fox] was sent of God to turn us unto; suffer, I beseech you, the word of exhortation, as well fathers as children, and elders as young men.

The glory of this day, and foundation of the hope that has not made us ashamed since we were a people, you know, is that blessed principle of light and life of Christ which we profess, and direct all people to, as the great and divine instrument and agent of man's conversion to God. It was by this that we were first touched and effectually enlightened, as to our inward state; which put us upon the consideration of our latter end: causing us to set the Lord before our eyes, and to number our days, that we might apply our hearts to wisdom.

In that day we judged not after the sight of the eye, or after the hearing of the ear, but according to the light and sense this blessed principle gave us, so we judged and acted, in reference to things and persons ourselves, and others, yea, towards God our Maker. For being quickened by it in our inward man, we could easily discern the difference of things, and feel what was right and what was wrong, and what was fit, and what was not, both in reference to religious and civil concerns. That being the ground of the fellowship of all saints, it was in that our fellowship stood. In this we desired to have a sense of one another, acted towards one another and all men, in love, faithfulness and fear. In feeling the sittings and motions of this principle in our hearts, we drew near to the Lord, and waited to be prepared by it, that we might feel drawings and movings before we approached the Lord in prayer, or opened our mouths in ministry. And in our beginning and ending with this stood our comfort, service and edification. And as we ran faster, or fell short in our services, we made burdens for ourselves to bear; finding in ourselves a rebuke instead of an acceptance; and in lieu of well-done, who has required this at your hands? In that day we were an exercised people, our very countenances and deportment declared it.

Care for others was then much upon us, as well for ourselves; especially of the young convinced. Often had we the burthen of the Word of the Lord to our neighbors, relations and acquaintance, and sometimes strangers also. We were in travail likewise for one another's preservation, not seeking but shunning occasions of any coldness or misunderstanding; treating one another as those that believed and felt God present; which kept our conversation innocent, serious and weighty; guarding ourselves against the cares and friendships of the world.

We held the Truth in the spirit of it, and not in our own spirits, or after our own will and affections; they were bowed and brought into subjection, inasmuch that it was visible to them that knew us.

We did not think ourselves at our own disposal, to go where we list, or say or do what we list or when we list. Our liberty stood in the liberty of the Spirit of Truth, and no pleasure, no profit, no fear, no favor could draw us from this retired, strict and watchful frame. We were so far from seeking occasions of company, that we avoided them what we could, pursuing our own business with moderation, instead of meddling with other people's unnecessary.

Our words were few and savory, our looks composed and weighty, and our whole deportment very observable. True it is, that this retired and strict sort of life from the liberty of the conversation of the world, exposed us to the censures of many, as humorists, conceited and self-righteous persons, &c. But it was our preservation from many snares, to which others were continually exposed, by the prevalency of the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, that wanted no occasions or temptations to excite them abroad in the converse of the world. I cannot forget the humility and chaste zeal of that day. Oh! how constant at meetings, how retired in them, how firm to Truth's life, as well as Truth's principles! and how entire and united in our communion, as became those that profess one Head, even Christ Jesus the Lord.

This being the testimony and example the man of God before-mentioned was sent to declare, and leave amongst us, and we having embraced the same as the merciful visitation of God to us, the word of exhortation at this time is, That we continue to be found in the way of this testimony with all zeal and integrity, and so much the more, by how much the day draweth near. And first, as to you my beloved and much honored brethren in Christ, that are in the exercise of the ministry. Oh, feel life in your ministry, let life be your commission, your well-spring and treasury, on all such occasions; else you well know, there can be no begetting to God, since nothing can quicken or make people alive to God, but the life of God; and it must be a ministry in and from life, that enlivens any people to God. We have seen the fruit of all other ministries, by the few that are turned from the evil of their ways.

It is not our parts or memory, or the repetition of former openings, in our own will and time, that will do God's work. A dry doctrinal ministry however sound in words, can reach but the ear, and is but a dream at the best; there is another soundness, that is soundness of all—Christ the power of God. This is the key of David, that opens and none shuts, that shuts and none can open; as the oil to the lamp, and the soul to the body, so is that to the best of words: which made Christ say, "My words, they are spirit and they are life;" that is they are from life, and therefore they make you alive that receive them.

If the disciples that had lived with Jesus were to stay at Jerusalem till they received it, much more must we wait to receive before we minister, if we will turn people from darkness to light, and from Satan's power to God.

I fervently bow my knees to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you may always be like-minded, that you may ever wait reverently, for the coming and opening of the word of Life, and attend upon it in your ministry and service, that you may serve God in his Spirit. And be it little, or be it much, it is well; for much is not too much, and the least is enough, if from the motion of God's Spirit; and without it, verily, never so little is too much because to no profit.

For it is the Spirit of the Lord immediately, or through the ministry of his servants, that teacheth his people to profit; and to be sure, so far as we take Him along with us in our services, so far we are profitable and no farther. For if it be the Lord that must work all things in us for our salvation, much more is it the Lord that must work in us for the conversion of others. If therefore it was once a cross to us to speak though the Lord required it at our hands, let it never be so to be silent when He does not.

It is one of the most dreadful sayings in the book of God, that "He that adds to the words of the prophecy of this book, God will add to him the plagues written in this book." To keep back the counsel of God is as terrible for "he that takes away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life." And truly it has great caution in it, to those that use the name of the Lord, to be well assured, that the Lord speaks, that they may not be found of the number of those that add to the words of the testimony of prophecy, which the Lord giveth them to bear; nor yet to mince or diminish the same, both being so very offensive to God. Wherefore, brethren, let us be careful neither to outgo our Guide, nor yet to linger behind Him; since he that makes haste may miss his way, and he that stays behind, loses his guide. For even those that have received the word of the Lord, had need wait for wisdom, that they may see how to divide the word aright; which plainly implieth, that it is possible for one that hath received the word of the Lord, to miss in the dividing and application of it; which must come from an impatience of spirit, and a self-working, which makes an unsound and dangerous mixture, and will hardly beget a right-minded living people to God.

I am in earnest in this above all other considerations as to public brethren; well knowing how much it concerns the present and future state and preservation of the church of Christ Jesus, that has been gathered and built by a living and powerful ministry, that this ministry be held, preserved and continued in the manifestations, motions and supplies of the same life and power from time to time.

And wherever it is observed, that any minister more from gifts and parts, than from power, though they have enlightened a doctrinal understanding, let them in time be advised and admonished for their preservation because insensibly such will come to depend upon a self-sufficiency; to forsake Christ the living Fountain, and new out unto themselves; cisterns that will hold no living waters; by degrees such will come to draw others from waiting upon the gift of God in themselves, and to feel it in others, in order to the strength and refreshment, to wait upon them and to turn from God to man again, and make shipwreck of the faith once delivered the saints, and of a good conscience toward God; which are only kept by the divine gift life, that beget the one, and awakened a sanctified the other in the beginning. Nor is it enough that we have known the divine gift and in it have reached to the spirits in prison and been the instruments of the convincing ers of the way of God, if we keep not as and poor in ourselves, and as depending on the Lord, as ever; since no memory, no visions of former openings, revelations or payments, will bring a soul to God, or afford us the hungry, or water to the thirsty, as life go with what we say; and that it be waited for. Oh! that we may have other fountain, treasure or dependence! none may presume at any rate to act of ourselves for God, because they have longed from God; that they may not supply of waiting, with our own wisdom, or that we may take less care and more activity in speaking than formerly; and that we do not feel the Lord by his power to us, and enlarge us whatever be the exaction of the people, or has been our customary supply and character, we may not expect or fill up the time with our own.

hope we shall ever remember who it was said, "Of yourselves, ye can do nothing," sufficiency is in flim. And if we are not weak our own words, or take thought what should say to men in our defence when used for our testimony, surely we ought speak none of our own words, or take thought we shall say in our testimony and ministry in the name of our Lord, to the souls of people; for then of all times, and of all occasions should it be fulfilled in us, "it is not you that speak, but the Spirit by Father that speaketh in you."

And indeed, the ministry of the Spirit must indeed keep its analogy and agreement of the birth of the Spirit; that as no man inherit the kingdom of God unless he be of the Spirit; so no ministry can beget to God but which is from the Spirit. This, as I said before, the disciples waited they went forth; and in this our elder men and messengers of God in our day, visited and reached us. And having in the Spirit, let none ever hope or to be made perfect in the flesh. For is the flesh to the Spirit, or the chaff to wheat.

And if we keep in the spirit, we shall keep the unity of it, which is the ground of the worship. For by drinking into that one, we are made one people to God, and we are continued in the unity of the and the bond of peace.

envying, no bitterness, no strife can place with us. We shall watch always good, and not for evil, one over another, rejoice exceedingly, and not begrudge at another's increase in the riches of the love, with which God replenisheth his faithful ones.

(To be continued.)

NON FARRAR says: "That prayer of an happy queen—'Oh, keep me innocent! Make me great!' that prayer of a great saint, 'me, O Lord, a noble heart, which notwithstanding can drag down!' that prayer of a yet saintly king: 'Teach me to do that which pleaseth Thee, for Thou art my God.' by loving spirit lead me into the land of business'—those are among the best I know."

Father will not force those into felicity refuse his gracious offers.—J. Phipps.

A Dangerous Graft on the High School.

When new students make their appearance at Westtown Boarding-school, it is customary to welcome them to the institution, in a quiet way, in the library. Unless Friends get very much away from their orderly foundation, this sensible procedure is never likely to be superseded in any institution under our name, by the disorderly, often dangerous (and sometimes fatal) hazings and initiations which so generally obtain. The prohibition of all secret fraternities in educational institutions under Friends' control, is a safeguard in this direction. A chapter from the Local News, West Chester, Pa., illustrative of the serious trend in secretism in schools outside our borders, is herewith submitted.

One who had had a birthright membership in the Society of Friends heretofore, went to a distant city a good many years ago, uniting with the secret orders of the Freemasons and the Elks. Returning recently to the locality of his boyhood home, it was told in a daily local paper how he had become the "Grand Exalted Ruler" of the one order, and "Grand Master" in a lodge of the other, being presented with the fine, jeweled insignia attached to those offices, and which he still greatly prizes. Now, it is in my heart to hope that he may yet write "Nebushan" upon those unsatisfying tokens of man's device; or, as did Stephen Merritt, of New York, once "Grand Master" of the largest lodge of Freemasons in that city, send back to the lodge from which he felt he must come away, the beautiful jewel he had so prized. "I thank God," he wrote in so doing, "the seal of the Spirit is on me; that I am walking in the light. . . . We must get out of the mire, and put our feet on solid foundation, the Rock, Christ Jesus."

It is said, in the Book of Revelation, that the elders did "cast their crowns before the throne, saying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power." And Malachi, the prophet, writing of "them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name," makes record—"And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." Into the dark recesses of the oath-bound secret lodge, we are surely not bidden to enter, that we may discover and come upon the highway of holiness cast up for the redeemed of the Lord to walk in.—L.

There is a timely editorial article in the Christian Cynosure for Tenth Mo. last, which discusses some non-commendable features in process of being engrafted in various quarters on city high school life. The evils threatening this educational system are found in the disposition to copy the social life of the college. Particularly is this true in the trend towards the organization of secret societies. Acknowledged by a great many observant persons to be the bane and curse of college life, always reckless and injurious, they had fair to become specially harmful to the immature persons who make up the high school population of our country. Already the evil results have become so apparent that much alarm has been felt on the part of high school directors, faculties and parents, and in Chicago,

Kansas City and Tacoma steps have been taken to abolish these junior society orders and their resultant evils. In Chicago alone, it is stated in the public press, there are forty secret societies connected with the high schools.

It is probable that it is in Chicago that the subject has received the most thorough examination. The principals of no less than fifteen high schools, and three hundred and forty-eight teachers in the same, united in a report which was thereafter made to the Superintendent of Schools in that city of considerably more than a million and a half population. This large body of educators express their belief that the high school fraternities and girls' sororities are "undemocratic in their nature, demoralizing in their tendencies and subversive of good citizenship; that they tend to divert their members from scholarly pursuits, and to put the so-called interests of the organization above those of the school;" that their effect is "to divide the school into cliques, to destroy unity and harmony of action and sentiment, and to render it more difficult to sustain the helpful relations which should exist between pupils and teachers."

"Anything," they continue, "that divides the school community into exclusive groups, as these societies do, militates against this liberalizing influence that has made one people out of a multitude. Further, they observe that they multiply certain social functions, in seeking "to imitate the amusements and relaxations of adult life," and so militate against the time and attention due to school life. "School and home should unite their powerful influences to prevent the formation of habits that retard healthy moral, intellectual and physical growth." In conclusion, they declare, their experience shows that "the scholarly attainments of the majority of students belonging to these secret societies are far below the average, and we have reason to believe that this is due to the influence of such organizations. In view of those facts we feel that secret societies ought to be discouraged by all reasonable means."

In pursuance of the foregoing cogent presentation of the matter, the Board of Education felt justified in forbidding the use of school buildings to the secret societies, and withdrew permission for any persons belonging to said societies from representing the schools in athletic or other contests. So far as appears, the teachers who have thus done their duty have been sustained by the authorities in the various cities where the matter has been brought to an issue; no Board of Education to which the subject has been referred has failed to acknowledge the danger and to seek to suppress its cause. There was one other fact, it is pertinent to add, that was not brought definitely forward by the Chicago teachers in their interesting report, and that is the actual danger to life and limb involved in the initiations. Thus there may be cited the case of the High School student at Evansville, Indiana, who was recently put in a coffin, and attended by some of his comrades, was dragged for hours in the night, through the streets of the city in a springless wagon. Or, the case of the Durfee High School students at Fall River, Massachusetts, who had formed a secret society, which, after various outrages, culminating in the profuse decoration of the building with green paint, had brought about the suicide of the venerable janitor, through excessive worryment over the actions of the gang. Or, again, the case of the eleven-year-old boy, at Flushing, Long Island, gagged, eyes bandaged, bound with ropes and thrown into an abandoned well by his school-fellows, and who was only recovered after a long search and lapse of ten hours. The telegraphed information from Washington, Penna., this week, that the Board of education there had information of very extensive smoking of cigarettes by the pupils, and that some of the girls even had formed a smoking club, points to one of many serious evils that may grow out of any kind of clandestine secret association.

Nevertheless, it may be pertinently asked, do not grave evils of many kinds similarly arise from the secret fraternities in colleges and universities. When the venerable Dr. James McCosh became President of Princeton College, he said he observed how the fraternities sought to get the college honors for their members, and to support those who, for violations of the rules, had been placed under college discipline. "Most of the professors in the American colleges," he remarked, "profess to lament the existence of such societies, but have not the courage to suppress them." Since the time when this was said such fatally tragic incidents have occurred as the killing of the student Rustin, at Yale, of Leggett and others, at Cornell, and of Lawrence, in Chicago, all of them being simply the ripened fruit of the fraternity movement. We may notice how this spirit repeatedly manifests itself at our own fraternity-ridden University of Pennsylvania, and, taken in conjunction with intercollegiate foot-ball affairs, often breaks out in demonstrations of wild disorder. In the Evening Bulletin, "Penn" comments severely on the street scenes enacted last week in connection with the triumph over Harvard, the "tipsiness, roystering and disorder," and the "continuance of the hilarious celebration when the visitors were welcomed home, and it was necessary to suspend most of the studies for the day."

Now, in consistency's name, and in the name of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, would it not be better for society, for the home and the church, were the oath-bound secret societies to be abolished? The lad at the high school, the young man at college, is not un-informed of the folly and so-called fun and sport of many initiations in the case of his elders, though he may have heard little of the accompanying tragedies. His father smokes, and why may he not soothe himself with his cigarette? Herein is one cogent reason for parental sacrifice, and it has proved operative with very many. It was said by Chief Justice John Marshall, than whom no man stands higher in the annals of the American judiciary: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned, as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means." President John Quincy Adams, who foresaw the evils likely to issue from oath-bound, secret institutions, held decidedly the same views thereupon as did Marshall; and Abraham Lincoln, who acknowledged that he received his best inspiration in politics from John Quincy Adams, was satisfied to keep free from any secret order. To the writer of this it seems manifestly and irreverently un-Scriptural, as well as antagonistic to that principle of humility which it will hurt none of us to cultivate, that man should be willing to receive from his brother man such titles as Most Eminent, Most Worthy, All Puisseant, and (as with the Elks) Grand Exalted Ruler. Writing to the Philippians, and to all afterwards who should read, Paul affirmed of the Lord Christ and none other: "Being found in fashion as a man, He humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name which is above every name." JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

ROCKNEY, Eleventh Month 9th, 1904.

Science and Industry.

Probably the first treaty of peace to be type-written is the South African document. The signature of the Boer leaders form an interesting part of it. They are all in different styles. Louis Botha's is described as being in a fine hand, and though the others are somewhat rougher, Delarey's is the roughest of all. He has spelled his name split into three syllables, de la Rey, Christian de Wet is also spelled with a small d.

GEORGE FOX'S EARLY INDUSTRIES.—Penn tells us that "Fox took most delight in sheep" and Fox himself modestly says, "A good deal went through my hands. People had generally love to me for my innocence and honesty." From his writings it would seem that he preferred the life of a shepherd which has been the life preferred by many who loved solitude and who preferred to commune alone in the forest or on the beach. At an early age he was apprenticed to a shoemaker who dealt in wool and cattle and he remained in the employ of this person until about nineteen years of age, having in the meantime acquired considerable proficiency in his master's various business dealings.—Stavanger Mirror.

There is a wonderful orchid in the cabin of the steamer Abergierde, which lies at the Ar-buckle docks, Brooklyn. The Abergierde some months ago stopped at Macassar, Island of Celebes, Malay Archipelago, where Dede-kind, the steward, went ashore for provisions. He got on good terms with the Chinese merchants, who told him of the most beautiful orchid in the world. It grew in a graveyard in a marsh, and it was regarded as so sacred by the Malays, that they had erected an idol to it.

To be caught cutting it meant death. To have it would make a man rich. Dede-kind inclined to the belief that he would rather be dead than poor, and so at night stole to the graveyard, where he cut away a splendid specimen. Knowing that Joseph Chamberlain is an enthusiast and an authority on orchids, the steward has written to tell him about his find that he will be in England before many weeks and offer him the orchid.—New York Letter, Tenth Month 30th.

NOTED AMERICAN TREES.—The big tree California.

"Old Liberty Elm," at Boston.

The "Burgoyne Elm" at Albany, New York. The immense ash trees planted by General Washington at Mt. Vernon, and now the admiration of visitors.

The weeping-willow over the grave of Cotton Mather in Cop's burying ground, near Ber-ker Hill, taken from a tree that shaded the grave of Napoleon at St. Helena.

The Cary tree, planted by the roadside 1832, by Alice and Phebe Cary, is a large sycamore, standing on the turnpike from C-leget Hill to Mount Pleasant, Hamilton coun-t Ohio.

The Washington elm still stands at Cambridge, Massachusetts. It is on Garden street a short distance from the college, and is a well-preserved tree. An iron fence is built around it, and on a stone in front is the following inscription: "Under this tree George Washington took command of the American army, July 3, 1775."—Unidentified.

THE LAWS AGAINST WATER POLLUTION.—Review of the laws forbidding the pollution of inland waters in the United States, which may be of great practical benefit to the public, were prepared by Edwin B. Goddell for United States Geological Survey. It is published as No. 103 of the series of Water-survey and Irrigation papers, where it is available for all.

E. B. Goddell's purpose has been to put the hands of public officials, legislators, companies, manufacturers, farmers, and others interested in the subject, a guide for action, and to furnish references to the sources from which a more exhaustive knowledge of the subject may be obtained if required.

The principles and decisions have been classified and are presented in three groups.

(1) The rights of riparian owners to water as against one another.

(2) The rights of the public (as distinguished from individual owners) to have inland water kept free from pollution by riparian owners.

(3) The conditions under which, and the tent to which, public municipalities may inland waters in the disposal of sewage from public sewers.

It is hoped that the publication and distribution of this paper will help to bring about general apprehension of correct principle on the important subject of water pollu-tion.

"SPEAK THE TRUTH IN LOVE."—The philosophy of persuasion, of conciliation of moral influence, lies in this charge. Truth-telling may do good; but the forms of truth-telling, which result in reformation of the wrongdoer, always proceed from the spirit of love and sympathy. Jealousy, hatred and contempt never convince. Denunciations may warn and frighten an evil doer, and put him on his guard against penalty; but they do not awaken the noble sentiments out of which come reform. Whether in public or private life, the rule is the same. What a man will not take at all from one despises him for his wickedness he will in humility from one who loves him and re-forms him.—Christian Register.

Items Concerning the Society.

withstanding the feeble health of Harry E. re, and his father have been enabled to sh their home at West Grove, Pa., in safety with peace of mind, after their extended visit the Friends of Ohio, Western and Iowa Yearly tings.

Notes in General.

t the Anglican Church Congress recently held tverpool, Sir Edward Russel, speaking on the ine in church attendance, declared that the was "aggravated by perfunctory preaching."

choir of one thousand voices is in preparation entor to welcome the World's Epworth Leagues e convention of 1905. They will give Han-oratorio of "The Messiah." For whose ears?

he annual output of "Sunday-school" periodi-in the United States and Canada amounts to 4,450,000,000 copies. The presses are already with material for 1905. This represents an ense industry.

hen a modern church building was built upon te of an ancient one at Llandaner, Wales, it o bell. A farmer offered one that was lying e of his barns. It turned out to be one that ung in the tower of the ancient building, and ot been rung for three hundred years.

orge A. Douglass, missionary of the United Church at Liao-Yang, Manchuria, while pass-rough this country on his way back to his after a furlough, was requested by President elvelt to stop in Washington and give him in-ation as to the conditions in the arena here and Japan are engaged in fearful conflict. Douglass was impressed with the attitude of re interest taken by the President during his iew with him.

umber of the clergymen in Philadelphia are ging hands in an effort to rescue that city from ttempt politicians. Bishop Mackay-Smith, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Dr. Floy-ns, of Holy Trinity, the pastors of Presbyte-urches, and Edwin W. Rice, of the American y-school Union, have united in an appeal to tizens, without regard to party, to recognize hateful political conditions of Philadelphia ght against them.

CKING FATAL AFTER EIGHTY YEARS.—After ghty years of her life, Catherine e recently set fire to her own clothing, and d badly burned that she died later in the day, ngdale, Pa. She was ninety-five years of d it had been her custom to have a smoke t thing on rising. She lit her pipe as usual, me sparks fell from the bowl to her clothing, ignited, and before help arrived she was fa-urned.—N. Y. Globe.

ts who are especially interested in religious ts always regard presidential campaigns as to five months of lost time. They are patri-og to believe that it is time that must be ust as pastors of churches believe in giving ee weeks to the Christmas season while well t that their general work suffers severely. ut. But the presidential campaign just ended n peculiar. It does not seem, according to ston Transcript, to have injured religious ts at all.

ing a recent audience granted to Dr. Julius Pope Pius X., expressed himself strongly in ion to duelling, calling it an evil which t affects the Catholics of Austria, where it ttted by the Government. The pope said considered duelling, both from a religious and all other points of view, a senseless proceeding. He advocated legislation to abolish the evil and the enacting of a law protecting people against libel and other moral injuries. The pope's remarks are here considered to be a reflection of the efforts recently made by the Vatican to obtain from the Austrian authorities a formal prohibition of duelling, especially among the military organizations of the empire. These efforts have already borne some fruits through the personal influence of the Austrian emperor.

The value of the Ascoli cope (bishop's robe) which J. Pierpont Morgan purchased and has now returned unconditionally to Italy is said to be about $60,000. The cope was given by Pope Nicholas IV., to the Cathedral of Ascoli in 1288.

The voluntary return of the cope, which was stolen from the Cathedral in Ascoli and sold by a dealer to J. P. Morgan, has caused much satisfaction throughout Italy, although the Church authorities are not greatly pleased that the famous church vestment should have been given to the Italian Government. Practically, the cope is not in condition to be used at church ceremonies, but it is considered likely that the Government authorities will return it to the Cathedral of Ascoli, to which it was presented by Pope Nicholas, and which has had possession of it for seven centuries.

GENERAL MILES ON WAR.—When men like Miles, Sherman, Garfield and Wellington express themselves on this subject, they know experimentally what they are talking about. Following is an extract of General Miles' speech:

"The settlement of international controversies by the dread arbitration of war involves the destruction of tens of thousands and sometimes hundreds of thousands of young men of both countries. Could any rule, code or method be any more void of reason and justice?"

"The great majority of wars in the world's history have been occasioned by the selfish ambition of some usurper or cruel tyrant, the intrigue of unscrupulous men, or the avarice and greed of a people. The deadly war now being waged between two powerful nations in the Orient cannot benefit either country, but must impoverish both. It will not benefit mankind, but must retard human progress. It must be apparent to all thoughtful, patriotic men that the intelligent world will not long endure the burden of great standing armies and enormously expensive navies."

THE SAVING FRENCHMAN.—The wife of President Loubet has just taken to lunch 500 school-children of both sexes from all parts of France. She thus received and honored them, not because they are good or pretty or interesting or well-connected, but because they have already begun putting aside money—for their old age.

Some of these thrifty little ones were only five-years old. The average age was eight. Yet each had an old age pension policy in his (or her) pocket in some one of the extraordinary little savings bank societies that have begun to dot all France.

These 500 prudent children representing 65,000 of their kind, came to Paris with their parents and to their tumors, to the first meeting of the National Federation of Mutual Aid and Saving Societies. The elders were to sit down together at a banquet table sixteen miles long, eating and drinking to the honor of French thrift. The biggest salad ever seen on earth was eaten at this banquet—a "salade Russe" composed of 125 bushels of young vegetables and chopped ham mixed in mayonnaise—a salad so Apocalyptic in its proportions that the president of the Republic went to see it mixed.

Several gentlemen who should know have been airing recently the "woes of the publisher," and calling attention to the short life of the books that pour from the press. The Literary Digest has collated a few facts in this matter, which have been gathered from different sources. The life of an ordinary novel used to be two or three years; now it is hardly the same number of months. As Methuen says: "A book is getting like a magazine—the last number is extinct on the thirty-first of the month." The Boston Transcript furnishes a "Publisher's Confession," from which it may be gathered that the poor publisher is badly straitened between the author and the wholesale bookseller. A book published at $1.50 only gives the publisher some thirty cents with which to get up the book and sell it, after paying the royalty to the authors. While denying that authors are over-paid, our anonymous publisher declares that the system of paying so much for a book and royalty on the number sold will have to go, or ruin states the publisher in the face. It is interesting to know some of the prices paid. The Scribner's paid Hopkinson Smith $10,000 for serial rights in his last novel, and fifteen per cent. royalty on 75,000 copies. It is said that Harper's Magazine paid (a female novelist) Ward $15,000 for serial rights, and twenty per cent. royalty.

A source of anxiety at the Vatican just now is the threatened separation of the Slavonic portion of the Church within the Austrian empire. The late pope had granted the Slavonic churches permission to use their own ancient liturgy and language, and had gone so far as to order a special edition of their missal and ritual to be published in Rome at the propaganda printing office, in order that all the Slavonic churches might have uniform books of Church ceremonial. For unknown reasons the printing of these works was discontinued after the death of Leo XIII., and orders were sent from the Congregation of Propaganda to the churches in question to discontinue the use of their language and liturgy in Church functions and to conform with the Roman rite. Exception was made of churches that had used the ritual and language for at least thirty years before the issuance of the decree, but as there is no Slavonic church in the Roman communion which has used its ritual for so long a time, the decree caused much discontent, and persistent rumors have come here of the intention of at least some of the churches to join the Orthodox Church of Russia rather than submit to it.

CHARLES WAGNER'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.—In his parting address to American audiences Charles Wagner thus tells of influences that led him to the "Simple Life":

"As I look toward my childhood days I look toward a time that was full of riches and joy; yet, even though I was a poor son of a village pastor; but I was a king in those days, for my being craved the beauties of nature and I had them all about me. I was rich in the love for nature. My father said to me, 'boy, go, look and listen.' I was free, Ah, soon I was among the flowers, the birds and the fishes, and, as I had a religious heart, the whole universe was to me a great sanctuary. I even worshipped the moon. The entire glory of the stars and the moon shedding their bright light from above filled me with a great feeling of reverence, and one night, when I was alone in the open air, with the bright moon above me, I sank down on the ground and worshipped the moon. My father, I am sure to this day, saw me from behind the curtains, but he did not correct me. He let me alone, for he knew that the Father who spoke to the lad by the stars and the moon would soon, or when he was able to understand the great teachings, speak to him in the higher, truer language. My father made me rich in my youth, and I shall always be a boy, looking at the glory and beauty in the stars and the moon, and I would not give up all of this for all the wealth of the world."

"If you have children, let them be children, Don't make them kneel down in houses built by men, but let them go out in the open in God's church, where love and religion come from. In these days it's not the big chest and the fine face or figure that makes the man. It's the character. When I was a young man I lived among fighters for religion. They fought with the open heart, but with the closed fist—a regular boxing religion.

"It was not long before I decided to preach—to start out and tell others what had been taught me. But I was a lone preacher for a time. I was the preacher in the wilderness, and then my congregations grew larger and larger, and finally some one told me that others who were not within the sound of my voice should hear the doctrine of the 'Simple Life,' and I started to write books. When these books became friends of the people of other countries I cried aloud, looking toward the heavens above: 'Oh, my dear father, if you can but hear the sound of your son's voice to-day as he gives you thanks!'

"Oh, if you within sound of my voice have children, teach them the simple life. What I have seen of this country, I find that beneath its greatness and goodness there is the true simplicity. The other day your great President of the United States welcomed me and took me by the hand. Though he is at the head of the greatest people in the world, and though he is one of the most intelligent men I have ever met, with a strong will and force of character, I found him so broad and tender with the love of his family and the people of this country that I understood at once his powerful and grand simplicity. It is his aim at all times to be true to self and character.

"If your children are taught simplicity, they will never be swindled with exterior vanity, but will understand the higher simplicity in after years and become the greatest men and women in the country. Teach young boys to look toward the Man on the Cross, Jesus Christ, whose sweet simplicity we all so well understand. Fill your hearts with love—love for the flowers, the birds, the busy bees, the trees and the beauties of nature, in every one of which God speaks to us who so little heed this teaching. I will conclude with a message to your nation: Teach the young men and women to keep constantly in mind the example of the founder of your country. If the American people are no more the people of simplicity, it is no more America."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES—President Roosevelt, accompanied by some members of his family and some public officials, left Washington on the 24th ult. for St. Louis, intending to visit the Exposition here. Great precautions were taken for his personal safety. He returned on the 29th.

A despatch from Chicago says: The Illinois Tunnel Company has completed about fifteen miles of tunnels in downtown Chicago. The bores are 6½ feet wide by 7½ feet high, although in places the dimensions are 10 by 12 feet. Two thousand tons of freight cars are being handled. The recently incorporated Chicago Subway Company proposes to extend and improve the system, and as fast as possible the steam railway freight of the trunk railroads will be transported through the underground system.

It is stated that orders have been given during the last few days by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and the roads connected with it for 12,800 new cars, the estimated cost of which would be about $6,000,000. A large part of the cars ordered by the lines west of Pittsburgh will be for the relief of the coal and coke regions of the western part of the State. So heavy are demands that a serious shortage has existed in the Pittsburgh district for several weeks. The demands of the iron and steel interests have been unusually heavy.

The Record-Herald, of Chicago, says that thirteen deaths have resulted from football this season, and the number of serious injuries exceeds that of any year since the introduction of the modern college sport. The players injured number 296.

A despatch from New York of the 25th ult. says: So great has been the rush of immigrants to this port within the past few days that the immigration station at Ellis Island is crowded, and several thousands of steerage passengers were forced to remain for several days on board the steamers on which they arrived from Europe.

Statistics published by the Chicago Tribune indicate a marked increase in the number of murders and suicides in proportion to population in this country since 1881. An arbitration treaty between the United States and Switzerland was signed in Washington on the 21st ult.

It is stated that in the last hundred years the United States has settled disputes by arbitration more than forty times.

It is reported that Harvard University has had during the past year 5,056 students and has had during the year ending 1903: Chicago, 4,463 and 347; Cornell, 3,457 and 4,083; and Yale, 2,975 and 325. The library of Harvard University is said to have received 22,000 volumes during the past year and now contains 675,000.

Isaac W. Brown, an ornithologist of Indiana, states that the common martin will effectively free a neighborhood of mosquitoes, and recommends the welcoming of these birds on this account.

It is reported by the Agricultural Department that dates are now being cultivated with success in southern Arizona and southern California, and that there are flourishing mango farms at Miami, Fla.

FOREIGN.—The representatives of the Zemstvo or provincial councils of various districts in Russia met in St. Petersburg on the 19th ult., and on the three succeeding days, and discussed the need for a popular participation in legislation, and for freedom of conscience, speech and the press. These meetings were held immediately following a refusal of the Czar to grant them official recognition, and were held under police protection, and have been the object of the deepest interest throughout Russia. A petition to the Czar was adopted as follows, and signed by 102 of the members:

"In view of the importance and difficulty of the internal and external situation through which Russia is passing, this informal conference expresses the hope that it is the wish of the sovereign to summon freely elected representatives of the nation in order with their co-operation to obtain for the fatherland an evolution of the State in the direction of establishing a new basis of law for mutual co-operation between the imperial authority and the people.

"The petition presented to Prince Mirsky, who is in sympathy with the movement, and by him was presented to the Czar. A despatch of the 25th says: It is learned that when Prince Mirsky presented the Zemstvo memorial and resolutions yesterday the Emperor was so deeply impressed, as well by the contents of the memorial as by the manner in which it was presented, that he immediately expressed the desire to personally receive a deputation of four. The Zemstvosists, therefore, went to Tsarskoe-Selo by imperial command. At their audience they explained fully their position and reiterated the views expressed in the memorial that the salvation of the empire from ruin by revolutionary and anarchical reforms lies in the reforms set forth in the memorial. The Emperor listened attentively to the delegation and asked many questions. He is represented as greatly concerned and grieved over the situation both at home and abroad, to be weary of the war and unrest in the interior, ready to welcome any honorable means to bring the war to a conclusion and anxious to remove the causes of discontent and secure tranquility at home.

Despatches from England state that unprecedented snowfalls continued on the 23d ult., and that during the night the temperature in some districts of the United Kingdom was twenty-five degrees below the freezing point, the lowest ever recorded here. The distress is general and the local authorities are organizing relief works. The interruption of road communication in the country continues and the isolated villages are suffering severely. In a few instances wayfarers have been discovered frozen to death in the snow.

The failure of the potato crop in Ireland is causing great distress and suffering among the peasantry in various districts. The Galway County Council adopted resolutions urging the Government, in view of the pressing need, to afford assistance by providing relief works, especially in the congested districts, and by supplying cheap potatoes for the coming season.

It is estimated that the war in the East is costing about five millions of dollars a day. The attacks upon Port Arthur by the Japanese are reported to have demolished many of its fortifications.

The terms of the agreement by which Great Britain and Russia submit the disputed questions involved in the attack by Russia upon British fishing boats to a commission of five persons meeting in Paris has been made public. The decision of a majority is to be binding. A despatch from The Hague of the 21st ult. says: The first sitting of the arbitration court on the Japanese house tax question was held to-day. The point at issue is the contention of Great Britain, France and the United States that the proposed taxes on the old foreign concessions, which being perpetual leases are exempt from taxation.

Secretary Hay has received from the German Government a cordial note accepting in principle President Roosevelt's suggestion for another conference at The Hague. Replies have been received from so many Powers as assure Secretary Hay of the hearty reception which President's invitation has received generally. When the answers come in it steps will be taken to fix a date for the court to meet.

Foreign Minister Delcasse of France has said in Chamber of Deputies that the proposal of the United States for the reassembling of The Hague peace conference had received a most sympathetic welcome, and policy of France being friendly to the proposition. When the action only awaited an arrangement of the details of the programme.

A despatch from St. Petersburg of the 24th says: Elections on the part of recruits for the army this year are not only exceptionally large, but are also completely defeating the efforts of the military authorities in the thickly populated recruiting areas. Of these areas are Russia and Poland are typical.

An agitation is going on in France in favor of the observance of the First-day of the week as a day of rest. It is said that many workers in French shops and factories rarely get a half-day of rest every two or three weeks. The agitation is strongest among the workers themselves, but it has been greatly furthered by the support of sociologists like Dr. Garnier, who shows that the seven-day work permanently disables six laborers out of every ten inside of ten years.

NOTICES.

Hannah W. Williams is appointed Agent for The First Aid, 425 Calena Avenue, Passaden, Cal.

An intelligent elderly woman Fried desires a comfortable home in Friends' family in return for light and companionship.

Address "F," care of "THE FRIEND."

Wanted.—Two bright boys from sixteen to twenty years old to learn plumbing supply business. Good opportunity for persons suitably qualified for mercantile life.

Haines, Jones & Cadbury Ca.

1136 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia.

Cal Preparative and Particular Meetings will be in the parlor of Elizabeth B. Calley, at Coateville, the first First-day in the Twelfth Month, 1904, to the First-day in the Fourth Month, 1905, inclusive, and the first Monthly Meeting will be held at Marshalltown in Cal in the First and Third Months, 1905.

Friends' Meetings for Worship in Wilmett convene at 10.30 A. M. on First and Fifth-days. No Meeting on Fifth-day at same hour.

Friends' Educational Association—An M will be held at No. 140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia on Seventh-day, Twelfth Month 3rd, 1904, at 2:30 which all interested are invited to attend.

PROGRAMME:

"The Training of Children in the Duties and Conditions of Citizenship," Joshua L. Bailly, Francis R. Colby. Discussion by Isaac Sharpless, Ruth S. Goodwin, W. B. Cadbury, Thomas K. Brown, and others.

THESELA WILDMAN, Secretary.

DIED, on Fifth Month 4th, 1904, in Wisconsin, Ohio HARRIS, in the eighty-second year of her age; a new of New Garden Monthly Meeting. She bore her share of several weeks' duration with Christian patience resignation, praising her adorable Redeemer a great time. "That they endure to the end shall be saved," in Philadelphia, on Eleventh Month 3rd, 1903, MARY ELIZABETH SHARPLESS, in the seventy-third year of her age; a member of London Particular and Monthly Meeting of Friends, Pa. dear Friend, in the uncertainty of life before he concerned to give up all earthly things, family and home, and to know a preparation for the last journey. After much exercise of spirit she was enabled to go up into the hands of our dear Saviour. Dur last six weeks of her life her sufferings and pains were great, which she bore with beautiful patient resignation, saying that her Heavenly Father knew and that which she had thought would be so hard made easy to her, rejoicing that it through great joy would be joined with the loved ones gone before. A moment before the close she was heard to say sweetly, "I am going, yes, to dear Jesus; show my way and lead me in perfect peace."

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

OL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 10, 1904.

No. 22.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.
Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.
Subscriptions, payments and business communications
received by
EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.
Sent from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.
Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to
JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.
Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Phrases and Phases.

Is it to be supposed there is no religion there are no phrases?" was intended to noted by us last week, where we appeared "phases."

th phases of the quotation contain food thought, especially that which proclaims the kingdom of Divine religion stands not ord or phrases, but in power of the Divine
t. So that the religious vocabulary which d may be taught by catechism or liturgy, ver expert as a parrot he may be, or their s may be, in the repetition of them, though think they have in them eternal life, are s sounding brass to them who do not to Christ himself in his own virtue as s wisdom and power of God, that they may that life.

it we expect to see different phases of one the same religion everywhere, as we do s of a planet, according to our point of of the planet and its own turn towards
un. We can acknowledge many phases Christianity, manifesting Christ to various tions. All points of view cannot be ocded by any one finite capacity. Let each ue to his own, according to his light.
le there is one phase, for instance a compense of thanksgiving on which represens of various creeds can unite, it is pleas-o see them doing so,—as when recently the St. Louis Exposition Roman Catholic bishops and ministers of Protestant denoms held a "Union Service" for Thank-giving together. On that phase they could tly stand together, whatever Friends
g. say of their phrases constituting worship. Divine worship is always one experience a subjection of heart to the Father of Heaven. Phrases are not essential to it, save to Spirit makes them imperative to be uttered but the manifestation of worship may be various phases.

The Joy of the Upper Side.

We may well believe in the joys of appetite, but not in the lust of appetite. To a converted appetite alone is joy a companion.

The pleasure of natural appetites is granted to induce the exercise of organs of the body and mind in ways necessary for the preservation of life and our fulfilment of duties.
Without a hunger or without a relish we would neglect to eat, and to live. All other essentials of the human constitution have their pleasurable invitations to perform them. But the abuse of appetites takes place destructively.
They are not used, but abused, when they are indulged as an end to themselves, and not regulated as a means for a purpose higher. If we would enjoy a drive, the horse is to be reined towards the still higher pleasure of health, scenery, or the glad intercourse of a visit at the end; but not to be wantonly raced, or given loose rein to run away with us. Happy the man who hangs up his well-handled reins in peace, on reaching the doorway of the bright home of love. Happy all the way along the satisfactions of self-restraint.

Natural appetites, we say, are given us for a wise purpose from the beginning to the end of our natural life. Our great question to be met is, "Shall I travel through this life under my appetites or above them?"

If I move on above them, they become my servants; if beneath them they are my master.
If they are used as a pavement to walk on, I have the skies and atmosphere of God above me to rejoice in. If my appetites themselves are my skies, I enjoy none higher, and these soon perish with the using, and I am left a wallower in the lower darkness.

There is no joy, but lust only, in appetite while it is our master. But when by grace we surmount it, and use the carnal desires as under our feet, the enjoyments of them being heightened and seasoned with a good conscience, then the inspired exaltation of the upper side out-glories the soon-expiring exhilaration beneath. It is the thanksgiving state of the thanksgiving dinner, which every meal should be; which all the God-given enjoyment of his created things should be. We enjoy them from their upper side, because we enjoy them God-ward. And when his Fatherly limitations are approached, a monition of his good Spirit is imparted to check further indulgence. By heeding this, we eat and drink to his glory, to our own health, and to a secret joy above all guilty lust.

The serving of but one Master is the law of the Simple Life, which is the law of the Single Light. To this "if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." Why is there no open vision? Why is the glory so nearly departed? Because our eye wavers from the one look—unto Jesus the example and the apostle of true simplicity. Therefore our sight is bewildered with complexity. Shall it proceed to know more of worldly standards, or be determined to know nothing among them but Jesus Christ and Him crucified? no other lust but that of the spirit against the flesh? no other goal to press towards but Christ-likeness?
They alone may have full joy in the use of their Father's provisions for them in the world, who have overcome the world. Men may enjoy things from above them, or living beneath them have their true life stifled out. Under grace the life is above the body. Let life be kept atop and the body under and brought into subjection, and the triumph of the spirit above the perishable shall prove even in tribulation what is the joy of the glory of the Cross.

Education as the Enemy of War.

At the inauguration of Charles W. Dabney on the 16th ult., as president of the University of Cincinnati, he discussed in his address
"Democracy and the School."

He said that free education was not charity, it was self-protection, for education lessened the need of jails and police. C. W. Dabney then said:—

"The true democracy is something nobler than a policeman guarding and protecting our property and our rights. The democracy establishes its public schools to train new citizens and to fit them for self-government, and when it shall have done its full duty in this respect there will be no need of policemen and soldiers."

"A democracy spending hundreds of millions for warships and forts, for armies and navies, is enough to give devils joy. If we spent one-fourth of this treasure in schools and missions the whole world would soon be ours in bonds of love and there would be no need of these engines of death and destruction."

The speaker concluded with a reference to Japan as "an example of what education can do for a people."

Intellectual education makes a conscientious man more valuable as a citizen, but an unscrupulous man more dangerous. It increases one's power in that direction, good or bad, in which his motives lead him. Yet we believe the general tendency of a broadened intelligence is towards the higher ideals of life; while blinded ignorance among the masses tends to continue them as easy food for war, and feeders of it.

But without Christ in the heart intellectual education has not been found to bring about the work of the Prince of Peace. If "education is the enemy of war" its conquest has been discouragingly slow. It may be answered, "So has the conquest of Christianity been slow." But Christianity has not yet been really tried by nations, and not squarely tried by churches, or by many individuals, while education is earnestly put into exercise publicly and privately, and is given high place in the conduct of wars. But if as many men were of the Spirit of Christ as are educated, Japan would have had no occasion to think that in having recourse to war she was following Christian example.

Probably under the term "missions" President Dabney intends to include the influence of the gospel. That alone, if heeded, would soon make the world one in bonds of love; and while education would be a valuable coadjutor of the gospel, it has no claim to the first place. For peace on earth is a state of heart and not of intellect, and the only sure labor for peace is right labor for the reception of Christ's Spirit in the hearts of men.

"In my Father's house are many homes," — in the caverns of ungodliness, no homes! For which are we adapting our characters? What spiritual bodies of ours are we preparing for their prepared places? Life may change us while life we have, but death that transfers us does not change us. Can we not foresee enough of our homes for that state, by what we now choose to be? Expect to realize them according to the doom that then goes forth: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; he that is righteous, let him be righteous still, and he that is holy, let him be holy still."

RELIGION is a source of satisfaction superior to any other in human life, but, like all things of a high character, it requires time and experience to show its full value. . . . Much of the religion of man has been under the impulse of fear and has been spoiled by errors and superstitions, yet its original, deep, and essential satisfaction is not altogether lost. Men cling to its remnants as their dear hope. When religion is found in its pure and uncontaminated form, or made known in its freshness and power, as in Christ's manifestation of religion as a revelation of grace and love from our heavenly Father, it becomes the supreme, the sweet and precious thing in life. —The Watchman.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 165.)

In the Eighth Month, 1834, it appeared to the Committee that a visit to the reservation by some of their number might prove useful to the Indians and informing to themselves. Robert Scotten and Nathan Sharpless were desired to perform this visit and also to make such arrangements for the care of the property there belonging to Friends as might appear requisite. These Friends accordingly went to Tunesassa the following month accompanied by Joseph Elkinton. They were cordially received by the Indians in different neighborhoods, who freely communicated to them some of the difficulties they were laboring under, desiring their advice and assistance. Seven years had elapsed since a visit of this kind had been paid by members of the Committee, and the occasion was felt to be of unusual importance, and these Friends were pleased with evidences of progress the Indians had made in improving their land, buildings, etc.

Among the causes of uneasiness mentioned to them was the erection of a saw-mill upon their land by a white man, who had succeeded in getting the consent of some of the chiefs for the purpose contrary to the wishes of a number of their people; in consequence of which some of their young men and others had set themselves to work to cut down a great quantity of timber with a view of securing to themselves a portion of the national property, and had made unusual havoc thereon. As many as eight million feet of lumber had been sawn there in two years, in addition to which the white people employed in the mills had got a footing upon their land, and a number of white families were then residing upon it, whom the Indians had found themselves unable to get rid of. They also learned that the Indians were desirous that Friends should again establish a school among them, and in a special address to them, the chiefs stated that "when at Buffalo, in council, the Indians all agreed to have schools, and those of us who have adhered to our ancient customs in times past have had no schools, but that now all agree to have them at Buffalo, Tonnewanda and Allegheny Reservations, and desire that Quakers should teach them." These chiefs also stated: "Brothers, we have been to Buffalo twice this fall and have had much trouble. A part of our nation wish to move west of the Mississippi, but the greater part desire to stay where they are as long as they can."

These Friends, in council with some of the Indians, agreed that if the Indians would open two or more schools in the Allegheny Reservation to be taught by their own people, the Committee would pay for each scholar who attended one dollar for every three months, the fact to be certified by two of the chiefs, or two of their good men whom they should appoint for the purpose.

The desire expressed by the Indians that Friends would again resume their care over them, particularly in the instruction of their children, induced the Committee to agree with much unanimity "to encourage one or more suitably qualified Friends, if such should feel their minds drawn to do so, to offer their services to superintend the schools that are to be opened for the instruction of the children of the Indian natives on the Allegheny Reservation;" and steps were taken early in 1835 to spread this information through the Quarterly Meetings.

This desire to help them was strengthened by the earnest solicitation of Robinson, one of the chiefs, who visited Philadelphia in the Second Month of this year, and who, on behalf of the nation, renewed the request that Friends would assist them in establishing schools, so that some one should be sent out to undertake that business. He also stated "that he was two-thirds more comfortable than he was forty-five years ago [a little time previous to Friends engaging in this concern. That none of them followed hunting for a livelihood, although some of them did hunt for a day or so, and that from his own observation he could say that there were more children amongst them now than there were forty-five years ago."

In the Tenth Month, 1835, Robert Scott again visited the reservation accompanied this time by Thomas Wistar, Jr. Their visit was largely occasioned by the need of taking proper care of the property at Tunesassa, a lease of which to its occupants was then about to expire. Their visit, however, proved to be at a very opportune time, as while they were there a very great rise in the waters of the Allegheny took place, causing much loss to the Indians by the destruction of their corncrofting, etc. The information of this event which they were eye witnesses, when before the Committee, led to efforts to render the Indians substantial relief.

The report of these two Friends mentions some details which at this time afford an interesting view of the condition of things existing on the reservation:—

"The reservation is a narrow section of land extending along the Allegheny about forty miles in length, and contains a population of six hundred natives, together with a number of whites. There are on the reservation three small villages, to wit: Jimers town, Cold Spring and Old Town, all situated on the Allegheny River. The village of Cold Spring is two miles and a half distant from above the settlement of Friends on the opposite bank of the Allegheny. The town consists of about a dozen log houses of construction, together with one or two frame buildings. The forest remains undisturbed to the rear of the town, and there it is likely to remain. The general appearance of this place was by no means encouraging, as here we found the school under the care of Joseph A. Sanford, a youth of the Seneca Nation. We paid several visits to it, and found at most but six scholars in attendance and they receiving instruction in the first elements of an English education. We were led to understand that in consequence of the busy season [gathering in of corn and potatoes] most of the children were absent, but we were all present they numbered about twenty."

"From one to two miles above Cold Spring on the same side of the river, reside a rather larger number of the natives, some of whom appear to have made considerable advancement in civilization especially among the younger this neighborhood five chiefs reside, to wit: Snake, Robinson, Patterson, Jacob Black and Samuel Gordon. These last named, together with Tunis Half Town, are decidedly favorable to the views of Friends in relation to the education of their young people. In point of appearance, not only about his person, but in his house and farm, Gordon stands much in advance of his neighbors. In a word we see the rare satisfaction of beholding in Sam Gordon a civilized Indian. He is one of four youths educated some years past by the Indian Committee in the neighborhood of Philadelphia. Near this place lives the old chief in the old style, but his influence is much circumscribed. A considerable number of the natives reside in this vicinity whose appearance was far from being encouraging. On a good flat, some three or four miles from Cold Spring Creek, we found the cabin of the Eyes. He is a man of diffident disposition and a chief of an excellent character. We paid a satisfactory visit to him, although still retains the Indian habits of living, which are far from being agreeable or even pleasant. He cannot speak our language, but has an intelligent, well-behaved daughter, educated by Friends, who is qualified to act as an interpreter. Of the kind feelings and kindly disposition of this aged and retiring chief there is no room for doubt.

Old Town is situated about four miles from Cold Spring, in the rear of some extensive or bottom land, and the village, if it may be so termed, consists of six or eight built log and frame houses, located at short distances apart as give it the appearance of a thickly settled neighborhood rather than a town. Two chiefs reside in this vicinity, to wit: John Pierce and Sky Pierce. This part of the reservation presents a very pleasing aspect, and is in many respects an interesting one. Sky, John, Robert and Simeon Pierce are brethren; they all have good houses and live comfortably settled.

The character of Robert Pierce stands decidedly high. He is by the natives esteemed a preacher, and the condition of his house and grounds is very creditable. He has a son (names) educated by Friends, and a teacher; which service he is tolerably qualified, but is at present engaged in farming. Peter (name) [an adopted Indian] we did not see, he being absent on a trapping excursion, but with his son Peter we were much pleased. He is an well educated young man, and formerly had charge of the school at this place, and appeared disposed to resume it the first opportunity if sufficiently encouraged.

It was our intention and wish to have paid a visit to the natives of Jimersontown [situated some fifteen miles above Cold Spring] but were prevented by a long continued rain and consequent high water, which rendered travel impracticable by carrying off the bridges. We were informed that a school was in operation at that place, under the direction of a male teacher, and attended by upwards of twenty scholars.

A disposition decidedly averse to emigration appears to be gaining ground, notwithstanding which there is reason to fear new difficulties in relation to this subject will shortly appear, as a railroad is now in construction in the city of New York to Dunkirk, on Lake Erie, which will pass through the reservation, and endeavors are also making to improve the navigation of the Allegheny River, which, when completed, will enhance the value of the lands, and there is no doubt that those engaged in these undertakings will endeavor to supplant the present for a different population. The appearance and conduct of some of the younger natives was very satisfactory, some of them being industriously engaged in farming and clearing new land. Their dress was similar to that of the workmen among white people, and not a few of them can understand our language.

The destitute condition of the Indians consequent upon the great flood in the Allegheny, engaged the attention of the Committee in a meeting held First Month 14th, 1896, when it appeared there was ample reason to believe that unless some relief was speedily furnished many of the Indians and a great part of their cattle must suffer and perhaps perish from want. It was then agreed to furnish two of their number, Enoch Lewis and Robert Scotten, who were willing to undertake the journey, with one thousand dollars for the purpose of purchasing corn for the Indians and hay for their cattle and stock.

After arriving at Tunesassa, these Friends had a council with the chiefs, in which a letter from the Committee was read, and the design of the Friends in visiting them was explained. In this interview it appeared that only eight families among them possessed the means to get through the year without suffering from want. The Friends afterward, as is stated in the report to the Yearly Meeting in 1896, visited nearly all the Indian families on the Allegheny, inquired their number, what losses they had sustained, what stock they possessed, and what means remained for their support; and noted on the spot the substance of the information obtained. From this examination it appeared there were three hundred and thirty-seven adults and three hundred and fifty-three children, or six hundred and ninety individuals, residing in that vicinity. This includes the natives on the Allegheny Reservation and a few residing on Cornplanter's land in Pennsylvania, a few miles south of the New York line. The provisions saved from the flood were estimated by the two Friends at less than a third of the whole, and of the corn which was saved a great part was so much damaged as to appear unfit for use. Very few of the fences, from one end of the reservation to the other, were left. Numbers of horses and cattle were destitute of any other provision than the buds and branches of trees. For these the sugar maple afforded a partial supply.

In addition to the amount placed in the hands of these Friends, about $200 was afterwards forwarded to be used in purchasing potatoes for immediate use and for seed.

(To be continued.)

CHRISTIANITY is like oil on the troubled waters of the world's quarrels. Nothing else will still the waves.

WHEN one has partaken of the infinitely serene exaltation of a spiritual baptism that which pertains to the sensuousness of life sinks into nothingness.

The Tragedy of Fashion.

There is serious missionary work at hand for the women clubs: work which ought to be undertaken without an hour's delay, says "Good Housekeeping." It is that of bringing well-to-do and fashionable women to a realization of their responsibilities in the matter of dress.

Every year the fashionable fabrics are getting more expensive, every year the trimmings and the "findings" for the simplest costume mean a greater outlay of money. Not only are street and evening gowns more elaborate, but fashion is now dictating costly toilets to take the place of the simple and appropriate morning gown. And this at a time when the cost of mere living is ruinously high.

Do women with money and position realize what a far-reaching source of evil their extravagance and elaboration of attire has become? Do they guess the heartburning of the women of slender purse who belong to the same club, attend the same functions, and whose aping of them so as to appear appropriately dressed means either weary, nerve-racking hours of planning and midnight sewing, or else a living beyond the slender income, which brings nervous or moral collapse to the fond and over-taxed husband? Do they know that to their door may be laid unhappy homes, embezzlements, divorces.

They declaim loudly against the sweat shops they talk ably on altruism. Yet they are blind and deaf to the need next door, of simple ideals of living which they, and they alone, can supply. Heaven speed the day of unselfish self-control in the matter of dress!

FROM AN OLD LETTER.—I have been much interested in reading a few extracts from the letters of the late Amy Toulmin. I wish thou couldst see them, as they are a most complete refutation of those principles which she so warmly and zealously advocated for many years, and which thou hast so often to declare against. One is so full that I must copy it for thy perusal; the letter was to her husband.

"You said this day week, my love, that you feared I was leaning too much towards Quakerism, and I believed I answered that I wished to seek after truth and peace wherever they could best be found, which is the first wish of my heart, simply and truly. Among Unitarians I found not that peace. There is a great deal to please the understanding, and to gratify worldly wisdom, and to puff up the pride of human reason in their writings—but there is nothing to satisfy the soul that is athirst for inward purification and that righteousness which flows from being born again. In the writings of Friends there is mostly a life, a freshness with which my best feelings can sympathize; but think not that I am in any haste to return to them. I neither am seeking to be united to them, nor to any other Society of Christians, but to attain deeper and deeper humility, and to have that root of pride from which so many sorrows have arisen, wholly burnt up. I did indeed greatly err in ever doubting the influence of the Holy Spirit, and in grief and repentance will my soul travail till I am allowed to hope that this sin is forgiven by Almighty God.

FAITHFULNESS is faithfulness, on whatever scale it be set forth.—Maclaren.

The Ministry of the Spirit.

(Continued from page 165.)

I cannot but cry aloud to you that have been long professors of the truth, and know the truth in the convincing power of it, and have had a sober conversation among me, yet content yourselves only to know truth for yourselves, to go to meetings and exercise an ordinary charity in the church, and honest behaviour in the world and limit yourselves between these bounds, feeling little or no concern upon your spirits, for the glory of the Lord in the prosperity of his Truth in the earth, more than to be glad that others succeed in such service.

Arise ye in the name and power of the Lord Jesus! Behold how white the fields are unto the harvest. . . . and how few able and faithful laborers there are to work therein! Your neighbors and kindred want to know the Lord and his truth, and to walk in it. Does nothing lie at your door upon their account? Search and see, and lose no time, I beseech you, for the Lord is at hand.

I do not judge you; there is One which judgeth all men, and his judgment is true. You have mightily increased in your outward substance. May you equally increase in your inward riches, and do good with both, while you have a day to do good. . . . But oh, let it be your servant and not your master! . . . Let the Lord be chiefly in your eye; and ponder your ways, and see if God has nothing more for you to do; and if you find yourselves short in your account with Him, then wait for his preparation, and be ready to receive the word of command, and be not weary of well-doing. When you have put your hand to the plough, and assuredly you shall reap it if you faint not, the fruit of your heavenly labor is God's everlasting kingdom.

And you young convinced ones, be you entertained and exhorted to a diligent and chaste waiting upon God, in the way of his blessed manifestation and appearance of himself to you. Look not out, but within; let not another's liberty be your snare; neither act by imitation, but sense and feeling of God's power in yourselves; crush not the tender buddings of it in your souls, nor overrun in your desires and warmth of affections, the holy and gentle motions of it. Remember it is a still voice that speaks to us in this day, and that it is not to be heard in the noises and hurries of the mind; but it is distinctly understood in a retired frame.

Jesus loved and chose solitudes; often going to mountains, gardens and seashores, to avoid crowds and hurries, to show his disciples it was good to be solitary, and sit loose to the world. Two enemies lie near your states—imagination and liberty; but the plain, practical, living, holy truth, that has convinced you will preserve you, if you mind it in yourselves, and bring all thoughts, inclination and affections, to the test of it, to see if these are wrought in God, or of the enemy or your own selves. So will a true taste, discerning and judgment be preserved to you, of what you should do and leave undone. And in your diligence and faithfulness in this way, you will come to inherit substance; and Christ, the eternal wisdom, will fill your treasury.

And when you are converted as well as convinced, then confirm the brethren; and be ready to every good word and work that the Lord shall call you to; that you may be to his praise, who has chosen you to be partakers, with the saints in light, of a kingdom that cannot be shaken, an inheritance incorruptible in eternal habitations.

And now, as for you, that are the children of God's people, a great concern is upon my spirit for your good, and often are my knees bowed to the God of your fathers for you; that you may come to be partakers of the same Divine life and power, that have been the glory of this day; that a generation you may be to God, an holy nation, and a peculiar people, zealous of good works, when all our heads are laid in the dust.

Oh, you young men and women! let it not suffice you that you are the children of the people of the Lord; you must also be born again, if you will inherit the kingdom of God. Your fathers are but such after the flesh, and could but beget you into the likeness of the first Adam; but you must be begotten into the likeness of the second Adam, by a spiritual generation, or you will not, you cannot be of his children and offspring. And therefore look carefully about you, O ye children of the children of God! Consider your standing, and see what you are, in relation to this divine kindred family and birth. Have you obeyed the light, and received and walked in the Spirit, which is the incorruptible seed of the Word and kingdom of God, of which you must be born again? God is no respecter of persons. The father cannot save or answer for the child, or the child for the father; but in the sin thou sinnest thou shalt die; and in the righteousness thou dost, through Christ Jesus, thou shalt live; for it is the willing and obedient that shall eat the good of the land. Be not deceived, God is not mocked; such as all nations and people sow, such shall they reap at the hand of the just God. And then your many and great privileges above the children of other people, will add weight in the scale against you, if you choose not the way of the Lord. For you have had line upon line, and precept upon precept, and not only good doctrine, but good example; and which is more, you have been turned to, and acquainted with a principle in yourselves which others have been ignorant of. And you now know you may be as good as you please, without the fear of frowns and blows, or being turned out of doors and forsaken of father and mother for God's sake and his holy religion, as has been the case of some of your fathers, in the day they first entered into this holy path. And if you, after hearing and seeing the wonders that God has wrought in the deliverance and preservation of them, through a sea of troubles, and the manifold temporal as well as spiritual blessings that He has filled them with, in the sight of their enemies, should neglect and turn your backs upon so great and near a salvation, you would not only be most ungrateful children to God and them, but must expect that God will call the children of those that knew Him not to take the crown out of your hands, and that your lot will be a dreadful judgment at the hand of the Lord. But oh, that it may never be so with any of you. The Lord forbid, saith my soul.

Wherefore, O ye young men and women look to the Rock of your fathers. There is no other God but Him, no other light but his, no other grace but his, nor spirit but his, to convince you, quicken and comfort you; to lead, comfort and preserve you to God's everlasting kingdom. So will you be possessors as well as professors of the Truth, embracing it, not only by education, but judgment and conviction; from a sense begotten in your souls, through the operation of the eternal Spirit and power of God; by which you may come to be the seed of Abraham, through faith, and the circumcision not made with hands; and so heirs of the promise made to the fathers, of an incorruptible crown; that as I said before, a generation you may be to God, holding up the profession of the blessed truth in the life and power of it. For formality in religion is nauseous to God and good men. . . . Wherefore, dear children, let me entreat you to shut your eyes at the temptations and allurements of this low and perishing world, and not suffer your affections to be captivated by those lusts and vanities that your fathers, for the Truth's sake, long since turned their backs upon; but as you believe it to be the truth, receive it into your heart; that you may become the children of God; that it may never be said of you, as the Evangelist said of the Jews in his time, that Christ the true Light, "came to his own, but his own received Him not; but to as many as received Him to them gave He power to become the children of God; which were born not of blood, nor of the will of man, but of God;" a most close and comprehensive passage to this occasion. You exactly answer to those professing Jews, in that you be the name of God's people, by being the children and wearing the form of God's people. And He by his light in you, may be very well said to come to his own, and if you obey not, but turn your backs upon it, and water the vanities of your minds, you will of those that "received Him not; which I pray God may never be your case and judgment; but that you may be thoroughly sensible of the many and great obligations you lie under to the Lord for his love, and to your parents for their care; and with all your heart, with all your soul, and all your strength turn to the Lord to his gift and spirit in you and hear his voice and obey it, that you may seal to the testimony of your fathers, by the truth and evidence of your own experience that your children's children may bless you and the Lord for you, as those that deliver a faithful example, as well as a record of the Truth of God unto them; so will the gray hairs of your dear parents, yet alive, go down to the grave with joy to see you the posterity of truth, as well as theirs, and that not of their nature but spirit shall live in you which they are gone.

(To be continued.)

TRUE harmony with Jehovah is no vacuity, invokes influences that dominate all mundane authority, it calls into co-operation potency before which the will of man is powerless.

God has two dwellings—one in heaven and the other in the meek and thankful heart.
Isaac Walton.

When Is a Man Poor?

Time and again, I have travelled a long distance to visit a very humble home in Amesbury, Massachusetts. The whole property is worth but a few hundred dollars, but the fact that John Greenleaf Whittier lived there makes absolutely priceless. Men and women cross continents and oceans to visit it. Enthusiastic admirers of the poet carry away from the spot bits of wood, wild flowers, leaves and sorts of souvenirs to remind them and those who come after them that a man lived there one of nature's noblemen.

Thousands of people in this country look on Whittier, the simple poet, as one of the best treasures America has produced, and is considered from a commercial standpoint, the left in the world was worth but a song. Be careful how you laugh at men and women to think there is something better in the world than making money, and who refuse to ship it. Their monuments in parks and public places may proclaim the story of their heroic lives for centuries after you, with your children, have been forgotten. Selishness has immortality in it. Greed has no quality to expiate itself, its children are all short-lived. Who ever saw people making pilgrimages to the homes of millionaire men who did anything for the world? Who would lift the memory of Whittier by asking if he is rich? Who would desecrate the name of John by asking how much money he left, who would dare say that he was not a success because he was poor? Hundreds of men and women have lived and died in wretchedness, in attics, and even in poorhouses who have enriched the world by their lives, who have given greater uplift to civilization than any millionaire. Men who never had a hundred dollars have left names which the world will not let die.

Do you regard a man as really poor who does not happen to have money, but whose character is so juicy and whose career is so potent with the sweet things of life and experience that he has enriched a whole community? Do you regard a man as poor whose neighbors feel enriched by his near presence? Do you regard a man as poor who lives in a cottage, but whose very existence enhances the value of every acre of land and every mile for miles around him? Do you regard a man as poor when every child in his neighborhood loves him and considers it an honor to be recognized by him on the street or to give an invitation to visit him? Do you regard a man as poor when his home, no matter how humble, is looked upon as a shrine?

Do you regard a man as poor who is engulfed in one's occupation, swamped up in a complicated life, harassed by striving and straining, the worry and anxiety which accompany a vast fortune, is not rich. Time and opportunity and inclination to help others are the most valuable things in the world, and if you can not seize them, if you can not utilize them to your own benefit, your own betterment, you are indeed, although you have millions in the bank, poor.

A man is rich when he has put himself in a position to do with all that is good and great, when he has put himself into a position where he is able to grow to the largest maturity, when he has time and opportunity for cultivating friendships, for helping others. He is not rich; on the contrary, he is very poor indeed, when he is so preoccupied with selfish interests that he has no time to sympathize with the unfortunate, and no time to help those who are suffering and in need, no time to do anything but make money. He is poor when he has no time to improve his mind, to elevate his ideals, or to cultivate his tastes.

Soul expansion is the only thing which measures real wealth. The greatest aim of life should be to absorb into one's being the largest amount of sweetness and beauty it is capable of absorbing. The highest riches are beyond the reach of money and are independent of fortune. They can not be burned up, or lost in the ocean, or destroyed in a railroad wreck.

Much of what is called success is but the most vulgar kind of prosperity; it is the success of the brute faculties, at the expense of the divine. To develop a few of one's brain cells, and these the lowest, by everlasting digging and grinding for money, to cultivate one huge gland which secretes nothing but dollars, and the exclusive cultivation of which crushes out of life all the finer sentiments, all that is sweet and beautiful and worth while, makes a man as dry and barren as the great Sahara Desert. He who follows this course can not be rich, no matter how much money he may have. A man is rich when every faculty within him has been developed to the utmost along normal lines, when he has followed his highest ideals, when he has pushed his horizon to its farthest limit.

A man is poor when he has lost the confidence of his friends, when people who are nearest to him do not believe in him; when his character is honeycombed by deceit, punctured by dishonesty. He is poor when he makes money at the expense of his character, when principle does not stand clear-cut, supreme in his idea. When this is clouded, he is in danger of the worst kind of poverty. To be in the poorhouse is not necessarily to be poor. If you have maintained your integrity, if your character stands foursquare to the world, if you have never bent the knee of principle to avarice, you are not poor, though you may be compelled to beg bread.—Success.

ANGELM'S PRAYER.—Lord, teach me to seek thee, and show thyself to me as I seek, for I cannot seek thee unless thou teach me, nor find thee unless thou show thyself. May I seek thee in longing for thee, and long for thee in seeking; may I find thee in loving thee, and love thee in finding. I confess, Lord, and I offer thee thanks that thou hast created me in this thy image in order that I may remember thee and think on thee and love thee. But this image of thee is so worn by the pressure of my faults, and obscured by the fume of my sins, that it cannot accomplish its purpose unless thou renew and reshape it. I seek not to understand in order that I may believe, but I believe in order that I may understand. For this I believe, namely, that unless I believe I shall not understand. Amen.

STAND lightly on this world ready to take wing, having your feet on earth, your eyes, heart and citizenship in Heaven.

Entering Into and Conducting Business.

(The Guidance that is Needed.)

BY WILLIAM EVANS.

The account given in William Evans' Journal of his preservation, simply by being obedient to the secret intimations of the Holy Spirit, from entering a business that would, in all probability, have proved his ruin financially, and given him great concern and anxiety of mind, seems so full of instruction, especially to young men about entering business, that I should be glad to see the account as related by himself inserted in the columns of THE FRIEND.

T. C. H.

WEST CHESTER, Pa., Eleventh Month 10th, 1904.

William Evans, a minister of the Society of Friends, died in Philadelphia, in the year 1867, being in his eightieth year. He relates in his Journal* that he had been apprenticed to the drug business, the early part of the present century, and engaged in it on his own account in the year 1808.

Five years later he writes: "In consequence of the war with England, business was much depressed, and having the expenses of a family to meet, which it seemed improbable, if the difficulties continued, the little I had to do would be sufficient for, I became so dissatisfied that I resolved to make some change. A relative, who was a dealer in dry-goods, wanting a partner, I concluded to join him as soon as the war was brought to a close, and made arrangements to borrow a sum of money, which, with that employed by him, was deemed a sufficient capital. The prospect of the connection, and engaging in a business that looked likely to be profitable, was animating and pleasant; and from the feelings of my mind, I thought I had given the subject ample consideration. We entered upon some of the preparatory steps, which brought us frequently together, and to converse upon the business and the manner of conducting it. As I was led into a knowledge of the course pursued in that line, scruples occasionally arose in my mind, which I attributed to fear produced by the novelty of my situation. Selling articles which I should not be easy to wear, or recommend others to wear, presented some apprehension of difficulty, but I concluded these might be dispensed with, and the business still be large enough; or perhaps when I became fully engaged these feelings would wear off. Then arose the thought of entering into a business which I did not understand, and the condition in which I should find myself, were my partner removed by death. This circumstance I hoped would not occur, and I endeavored to suppress my apprehensions with the belief that experience would soon render me familiar with my new employment. In his desire to open the way for our union and future operations, my relative told me that, besides the amount of our capital, which was borrowed, it would be necessary to purchase, on credit, large quantities of certain articles, the payment of which would be provided for in the returns of our sales. This was a further insight of the responsibilities we were about to take upon us, and which raised fresh doubts and fears.

"My present business being small, and one that I understood, was managed with ease. It required little capital, and involved me in no engagements that I did not hold the means to meet; so that I was free from anxiety on that account, and at liberty to attend, unincumbered, to any of the appointments of the Society, or any impression of duty to go to a meeting, that I might have. When I contrasted my present situation, for I had not yet given up the drug business, with the project before me, and recollected that I had never been accustomed to the anxiety which often attends large commercial concerns, I began to feel stronger doubts of the safety of making so great a change. These doubts increased; and one day, sitting in our religious meeting, it plainly appeared to me that, though the mind may be able to compass much, yet beyond its capacity it cannot go. If all its energies are enlisted in the concerns of the world, and their pressure is as great as it is capable of bearing, the all-important work of religion must be neglected. This appeared to me most inevitably to be my case. My time and talents would be wholly engrossed, and I must abandon all prospect of usefulness in religious society for the servitude of a man of the world. It seemed if I pursued the prospect of adopting the proposed change of business, that I should be lost to religious society and to the work of religion in my own heart.

*Any reader of this article may procure a full biography of William Evans, at 204 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"These views brought me to a full stop. I was afraid to risk my everlasting salvation for the sake of worldly emolument; and, notwithstanding the mortification, I determined that it was best to inform my proposed partner, in a proper manner, that I could not proceed, and also of the cause; which was a trial to him as well as myself, though no steps had been taken that would involve him in difficulty. After having come to this conclusion, and my concern for his disappointment had subsided, I felt relieved of a great burthen, and then resolved that, as long as I could make a living by the business I was brought up to, I would not abandon it for any other, but labor after contentment in such things as my Heavenly Father granted to me. I looked forward with renewed peace and satisfaction at the path and the business before me, though small, remembering that the earth is the Lord's, and the cattle on a thousand hills, and He in his inscrutable wisdom and kindness, will dispense what He knows we need.

"My relative died in less than three years, and the very great losses produced by a falling market, proved in the end that I had escaped from a load of anxiety and almost inextricable embarrassment. Indeed, being left alone in a business I was in no wise fitted for, it is probable it would have proved my ruin. It is good to trust in the Lord, and to mind the secret intimations of his blessed Spirit; for I believe that it was nothing less than his merciful, superintending care that snatched me from the thralldom I was preparing for myself."

The subsequent experience of William Evans illustrates the declaration that "Godliness is profitable for all things: having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." He was enabled to maintain his family comfortably to the end of his lengthened life, while diligently laboring in the cause of his Divine Master.

Science and Industry.

SAND PICTURES.—"If the augustness would condescend to take honorable repose for but a moment, until his servant can get her miserable sands she will make for him the sand pictures."

That was the way a little Japanese girl spoke one day in Kobe to a visitor. An English child, even if she could do what this little one did, would have said: "If the gentleman will be seated I will get my sand in a minute."

They spoke quaintly in Japan. But she brought in a moment three little bags filled with sand—white, blue and yellow—and then she led the way into the garden. Seating herself without disarranging a single fold of her dainty kimono, she scraped a smooth place on the gravel walk and poured out the white sand, carefully spreading it in a little square.

Then, taking a handful of the blue sand she let it trickle through her fingers, rapidly making a design of a cottage in outline. With the yellow sand she made the background, and, mixing the yellow with the blue, she designed trees of brilliant green.

She drew yellow windows in the blue cottage and made a yellow walk leading up to the door. In five minutes she had made the most delicate little picture which looked like a panel in a Japanese screen.

Every child in Japan plays this little game of making sand-pictures, and it is one which will give unending entertainment to children everywhere. It is easily tried, and some beautiful little things can be made by any child with a taste for drawing.—Dominion Presbyterian.

A THOUSAND BOY CORN GROWERS.—The thought struck W. B. Otwell, president of the Farmers' Institute of Macoupin Co., Ill. that if the farmer boys could be induced to take an interest in the effort, his county would produce the finest corn in the world. He persuaded the Institute to offer a prize for the best ten ears of corn grown by Macoupin County farmer boys. Hundreds made application to him, and received a package of selected seed—Yellow Dent and Boone County White.

In the fall the boys sent in their corn. The prize—a bicycle was awarded. W. B. Otwell went down to see the boy that won, expecting to find him the son of a prosperous farmer. The boy proved to be the fourteen-year-old son of a poor widow inhabiting a little prairie cabin. All summer the boy had "toted" water from the well to his corn patch in bucketfuls. His industry had been remarkable. He was invited to the next meeting of the Farmers' Institute. W. B. Otwell lifted him upon the table. "This" he said, turning to the assembled farmers, as he pointed to the little barefoot youngster in his blue jean overalls, "is the boy who won the prize." The cheers that greeted the boy were louder than those which later on greeted the Governor of the State, when he came down to make a speech; for, when these contests had continued several years, the Governor became interested. Otwell had conceived the idea of extending the contest to the boys of the State, and showing at St. Louis the corn they produced. The Governor subscribed. So did other citizens. One offered a $1,000 Holste cow for the first prize. Other prizes were offered—wagons and plows and windmill. Seventeen thousand boys wrote for the seed and information. Two farm wagons would not contain all the letters. The State went into enthusiasm—over corn.

And now return to the World's Fair Palace of Agriculture. In the Illinois section is a mountain of huge yellow ears of corn, row upon row, tier upon tier, of little symmetric pyramids of ten ears each. Before each pyramid is the photograph of the Illinois farmer boy whose corn it is. The selected crop of 8,000 Illinois boys is represented. Can you imagine what this means? Eight thousand boys aroused to pitch of enthusiasm in scientific farming. Seed corn enough to plant the whole Illinois corn belt. If a bounty crop sprang from the fertile soil last year—a more bountiful crop will leap forth this year.—World's Work.

CHARCOAL BURNING.—Time was when entire annual yield of many European forests was devoted to no worthier purpose than making of charcoal for use as fuel in iron and glass smelting works. But nowadays forest timber can generally be put to a better purpose, and, although in some places charcoal burning still flourishes on a large scale, the industry, strangled by coal and coke, has been steadily diminishing in importance.

The best site for a kiln is one that has been used before—the ground is thoroughly and is covered with absorptive charcoal.

The kiln usually consists of two tiers of wood, one upon the other, placed as straight as possible, the smaller pieces inside thicker pieces in the centre and the smaller again toward the outside. When two tiers have been piled up in this way more wood is laid horizontally across the narrow top. The kiln is gradually shaped like a dome. The openings are then carefully filled in, in order to prevent unnecessary drafts, and the fire is made as firm as possible.

A passage is now constructed from the side of the kiln to the flue in the centre, a log of wood which has been placed previous in position is drawn from under the bottom, leaving a hollow kindling passage, which, when the kiln is completed, a fire may be inserted to set fire to the shavings.

Now the important work of covering the kiln is commenced. Supports of various sizes are placed in position to save a collapse of the weight of the coverings, of which there is both an inner and an outer. The inner is first tiled, as it were, with thin sods, lapped each other. Then the outer covering is applied, consisting of loamy forest soil, charcoal dust, well mixed and firm enough to exclude air and retain the heat, and of the same time soft enough to allow steam to escape, and to yield without cracking, as the kiln gradually sinks during the burning.

Nothing remains but to erect a windbreak if necessary before burning the kiln.

Early in the morning, when the air is still, a torch of pine is inserted in the passage mentioned, and the flames seize the dry twigs and shavings in the flue.

At first, when the dome becomes hot thick smoke issue from the top; if all is well, the smoke should give way to flame, but a not unpleasant, pungent odor should be perceptible. This is a sign that carbonization is in progress. After a few hours, charcoal in form in the dome, which will gradually sink in.

Should the sinking be irregular, it is a sign the charcoal-burner that the kiln is burning unevenly. There is too much draft from one corner, or too little in another, or some of the wood in the kiln is burning quicker than the other pieces. This state of affairs must be remedied by boring draft holes or applying earth, as the case may require.

In the second day after kindling, the first draft-holes are made. These holes, bored through both coverings down to the wood, in rows to leeward, help to regulate the burning, and also give indication when the carbonizing process nears completion. At this time, smoke and steam issue through them—after a while the smoke turns blue, which is a sure and certain sign that the charcoal is burning, and this, of course, is the last thing the charcoal-burners desire. The holes must be closed up immediately with soil or earth, and a fresh row opened lower down the dome.

Others Before Self.

The Northeast Relief Co. was selling coal for ten cents a paifful. A long line of customers had reached to the sidewalk and far down the street, waiting and shivering in the bitter cold. Sarah Conley was almost at the office door. She was glad her turn was so near. She was chilled, and her breakfast had been spoiled that morning. Moreover, she was old and not strong.

"It's hard standing," she remarked to the man behind her.

"It is that," returned the woman, "I'd rather freeze at home, if it wa'n't for the children. They're crying with the cold."

"Look here," said Sarah, "you take my money; it'll get you there one quicker," and she stepped out of the ranks and in behind the man.

"No, that's nothing!" she continued, smiling at the mother's thanks. Her change of position brought Sarah in front of a young girl who coughed and shivered pitifully in the biting wind. Just then a rumor was passed the coal supply was giving out. The women pressed close. Sarah glanced uneasily at the girl.

"You can have my chance," she said suddenly, she slipped back of the sick girl.

"Sarah did not look behind her again. She was so cold and she trembled from weariness. A slow progression of the line had brought her within the office door, when she noticed a girl standing at one side, carrying an empty pail and crying softly. Sarah beckoned her forward.

"You want get your coal if you stay there," she said. "You'll have to run round to the other side of the line."

"I've lost my money," whispered the little girl.

"I'll hold your pail while you go home and get more," suggested Sarah.

"There isn't any more," sobbed the child. Sarah stood still a moment. Then she slipped her dime in the girl's purple little palm. It was the last money she had, but she did not say so. Then she went home to a cold room. The bowl of soup she had saved for dinner stood frozen on the table. She took the clothes from the bed and wrapped them around her.

"My rent's paid and I've got a job of scrubbing for to-morrow," she said to herself. "There's lots worse off than I am."

Her teeth chattered and her joints ached. But way down in her heart there glowed a warm spot as she thought of the babies' mother, the sick girl and the child, all with their heaping pails of coal.—Youth's Companion.

Items Concerning the Society.

A conference of the formation of a company for the study of Friends' principles and history was called to be held at Friends' Institute, on Sixth-day evening the 9th instant.

On the day that Haddonfield (quarterly Meeting is held in Moorestown, (Fifth-day Twelfth Mo. 15) a lunch will be served to all Friends who wish it, directly after meeting, at the school house near by.

1722—Richard Claridge was about this time concerned in several Public Meetings, tenderly to reprove those that Sat in time of prayer, a practice which he judged to be very indecent and irreverent.—Journal, page 318.

The time for holding the mid-week meetings of Frankford Particular Meeting has been changed, from Fifth-day mornings to Fourth-day evenings, assembling at 7:45 o'clock, except the weeks in which the Monthly and Quarterly meetings occur.

An appointed meeting was held on Fourth-day evening of last week in Twelfth Street Meeting-house, Philadelphia, under a religious concern of John B. Garrett, for the spiritual welfare, faithfulness and loyalty to the Society and its mission, on the part of our younger members. It is trusted that permanent impressions for good were made.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AND THREE-AND-A-HALF MONTHS OLD—Eunice Gidley of whom we gave some account in No. 9 of the present volume, as reaching her one hundredth year on the 20th of last Eighth Month, has now passed away, as we learn by a telegram sent on the 14th instant by Job S. Gidley, her son—her funeral being held at Aponegansett, Mass., on Fourth-day last. We are since enabled to add one more testimony in verse from the store in her memory. For after a night of great distress, towards morning (of the 1st instant) she said to her daughter, "I want to express something of what is in my mind." Then she recited the following verses from Job Scott:—

Great God, thy name be blessed,
Thy goodness be adored,
My soul has been distressed,
But thou hast peace restored.

A thankful heart I feel,
In peace my mind is stayed;
Balsamic ointments heal
The wounds by sorrow made.

THE CENTENNIAL OF THE FRIENDS' MEETING HOUSE, FOURTH AND ARCH STREETS, PHILADELPHIA, SIXTH MONTH, 4th, 1901.—The Papers and Poem read at the interesting exercises held to commemorate the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Building of the Meeting House at Fourth and Arch Streets, have been published in a convenient volume, suitable for a souvenir of the occasion. It includes a number of rare portraits and pictures reproduced from originals and copies in the possession of George Vaux, Sarah Emelen and others, kindly loaned for this purpose. The book is published with the approval of the Committee in charge of the Celebration. It has been edited by Joshua L. Baily and Isaac Sharpless, and contains also an interesting introduction written by Isaac Sharpless.

A Limited Edition of only 500 numbered copies of this Memorial Volume is being printed and the type distributed. It will be necessary, therefore, for those wishing to secure copies to order now. Should the orders exceed the number printed, the publishers reserve the right to give preference to orders for single copies.

The John C. Winston Company, 1006-1016 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa., publish this work in a neat volume of 125 pages, at $1.00, postage 10 cents.

Notes in General.

The traffic in Chinese girls on the Pacific coast has been almost ended by the efforts of the women missionaries of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches.

A Southern correspondent wishes that we would revise our opinions on racial questions, on this ground: "All you know is the ethics, and the ethics is one thousand years ahead of the facts."—The Independent.

This country is not the United States, but the United States of America, says the Independent. There have been various United States, for example of Columbus, and we call the people Colombian, just as we call our people Americans. We did not assume the name Americans; it was given to us from England before the Revolution, and the people of no other country use it. They are Mexicans or Brazilians. The name "Usona" is not needed.

A little maid's view of the ethics of fiction writing was expressed the other day when the last of Ralph Henry Barbour's list of juvenile stories, "On Your Mark," was added to the row on the top of his desk. R. H. Barbour's niece came in to look at the new book. After inspecting it gravely for a moment she said, "Uncle, did you write that?"

"Yes, dear."
"And all the rest of those?"
"Yes."
"Well, did all those things happen to you?"
"No; I've dreamed and thought a great many of them."
"But uncle," said the little maiden solemnly, "do you think you ought to write them?"

THE CHEROKEE ADVOCATE.—With the passing of the tribal government of the Cherokee nation there will pass out of existence in the United States the Cherokee Advocate. This newspaper is probably the oldest west of the Mississippi River, having been established in 1841 by W. P. Ross, whose widow lives at Fort Gibson. The Advocate is a curiosity. It is printed half in English and half in Cherokee, the Cherokee side being printed in Cherokee characters. There are eighty-five characters in the Cherokee alphabet, and on that account the printer's case of type is quite different from that in English, and is quite a complicated affair. There are in the Cherokee nation only five printers who are able to set this Cherokee type for the newspaper. They are T. W. Foreman, Carl Starr, George Wofford, Joe Sequiche and D. E. Smallwood. These five have a greater monopoly than any union or trust, but they have never been known to strike.

Another peculiar feature about the Advocate is that its editor and manager never has to worry about how business keeps up. The paper is a national institution, and is supported by the nation, the council passing an appropriation every year for its support. The paper is distributed free to the full-blood Cherokees who cannot read English. There are 1000 copies sent to them every week. In addition to this, however, there are hundreds of copies sent out over the United States as a curiosity. This is the only publication that has ever been printed in Indian language using Indian characters. In the other nations of the five civilized tribes a good deal of matter of interest to Indians is published in the Indian language of that nation, but English characters are used.—Kansas City Journal.

DEFALCATIONS.—"What are the principal causes of the downfall of men who occupy positions of trust?" The president of the American Surety Co. says there are four in number: Speculation in Wall Street, betting on horse-races, high living, and dissipation. In the South card-playing is to be feared.

Charles H. Hall, superintendent of a fidelity insurance department in Boston, assigns as causes of breach of trust the following:—

Women, speculation, high living and expensive hobbies. Under the head of expensive hobbies he classes horses, yachts and things similar. Additional assigned causes by other insurers are speculation in stocks, produce, cotton, etc., intemperate habits, immoral associations, extravagance, due sometimes to the social aspirations of the employee's dependents; gambling, as at cards, on horse-races and the like; outstanding indebtedness, resulting in pressure from creditors; using employer's funds (but with present intent of only "borrowing" the same) to advance or protect the employee's interest in some outside business venture, intemperate habits, inadequate compensation, as compared with the cost of maintaining the employee and his dependents in comfort, especially during illness; the New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and New Orleans Cotton Market. The results of experience in many fields seem to indicate that rarely will an employee embezzle money in bulk and abscond. Nineteen defalcations out of twenty accumulate through a series of thefts extending back for weeks, months or years, according to whether the employer's method of supervision and audit of accounts has been prompt and efficient or lax and infrequent. If the supervision be inadequate and loose, the employee will soon recognize the fact and perhaps fall because of his opportunity to do so. Ninety per cent. of those who default originally get into trouble through mere moral weakness.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The Fifty-eighth Congress met in Washington on the 5th inst. for its third session. The Louisiana Purchase Exposition ended on the 1st inst. During the seven months it has been open it is said that it was attended by more than eighteen million people. The Women's Christian Temperance Union, lately meeting in Philadelphia, addressed an appeal to President Roosevelt urging him to use his influence "to carrying out treaties of our Government with the Indians concerning the sale of intoxicating liquors in Indian Territory, and that this prohibitory clause be inserted in the enabling act for the new States."

Dr. Wiley, of the United States Department of Agriculture, states that an order of the Department which goes into effect in 1905, provides that all food products imported into this country will be required to show on the labels of the message-layers in Indian Territory, and that this prohibitory clause be inserted in the enabling act for the new States."

In a report to the Governor of New Jersey by John R. Smith, State Entomologist, it is stated that little fish, commonly known as minnows, are nature's most effective check against the mosquito larva. The best method of checking this method of control is shown that draining and aerating of marshes are the most effective. The report devotes considerable space to the usefulness of repellents as oils and other materials need to destroy the mosquito in the early stages or the adult stages of his life.

A despatch from Washington says: The annual report of the general superintendent of the life-saving service shows that during the year assistance was rendered by the life-saving crews to 1061 vessels of all kinds, involving the lives of more than 3500 persons, and property to the value of nearly $7,000,000. The crews also rescued 103 persons not on board vessels from various perils to sea, and, through signal warnings of the beach patrols saved from possible disaster 161 vessels in danger of stranding.

From the annual report of the Commissioner General of Immigration for the year ending with Month 30th, it appears that the moral, intellectual and physical qualifications of the immigrants admitted to this country during the past year are higher than ever have been chronicled. The report says that in the past fiscal year 812,870 aliens arrived in the United States, of whom 649,100 were males and 263,770 females. As respects age, 199,150 were under fourteen years, 657,155 were between fourteen and forty-five and 46,565 were forty-five or over. Of the total number of admitted immigrants 168,903 could neither read nor write.

The visit of Secretary Taft to the isthmus of Panama for the purpose of settling the attitude of the United States toward that country and the United States. An executive order has been signed by Secretary Taft on behalf of the President, which provides that no trade for the canal zone or the republic of Panama can enter the ports established by the United States at either end of the canal, supplies for the construction of the canal and other matters, but with existing laws, except Panama agree to reduce her tariff. Absolute free trade is to apply between the canal zone and the republic of Panama. Some other concessions of minor importance were agreed upon, all of which has received the approval of President Amador of Panama.

By a late decision the New York State Court of Appeals has ruled that a constitutional prohibition which prohibits a contractor from employing his men more than eight hours a day on city, county or State work. In his conclusion the Chief Justice says: "I fear that the many organizations of labor organizations or of some of their members may have not only excited just indignation, but, at times, even frigate courts, but, as a result, the inconsistency and into the enactment of doctrines which, if asserted in litigation arising under any other subject than labor legislation, would meet scant courtesy or consideration."

The annual report of the Department of Agriculture shows large gains in many crops. The value of the products of the farm in 1904 is estimated at $4,900,000,000. This is 9.65 per cent. above the product of 1903 and 31.28 per cent. higher than for 1899. The corn crop of 1904 yielded 1,000,000 bushels more than for any other crop, valued for lint and seed at $600,000,000. The second, white hay and wheat contended for the third place. Potatoes and barley reached their highest production in 1904. The present crop of rice promises a yield of 900,000,000 pounds—300,000,000 more than ever before. Special efforts have been made to encourage the raising of sheep on the public schools. The Secretary has called attention to the rapid advances in agriculture, and notes the need for bright young men in this field, which he believes offers opportunities as great as in any other. More attention has been given to alfalfa in the eastern half of the United States in the past two years than to any other crop. Denmark has been the first country in the world where corn can be grown in almost every State in the Union.

FOREIGN.—The Zemtvo Memorial of the Czar of Russia has been strongly opposed by certain high officials who urge the maintenance of autocratic government. The Czar's decision in regard to the Memorial has not been announced.

Some Russian have captured fortifications overlooking Port Arthur, by desperate assaults continued for four days, accompanied with great loss of life on both sides. An organization of Jews has been formed in Copenhagen to assist the Russian Jews immigrating to America through Danish ports. Funds are being collected to facilitate their passage and give the emigrants a start in life on their arrival at their destination.

A despatch from St. Petersburg says: Russia has accepted the invitation of the United States to conclude an arbitration treaty on the lines of the American-French treaty. It is stated that this is the first arbitration treaty that Russia has signed with a foreign power.

A London writer estimates that a recent five days' fog inflicted a loss of $3,750,000 upon the metropolis. It is asserted that London burns more than 150,000,000 cubic feet of gas on a foggy day, "enough to supply a town of 50,000 inhabitants a whole year. Extra electric light is consumed to an extent equal to its ordinary use and oil, lamps and candles are used in extraordinary quantities."

The Zebra, the offspring of the zebra and the horse, is said to be immune from the ravages of tsetse-flies which in Africa has proved so deadly to the horse and the mule. It has also been found to be much stronger than the mule and as gentle as a horse, and is highly valued in Africa for draught purposes. It has the striped markings of the zebra and is regarded as a handsome animal.

A despatch from Washington says: "Russia is unwilling to join the Powers in a second peace conference at the Hague until her war with Japan is ended."

Another despatch says: "The Japanese Charge d'Affaires, informed Assistant Secretary Loomis that the Japanese Government had received the invitation of the American Government for a second conference at the Hague, and that the invitation would be promptly presented to the Diet. The intimation is that the proposition meets with Japanese favor."

It is stated that in the northern part of the State of Sinaloa in Mexico people are dying from hunger as well as from malaria. The deaths range from twenty-five to thirty. The authorities are unable to cope with the situation. Provisions have been scarce in northern Sinaloa for some time, due to the destruction of crops. The epidemic of malaria is due to these rains. Deaths from starvation and malaria are reported from the towns of Ahome, Mirador, Mochichil, Los Mochis, San Felipe and San Juan de los Rios.

The steps taken along the Mexican border to prevent the spread of yellow fever into this country by the United States authorities are reported to have been very successful. It has been accomplished largely by measures taken to isolate all patients suffering from the disease in rooms or beds provided with mosquito netting to reduce the number of mosquitoes. The work of mosquito extermination has been carried on along the Mexican border. The public health authorities of Mexico are co-operating with the United States authorities at the border quarantine service, and the danger of the introduction of the disease into the United States from Mexico is reported to be gradually decreasing.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 7. Received from James Hobson, Agent, Ireland, 75c; Ben Boswell for Henry Bell, Edw. Bell, Daniel Aloesch, Alfred Brayshaw, William S. Cole, John Douglas, Jay Duguid, Charles Eickow, Jane Green, Frances Green, M. Haughton, Charles B. Lamb, Susan Williams and William White.

Remittances received after Third-day noon will appear in the Receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

Hannah W. Williams is appointed Agent for The Friend Address, 425 Galena Avenue, Pasadena, Cal.

A young man Friend wishes a position to work of school hours, or would work for board and lodgings. Address "A." The Friend.

Haddonfield Quarterly Meeting will be held at Mootown, N. J., on Fifth-day, at 10 o'clock, at 10 o'clock, at 10 o'clock, at 10 o'clock, at 10 o'clock. A Trolley leaves Camden at 8:38 and 9:05 o'clock, run directly to the meeting-house in about fifty minutes.

Westtown Boarding School.—For conveyance of persons coming to Westtown School, the stage leaves Philadelphia 7:15 and 8:15 A. M., 2:50 and 4:32 P. M. Other trains are met when reaches Stage fare, fifteen cents; after 7:30 P. M., twenty cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, West Chester, Phone 1144.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY, Sup.

Friends Library, 142 N. Sixteenth St., Phila.

Open on week-days from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 7 P. M. to 9 P. M. Addresses: The Library: 142 N. Sixteenth St. Branches: R. R. - Routine and Ideals.

BURDICK, F. M.—Essentials of Business Law.

DWIGHT, E. A.—Memorials of Mary Wilder Wood 1780-1811.

FIELDS, Annie—Epics of Dudley Warner.

GENUNG, J. F.—Crate of the Inner Life.

HAYES, C. M.—Addresses: The Library: 142 N. Sixteenth St. Branches: R. R. - Routine and Ideals.

HENDERSON, E. F.—Short History of Germany, 2 vols.

KROES, J. F.—History of the United States. Vol. SCHIEBRAND, Wolf von.—America, Asia and the Pacific.

WOODBURN, J. A.—American Republic and its Government.

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 17, 1904.

No. 23.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

(South from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to
JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

A Public Mind.

William Penn has told us that they would serve the public must have public ends; else they will serve private ends at public cost.

There is a kind of public spirit which is really an intensely private spirit. One may come so habituated to living in the public eye—and a "public Friend," or a minister of the Gospel before the people, may incur this danger—that public notice and appreciation may become the prevailing element to which he attaches his sails, and the popular breath be blown in his sails as his vital air. This state of mind being together a degeneracy into selfishness, is really a private lust for publicity. Casting widely abroad indeed for its self-gratification, seeking its own ambition or notoriety and the public welfare, it is the opposite of a truly public spirit.

For a public spirit is a hearty interest in the individuals who make up the public. It is not an interest to live in the public eye; it is an appetite to have power over numbers, and to rejoice that spirits are made subject unto you; not that which would erect great public buildings as a monument to one's self; but an interest in the betterment of the people because one is a lover of mankind; a public mind that lives for the mind of the people, to see it elevated, broadened and blessed; not the selfish desire "to get on with the world," but, as it has been said, the desire "to do the world on."

The spirit which is sympathetic with mankind is the truly public spirit. Its apostle is in this world to say, "I seek not mine own, but you." It yearns for a partnership with mankind in a mutual benefit association. Its chief self in co-operation, it is among men and one that serveth. Social service may indeed be found an exaltation into social supremacy, but that is foreign to its motive. It may accept power as an engine for good, while dreading it as a risk of personal shipwreck. But its greatness consists in one's love to be a servant of human welfare. Greatness is to be measured by the conditions of others that one is large enough to take in.

The mind of Christ is eminently the public mind. William Penn had it, and it animated his holy experiment. It marks the difference between the first statesman of his Philadelphia and the latter day politicians. It makes civic responsibility a part of one's religion. It quickens the conscience to "live uprightly equally in our political, social and individual capacities." It would make our church conscience and civic conscience one. Public spirit life and true church life are the unity of one spirit and the bond of one peace. In both are we members one of another. For both there subsists one ideal: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." All truly co-operative interests among men centre in Him. While no professing church has ever yet had enough of his spirit rightly to be trusted to be the State, yet the ideal of the New Jerusalem will be reached when the State has become the Church.

May the truly Public Mind, the mind of Christ, more and more permeate the public counsels, till the leaven of his civic righteousness shall leaven the whole system. Christian men may hesitate to trust themselves to the present civic contagion as workers in the midst of it. But operating through some men that Spirit must be trusted within the lump of corruption, to clear up conditions for that day when it can be said, "The kingdom of this world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ."

NEARLY everything that has been doctrinally outgrown in Christian theology has been something that men have read into the Bible, instead of in the Bible. They have twisted the words of Scripture to correspond with their own preconceptions or prejudices. And the Bible is no more to blame for this than the civil law is to blame for certain misinterpretations that have gone for generations uncorrected. It is not in the recognition of modern light shining on the Bible, but of ancient light shining out of the Bible, that true Bible criticism, or rather Bible-appreciation, consists.—Forward.

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 17.)

In this year Joseph and Rebecca Battey, members of Stroudsburg Monthly Meeting, who had felt drawn to aid the natives, and were willing to reside at Tunesassa, offered their services to the Committee, and in the Tenth Month, 1836, they and Robert Scotten and Israel W. Morris, who were appointed to introduce them, arrived at Tunesassa. They were cordially received by the Indians; and thus after an interval of five years, a family of Friends, one of whom, Rebecca Battey, was desirous of instructing the Indian women, was again located on the farm adjoining the Reservation. Robert Scotten remained with them for several months. Israel W. Morris returned home after an absence of a few weeks. In the Sixth Month of this year another great flood had occurred in the Allegheny, in which the waters rose to nearly the same height as during the previous autumn, and great destruction to the crops of the Indians had followed. In an interview with some of their prominent men, this and other important subjects were thus alluded to in an address signed by the four Friends.

"Brothers, It has been so for two years, that freshets, high waters in your river, have overflowed your low ground and destroyed much of your labor. We advise you to clear off the timber on some of your high ground adjoining to the flats, and as is the custom with us to have both high grounds and low grounds to cultivate; but Brothers, if you take this our advice, it will be also to clear but two or three acres at a time, or not more than you can finish and clear off completely, so that what you do may be well done, and a little well done is better than much land with the trees cut down and then left lying and cumbering the ground.

"Now, Brothers, look back to time that is past, and see if the language of your friends the Quakers has not been the language of true men unto you, and whenever you have accepted it, you have found it so—they have always told you to leave off cutting down and selling your fine trees, and cultivate your good land; and in time to come we think you will be sorry, that in this you did not hear them.

"And, Brothers, they have advised you too, not to encourage the white people to come and live on your land; but we find them much increased among you, they are encouraged to do so in your selling to them your timber and hiring to them your houses. In former councils it has been advised, and we are concerned to repeat the advice, that men and their wives live together and be faithful to each other, educating and being good examples to their children, for this is acceptable to the Great Spirit, and unless we are faithful in our lives, we cannot expect his blessing to rest upon us."

The loss which the Indians had sustained by this freshet again appealed to the sympathy of Friends, and seven hundred and fifty dollars was shortly afterwards appropriated by the Committee for the purchase of corn, &c., for their relief.

In a communication from the chiefs of the Allegheny reservation dated Third Mo. 24th, 1837, addressed to the Committee they say: "Robert Scotten, now residing here, has brought and faithfully divided amongst us, provision for us and our children, which has been a great help to us, for which we are very thankful, believing the Great Spirit has sent our brothers to help us. We, the chiefs, all thought that we would send word to you on the subject of white people residing on Indian land. When Joseph Elkinton left here there were but a few on, but the whites kept coming on, and we the chiefs made contracts with the white people to live on our land; we have let out five mill privileges on the Allegheny River. We know that Robert Scotten was opposed to us doing so; we know it was wrong, that it will make difficulty before long, but we cannot keep our people from making contracts with the whites, but you may know that we will not sell our land and move to the West. We the chiefs want our brothers, the Quakers, to send a teacher to teach our children, when we get the school house built near Cold Spring. We will send word when we are ready. No more at present, but a wish you would write to us." (Signed by Black Snake, James Robinson, Tunis Halftown, William Patterson.)

This communication was followed a few months later by another from the chiefs, stating that "a strong effort had been made to induce them to part with their lands, and money had been placed in the hands of the U. S. Agent to bribe Indians to sign their names in favor of selling their land, and that Black Snake, one of the chiefs making this communication had been offered one thousand dollars for his name, which he refused," also that the Agent had selected nine chiefs to send as delegates to the West to see the land where they intend the Indians should move to, and desired the advice of the Committee upon the subject.

The important subject thus referred to, was one which for several years from this time, caused the deepest anxiety to these Indians and their friends. A proposed emigration to Green Bay had engaged their attention for the previous ten years, and unsettled the minds of many in different tribes. There had been during that period a general movement proposed which had for its object the removal of all the Indians in New York State to the neighborhood of Green Bay, Wisconsin, and which was promoted by three different but concurring influences: viz, that of the desire of the Stockbridge Indians to escape from the evils attending their present location; secondly, the efforts of Eleazar Williams and others to establish a community of Indian nations in that distant and sparsely settled country; and thirdly, the determination of the Ogden Land Company to find another home there for the Senecas, in order that this company might possess themselves of their valuable Reservations, which according to the laws of the United States they only had the right to buy, when the Indians were willing to sell them.

As regards the Stockbridge Indians, their desires were realized so far as a change of home was concerned, by a general removal to this distant region, as also was the case with some of the Brothertown Indians living near them. In the Twelfth Month, 1826, the neighborhood in which they lived in New York State was visited by Thomas Shillito, who records in his journal, "This settlement of the Stockbridge Indians we understood, had been of late years greatly reduced, nearly one thousand one hundred of them having emigrated to the west of this settlement, near Green Bay, in order that they might get out of the way of those temptations they found themselves exposed to by the increase of the white people amongst them; choosing rather to endure the deprivations they would have to meet with in a newly settled country, for the sake of that quietness and simplicity, which, from the conversation we had with some, who are now on the wing to take their departure, they consider to be most consistent with a truly religious life. They told us they had been to see the spot they were about to emigrate to, and appeared to rejoice at the prospect of the quiet they should enjoy with those gone before them. From the accounts given us, I could not doubt that the conduct of the white people towards this artless, and, unless first provoked to acts of violence, non-offending race of mankind had been injurious, by using every artifice to entice them to drink, until they became drunk, and then taking the advantage of them by getting possession of their lands. I marvel not at the expression of Red Jacket, the great chief of the Buffalo Indians, which, I have been well informed, was to this effect: "Whether the Great Spirit sent the white people amongst us or not, I cannot tell; but this I can tell—since they came amongst us they have taught us many bad practices which we never before were acquainted with." A sorrowful tale for a poor uneducated Indian to tell of any professing the Christian name!"

Through the influence of Eleazar Williams a body of several hundred Oneida Indians were induced to go to the neighborhood of Green Bay, but his plan of establishing a general place of refuge for different Indian tribes, though earnestly promoted by the Ogden Land Company, met with such opposition from the Menomenee Indians already there, and their friends, that it was finally abandoned, and after certain agreements had been reached in the years 1831 and 1832, the different tribes then in Wisconsin settled down upon the tracts which had been assigned to them, in a state of comparative tranquility. Albert E. Ellis, in an article in the collections of the Historical Society of Wisconsin, from which the account of these transactions has been condensed, remarks, however, "There was one interest, that of the land company, that was not appressed. As matters now stood, there was virtually no suitable home for such of the Western tribes in New York as occupied the reservations to which this company held the pre-emption right of purchase, and no prospect of their selling and removing West.

With the vast amount at stake, the large sums of money looked up in these prospective rights, it was not to be expected that the company would rest, or cease their exertion to purchase out and remove these Indians. A thousand plans were proposed and rejected till at length an attempt was made to induce them to remove to the Indian Territory, south west of the Missouri."

The beginnings of this attempt to remove them from this location were now to be made and acted on by the Indians and their friends. Upon considering the important information contained in the letters from the chiefs before referred to, it appeared proper that some members of the Committee should visit the Indians at this juncture, and ascertain the facts of the case more thoroughly and the feelings on the subject, in order that the Committee might more intelligently advise or assist them. Enoch Lewis and Joseph Elkinton, having expressed a willingness to perform this service, were furnished with a letter to the chiefs by a meeting held Tenth Month 27th, 1837, and a few days afterwards started on their journey.

These Friends had interviews with a number of the influential Indians, including Wm. Patterson, one of the company which a named Schermerborn had taken to the Indian Territory in the interest of the Ogden Land Company, to view the land which it was proposed to give to the New York Indians as the future home; and they also met with the chiefs in council. They ascertained that their Agents had used active efforts to induce them to comply with what he said was the wish of the Government, that they should sell the reservation and remove to the West; that the Indians had sent a communication to the President drawn up by Maris B. Pierce, stating that they did not wish to remove; they were satisfied with their present homes, where they can live comfortably, and that "We have meeting houses, council houses, saw mills, grist mills and cattle barns, wagons, &c. We are attached to our homes and desire to main on it. We are surrounded with white people with whom we are acquainted and peace. We wish to adhere to the old treaty."

This communication had been signed by the chiefs of the Six Nations, with the exception of the Tuscaroras, who refused to sign. Friends were also informed that attempts had been made to bribe all the influential chiefs but they had failed, and that Schermerborn had employed some of the Indians to obtain the consent of the women and intemperate young men to remove to the West. In the interview with the chiefs in council the Friends expressed their sympathy with them in their difficulties with which they were surrounded, and also their sentiments in regard to propositions which had been made to them, and told them that if they should come to a conclusion among themselves, in regard to these important matters, and should desire the advice of the Committee in regard to execution they believed it would be given them.

Upon their return to Philadelphia the Friends laid their condition before the Committee in a detailed report, in which they remarked, "It is affecting to behold or contemplate these feeble descendants of the po-

I tribes who were once the undisputed lords of the soil, imploring permission to repose in peace on their present scanty pittance of the extensive possessions which have been wrested from them, partly by violence, and partly by reluctant consent and for a very inadequate remuneration.

"In closing this report we shall take the liberty to observe, that from what we have seen and heard during this visit, we are decidedly of the sentiment that the preservation of these people from total extinction depends upon their retaining possession of the land they now live. The offers which were said to be made to them in the West, however flattering in appearance, present to our minds a very dreary prospect. They are probably less fitted for a removal to the wilds of the West, than they are when Friends commenced their labors among them. They have acquired too many of the wants, and too few of the habits of civilized life to be removed, without the most disastrous consequences, to an uncultivated idleness.

"It appears to us that our duty is a plain one. That we ought to exert such influence as we possess to induce them to hold fast their present possessions, to improve themselves and their land as rapidly as possible, and to become not only a civilized but a Christian community. If they should be induced to accede to the flattering offers which are so industriously presented to their view, it appears to us that a few more meeting-houses will join their name and memory with those which are no longer known except on the pages of a historian's page.

Upon considering this report of Enoch Lewis and Joseph Elkinton the Committee addressed to the Indians in a written communication dated the 18th, 1838, in which they related the advice given them twenty years previously, in regard to parting with their reservations, and removing to a new location, it also the importance of dividing their lands so as to hold them in severalty, as an important aid in retaining them; they also referred to some of the causes of anxiety felt in their account, viz: the leasing of their lands to white people, the neglect of properly cultivating it by some of their people and the use of intoxicating drinks, and again recommended to them the instruction of their children, and proper attention to the roads leading through their reservation, reminding them that the white people settled along the river both above and below them "must sometimes pass through your land as well as along the river. They will therefore wish to have roads fit to travel on; if they find your roads neglected they will be anxious to get you to have your places supplied by more industrious people."

(To be continued.)

THE humble meek, merciful, just, pious and devout souls are everywhere of one religion, and when death has taken off the mask they all know one another, though the diverse series they wear here make them strangers. Penn's Maxims.

Not only teach the children, but govern them, and in order to govern them, govern ourselves.—James Hamilton.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Closed Meeting-House.

My attention was lately called to a "closed Meeting-house" in New Hampshire, where, fifty years ago, was a little Friends' meeting. It was an old-fashioned Friends' meeting-house, standing on a hill-side, overlooking a beautiful village of three churches, three stores, an academy and hotel with a population of perhaps four hundred. At one end of the house and a little in the rear was a long shed for horses in stormy weather. For furniture within were rows of long seats with raised rails for backs, with a "high seat" and "facing seat" in front. There was an aisle through the middle, on one side of which sat the men and on the other the women. The stove in the centre was a pot-ash iron kettle, inverted and set on a circular brick wall high enough for a hearth, to protect the floor, and a sheet-iron door to receive the wood. All was plain wood, without cushion or carpet or paint. There were about a dozen families belonging to the meeting, scattered among the hills, from one to ten or twelve miles apart.

Our home was eight miles from the meeting, over a road, up and down hill all the way. Twice in the week, summer and winter, the team was harnessed at nine o'clock, and we rode that eight miles to the meeting-house, to meet other teams coming in from other directions, and sit down with from twelve to twenty, an hour or more, on those bare, uncushioned seats. There were two ministers, a man and a woman, who, with the elders, occupied the "high seat" as heads of the meeting. One or other of the ministers frequently spoke or offered prayer, and a few words were spoken by others, but there was always a long period of silence and hush of such stillness that the least sound could have been heard before a word was spoken, and sometimes the entire meeting was held in silence. I never heard singing in that house and the sermons were not long, but always in the life and no sermons ever heard since, however eloquent or learned, have impressed me like some I heard in those meetings, which have influenced all my life, and are as vivid in memory still as when I heard them in my youth. That meeting-house seemed a Bethel to me, and I grew to look forward to meeting-day with as much interest and longing as the hungry boy looks for his noon-day meal. Those ministers and elders and older members one by one died, and most of the younger members moved away.

I am not familiar with the history of all who remained in the East, but among those who moved West, seven became recorded ministers of the Gospel and with others were instrumental in building up large meetings in four States. One with his wife were many years principals in a Friends' academy, and others taught in public schools. One with her companion were superintendents in Government Schools among the Indians during three Presidential terms. Three were Yearly Meeting clerks. The nucleus around which have gathered members of eleven Yearly and two Continental meetings, and incorporated as "College Park Association of Friends," which has just held its thirty-first semi-annual meeting, in which were present twelve ministers, representing seven religious denominations and two universities, came out of that meeting.

Coming down to the next generation, I recall influential ministers in two Yearly Meetings. The principal of the Friends' School at Providence, the president of Whittier College, the president of the board of trustees of Pacific College, and the wife of one of the professors in Penn College, are children of parents who grew up in that meeting. One with her husband are principals of a large Government school in the Sandwich Islands, exerting an influence upon a generation of children, that will be felt in the islands in all the future. One is a bank president and member of the State Legislature. One is teller in another bank, and others have official positions in San Francisco and the State Capital. Others have been presidents of the W. C. T. U., and influential workers in the Y. M. C. A., and other associations of reform in seven Western States.

Children of the next generation are now being educated in Whittier College, Stanford University, Pacific College, Penn College, Westtown and other schools, who will perpetuate the principles and teachings which have come down to them through those who grew up and worshipped in that meeting.

A tree may grow old and die, but the life of that tree entered into its fruit, which takes root in other soil, and other trees grow from it. The life of the first kernel of corn lives in the blade upon which is now ripening the "full corn in the ear," to be again planted and each kernel to bring forth its hundred-fold, wherever corn is grown.

The old meeting-house still stands on the hill-side, overlooking the beautiful village, where it has stood a hundred years, but it is "closed." Many who toiled on rock farms and worshipped in it lie in the graveyard across the road, enclosed with a half buried, moss covered stone wall, and overgrown with grass, but the influence of their lives, entered into other lives, and has gone out into the world, permeating many lands and the islands of the sea; and the world is richer and better, and ever will be for the lives, example and influence of those who three generations ago, met together and worshipped often in silence in the now closed meeting-house.

How many modern "Friends' Churches," with their pastors, organs, choir choirs and music, will leave a better record?

JAMES BEAN.

COLLEGE PARK, San Jose, Cal., Eleventh Month, 1904.

AN ASPIRATION BY THOMAS A. KEMPIS.—Behold, the care of food and raiment, which it is difficult to separate from vain decoration, and the indulgence of the sensual appetite, is grievous and burdensome to a fervent spirit! Grant me grace, therefore, to use all things pertaining to the body with moderation; and not anxiously to desire the possession of them, nor bitterly lament the want. To cast all away, the law of nature does not permit; for nature must be sustained; but to desire superfluity and that which ministers to delight more than to use, thy holy law forbids, lest the flesh should grow insolent, and rebel against the Spirit. In all these difficult and dangerous paths let thy wisdom and power direct me, that I may not deviate to the right hand nor to the left!

The Ministry of the Spirit.

(Concluded from page 172.)

I shall conclude this account with a few words to those . . . into whose hands this may come . . .

Friends, as you are the sons and daughters of Adam, and my brethren after the flesh, often and earnest have been my desires and prayers to God on your behalf, that you may come to know your Creator to be your Redeemer and Restorer . . . by the power and Spirit of his Son Jesus Christ, whom He hath given for the light and life of the world. . . .

I beseech you ponder with yourselves your eternal condition, and see what title, what ground and foundation you have for your Christianity; if more than a profession, and an historical belief of the Gospel. Have you known the baptism of fire, and the Holy Ghost, and the fan of Christ that winnows away the chaff in your minds, and carnal lusts and affections? that divine leavens of the kingdom, that, being received, leavens the whole lump of man, sanctifying him throughout in body, soul and spirit? If this be not the ground of your confidence you are in a miserable estate. . . .

Let me entreat you not to deceive yourselves in so important a point, as is that of your immortal souls. If you have true faith in Christ, your faith will make you clean; it will sanctify you; for the saints' faith was their victory of old. By this they overcame sin within and sinful men without. And if thou art in Christ thou walkest not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, whose fruits are manifest. Yea thou art a new creature; new made, new fashioned, after God's will and mould. Old things are done away, and behold, all things are become new; new love, desires, will, affections and practices. It is not any longer thou that livest, thou disobedient, carnal, worldly one; but it is Christ that liveth in thee; and to live is Christ, and to die is thy eternal gain; because thou art assured that thy corruptible shall put on incorruption, and thy mortal, immortality, and that thou hast a glorious house, eternal in the heavens, that will never wax old or pass away. All this follows being in Christ, as heat follows fire, and light the sun.

Therefore have a care how you presume to rely upon such a notion, as that you are in Christ, whilst in your old fallen nature. For what communion hath light with darkness, or Christ with Belial? Hear what the beloved disciple tells you: "If we say we have fellowship with God, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth." That is if we go on in a sinful way, and are captivated by our carnal affections, and are not converted to God, we walk in darkness, and cannot possibly in that state have any fellowship with God. Christ clothes them with his righteousness that receive his grace in their hearts, and deny themselves, and take up his cross daily and follow Him. Christ's righteousness makes men inwardly holy; of holy minds, wills and practices. It is not the less Christ's because we have it; for it is ours, not by nature, but by faith and adoption. It is the gift of God, . . .

Yea it is ours, and must be ours in possession, efficacy and enjoyment, to do us any good; or Christ's righteousness will profit us nothing. It was after this manner that he was made to the primitive Christians, righteousness, sanctification, justification and redemption; and if ever you will have the comfort of the Christian religion, thus you must come to learn and obtain it.

Now my friends . . . you may perceive that God has visited a people among you with this saving knowledge and testimony; whom he has upheld and increased to this day, notwithstanding the fierce opposition they have met withal. Despise not the meanness of this appearance. It was . . . a day of small things, and of small account with too many; and many hard and ill names are given to it. But it is of God; it came from Him because it leads to Him. This we know, but we cannot make another to know it, unless he will take the same way to know it that we took. The world talks of God, but what do they do? They pray for power, but reject the principle in which it is. If you would know God and worship and serve God as you should do, you must come to the means He has ordained and given for that purpose. Some seek it in books, some in learned men, but what they look for is in themselves, though not of themselves, but they overlook it. The voice is too still, the seed too small, and the light shineth in darkness. . . . But the woman that lost her silver, found it at home, after she had lighted her candle and swept her house. Do you so too, and you shall find what Pilate wanted to know, namely Truth: truth in the inward parts, so valuable in the sight of God. The light of Christ within, who is the light of the world (and so a light to you, that tells you the truth of all your condition), leads all that take heed unto it, out of darkness into God's marvellous light. For light grows upon the obedient; it is "sown for the righteous," and their way is a shining light, that shines forth more and more, unto the perfect day.

Wherefore O Friends, turn in, turn in, I beseech you. . . . There you want Christ, and there you must find Him; and blessed be God, there you may find Him. Seek and you shall find, I testify for God. But then you must seek aright, with your whole heart, as men that seek for their lives, yea, for their eternal lives; diligently, humbly, patiently, as those that can take no pleasure, comfort or satisfaction in anything else. . . . Oh, it is a travail, a spiritual travail, let the carnal, profane world think and say as it will. And through this path you must walk to the city of God, that has eternal foundations, if ever you will come there.

Well, and what does this blessed light do for you? Why, first, it sets all your sins in order before you; it detects the spirit of this world in all its baits and allurements, and shows how man came to fall from God, and the fallen estate he is in. Secondly, it begets a sense and sorrow, in such as believe in it, for this fearful lapse. You will then see Him distinctly whom you have pierced, and all the blows and wounds you have given Him by your disobedience . . . and you will weep and mourn for it, and your sorrow will be a godly sorrow.

Thirdly, after this it will bring you to the holy watch, to take care that you do so no more, and that the enemy surprise you not again. Then thoughts as well as words and works, will come to judgment; which is the way to holiness, in which the redeemed of the Lord do walk. Here you will come to love God above all, and your neighbors as yourself. Nothing hurts, nothing harms, nothing makes afraid on this holy mountain. Now you come to be Christ's indeed; for you are his in nature and spirit, and not your own. An when you are thus Christ's, then Christ is yours, and not before. And here communion with the Father, and with the Son you will know, and the efficacy of the blood of cleansing, even the blood of Jesus Christ, that immaculate Lamb, which speaks better things than the blood of Abel; and which cleanseth from all sin the consciousness of those that through the living faith, come to be sprinkled with from dead works, to serve the living God.

To conclude, behold the testimony and doctrine of the people called Quakers! Behold their practice and discipline! And behold their man and men . . . that were sent to God in this excellent work and service! Which is more particularly expressed in the Annals of that man of God, which I do heartily recommend to my readers' most serious perusal; and beseech Almighty God, that His blessing may go along with both, to the conviction of many, as yet strangers to the holy dispensation; and also to the edification of God's church in general, who for his manifold and repeated mercies and blessings to His people, in this day of his great love, is worthy ever to have the glory, honor, thanksgiving, and renown; and be it rendered and ascribed with fear and reverence, through him in whom he is well pleased, his beloved Son and Law, our light and life, that sits with Him upon the throne, world without end. Amen, says that God has long since mercifully favored with his fatherly visitation, and who was not disobedient to the heavenly vision and call; whom the way of Truth is more lovely than precious than ever, and who, knowing the beauty and benefit of it above all worldly treasures, has chosen it for its chiefest; and therefore recommends it to thy love and choice, because he is with great sincerity of affection,

Thy soul's Friend,
WILLIAM PENN

FOR THE FRIEND

A MESSENGER OF REST.—One warm and late in summer, a couple of elderly people oppressed and anxious. It was a little after midnight. They were wide-awake and denied with thoughts that centered upon a dear to them who was in a distant city. The air was sultry, and had but little vitality, oppressive; but a spirit burdened with doubt and fear was the hardest to bear.

Suddenly, delicious notes of melody, sweet and entrancing, floated in from a remote to the open window. The father soothed and tranquilized and drops asleep. The more anxious mother was arrested and not relieved. Then, fresh notes of the liquid sweetness were warbled,—this suffering. The mother's anxiety was wafled away, the calmness of faith came, all perplexing thoughts were overcome, the eye-lids drooped, but slumber followed.

On the dawn of day an oriole lit on a window-sill, looked in on them and flitted away. A poetic event, not a fancy, dream or vision—a reality.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever"

TEMPERANCE.

The matter under this heading is furnished THE FRIEND on behalf of the "Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia," by Benjamin F. Whitson, 401 Chestnut St., Phila.

Thoughts that great hearts once broke for, we Breathe cheaply in the common air;
The dust we trample heedlessly
Throbbed once in saints and heroes rare,
Who perished, opening for the race
New pathways to the commonplace.

—James Russell Lowell.

"Prophetic souls see visions that are so possible to be realized in their time as to seem ridiculous to the crowd. This waiting the sweat-box that tries the temper of us."

If the reader does not remember distinctly an article in this column last month beginning, "To them that love God, all things for God work together," we desire that he or she review the same carefully and prayerfully, and teach the sentiment thereof to others. The times are ripe for successful co-operation ways that need involve no compromise of principle.

"The future success of the Prohibition party depends on such a reorganization of its forces as shall make the voting precinct, instead of national headquarters, the unit of strength. Other words, we must build our house from the foundation upward, (American plan) instead of from the roof downward, as do the Socialists."—Silas C. Swallow.

"There is absolutely no conflict in the demands of the Prohibition party and the Anti-Saloon League."—John G. Wooley.

A beautiful example of the co-operative spirit appeared in the recent Anti-Saloon League convention in Columbus, Ohio. There Methodists, Catholics, "A. P. A.'s," Quakers, Unitarians, Presbyterians, Baptists, Democrats, Republicans, party Prohibitionists, Mugwumps, Populists lived together for a week without the slightest symptom of a fight.

It was a religious gathering without the slightest pretext of agreement on theology. It was a political gathering without any agreement on politics.

They did not agree even on the liquor question in all its phases. They met all were in absolute agreement on the position "THE SALOON MUST GO." And instead of firing political and theological bricks at each other, they sat and planned for schemes to make it go. These schemes involved agitation, local-option campaigns, law-suits, work in the legislature, and cooperation with the Prohibition party.

The door is wide open for a new era for the Prohibition party, and the indications are that the party is proving itself large enough to step up the idea.

There are enough enemies of the saloon in America to drive the liquor shop into the sea. We need a spirit of mutual confidence and cooperation even more than we need additional Prohibitionists.—New Voice.

The spirit of co-operation was also manifested in a beautiful manner at the recent convention of the W. C. T. U. held in Philadelphia. On the evening of Twelfth Month 2nd harmonious addresses were given by Anna H. Shaw (an ordained minister) on behalf of the Union, by Edwin C. Dinwiddie, of the Anti-Saloon League, and by Silas C. Swallow, recently the presidential nominee of the Prohibition party.

MOVEMENT FOR LOCAL OPTION.—It is time that every church in Pennsylvania were awake to the fact that there is an agency at work in the State that has unlimited possibilities in bringing about temperance reform.

It is larger than any church because it is the union of all churches against the saloon. It is greater than any political party, because it is utilizing the righteous elements of all political parties in the endeavor to secure better legislation. Legislation that will enable the people of every community to determine the question of the sale of liquors. Without this, temperance efforts must of necessity be limited. With it, we will at once have the basis of increased and effective warfare upon the saloon.

For the next three months, let our friends talk about local option. Let the ministers [do their duty] about it. Let Ministerial Associations and church boards pass resolutions favoring it. Let public meetings be held advocating it. Write to the local press about it. See your Senators and Representatives about it. Later, respond favorably to the appeals for petitions concerning it. Finally, let us pray about it, and all get in line to secure it next winter at the Legislature. Will we do it?—Keystone Citizen.

Under local option in Ohio, five counties, twelve county seats, three cities, 473 villages and more than 1,000 townships are dry.

"Something must be done to check the work of the Anti-Saloon League, or every saloon in America will be closed inside of five years."—Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Gazette.

The Prohibition vote as polled at the recent Presidential election is given by the New Voice as 257,405. This is the largest vote ever polled by the party, except in 1892, when it was 267,480. The vote in 1900 was 209,552. Twenty-four States appear to show a decided gain over the previous election, but most of the Southern States show a marked falling off. Six States had no electoral ticket on the ballot.

Among the various resolutions adopted at the recent convention of the Anti-Saloon League are the following, which we especially commend to the notice of all readers of THE FRIEND: If later any of you should feel disposed to address your representatives in Congress on these subjects, or should be asked by the League to do so, we hope you will respond promptly and to the point.

Prohibition in Indian Territory.—"For seventy-two years the United States Government has prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors in Indian Territory; and in the agreements recently entered into with the Five Civilized Tribes looking toward the allotment of lands in severalty, one of the conditions upon which the Indians consented to the extinguishment of their tribal governments and to the admission of the white man to equal privileges of citizenship was expressly stipulated as follows: 'The United States agrees to maintain strict laws . . . against the introduction, sale, barter, or giving away of liquors and intoxicants of any kind or quality.'

"The statehood bill, commonly known as the Hamilton bill, now pending before the Senate of the United States after passing the House of Representatives, makes no provision for the fulfillment of this sacred pledge.

"The National Convention of the American Anti-Saloon League, assembled at Columbus, Ohio, this 18th day of November, 1904, respectfully invites the attention of the Senate of the United States to the said omission, and most earnestly urges the Congress to fulfil our solemn treaty obligation to these tribes by provision for the Prohibition of the liquor traffic in the enabling act for the admission of the new State."

The Army Canteen.—"Certain officers of the army have reported that 'saloons and low dives' have sprung up about military posts since the abolition of beer and other intoxicants from the canteen, conveying the impression to the general public that 'saloons and low dives' did not exist in the vicinity of army posts during the selling of intoxicants in the canteen, while it is of common knowledge that 'saloons and low dives' did exist in the vicinity of many military posts before the abolition of this feature of the canteen, and that their presence in the neighborhood of army posts is not the result of the abolition of this feature; and since such officers in their reports deplore the elimination of the soldiers' club by the passage of the law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, we call attention to the fact that the law does not prohibit clubs or other associations of soldiers designed to promote their happiness and contentment.

"We deplore the lack of co-operation of army officers in the establishment of post canteens where the men may congregate and where common necessities may be purchased, and where entertaining recreations may be enjoyed by the men, free from the debauching influences of drink and gambling, and for which post exchanges with proper accessories for recreation Congress has already appropriated a million and a half dollars, for which it derives and, we believe, has the sincere gratitude of all who are interested in the moral and physical welfare of the men in the army."

Interstate Commerce.—"We earnestly favor the passage by Congress of the so-called Hepburn-Doolittle bill in such form as shall effectively secure to the States the power to control the liquor traffic within their own boundaries in their own way, unhampered from without under the guise of interstate commerce.

"We earnestly and respectfully call upon Congress to pass this just and necessary measure during the present Congress and urge our constituent bodies, the churches and temperance organizations over all the country, to use all their influence and powers to that end."

$5,000 DAMAGES FROM BREWERY. — Mrs. William D. Reneer has obtained a verdict for $5,000 damages against a brewing firm. Her husband shot and killed C. T. Oathout and James Burchett, Sixth Month 3rd, 1900, and is now serving a life term in the penitentiary. The shooting was the result of trouble while the men were drinking a keg of beer near the brewery.

Mrs. Reneer alleged that the bear came from the brewery and that it led to the tragedy which resulted in her husband being sent to the penitentiary; that she was therefore deprived of his support and was entitled to damages.—New Voice.

THE WOMAN'S ARMY AND NAVY LEAGUE is an organization of about 800 women, mostly wives, widows or daughters of officers of the regular army and navy.

The public press has been giving considerable space to the efforts of this body to re-establish the army canteen. Such action is not surprising when we consider the large financial gain made possible to army officers by the sale of liquors in the army or navy posts.

The competition amongst brewers would at least be a powerful incentive to bribery in the getting of contracts for liquors. There is reason to believe that such methods would be employed.

John Ruskin said the liquor system was "one of the most criminal methods of assassination for money ever adopted . . . by any age or nation."

In this connection, Issue readers will remember that Dr. B. H. Warren, pure-food commissioner of Pennsylvania, has made a startling discovery regarding the cheap grades of whiskey sold all over the State. He says: "I have discovered by analysis that most of the cheap whiskey sold in Pennsylvania is manufactured from wood alcohol and red or India pepper, the latter element giving the deadly dose the desired 'snap.' I was astounded when the chemists informed me of the findings in a number of cases, and immediately had over one thousand samples taken up all over the State. Ninety-five per cent. of the samples so far examined have shown the presence of wood alcohol in poisonous quantities, along with the pepper. Some samples contained arsenic, turpentine and traces of prussic acid."

Dr. Warren reports that he has instituted proceedings in over a hundred cases where this wood alcohol whiskey has been sold. From present indications, he thinks he has over a thousand instances on hand, and that before the investigation is completed he may discover above five thousand. He reports that eighty-five per cent. of all whiskey in Pennsylvania is doctored with wood alcohol. "No wonder," he says, "that our asylums are full."—American Issue.

CONTENT not yourselves with a birth in the Society, but seek to secure a birthright in the Truth, without which the first will not avail you in the sight of God.—J. Phipps.

To hear, to understand, and to bring forth fruit, are the grand evidences of a genuine believer.—A. Clark.

Bird Migration.

BY R. F. SHARPLES.

The season when the migratory birds begin their long journey to their Winter homes is now upon us, and every night a countless host of this vast army passes over West Chester. There are probably about two hundred and fifty species of birds in Chester county, and they do not all leave us at once; neither do all of them go to the same place in the southland. Some, like our friendly little robin and the useful blackbird, go but a few miles to Delaware or Virginia, while there are others which wing their way clear to Patagonia.

No reasonable reason can be assigned as a cause for the migration of birds. It is not scarcity of food, for insects and seeds were never more plentiful than now. It is not inclement weather, for the robins of Canada will go no further south than Pennsylvania, while our Pennsylvania robins may go to Virginia. Another strange fact in connection with this is that the Southern territory is depleted of its native robins before the Northern ones take their place for the Winter sojourn.

Practically all that we do know in this line is that there is an ever surging tide of birds up and down the country, each following its own particular path of migration as closely as if it were fenced in along the ground. How do they find their way over the thousands of miles which some of them travel? Those migrating in the day time are undoubtedly aided by the sight, for they never fly above the cloud, but keep close to the ground on cloudy days. With the many species migrating at night it is a different matter, however, and it seems as if they were aided by some sense above human ken—the sense which brings a horse or cat back straight to its home, though it has never seen the road before. In migrating birds will make a single flight of seven hundred to a thousand miles across the Gulf of Mexico or the Caribbean Sea, when it would lengthen their journey but little to skirt around the shore through Texas. Some species pass in their migration from one West Indian Island to another, where conditions make it impossible for them to be guided by sight, but they never swerve from the correct line.

Our jovial little bobolink, or, as he is also known, the reed bird and rice bird, goes away north of us to raise the little family. In the Spring time he comes with a joyous melody of song, and clothed in his black and white suit of sharp contrasting colors. Then off to the Canadian meadows he goes. Now he is with us again, this time in suit of inconspicuous brown, and any afternoon can be found in company with small flocks of his kind along the Brandywine feeding on the ripened grass seeds. In a few days he will go to the South Carolina rice fields to spend a short season on feasting. Then the bobolink hordes will gather together some evening, rise high in the air, and make a single flight of five hundred miles across the ocean on their way to their Winter home, in the waving pampas of Brazil.

Every boy knows by sight our nighthawk, twisting in erratic flight over the town of evenings, and stuffing himself with mosquitoes and other noxi us flying insects. This same nighthawk has already started on his long race horse journey to Patagonia, impelled by some unknown force that drives him on and onward for eight thousand miles before his restless desire is appeased. His near cousin, the chimney bird, is a curiosity. Thousands of chimney birds skim over West Chester every night, but nobody sees them alight. If one gets on to the ground it is doomed. Its wings are so long and clumsy that it can not get them into play again, and it perishes miserably. Its only resting place is the upright side of a chimney, or the interior cavity of a hollow tree. About this time of year these birds gather in great flocks of thousands, and a night approaches they can be seen swooping into some favorite chimney in such numbers that the observer wonders if it is not packed full from top to bottom. Some evening, possibly within a week or two, the chimney birds may be observed mounting higher and higher into the air as darkness steals over the country. Then in the morning no one will be found. All have started for their Southern home. In the morning the innumerable throng is on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, where it spends a few days. Then again it disappears, and for five months no man knows where it makes a Winter home. A generation ago it was a universal belief that the chimney bird hibernated in mud at the bottom of ponds during the Winter months, but such a statement would now be received with ridicule.

Still more mysterious are the movements of the little gray bank swallow. In summer time it is everywhere, even to the Arctic circle. In September this innumerable horde gathers about the Chesapeake Bay, and every fence and tree and telegraph wire is alive with them, and then they, too, pass out of the range of human knowledge, and no one knows the route or the destination of this strange journey. In April they appear in Northern South America moving north, but where they came from is not been discovered.

These long journeys do not appear to tire the birds. When crossing great stretches of water they will sometimes fly for hundreds of miles inland before alighting. They go, and on, impelled by some unknown force, a journey the object of which man has no progress toward solving.

One of the curiosities of migration has recently been noted by the United States Agricultural Bureau. Our gunners are well acquainted with the American golden plover. In the first week of June it arrives at its breeding grounds in the bleak wind-swept "Barren Grounds" above the Arctic Circle, far beyond the tundra line. Some even venture a thousand miles further north. By August they have reared their young and are down in Labrador feasting on the crowberries. Soon they become as butter balls, and are ready for the grilling. They have reared their young up to the midnight sun, and now seek the South Hemisphere. After gaining the coast of New Scotia, they strike straight out to sea, take a direct course for the easternmost of West India Islands, eighteen hundred miles away. The only land along the route is the Bermudas, eight hundred miles distant, a fair weather the birds fly past the Bermudas without stopping. When they sight the land of the Antilles the flocks do not pause but keep on to the larger islands, and sometimes even to the mainland of South America.

few short stops may be made in the main flight, for the plover swims lightly and easily, though fast when they leave Labrador the birds light lean and hungry in the Antilles. Only the first half of their journey is over. How many days it occupies is not known, though it is as kept up night and day. After a few weeks' rest the flocks again disappear, and we next seen in the prairie regions of Brazil, Argentina and south to Patagonia. Here they remain from September to March free from responsibilities of the northern summer have left. The native birds of Argentina are at the time engrossed in family cares, but they wayfarer from the North rests in the South. After a six months' vacation the plovers start back for the Arctic Circle, but not by the same course. Their full northward route is a problem still unsolved. But what a journey! Eight thousand miles of latitude separate the extremes of their elliptical course, and three thousand miles of longitude constitutes the outer diameter, and all for the sake of spending ten weeks on an Arctic coast.—West Chester Local News.

Items Concerning the Society.

Thomas H. Whitson has been liberated by Birmingham Monthly Meeting, Pa., for religious service in the meetings of Philadelphia Quarterly meeting.

The alumni of Friends' Select School of Philadelphia met on Sixth-day evening, the 9th instant, and were ably addressed by Prof. Wm. Birdsall on the Responsibility of Culture.

Eliza H. Varney, with a companion, left Woodstock, N. C., last week to attend the funeral of one Miss Gidley at Aponegansett, Mass. (the mother of Job S. Gidley, of North Dartmouth), whose death, a three and a half months past her one hundredth year, has already been published. On reaching New York City, the prospect appeared that they would not be able to reach Dartmouth at the appointed time of the funeral.

FRIENDS' ALMANAC AND THE CALENDAR.—In other column will be found the annual notice of publication and price of the Friends' Card Calendar and the Moral Almanac.

Owing to the steadily increasing demand for the Calendar, and the fact that last year the edition was insufficient to supply all who desired them, a quantity considerably larger than ever before published has been printed. If the same concern which so manifest last year of sharing with others good things contained in both the Calendar and the Almanac is participated in this year, it is to be unlikely that much of a surplus will be left in the hands of the Tract Association. "It is more used to give than to receive."

And if every Friend's home has a silent testimony giving on its walls, and a living testimony in the hearts, presenting a real testimony in the mouths to its inmates, to uphold the Scriptural designation of the days and the months, and thus, effectively without giving offense, condemn a perpetuation of idol-worship, would not our light shine a little brighter and we be a little more as a city on a hill?

THE FRIEND of Eighth Month 20th, 1904, carried the obituary notice of David Edgerton, who passed the first of Sixth Month, 1904.

It may be interesting to many readers of THE FRIEND, especially to those who knew this aged couple, that on the first of Fifth Month, 1904, he and his wife, Esther Edgerton, passed the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage.

They were both in good health at that time, and enjoyed the company of about sixty relatives and friends. Among these were their five surviving children—Anna Edgerton DeWees, Robert and Sarah Edgerton, Ella Edgerton Parker and Charles Edgerton. David Edgerton was born in 1817, and was past eighty-seven years of age. His mother, Anne Conroy, lived to be eighty-four, while three of his sisters, Rachel E. Patterson, Abigail Vail and Mary Kennard, have life records almost as long as that of their mother.

Esther Edgerton, whose maiden name was Elyson, is past eighty-four. She is the eldest of nine children, all of whom are living at this time, except one. The average age of this family is over seventy-eight years.

One month after this happy event, death severed the union.

"Just at the landing they missed one another; God parted them—the father and the mother."

DEBORAH P. LOWRY.

PHILADELPHIA, Twelfth Month 9th, 1904.

Notes in General.

Temple College, Philadelphia, has conferred the degree of doctor of divinity on Charles Wagner. Will the champion of the simple life care for it?—Boston Transcript.

Prince Fushimi, who is visiting in this country, announces that there is a likelihood that Japan will, in the next few years, adopt our Roman alphabet. At present Japanese is written in Chinese characters, generally a different one for every idea,—or else in a species of syllabary of their own, a briefer and cursive script which the Chinese cannot read.

"We have no doubt," says the Christian Advocate, "that many professed Christians decline to give to objects to which they should give, and there are some who pass through life accumulating immense sums, always pleading poverty, and when they die leave a vast fortune, often to be fought over; or, in case it makes no controversy, to enervate their descendants for a generation or two."

In answer to the report that Bishop McCabe advises all Methodists who do not believe in the divinity of Christ to join the Unitarians, the Christian Register says: "But certainly Unitarians have no use for a man who denies the divinity of Christ. Rev. H. M. Simmons, one of our most radical preachers, has shown that this is the foundation stone of our faith. Denial of the deity of Jesus would be a different matter."

"It is not his," says the Presbyterian of the minister, "to heap up earthly riches, but heavenly. To him is given a joy of service and a reward of effort that are peculiar and blessed. There is a sense of satisfaction in spiritual ministry that the world can neither give nor take away. He who is true and loving and in sympathy with his Master's call and kingdom finds that his sacrifices, hardship and work are not in vain but are accompanied by corresponding grace, solace and recompense."

The record of crimes of violence in South Carolina has been published by a Charleston paper and it is impressive. It covers 32 out of 41 counties, and the ten months of this year. There are recorded 160 homicides, or five to a county, or about one homicide every other day. No white man was convicted of murder and sentenced to death, but eight were convicted of manslaughter and 16 acquitted. Two negroes were convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged; several others convicted of murder were recommended to mercy, and 20 convicted of manslaughter. In many cases no arrests were made.

In the district of Wan-hien, the province of Szechuen, China, there was a terrible drought. No rain fell for thirty-one days, at just the time when rice was to be transplanted. Famine stared the people in the face. They prayed, they fasted from meat, fowls, eggs; they made vows, but still no rain. At last they decided that the anger of the gods was for some sin, and concluded that it was for the sin of growing opium. Thereupon they all agreed to grow no more opium. They gathered and burnt before the idols all their poppy-seed. They signed their words each with his own blood. Then the rain came, says The Independent.

EXAGGERATION.—A German statistician who has employed his leisure time in jotting down from day to day the casualties in the Russo-Japanese war, according to Russian and Japanese accounts, has recently added them up and finds that there have been 5,778,800 soldiers killed or wounded on the Japanese side, while the Russians have lost 4,297,700. As in this estimate the number of casualties on either side far exceeds the whole number of all the soldiers on both sides, the discrepancy between the accounts and the facts is obvious. The reports which reach America also would seem to justify these footings, the extravagance of which show the untrustworthiness of the daily estimates which come to us.

THE NEED OF A RETURN TO SIMPLICITY.—Rabbi Krukopf, a celebrated rabbi of Philadelphia, speaking of the simple life, says:

"To live healthily and happily nothing is required but a frugal diet, simple clothing, a sanitary home, healthy labor alternated with recuperative rest, a healthy mind, a clear conscience. We, however, have exchanged frugality for luxury, simplicity for complexity, ease for exhaustion, and we wonder that we are not happy. We have abandoned reason and have become the slaves of the appetites. Aside from amusements that are artificial, enervating, and immoral, that heighten life instead of making it bloom in splendor, there are very few left. Abuse has so befouled the world that it is becoming difficult to touch anything but what is unclean.

"Even our homes have become invaded by excess. The more of expensive furniture and costly clothes and fragile bric-a-brac are crowded into them the more of comfort and contentedness are crowded out. Notwithstanding all the extravagances lavished upon them they are fast becoming merely halfway houses, where one comes to rest awhile, where one shows off furniture and clothes and plate and cut glass, and then hurries off to the club, to the place of amusement, to the summer seaside, and to the winter resort. . . . A veritable magic power is attributed to money. It is the common belief that if one have but gold, and even though he have no heart, no mind, no soul, no character, and no conscience, he has what is infinitely better—he has what can buy and keep happiness; he has what can replace the simple things of life with the dazzling and costly, with the courted and envied. This belief it is that has nursed that fell brood of discontent, unrest, overwork, envy, greed, avarice, hypocrisy, fraud, extravagance, dissipation, divorce, suicide, that has made it necessary for an apostle to rise in our day to teach and preach anew the gospel of the simple life."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—The President's message was sent to Congress on the 6th instant. Among its statements are the following: "The goal to set before us as a nation, the goal which should be set before all mankind, is the attainment of the peace of justice, of the peace which comes when each nation is not merely safeguarded in its own rights, but scrupulously recognizes and performs its duty toward others. Generally peace tells for righteousness; but if there is conflict between the two, then our fealty is due first to the cause of righteousness. Uprighteous wars are common and unrighteous peace is rare; but both should be shunned."

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 24, 1904.

No. 24.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

(South from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

LOUIS KOSSUTH'S FAREWELL WARNING TO AMERICA.—“Unless the Divine law is paramount, and obedience to it the rule of life, our power is vain, your freedom is vain, our industry, your wealth, your prosperity, all this will not save you from sharing the mournful fate of those old nations, not less powerful than you, not less free, not less prosperous than you, and still fallen, you, yourself, will fall; all vanished, as you will vanish, like a bubble, thrown up from the deep. There is only the law of God, there are only the duties of Christianity which can secure your future, by securing at the same time our humanity. As long as the fragile wisdom of political exigencies overrules the will of God, there is no freedom on earth, and the future of no nation sure.”

Passivity for guidance, activity for obedience.

Why do I worry about other men, when I have Jesus to see?

The true condition of church enlargement is concentration on the Spirit.

Christ the Word of God, is the Father's expression of himself to man's understanding and condition.

The spiritual life is not to be circumscribed by psychology, nor He that made thy reason be limited by the very thing made.

The spiritual empire, not the carnal domain, Jerusalem, not Babylon,—is the place where men ought to worship; the place where prayer is prayer and praise that is praise is not to be made.

Neglected Meetings.

We hear it stated that eight students of Wellesley College, near Boston, young women who are members of our religious Society, meet together in Friends' manner of worship for the meeting which they steadily attend. May their commendable example preach to our and their home Yearly Meetings, at whatever distance.

Are there not as many as eight members within reach of each other in other neighborhoods who might thus meet? Are there not as many as one through whose living inward exercises a meeting, not of eight, but of two or three, could be kept alive? Are not a “two or three” when themselves leavened with the Seed of God sufficient to leaven the whole lump of a numerous community? The insufficiency in any one is not in the Seed. It is in the responsiveness of that one to the seed of grace already sown in his heart.

We also hear of a legacy left behind by our last Yearly Meeting's committee, and lately augmenting in the hearts of a few, to be themselves faithful respondents to the seed of Life, in sympathy with the condition of our smaller (and it may be sometimes whether larger or smaller, yet weaker) meetings for worship in several localities. To the question, “By whom shall Jacob arise, for he is small?” an inspired response sometimes comes up in one to ask, “Lord, is it I?” And if the respondent on his part be small enough in self to be enlarged in faithfulness, he may go and sit down with those who are neglected—not by the Holy Spirit but by themselves—as a factor of life in the midst of their opportunity of worship—a life which may, if kept to, revive a meeting.

The providential committee for the care of each of these smaller meetings is composed of its members themselves—a permanent committee stationed in divine provision to be gathered there as residents. Nothing is chargeable for their own lack of life as a meeting but their letting their own life lapse. A cry of indolence may be heard, “Oh, for some minister to come and wake us up!” But the cry of the Spirit is, “Awake, thou that sleepest, and rise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light!” It depends not so much on a mission sent by a Yearly Meeting as it does on the standing committee located there by God, whether or not one's particular meeting shall rise in newness of love and life. If the members will not in worship and daily living give place to the minister of the sanctuary, one of these two dangers impends—either they will covet an habitual lethargy of doing without a ministry, and resent as an intrusion aught that disturbs a hibernating state; or else in groping after some relief of the void by substituting words and other outward expedients for the inward voice of worship, will reach out for some stated speaker.

The remedy for the worshipless condition which grasps at a pastor as the last resort, lies primarily in a revived surrender to the inspeaking Word, however still and small his voice may seem at first; and secondarily in the faithfulness of brethren who are moved to step into a meeting's condition and travail with and for it, and speak the called-for word in season to him that is weary. So may an entrance be made for a home supply of grace. May this abundantly supersede the hankering after an entertainment of the mind by an imported teaching. But meetings which will not be alive through dedication of hearts (thy heart, dear reader), to the Spirit of Christ whithersoever He would lead them—let them know that they are thus a flat invitation to the stated preaching system to come in as the usurper of Quakerism; or, else, lead to ministry inward or outward, consenting to be “twice dead, plucked up by the roots.”

SINGING UNREALITIES.—One of the gravest charges upon which the Lord arraigned ancient Israel, was, that they honored Him with their lips, while their hearts were far from Him. Under the present dispensation, the only worshippers which “the Father seeketh” to worship Him, are they that worship Him “in spirit and in truth.” What, then, must be the Divine estimate of that style of worship which is extremely prevalent—where persons without faith, without hope, and without God in the world, lift up before the Lord the most sacred and solemn words, which, however truly they may have represented the conditions and emotions of those who first uttered them, can be nothing less than empty unrealities when heard from the lips of those who now pronounce them. Imagine a company of unconverted sinners or backsliders singing with all their might:

“I've reached the land of corn and wine,
And all its glories for me shine;
There shines undimmed one blissful day,
For all my night has passed away.”

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 179.)

On the twenty-eighth of Second Month, 1838, the Committee was called together to consider an address which had been forwarded to it by a number of the chiefs of the Allegheny Reservation, informing them that they had lately attended a general council of the Six Nations at Buffalo, where a Commissioner of the U. S. Government had assumed to declare a treaty had been made by which they agreed to surrender all their lands in New York and accept instead certain lands west of the Mississippi. This had been done notwithstanding the remonstrance of a large majority of the chiefs and warriors; and that the Commissioner had prevailed on several to sign it, by bribes, and others by the influence of ardent spirits. This address also stated that they were informed that their annuity should be withheld from them until they had emigrated to their new home, and that they were consequently under the necessity of asking assistance of their friends to defray the expenses of a deputation to Washington.

Upon considering this address Thomas Stewardson, Thomas Evans, Samuel Bettle, Thomas Wistar, Jr., Joseph Elkinton and Thomas Wistar were appointed to see any deputation of Indians who may come to the city, and also, if necessary, prepare an essay of a Memorial to the Government of the United States.

On the twelfth of Third Month, 1838, an essay of a Memorial was adopted, and James Robinson, one of the Allegheny chiefs, with his companions having been waiting in the city for several days, Samuel Bettle, Thomas Evans and Joseph Elkinton were appointed to proceed to Washington and present it to the President, to the Senate and to the House of Representatives.

This Memorial recounts the early and continued efforts of Friends for the help of these Indians, the sanction of George Washington and subsequent Presidents of the United States to their proceedings, the improvements in the habits and manner of life of these Indians as compared with those which formerly prevailed, the long and undisputed possession of their lands, and then proceeds to state: "In the midst of the security created by their reliance on the fidelity of the Government, and in violation of the assurances of protection again and again extended to them, attempts have been made to effect their expulsion from the land of their fathers, by means, as your Memorialists conceive, alike at variance with justice and humanity, and loudly demanding your interference and reprobation."

"We learn on good authority that the great body of the nation was united in the determination neither to sell their lands nor to remove from them, and have steadfastly resisted every overture for the accomplishment of these objects. Yet under the cover of this treaty thus illegally obtained and invalid in itself, being the act of a minority only, these poor people are now officially informed that they must leave their homes and the graves of their fathers to seek a new residence in the Western wilds; that their annuity will only be paid to them on condition of their removing far beyond the Mississippi, and that there only will the United States hold official intercourse with them.

"Thus the very existence of this feeble remnant of a numerous and powerful nation, once the proprietors of the soil on which we now dwell and where we have grown rich, is jeopardized, their rights are invaded and their property in danger of being unjustly wrung from them.

"In the hour of their extremity, we feel constrained by a sense of duty to appeal to you in their behalf, and beseech you to remember the universal obligation of the Golden Rule laid down by our blessed Saviour, 'Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so unto them.'

"Their once extensive domain has been reduced to the narrow limits which they now claim, by repeated cessions to the white men, and they are now circumscribed within a reservation comparatively small and insignificant.

"Shall a great and powerful nation like the United States, rich in soil and in all its products, drive from the scanty pittance of land yet left them these unresisting and helpless people to gratify the craving of avarice? Your Memorialists trust not. They respectfully but earnestly entreat you to withhold your sanction from this pretended treaty, and thus save from the stain of so disgraceful an act the character of our beloved country."

This Memorial was promptly taken to Washington by the three Friends above mentioned accompanied by Enoch Lewis, who was requested to join them and the four Indians constituting the delegation. Copies of it were presented to the President, Secretary of War, different members of the Senate and House of Representatives; to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, etc., and the objections to the confirmation of the treaty fully explained. Some of the difficulties they met with may be understood from the following extract from the report of these Friends on their return to Philadelphia dated Fourth Month 12th, 1838: On presenting the Memorial to the President and Secretary of War, "and stating the objections to the treaty and the alleged means through which it was obtained, they expressed much surprise, and informed us that the report of the Commissioner gave so favorable an account of the manner in which the negotiations were conducted and of the general acceptance of the treaty to the nation, that they had anticipated little or no opposition to its confirmation and fulfillment. After informing that a delegation of Senecas, authorized by the nation to oppose the ratification of the treaty were then in Washington, and wished the opportunity of presenting the documents with which they were entrusted to establish the grounds of their objections, a time was fixed for their interview and the promise given that the proceedings should be staid until the delegation had been fully heard and their documents and proofs deliberately considered. The interview between the delegation and the officers above named was an interesting one. James Robinson, one of the chiefs, addressed each of them in the Indian language, which our friend, Joseph Elkinton, interpreted, the import of it being that the delegation, as well as the great mass of their nation, were very much opposed to the treaty, and earnestly desired that it might not be ratified, that they were well satisfied with their present location and attached to their homes, and entreated that they might be suffered to remain there and not be compelled to move to the West to seek a settlement in a new and uncultivated country. The President and Secretary in their replies assured them that all the circumstances of the treaty should be fully and impartially investigated, and that justice should be done them, as there was every disposition on the part of the Government to afford them its protection and to act toward them with generous liberality. Notwithstanding these assurances we were sensible of the operation of a powerful influence adverse to the rights and interests of the poor Indians, and that nothing short of clearest proof of fraud and mismanagement in procuring the treaty could arrest its progress."

Believing it important for the success of their efforts, two members of the Committee spent several weeks in Washington, during which time they had interviews with several of the Senators and officers of the Government in reference to the confirmation of the treaty, a service which they mention "was exercising and painful." Nevertheless, after the Yearly Meeting of 1838, it appeared proper to Samuel Bettle and Thomas Evans that they should return to Washington, which they did, and remained there about three weeks longer. In their report they remark: "The situation in which they found the treaty, and the great number of interested persons assembled there for the purpose of promoting its ratification as well as the request of several members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, led them to the conclusion that they could not discharge the trust reposed in them without allowing full time for watching the course of events and the consequences likely to result from the powerful influence and strenuous efforts which were brought to bear in favor of the treaty. The Commissioner who had executed the treaty had made a reply to some of the charges of bribery and intimidation contained in the affidavits and other papers presented by the Indians; and in this reply had introduced some reflections on the Society of Friends. At the request a copy of this reply was furnished Samuel Bettle and Thomas Evans, who made a rejoinder thereto, which, with the other documents relating to this subject, was printed. The final result of these efforts was that the Sub-Committee to whom the treaty had been referred reported it back to the Senate with numerous amendments which materially changed its character, and provided for its submission again for approval to each of "the said tribes or bands [of New York Indians] separately assembled in council."

With this provision it was thought the rights of the Indians would be securely guarded, and the Seneca chiefs living on the Allegheny Reservation but two were favorable to the treaty; on the Cattaraugus Reservations rather large minority, and on the Tonawanda none, while in the Buffalo Creek Reservation the number of chiefs favoring it though greater than on the other reservations, yet less than those who were opposed to it. But an interpretation put by the officers of the Government upon the clause submitted for approval, viz: that all the different bod-

"The First Publishers of Truth."*

Under the above title the newly-formed Friends' Historical Society in England is printing in a series of five numbers, of which this is the first, a hitherto unpublished history of the seventeenth century Quakers, as quaintly told by contemporary Friends in the various countries of England and Wales. The plan of the work as conceived at that early period seems not unlike the schemes for co-operative histories now so much in vogue among historians.

The inception of the idea of a history is doubtless due to George Fox, who early and continuously urged the importance of the formation and preservation of records and registers relating to his followers, and who observed himself that "all the passages and travellings & sufferings of Friends in the beginning of the spreading of the Truth . . . will make a history. . . . It is a fine thing to know the beginning of the spreading of the Gospel." As early as 1676 London Yearly Meeting requested "That friends of the Monthly & Quarterly meetings of each County . . . keep exact account among themselves of those that first brought the message of glad tidings upon them," of their sufferings "whether Steeple Houses, Market places, or otherwise," and of "what Friends first received the message and their message." After further suggestions from the yearly meeting and the issuing of a broadside, "Directions to Collectors for a General History of the Entrance & Progress of Truth," the county meetings regularly compiled historical narratives and sent them up to London early in the eighteenth century.

These accounts, consisting of ninety manuscripts, now preserved in the fireproof vaults of the Friends' Reference Library at Devonport House, the headquarters of the Society Friends in London, are being printed verim et literatim under the careful and intelligent editorship of Norman Penney, the efficient librarian of Friends' Reference Library, Secretary of the Historical Society. His scholarly annotations are an important addition to the work.

The narratives are of great value as historical sources, throwing light not only on the origin of an important religious movement in England, but also on some of the more obscure aspects of the social and economic life of the early Friends—their social status, occupations, education and manner of life in general. They likewise afford genealogical information about many of whom were concerned in the earlier migrations to the Delaware. The accounts are, moreover, of readable human interest, conveying in the quaint and simple language of contemporaries a clear impression of the events described, having a vividness and reality that more formal records of a period fail to supply.

*"The First Publishers of Truth." Edited by Norman Penney. Journal Supplement No. 1. (The first five numbers.) "Bedford-row to Essex." 8vo., 96 pages. Price 2s.50 for the set of five numbers; to non-members, 3s.25; this includes a free subscription to the regular issues of the Journal, which is issued quarterly. Applications for membership and for the Supplement should be sent to R. M. Jones, 1010 Arch Street, Philadelphia, or Norman Penney, Devonport House, 12, Bishopsgate Street, London, E. C., England.

A type of the entries is seen in the testimony given at a quarterly meeting in Bedfordshire in 1704 by Joshua Wheeler, "who was at one of ye first Meetings thereabouts." "William Dewsbury," he succinctly states, "was the first yt published truth in the Lower Side of ye County, And many was Convinced and Readily Recd the truth in ye Love of it; And Great was the Gathering in that day, both of old & young, in so much yt truth's testimony had a good Effect, upon ye hearts of Male and female. Itt was in ye year 1654, as neare as wee Can gather yt William came to Deckerings Parke and was Entertained by Jno. Crook; he and Jno. Rush, of Kempson Hardwik, ffather to Jno. Rush now Livinge there, And Hen; Gamble, of Puloxhill, Grandfather to Tho. Gamble now Livinge in yt Parish, was of ye first that Recd friends one that Side of ye County."

In Cambridge we learn of the sufferings of the Friends "by the scollers and the Rude and blood thirsty people off this towne and universitie off Cambridge. . . . Upon the 8th off the 2nd month Called April, 1660, the scollers (who are taught but not off the lord) with other Rude people broke violently upon us into our owne hired house with a malicious spirit, and a Cruell intent in there hearts, as did appear by their Cruelly beatinge of us and drawinge of our blood and drawinge off severall of us out by the haire off the head, haueing Regard neither to old or yonge men, or women . . . but did very much abuse them by tearing there Cloathes, tumbling and moleing diuers in the nasty and loathsome Channells in the streets; and this did the scollers and the Rude multitude unto us, att our meetinge."

Apparently the rise of meetings in Berkshire was attended with less violence.

"Some account from the Quarterly Meeting held at Reading, in the County of Berks, the 21st of ye 2d mo. 1707, of the Entrance of Progress of Truth in the said County."

"About the beginning of ye year 1655 came Myles Halhead husbandman of Mount Joy in Westmorland & Thomas Salthouse a younger man and some time before servant to Judge Fell of Swarthmore in Lancashire to the Towne of Reading aforesaid, and had a publick meeting on a first day in a place then called the Broad Face Bowling Green, where Joseph Coale was convinced & soon after bore a publick Testimony to the Truth he then recd: as by the Collection of his works in print may be seen, & the said Myles Halhead & Tho; Salthouse had 2 publick meetings more before they left the Town, one at the Baptist meeting Place in the Forberry on ye 2d day where a yong man was then Present who afterward received the truth, but ye service of yt meeting was much obstructed by reason of ye Opposition & disturbance made by some ill minded persons, 2 of which afterwards came to nought, & ye other meeting ye 3d day was at Thomas Curties house who was convinced some time before at Bristol & recd the friends of Truth yt travellid in ye service thereof at that time."

"About 3 months after this, came Geo: Hux & had a meeting in George Lambells Orchard where many more were convinced as by the Relation thereof in his Journall doth appear; after Cam in the year before mentioned came John Cam of Camsgil & John Audland of Cross-lands both of Westmoreland, Husbandmen, and ye meeting still increased. About the same time Robert Hodson, from the Bishoprick of Lurham, by Occupation a Butcher, going to their Worship house here was sent to Prison, & after some time was delivered & he going to a Baptist meeting near Oar in this County had some service for the Lord, also where Dorothy Austell and her son William were convinced and several others afterwards, and a meeting was there settled: from ye other parts of the County we can have no particular account."

As a fitting conclusion to the last number of the publication, the president of the Historical Society, Thomas Hodgkin, D.C.L., Litt.D. (Oxon), one of the foremost scholars of England and a prominent Friend, author of the best short life of George Fox and of "Italy and Her Invaders," a monumental history in several volumes, will contribute a general introduction and brief articles on "Speaking in Church," "Judgments on Persecution," and the like. The frontispiece of the present number is a reproduction of the title page of "A General Epistle," the first printed utterance of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, "Printed and Sold by William Bradford at Philadelphia, 1656." The paper and typography are excellent. A full index is promised.

It is earnestly hoped that Friends on our side of the water will give their support to this commendable undertaking by a prompt application for membership in the Historical Society, and by subscription to the supplements.

ALBERT COOK MYERS.

KENNETT SQUARE, PENNSYLVANIA.

A RELIGIOUS life is at all times blessed, but its value is most especially felt in times of danger, and at the approach of death. Those who love and serve God in the time of prosperity, will not be forgotten nor deserted by Him in the day of adversity. His name will be to them a strong tower, to which they will flee and find safety; even when terror and amazement overtake the worldly and the negligent ones. What solid advantage is derived from giving up to the early visitations of Divine Grace, progressing, through obedience to the cross, from stature to stature, and thereby attaining an establishment in the Truth. These have the pearl of great price, the white stone, and in it a new name written, which no man knoweth, saving him that hath it; an inestimable treasure; Christ living and abiding in them, the hope of their glory, and the foundation upon which they are built and settled. They want no other; they thirst for no other water than what springs in their souls, from Him, the Fountain of living waters; and their prayer and travail is, that they be made and kept as pillars in his house, that shall go no more out. These are salt in the earth, and lights in the world; soldiers in the Lamb's army, who bear the ensign of the Prince of Peace; and who will, under his command, finally obtain the victory over death, hell and the grave, in their own experience; and over the kingdom of antichrist the world over; even so. Amen.—William Evans.

HE who prays as he ought will endeavor to live as he ought.—Queen.

James Brandwood.

James Brandwood was the son of John Brandwood of Entwistle in Lancashire and was born in the Eleventh Month, 1789. He having led an account in writing of his early experience in the work of religion, the following abstract is taken nearly in his own words, from this narrative: "It pleased the all-wise and gracious God, who gave me being, to follow me by his grace even from my youth, often bowing my mind in serious considerations, that I was placed here as on his footstool, for a short space of time, and must ere long remove to appear before his judgment seat; also, how short and transient present enjoyments are, compared with the eternal nature of the life to come; whereby my mind was led to conclude, this world is not my resting-place, the life to come is my home, eternity is the chief end and design of my being.

"Running in my own will and strength from year to year, I heard sermons, read many books and talked with professors; some said one thing and some another. I then began to read the Scriptures more; but alas! they were to me in many places as a sealed book. I prayed often in secret places and learned to sing, thinking I was thereby preparing myself to join the heavenly host. I talked with religious professors about doctrinal points and endeavored to form as just notions and opinions about the coming, life, doctrines, sufferings and death of Christ as I could; and this I called faith. But this faith not proceeding from the quickening power of Divine grace, but from the workings of the natural understanding, was a dead faith, and could not be an evidence of things not seen, nor work by the purifying of my heart, so as to give victory over the various sinful lusts and vanities of this world, but on the contrary, I was abundantly overcome thereby, from day to day.

"In this condition I travelled long, and was sorely tossed between the secret reproofs of Divine grace in my conscience and the workings of the adversary. About the twentieth year of my age, it pleased God, in unpeakable mercy, further to enlighten my soul, through the Spirit of his Son, as with the day-spring from on high; whereby I was enabled to see more clearly my fallen and corrupt condition, and my sins were set in order before me, appearing exceedingly sinful, and opposite to the holy will of God. In this day all my former building in religion was shaken to the very foundation. In this situation I cried, Oh what shall I do? to whom shall I flee? for in this sinful state I cannot dwell with him that is holy.

"The Scriptures now began to be more opened to my understanding; and though I was told that by a certain ceremony, which had been performed in my infancy, I was made a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven; yet, in the opening of the Scriptures to my understanding, I saw this could not be true; for there I was informed that the members of Christ were made such by other means, even by his own baptism with the Spirit, as saith the apostle, 'By one Spirit we are all baptized into one body;' and that, 'if any man be in Christ he is a new creature.' I also saw the children of God were such as were begotten of Him through Christ, the incorruptible Seed and Word of God, and born again into newness of life, bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit. And that the kingdom of heaven and government of Christ are within, by the influence of his Spirit, which as a pure principle in his children and people, ruleth and leadeth them in his service.

"I also saw that all my prayers and songs of praise had been a sacrifice of my own preparing, and offered up in my own vain imagination, in a fallen and unconverted state; and that it was only in and through the Spirit that God could be acceptably worshipped. I also saw that all my former faith was no more than a bare assent of the natural understanding to certain things whereof I had no evidence, but what arose from the letter of Scripture, and other outward means, whereas, in the openings of the Scriptures, I saw that he that believeth hath the witness in himself, even the Spirit of Him who is the Author and object of true and living faith, by which the quickened soul received an evidence of things not seen and an humble confidence in the saving power and redeeming love of God through Christ. I also saw that I had trusted too much in, and been carried about with the changeable doctrines of men, and neglected the teachings of the grace and good spirit of God in my soul, which as a swift witness against evil, had followed me with inward and secret reproof even from my infant years.

"As I was brought more and more into stillness, and humbled under the Divine hand, the light of Christ arose and more enlightened my mind; whereby I saw into the purity of that faith which was once delivered to the saints, and that holy religion which through the power of Divine Grace was taught, and which wrought in the primitive believers in Christ. As these things opened in my view, a strong persuasion arose therefrom, that it was not my duty to join any of the various professions of religion with which I was acquainted; and if at any time I tried to join with any of them, it brought distress and trouble over my mind. I then said in my heart, 'Is there no people on earth preserved in the simplicity of the Truth with which I can unite?' Whereupon it came into my mind to go to a meeting of the people called Quakers—a people of whose religious principles I had very little knowledge, neither did I know more than one person of that persuasion. Being encouraged by repeated drawings of mind towards them, I went many miles to one of their meetings, accompanied by several others.

"Being set down in the meeting, which was but small, my mind was seized with great surprise, considering the vast difference between that multitude of words and ceremonies to which I had been accustomed, and the solemn silence in which we sat; and the breathing of my spirit was, 'If this be right, confirm it to me this day.' After some time my mind was brought into more stillness, desiring to unite in the solemn pause, in which Divine goodness favored my soul with a sense of his gracious presence, and the promise of Christ opened to my mind with great sweetness, though I had not understood it before, 'Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.' In this my soul rejoiced and said, 'This is the truth, this is what I have long been seeking for.' Towards the latter part of the meeting some testimonies were borne in great simplicity and plainness of speech, but in the demonstration of the Spirit.

"When I came amongst this people I met with great opposition, both from professors and profane; but knowing in whom I had believed, and that his power is greater than he that is in the world, my faith was strengthened, and my spirit frequently bowed before Him for help and support in that day, in which, blessed be his name, I often found his secret hand underneath, enabling me to stand in patience, and bear the cross."

James Brandwood appears to have been early made instrumental to the convincing of several others, of the truth of our religious principles, and became a member of our Society in the year 1761; and a meeting was shortly afterwards settled at Edgeworth, where he resided many years. Soon after he was admitted among Friends he spoke as a minister. His offerings in that character were concise, forcible and comprehensive; and being concerned reverently to wait for the renewed influence of the Lord's power, they were acceptable to his friends. In consequence of his joining our Society he was disinherited by his father, who died when his son was forty-seven years of age. After this, for many years he followed the profession of a land surveyor and conveyancer; he was never married, and lived most of his life in a retired part of the country. He was a plain country man, possessed of a good understanding; but had not the advantage of a liberal education. Few men appear to have been more free from the love of the interests of this world; but Christian virtues and unobtrusive deportment, combined with his cheerful and instructive conversation gained him the general esteem of all classes with whom he had intercourse. He was scrupulously tender of the reputation of others, that his most intimate friends scarcely ever heard him speak to the disadvantage of an absent person. . . . In the year 1824, removed to West Houghton, . . . and notwithstanding his advanced age, being in his eighty-fifth year, he was diligent in attending meetings, clear and instructive in ministrations; much to the comfort and edification of friends; and his society was pleasant and instructive to them. Towards the close of the following year he became unwell, from which to his death he was mostly confined to the house. During his illness, he was preserved in patient resignation, and he was enabled to communicate much valuable counsel. At one time he requested that portions of Scripture to be read, in which the apostle saith, "We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them who are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God," on which he exclaimed, "Wonderful and very good;" and after a few minutes' silence added, "This passage dwelt much upon my mind whilst in bed this morning," and he expressed his surprise that a seriously thinking man, with the New Testament in his hand, could be drawn into so dangerous disbelief and practice of reason away the propitiation and atonement of Christ who was crucified for our sins. . . . adding, "I the Senecas should be considered as one tribe, and should be treated with in one general council, dispelled to some extent the feuds which it was believed the Senate Committee of Indian Affairs designed to establish; and opened the way for a repetition of the efforts which had been already practiced.

In the Eighth Month of this year an attempt accordingly made to get the consent of the Indians to the amended treaty. A council was called to meet on the Buffalo Creek Reservation, which lasted for nearly seven weeks, during which similar methods were employed to tempt the chiefs by the use of ardent spirits, rum, to consent to it and affix their signatures; but with little more success than on the previous occasion.

After the council was closed a remonstrance against the amended treaty, which had been signed by a large majority of the chiefs during the council, was forwarded to Washington, together with a number of affidavits, etc., explaining the methods which had been used in obtaining signatures. These papers were entrusted to an attorney-at-law residing in Buffalo, who had been occasionally employed by the Indians to prepare their papers and for other purposes, and to whom they entrusted on this occasion: the keeping of their remonstrance, affidavits and other documents on which they depended for stating their case fully when they might arrive at the seat of government. They paid him a fee of one thousand dollars for his past and anticipated assistance. After considerable delay occasioned by his absence from home at the time he was starting on the embassy, he at length returned accompanied by two Indians, but before they had proceeded two days' journey, the papers and documents were all missing, in a manner so mysterious as to give strong ground for the presumption that they had been treacherously carried off. This event nullified the delegation of great difficulty. New letters were drawn up omitting the name of the lawyer from the list of delegates and were executed, but he still held those in which his name was inserted, went to Washington and spent several weeks there, claiming to be the delegate of the Senecas, and finally sued other members of the delegation for $350, an alleged amount of his expenses.

(To be continued.)

IN THE MIND'S EYE.—Our mind's eye needs training as much as our physical vision. If we hang pictures in the halls of our brain that are not elevating, our moral perceptions will become lowered. The best thoughts are within our reach. Why should we choose, instead, thoughts that are flippant, vulgar, or worse? Every time we put an undesirable picture in our mind's eye, where it will be often in view, we deprive our own understanding. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." If we wish to elevate and strengthen our souls, we must be careful in our choice of habitual thoughts. "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, . . . think on these things." This is well-known advice—but can it be better?—Extract.

A Dream.

[Whatever theories of dreams there may be, the course of the following, sent for our insertion, is symbolical of life's pilgrimage.—Ed.]

Thomas Bundy was born in North Carolina, sixteenth of Tenth Month, 1778. He moved to Grayson County, Virginia, and married Millicent Boswell. They moved to Belmont County, Ohio, 1804. They had eleven children, all lived to be grown before there were any deaths in the family. They moved to Morgan County, Ohio, in 1833. On the night of the twentieth of Third Month, 1847, he had the following remarkable dream, and wrote it down with his own hand. He died first of Tenth Month, 1854.

"I thought I was about to start on a very long journey through a vast wilderness that was uninhabited. So I set out alone, and took nothing with me but my staff, as a walking cane, in order to go to a pleasant city I had heard of. I had gone but a short distance before I found a little path that seemed to lead the way I was going, so I thought I would follow it.

"After a little I saw a light that seemed to be at the farther end of the path, and shined in the path so much as to enable me to see that the track was very straight and narrow, just room enough to walk and no more. It was smooth and level, and I went on without difficulty that day, until towards evening when the wilderness got thicker and thicker with weeds and small brush, and it began to look gloomy and at length it became very dark, yet that little light shone in the path so that I could see to walk very well, and I went on with a quick and lively step.

"After a while I heard the wild beasts howl and roar very much, though at a distance; but they came nigher and nigher until they seemed to be within one yard of me, and an abundance of serpents seemed to be combined with them to devour me at once; but I still kept my eyes fixed upon the little light that shone in the path, so that I could see about two steps in advance of me. So I was enabled to go on without fear or dismay for the space of several days and nights, though there was no day there.

"It seemed to have passed the most of the beasts; but at last I saw a very large and frightful one standing across the path before me. I advanced with a quick and firm step and thrust the end of my staff against it violently, and it moved out of the path, and the light shone in the path close behind it, and I passed on, almost brushing it. I had not much more difficulty for awhile, but shortly met a man who advised me to go back, for he said it was impossible for me to get through. I told him I would go as far as I could; but I had temptations before me that I had no thought of.

"After awhile I saw some women by the path. They invited me to stop and rest awhile with them; but I made very little reply, and went on without taking my eyes from the light that I had taken for my guide. Thus I went on for awhile without anything to remark. But at length I came to the most beautiful young woman by the side of the path that my eyes ever beheld, all alone in that dreadful wilderness.

"She invited me to stop with her, and laid her lily-white hands and arms around me, and pressed me to her breast, and said, "Oh, do stay with me this night," which caused me to neglect my guide for a moment; but my feet had not moved out of the path.

"Before I made any reply I raised my eyes to look for my guide, but it had almost disappeared. I was seized with the greatest alarm, and sprang from her as if she had been a deadly serpent, and never made any reply, but attended to my guide in the best manner I could, and at length the light increased till it attained its full size.

"After going a considerable distance I fell in company with a plain looking man who was travelling in a broader path than mine, and seemed to have a greater light at the head. We went on for a while near together, but I kept close to my guide. At length his path seemed to leave mine a little, there being a narrow strip of weeds and shrubs between us, and he invited me to come and walk with him, for there was room enough in his path for us both. I told him that I was satisfied with my own path. He then upbraided me for being so foolish as to go in such a narrow way; then his path seemed to turn more away, and the light at the head of his course seemed to move and keep before him, and I was afraid to turn my head to look after him, so I went on my way alone as I had done before, without any difficulty to remark for a considerable time; but, alas! I came to the most awful scene that can be imagined, which caused me to stand still for a time, though with my eyes fixed on the light that had guided me safe thus far.

"The place appeared to be a gulf as wide as the Atlantic Ocean, and of unknown depth. It appeared to be composed of mud, pitch and bitumen, and the scum and filth of all things combined.

"It seemed impossible for me to stay there, and it was so dark that I could see but a short distance into the gulf. I kept my eyes fixed on my good guide and saw the light shine on a row of small steps. They appeared to be about ten inches square and of suitable distance apart for me to step from one to another; all fear was taken from me and I proceeded step by step. The tops of the steps appeared to be about half an inch above the surface of the gulf and appeared about the color of newly hammered iron, all covered with little checkers similar to fish scales. I went on without much difficulty for the space of one day, when the wind began to blow and the thunder to roll, and come nearer and nearer, until it became one of the most terrible storms that can well be imagined. There were no waves on the surface of the gulf, though there seemed to be an agitation beneath the surface that raised the steps and then they would go down again to their common level, as if a wave had passed under them, yet they were never moved out of a straight line, and the light shone on them all the time. I saw the need of attending strictly to my guide, for if I should make one false step it would be inevitable destruction.

"The lightning ran close round about me on every side and with the most awful peals of thunder ever heard, continued for a long time. At last it seemed to abate and it looked as if the day was dawning, which was cause of joy unspeakable to me, as I had been so long without daylight. At length it became quite light and I could see the city on the other side of the gulf. I continued to go on with my eye fixed on my good guide, and at last I set my feet on firm ground near the gate of the outer wall of the city, which appeared something like a white fence. There were several people at the gate waiting for me, all in white robes. They opened the gate for me, and took off my old clothes and put a white robe on me like their own, and then conducted me some distance to a pearl gate of the most beautiful and glorious city that can be conceived. The gate was of pearl and the wall was of jasper and precious stones. The pearl gate was opened for me and, as I was about to go in, the first robe was taken off, and another, most gloriously white and shining put upon me, and I stepped through the gate into the city, where I saw things which perhaps, would be better for me not to utter. A seat was provided for me, and I sat upon it and felt my heart to overflow with thankfulness and praise.

"I have omitted some things, but have added nothing. I never felt weary, hungry or thirsty; my feet never left the path; and my eyes but once were turned from my guide, and that but for a moment, and I never looked back at all."

TOLSTOI'S OPINION OF SONG.—The St. Petersburg "Novosti" reports a conversation between a self-educated peasant poet, who composes songs, and Count Tolstoi. The latter advised the peasant to drop his composition, and expressed himself as follows: "Song is a trivial and undesirable thing. Why should good and thoughtful men sing? In my country old men like to talk about worthy subjects, about faith, God's will and life, and like to read good books. This is worthy of all praise. But what is singing? It may be compared to wine or tobacco—mere empty pastime, if not worse than that, since it often incites cruel and wicked deeds. In war song is considered essential; special music is written for soldiers, in order to excite and hypnotize them, just as liquor is served to them for the same purpose. There is no denying the power of song; but there is this difference between wine and song: the former makes people brave and bold, the latter only reconciles them to their fate, and induces resignation. Song, in truth, is not a high manifestation of the human spirit; it is something sensuous and low. People acquire the habit of singing, but an exercise of which I can rid us of it. Personally I have never cultivated the habit. I do not sing."—The Literary Digest

A MAN and a woman and a little child boarded a street car. The conductor missed them in collecting the fares. The little child began to call the attention of the woman to the oversight, but the woman shook the child and enjoined silence. And yet some day the man and woman will wonder why their child turned out a liar and a thief! Is a child without discernment and susceptibility? It is drinking in standards and conceptions through every pore. Every act of deception to which it is a party is a lesson leaving its enduring imprint. Let us show a child nothing that ought not to be incorporated in its life.—Ex.

TAKE HEART AND GO ON.

BY M. E. SANGSTER.

Sometimes we are almost discouraged,
The way is so cumbered and steep;
Sometimes though we're spent with the sowing,
There cometh no harvest to reap;
And we faint on the road and we falter,
As our faith and our courage are gone,
Till a voice, as we kneel at the altar, Commands us: "Take heart and go on."
"Take heart!" 'Tis the word of our Leader,
And e'en when our vision is dim,
What else can we do, but arising,
Uplift weary eyes unto Him?
"Take heart!" Why, 'tis Christ who hath spoken;
And what can we do but obey?
Though He gives us no tangible token,
Himself is the Sun of our day.

And in His own time He will show us,
Why sorrow and trial were sent—
Why we toiled, and saw naught for our toiling,
And home empty-handed we went.
Though He gives us no tangible token,
Still must we arise and go on,
As sure as His body was broken
For us, that our fight shall be won.

Then fain for a touch of His garment,
When clouds hem us in and 'tis dark,
We'll cling to the thought of His goodness,
Press on, with the cross for our mark.
"Take heart!" Yes, our own blessed Master,
Till the last of our heart-beats is gone,
Amid conflict, and loss, and disaster,
We will,—just take heart and go on.

The Price of a Father.

An idle group of men sat drinking in Bill Henry's bar-room, when the door was pushed open and two little figures tugging at a big basket made their way into the room, writes Julia D. Dean, in Union Signal.

"Are you the salesman?" Barbara caught her breath with a quick gasp as she asked the question. "I'm Barbara Dabney. James Beecher Dabney he's my father, and this is Joan, my little sister. We've come over to see you about buying back our father, you know. We have't got so very much money in all our banks. Get 'em Joan."

Joan dived into the bottom of the basket and produced two iron banks that rattled with their wealth of copper coin.

"Here they are. This is mine and this one's Joan's—she saves more'n I do. And if that's not enough, there's a lot more things in here," Barbara added, quite out of breath.

A queer look passed over the man's face. The men in the room stopped their talking and laughing to listen.

"What is it all about?" the man asked, gruffly. "What is it you want for all this trash?"

"Tain't trash!" said Barbara with spirit. Then more mildly: "It's this way. We want our papa back as he used to be. Folks say that he owed you something, and then to pay it he jes' sold hisself to you, and now you get all his money and everything and his brains, too. That's what they said, ain't it?" and she turned to Joan.

Joan nodded a solemn "Yes."

"Tain't far from wrong, either." It was a man's voice from the other side of the room that spoke.

The saloon-keeper scowled.

"You've got it mixed up some way," he said. "I don't own your pa, and if he comes in here for a drink now and then 'tain't my fault and I can't help it. That's just business."

"Here he is now!" the voice from the other side of the room exclaimed. And there stood James Dabney looking with amazement at the two small girls. The voice broke the silence that followed his appearance:

"They're your'n all right, Jim. It's a vision you're seeing. They're come to make a bargain with Billy here for you, and to give up all they've got to buy you back—what there is left of you—but Billy here, he says he doesn't own you. Now's your time to speak up like a man. Say, is Billy right? Doesn't he own you?"

Jim Dabney's face flushed. Then it grew pale and stern as the whole situation flashed upon him.

"No," he almost thundered, "he doesn't own me, nor does any other man," and glaring about him defiantly, he hurried the two little girls out of the door, grasping in a strong hand the big basket.

That very night Jim Dabney stood on his feet in a temperance meeting and repeated the words in a manly voice.

"No, sir, that saloon-keeper doesn't own me any more, nor does any other man. I learned something this afternoon from my own blessed lassies. I ain't my own to sell for beer and whisky. I've been bought with a price, and ain't no business to sell myself or give myself away for nothing. After this if the Father up there"—he raised his hands toward heaven—"will help me, I'm going to count on being owned first by Him, and then by those two blessed youngsters and their mother."

KINDNESS OF SPEECH.—"One trouble with me," said a young man, confessing his spiritual weaknesses, "is that I say nasty things about men. I see so much that I don't like and I can't help turning it down hard. And I say a great many things that are not kind. We all do. And we ought not."

Unkind speech is not Christlike. He never said anything unkind about a single soul. E denounced certain classes, but he welcomed and acknowledged the smallest flash of worthiness in individuals even of these classes.

Unkind speech is unjust. There is no good than evil in our acquaintances. At what we condemn is more than balanced, if it would but see it, by good. And probably the one we condemn is struggling against the thing we are criticising. And if untrue, he wrong our unkindness is.

Even if true, unkind speech about others harms ourselves. It discloses in us the capacities for what we condemn in others. It confirms our evil and unkindness of heart. It blunts our sense of generous perception. It throws us out of sympathy with the kindly Jesus.

If we intend it to hurt, how can we justify it? If we don't intend it to hurt, why do we run the risk? In either case its reflex influence on us is bad. If it is a harmful act, it will harm us, too. If it is a futile act, it will hurt us to have wasted strength on doing

TRUTH is of all things most estimable.
Dilany.

are favored with a sense of their own unworthiness, and the exceeding sinfulness of before God, as they humbly seek unto Him for help, come to know that He is also Christ, wisdom of God, and the power of God."

Three days before his death, in the course of an interesting conversation, he remarked to the effect: "I have indeed lived a great while, I have seen a good deal, both of good and evil; and having, through Divine mercy and forgiveness got through all, I feel my mind very comfortable, and am thankful I am thus ordered. . . . It is not for any righteousness my own I shall gain acceptance; but all my peace is in the mercy of God in Christ Jesus." After a pause, though then very weak, he was enabled to speak for some time on the fall of man and his restoration through the atoning sacrifice of our Lord Jesus Christ; but which, adds, it is not the duty of believers too fully to define or explain; but rather to wait His spiritual appearance in their own hearts. . . . He peacefully departed this life, on twenty-third of the Third Month, 1826.

Items Concerning the Society.

We want the Society of Friends to be composed of Friends?

Permission has been granted for the use of the singing-house at Sixth and Noble Streets for the religious instruction of the people of the neighborhood.

The topic of the tea meeting, held at Fourth and Sixth Streets on Second-day evening, was: "History of Friends in America, 1735-1775."—Dr. Anna F. Cress, Abby Newhall and Edith Bellows taking part.

Jonathan E. Rhoads, accompanied by J. H. Dillman, held an appointed meeting last First-day at Oriole, Somerset County, Md., near the estate of Chesapeake Bay. But one family of our members lives in that section of the State.

Further account than that received last week is that Eliza H. Varney reached North Parthen, where she has been having occasions of refreshment, feeling released from further service in North Carolina for the present winter.

The stated time of holding the first session of the re-established Monthly Meeting at Haverford, last Fifth-day evening, Twelfth Month 21st, '00, committees from Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting and Western District Monthly Meeting (to which Haverford members have hitherto belonged) is present.

There is a fast express offered to Friends to rail the Society through on business principles; arising which we may parody President Pat-ter's remark, and say: "This train makes no stops, when you get on to it it will take you via odious road to Sacerdotalism and Ritualism on a dust time."

Of one member suffers, all the members suffer it." The question is somewhat agitated among our Friends, whether Savings Bank depositors, have lost by default of a member in whom they confided "because he was a Friend," should be reimbursed by members or by the Society, for the sake of bringing back to Friends that confidence which has received so severe a shock.

William C. Allen, of Moorestown, N. J., and Wm. Harvey, of West Grove, Pa., who were liberated months ago by their respective meetings for Gospel service on the islands of Porto Rico and Barbadoes, embarked on the steamship Commo at New York, on Seventh-day, the seventeenth of this month, for San Juan, Porto Rico. They will probably be absent in the neighborhood of three months.

Under a feeling of interest for the growth and well-being of the smaller meetings of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, a number of Friends assembled at Friends' Institute on Seventh-day, the 10th inst., and held a conference on the subject. So much interest was expressed that the conference was adjourned, to meet again last Seventh-day afternoon at the same place for further consideration of the subject.

An unusual number of Friends on religious service from Poplar Ridge Quarterly Meeting, N. Y., have visited Philadelphia and vicinity of late. The acceptable service of Persis Halleck, accompanied by Jesse and Rebecca Mekeel, in attending all the recent series of Quarterly Meetings, appears now accomplished. Elizabeth Mekeel has also been welcomed at the several meetings which she attended, accompanied to some extent by Martha Otis, and on one occasion by Mary R. Allertson, whose recent decease has saddened the hearts of many Friends, both here and in Poplar Ridge Quarter, where her residence lately was; whence also William Meader came to Philadelphia, engaging in very feeling religious service at her funeral on the 14th inst.

We have received from Asa S. Wing, Recorder of Western District Monthly Meeting, Philadelphia, a carefully prepared Table of the Membership, both adult and minor, of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, in all its seven Quarterly Meetings and its thirty-one Monthly Meetings, for Tenth Month, 1904, and Twelfth Month, 1899. The Yearly Meeting numbers 4441 members, or 27 less than five years ago. Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting 1313, or 22 less than five years ago; Abington 596, a gain of 32; Concord 799, a gain of 17; Caln 149, a loss of 51; Western 398, a loss of 25; Burlington and Bucks, 589, a loss of 46; Haddonfield and Salem 806, a gain of 71. The largest Monthly Meeting, Western District, numbers 770; the smallest, Salem, N. J., 21.

The British Friend pronounces a periodical "for October, 1904," representing the work of certain Yearly Meetings, as "to a Friend, melancholy reading," and goes on to say:—

"The introductory articles plead for a fixed 'program' in public worship, and for vocal praying by human order. . . . A copy is given of 'a big placard' used at the re-opening of the 'Friends A.—Hall Chapel,' stating that services 'will be held all day, First-day, Tenth Month 9th. Rev. John McIntosh will preach the sermons, morning at 11 and at night at 7.' One remark we fully appreciate. A certain building has been 'treated to two coats of paint. Friends would hardly know the building in its improved condition. Great are the possibilities of paint.' Exactly. It can give a decent show to that which is fundamentally unsound."

"We have received," says the British Friend, "the Minutes of Iowa (Orthodox) Yearly Meeting, held last Ninth Month. This is one of the Yearly Meetings with which we [London Yearly Meeting] correspond. Much earnest Christian work finds record in these pages, though we cannot but think that, in many cases, this is hindered rather than helped by the prevailing 'pastoral system.' We note that congregations are warned against retaining a pastor too long in their service, or, on the other hand, making too frequent changes. A service of four or five years is recommended as an 'average pastorate.' Pastors are to accept the interpretation of the mind of the Lord as understood by the meeting, rather than by themselves, and quietly to resign rather than imperil the unity of a meeting. Congregations are 'to provide suitable homes for their pastors, furnishing them with the heavier articles of furniture, so that, on changing pastors, less expense may be incurred.' Gifts and donations for the 'Ministers' Relief Fund' are taken one First-day in each year."

Notes in General.

The decision of England's lord chief justice that no one can vote who does not pay the school tax is another hardship for passive resisters to endure.

In a discussion in the German Reichstag, Herr Bebel, the Socialist leader, opposed the enormous expenditure for the army and navy, asserting that the national debt had increased $100,000,000 during the year. Chancellor von Buelow replied that "a country which spends $750,000,000 yearly for spirituous liquors can spend $300,000,000 as an insurance premium for national safety."

Newell Dwight Hillis sums up the more obvious lessons of recent evangelistic meetings in cities of this country, as follows:—

(1) "People are more interested in the great problems of the soul and personal religion, when adequately presented, than they are in plays, opera, horse shows, society entertainments, business, comfort and rest, or anything whatsoever; (2) men and women will go to church night after night, if only the great truths of Jesus Christ are presented in a thoughtful and convincing sermon, by a man in whose sincerity and personal worth they have full confidence; (3) the people are tired of mammonism, worldliness, luxury and pleasure, for the so-called 'successful' man and woman have been chiefly in evidence during these meetings; (4) the interest in the higher religious life has seemed to be all but universal, and plainly the country is on the eve of a great religious awakening; (5) the best evangelist is a good pastor and preacher; (6) successful meetings can be carried on without great choirs, without pathetic music, without machinery or an expensive organization.

He adds:—"We ought to have another Pentecost—we may have it, we must have it, and we will have it—for God is abroad in the land, moving upon all the people."

CONSULTATION ON A SERIOUS QUESTION.—We have already alluded to a conference of presidents of colleges, abbots, clergymen, editors, and heads of Christian Associations, on the problem of securing more of the ablest young men for the ministry. The following is the Christian Advocate's epitome of the consultation recently held in New York City, showing some of the causes which were given as keeping men from the ministry:

1. The great openings in other lines of activity, especially business.
2. The decay of home religion.
3. Men feel they cannot enter the ministry under present ecclesiastical and creedal conditions.
4. Men who desire to enter some form of Christian service prefer other methods to that of the specific preaching of the Gospel.
5. The position formerly held by the minister as the chief centre of religious and other instruction in the community has gone, and cannot be restored. This has a profound effect on the supply.
6. The unreal standard which the Church makes for ministers, treating them differently from other men.
7. The opposition of parents.
8. An unsympathetic environment which prevents discerning the call of the Spirit of God.
9. Denominational crowding in small communities gives the impression that there is little opportunity for each one of the numerous ministers.

The following cablegram from Tolstoi, published by the Philadelphia North American, voices that root of the matter of national deliverance and uplifting which we have sometimes tried to express:—"The present political agitation among the Russian people resulting in a direct appeal to the Czar by representatives of the Zemstvos, aims to bring about a restriction of the despotism that now prevails and the establishment of representative government. What the results of the movement will be cannot be foreseen. The aspiration is not new, but the expression is. The question seems to be this: Will the leaders of the agitation achieve what they desire or anything approaching it, or will their efforts expend themselves in stirring up public protest without result? The country and the people are too great, and the gulf between the present government and the people, in some respects, is too vast to permit sensible forecast at this time. But I declare that, whatever the outcome, one sure result of the whole matter will be to hasten the social amelioration. This movement, which is hailed as the dawning of a new era of liberty, is but a new obstacle in the path of true progress. The real uplifting of a people, socially and governmentally, can be attained only through religious and moral regeneration of all the individuals constituting that people. Political agitation, whether by peaceful propaganda or appeals to existing powers of government, must have a fatal effect. It puts before the nation and before individuals the pernicious illusion that social improvement can be wrought by mere change of forms—that substitution of a different kind of government, or amendment of the existing kind, can accomplish reforms which, to be effective and permanent, must begin with the individual. The movements, so frequent in history, of so natural under the false teachings which have blinded humanity, invariably hinder real progress toward peace, justice and freedom for all. Constitutional government does not exist for the evils that afflict mankind. For proof of this, I point to conditions in France, in England and in America."—Tolstoi.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—Steps have been taken by the Senate and the House of Representatives in Washington for the impeachment of Judge Charles Swayne, of the Northern District of Florida, on account of high crimes and misdemeanors in office. The trial is expected will not take place for some weeks. It is stated that it has been 42 years since a Federal Judge has been arraigned before the Senate.

A large meeting was held in New York City on the 16th inst. to urge the prompt ratification of the arbitration treaties recently signed by the State Department with several of the leading foreign powers, under the auspices of the New York Executive Committee of the American Conference of International Arbitration. Similar meetings were held on the same day in New Haven, Conn., and Richmond, Va., and it is stated that meetings similar to this "will shortly be held in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago and San Francisco, so that our Senators in Congress may not be left in doubt that the ratifiers of the treaties of arbitration that President Roosevelt will, as indicated in his message, soon lay before them for ratification."

A despatch from Boston of the 12th, says: "New England is suffering from serious drought. The general information received at the United States Weather Bureau. Not a single town or city in New England reports a severe amount of precipitation for last month.

The temperature was the lowest for the month in the twenty years covered by the New England climatic and crop report. This has served to neutralize the general effect of snowfalls. Instead of snow being drained into the streams, wells and springs, the snow has remained on the ground.

A prolonged drought has been felt also in Central and Western Pennsylvania, causing great inconvenience and loss to farmers and certain manufacturing industries.

On the 15th inst. the resident trustees of a meeting in the Grace Reformed Church, of which he is a member, accompanied only by his colored valet. In the course of the meeting which was a large one, he said among other things:

"I think that any man who takes an interest in this great country of ours must realize that the one all-important necessity of our social, industrial and political life is the necessity of the realization of what brotherhood means. We cannot develop our civilization at all unless we develop it upon the basis of each recognizing in his fellow-man his brother, whose interest he must have at heart. No scheme of constitution, no kind of administration of the Government, will atone or can atone for the lack of the fundamental quality of each being in very deed his brother's keeper. I do not believe in any deal-out of feel on the part of the employer with his employee, on the part of the employer with his employer.

"Three-fourths, probably nine-tenths, of the labor troubles that sometimes assume so ominous a form would vanish if you could interest the people on each striving to approach the matter in the spirit we are striving to care for his fellows as he cares for himself."

"I hope to see the steady growth of the Christian spirit in this country, not merely among our congregations, among the members in their dealings with one another, but among the members of our congregations in their dealings with all mankind, in their dealings with the men and women round about them, and in no way can we spread the power and influence of our Church, in no way can we so effectively bear testimony to it, in no way can we so help in its growth, as by showing that we have been, according to our abilities, doers of the word as well as hearers, not hearers only."

In a recent session of the Supreme Court in connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company were involved, the Court held that the right of eminent domain is not granted to telegraph companies over the private property of railroads.

The investigation by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Pensions of the case Reed Sneed elected Senator from Utah has been resumed in Washington. Witnesses have testified of the continuance of polygamy in that State and of the unlawful and criminal methods employed by the Mormon hierarchy to retain and extend its power—and to control political affairs.

At the annual session of the annual conference of State sanitarians held in Albany, N. Y., Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, denounced the use of coal tar dyes for coloring butter, saying that while many of them have no direct poisonous effect, their continued consumption is injurious.

"For the past six weeks we have sought in vain in the markets of Washington and in manufactories nearby to secure a sufficient quantity of uncolored butter for the use of my hygienic table. This is certainly a sad comment upon the condition of affairs in the United States."

Judge Ashman, of this city, in a recent address on the necessity of maintaining the law on the observance of the First-day of the week, said: "I am willing to test this question without reference to religion at all, on the basis upon which all legislation for the benefit of the majority rests. The periodical day of rest is an absolute need of man and beast alike. Every newspaper in any or any other city, every social club and every voter who neglects to assail this natural law of moral and physical health, and to escape its obligation, is guilty of anarchism of the deepest dye.

"This question concerns the future of the country much more nearly than you or I perhaps, in a general consideration, may think." "I have no doubt of our salvation, but I am sure of the fact that we are in the main a Christian people. I am not so sure that the omens of our future are all so promising as some would believe them to be. We had better scan the horizon with care and adhere to the old landmarks."

FOREIGN.—A despatch from St. Petersburg of the 14th says: "It is no longer doubtful that the Government intends to commit itself to very extensive reforms as the result of the liberal agitation begun when Prince Mirsky made his advent as Minister of the Interior. The Zemstvo demands for a direct representative body to make the laws of the nation will not be granted, but some modification to the form of a representative consultative body, which can voice the wishes of the people direct to the sovereign, now seems the probable outcome. An entirely new law for the liberalization of the press also is apparently certain."

The struggle between Russians and Japanese in the neighborhood of Port Arthur has continued, with great loss of life on both sides.

A revolutionary demonstration took place in Moscow on the 18th, in which it is estimated 5000 persons participated, among them a large number of students. The crowds were finally dispersed by the police. More than sixty students were wounded and three hundred were arrested.

A despatch to The Public Ledger states that Canada and the United States have agreed to appoint an international waterway commission to investigate all water ways adjacent to the boundary line and to arrange understanding between both countries in respect to commerce passing through such waterways. To avoid international complications or misunderstandings in the future, all these waters will be reported upon by the commission. The commissioners will be arranged in equal numbers. Three commissioners will be appointed by the United States and three by Canada. The United States asked for the appointment of this commission and the Canadian Government agreed.

An ancient city in Rhodesia, South Africa, has been explored by R. W. Hall, of the Royal Geographic Society of London. The ruins occupy an area of several miles by one and a half, and contain some structures of great strength. Numerous skillfully made relics have been found, including ornaments, etc., of gold. It is supposed that these regions may have been the Opium Kingdom of Solomon.

A despatch from Constantinople says: "In consequence of American and British representations the Porte renewed its instructions to the provincial authorities allow colporteurs to sell Bibles in towns and villages. The Porte, however, persists in objecting to colporteurs traversing the disturbed rural districts of European Turkey on the pretext that their safety cannot be guaranteed because of the alleged fear that the colporteurs may tribute seditious literature to the Armenians. The American Bible Society is principally interested in Anatolia."

Statistics have been published to the effect that average amount of money in savings banks per inhabitant is $11 for the world, $37.38 for the United States. The lowest average in any country considered is in India where it is but 15 cents. However, several countries have a larger amount on deposit per inhabitant than the United States. Denmark leads with the high average $96.41. Switzerland is second with $62.26, and New Zealand is third with $49.51.

A despatch from Philadelphia says: "The late Prof. Albert T. Clay upon the methods of transac business in ancient Babylonia. The basis of the information which is imparted is about 250,000 inscribed tablets ranging in date from 290 B. C. to about 4500 B. C. They have been excavated at the site of the Babylonian city of Nippur by expedition sent thither by the department of archeology of the University. In this connection the name of the firm of Murashu Brothers, who were general business agents, brokers, bankers and money-lenders the reigns of Artaxerxes I and Darius II, the Ptolemies, 464 to 456 B. C., has become very prominent through the translations of many hundreds of cuneiform inscriptions upon tablets of sunburned clay, which were made by Professor Heikerp, Professor Clay and others. The lecturer likened Murashu Brothers to a firm of modern bankers whose business embraces more than the mere guarding and exchanging of money. All kinds of legal documents were found in the archives. Specimens of these have been published."

NOTICES.

Wanted—A reliable young woman Friend as mother helper in small family.

Address H.

Office of THE FRIEND.

A YOUNG man Friend wishes a position to work of school hours, or would work for board and lodgings upon suitable terms.

Address "A," THE FRIEND.

Wanted—A bright boy from sixteen to twenty old to learn plumbing supply business. Good opportunity for a person suitably qualified for mercantile life.

Haines, Jones & Cadbury Co.

1136 Ridge Ave., Phila.

The Moral Almanac for 1905 is now for Friends' Book Store, 304 Arch Street, price—single copies, by mail 5 cents; per dozen 30 cents, by agents; With paper cover, single copy 5 cents, by agents; per dozen 40 cents, by mail 49 cents.

Card Calendar for 1905 5 cents each, by mail 10 cents per dozen 60 cents, by mail 90 cents.

DIED, at her home near Salem, Ohio, on the 26th Twelfth Month, 1904, EUGENIE W. BROWN, wife of Thomas Y. French and daughter of the late Willard Anne Blackburn, in the seventy-fourth year of her age. A member and elder of Salem Monthly and Pa. Meetings of Friends.

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS,
No. 42 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 31, 1904.

No. 25.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.00 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments not business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

Published from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. DILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 140 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia, P. O.

SENDING ONE OF THESE LITTLE ONES.—

Friend of ours relates that a fellow-student of college came to her in spiritual trouble, confessing that she was taught by her parents some of the Bible was true and some of it false. Accordingly the whole Bible was offered to her mind as of no authority. Any change in it might be one of the untrue parts. Without any recognized authority for religion, truth, she was passing her life in secret work as an unbeliever. She yearned for a religion to believe. She longed for the privilege of believing as Christians believe, but reasoning having banished the Bible from her mind, she thought she could not believe. She confessed that she was in the sorrow of inward despair because she had no anchor to her soul.

When she saw the face of our friend's mother she exclaimed, "You ought to be more than I, for your mother's (Quaker) face shines to me how you inherit a peace which I have denied me!"

The restlessness of spirit that was discernible in the souls of members of families invited as this daughter of wealth, education and free thinking was, could not be concealed in the garment of culture and philanthropy in which it was clothed; and usually occasioned certain indefinable pain in the sympathetic heart of our young Friend during her intercourse with them.

Selected Light.

Some of our friends lately fell into conversation with a Romish priest whose apparent piety he admired, particularly in the following remark: "You observe the stained glass windows of churches. Red light may pour through one window, blue light through another, green light through another. But all are one light streaming into the church from the same sun. You sitting in the blue rays may see me sitting in the red, and say we have differing religions and nothing in common. And so there may be Christians of many distinct hues, but lighted by the same light of the sun. By whatever different light from yours you see us colored, ought you not to acknowledge us rather than disown us?"

There is truth in this teaching, good enough to "work both ways" as a claim for toleration. But does it not also say, that if we trace back the seven colored rays of light toward their common source, we do not find in its true combination the real light that proceeds from the Sun till we get outside the church windows? Within the man-made church the whole counsel of God is not admitted. We interpose a medium that shall separate the pure white light of Christ and let in only those partial rays that suit the profession of a mutilated Truth.

Accordingly, baptized in the light of our stained-glass systems of worship, they who are bathed in the red, or in the blue, or in the yellow, are each benighted of six-sevenths of the true illumination. In the one coloring of religion let in upon a soul he may grope in but a slender faction of the genuine light of Christ, the Sun of righteousness.

"The Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands." These bands, or artificial expedients, arrange to sift out and select such colors of the light as suit the creature. But he that doeth truth cometh squarely to the Light—out into the whole light of God—"that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in Him." And if we walk, not in colors, but in the light, as He is in the light, then are we in the unstained Church—"we have fellowship one with another," and are cleansed by the Life.

"Be universal in your spirits," said George Fox. Walk in the whole, unstained light of God—universal and saving. Avoid the intercepting and priestly media. There is but "one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus," through whom God can be truly seen, through whom the true light now shineth. Colored spectacles do not reveal Him as He is. Come to the open and direct light of Heaven and do the truth which the light makes manifest. It will lead thee and will guide thee to his holy hill and to his tabernacle.

For "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 187.)

Samuel Pettle, Thomas Evans and Joseph Elkinton, who had previously assisted the Indians in opposing the ratification of the treaty, took steps to have a duplicate copy of the remonstrance forwarded to the Secretary of War at Washington, which was promptly done, and the Friends advised the Indians, of whom there were eight composing the delegation, to write home and request that the affidavits and the other documents should be re-taken and properly certified and sent on, which was also done; and the Committee remark in their report: "We believe their appeal to the Government lost none of its force from the apparent untoward circumstance of these missing papers."

The Committee also prepared for them a Memorial to the President of the United States, setting forth the peculiar circumstances in which they were placed, briefly reciting some of the leading facts and soliciting delay of judgment in the matter until measures could be taken fully and fairly to represent their case. The Committee also addressed the President of the United States on the subject themselves.

After a considerable time spent by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the U. S. Senate in weighing the subject and the circumstances attending this treaty, this Committee finally found itself unable to agree upon any recommendation to the Senate other than to submit the facts for the future action of the Senate.

On the second of the Third Month, 1839, in the press and hurry of business at the close of the session, the Senate rid itself of this unpleasant matter by the following resolution: "Resolved, that whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the assent of the Seneca tribe of Indians has been given to the amended treaty of June 11th, 1838, with the New York Indians, according to the true intent and meaning of the resolution of the Senate of the 11th of June, 1838, the Senate recommend that the President make a proclamation of said treaty and carry the same into effect."

President Van Buren declined to assume the responsibility thus laid upon him, without making another effort to get the consent of the Indians, and the Secretary of War himself was requested on this occasion to meet them in council.

The uncertainty and suspense in which the Indians had remained for several years naturally had a very depressing effect on them as individuals and as a community. In its report to the Yearly Meeting in 1839, the Committee thus refer to this result of the long continued and distracting agitation: "The great obstacle to the improvement of the natives is the state of unsettlement and excitement produced by the unremitting efforts to procure the sale and cession of their lands. This painful subject has now been in agitation for several years, and a part of the Indians being in the interest of those whose wish it is that they should remove have been made use of to influence their brethren by hopes and fears and by promises of large rewards to consent to the alienation of their lands. Interested white men, actuated by cupidity, have not only endeavored to render their stay uncomfortable, but it is to be feared have greatly contributed to demoralize them on some of the reservations, fomenting divisions and quarrels, and encouraging the use of intoxicating liquors in order to render them a more easy prey to their devices.

"The state of things in the nation as respects this great question has gradually become more hopeless. Bitter animosities have been engendered and nourished, and the dissensions growing out of them have exposed both parties to the artifices and frauds of those who were watching for their own gain. In whatsoever light we view the subject, the peace, harmony and welfare of the nation appear to demand that it should in some manner be set at rest."

Shortly after the Yearly Meeting of 1839, it appeared advisable to the Committee that some of its members should visit the Seneca Indians, "in order fully to explain to them the views of the Government respecting them, as they were developed to the Sub-Committee during their visit to Washington; after which, should they deem it expedient so to do, they are authorized to attend the council contemplated by the shortly held with the Seneca Indians." In accordance with this conclusion Samuel Bettle, Thomas Evans and Joseph Elkinton were appointed.

These Friends accordingly met the Indians in council at Buffalo in the Sixth Month of that year, and a few weeks later on the Allegheny Reservation, and freely communicated to them the statements which had been made to them by officers of the Government respecting their intention to promote their removal to the Western country, and also the promise which had been made to them by the Secretary of War, that the Government will not force them to remove suddenly, but will allow ample time for them to make the arrangements and preparations for it; and that those who are determined not to go shall be allowed to remain on such terms as may be hereafter prescribed. "They also let them know that the President and Secretary stated that the Indians must be removed from the State of New York, but that the President had declared his intention to submit the treaty once more to the Seneca Nation and try whether any modifications of its terms could be made which would render it acceptable; and that the Secretary of War expressed a willingness to permit a further examination of the lands in the West, in order to make a selection more satisfactory to the Indians. The Indians listened to this address with intense anxiety. In some of them the prospect of being compelled to abandon their present locations appeared to produce a feeling of despair, while in others an indignant determination to contend and suffer for their rights was evidently awakened. They unitedly declared that they desired no new examination of the land west of the Mississippi, that they did not expect to find a more desirable location than their present homes, from which they were determined not to be removed except by force."

These Friends were impressed upon the Allegheny Reservation with the temptations and the evil influences to which the Indians there were subjected, and in their report of their visit remark: "As regards the state of the Indians on this reservation, the Committee believe their industry and sobriety have not lessened. Many of the chiefs and other influential natives discourage the sale of ardent spirits, but they are mixed up with a white population of corrupt principles and habits, whose influence is exerted to defraud and demoralize them, and who seem to regard no laws, human or Divine. Their location on a navigable stream is another source of injury to them. The boat and raft men are generally very licentious and depraved, and in their journeys up and down the river mix more or less with the Indians, spreading the poison of their habits among those ignorant and unguarded people. The anxiety to obtain possession of their land is also converted into an engine of evil to their moral standing, interested men not scrupling to aid in corrupting and degrading the Indian character for the purpose of rendering them obnoxious and furnishing a pretext for vexatious prosecutions and for driving them off the land. With all these causes operating to their disadvantage, it seems wonderful with the few outward helps which they enjoy that their morals should have been preserved as good as they are."

"The flood and frost of 1836-37 were more than mere temporary losses. Many of the natives who had acquired good stock were obliged to sacrifice it to the exigencies of their families during those years of scarcity, and have thereby been placed under disadvantages which they are not likely soon to surmount. The loss of their oxen and horses especially has retarded their farming operations and prevented them from planting as much as they would have otherwise done. This has led also to the practice of letting their lands to white people to farm on the shares, which seems to be increasing among them, and is likely in our apprehension to be productive of serious injury, promoting idle and roving habits among the Indians and opening wide the avenues for the influx of white inhabitants, who threaten to supplant them. Everywhere we went white settlers were to be seen, and there are two pretty large schools for their children on the reservation. The increase of this description of inhabitants within a few years has been rapid, and the laws preventing their settling on Indians' land appear to be inoperative."

As has been previously mentioned the President deputed the Secretary of War to make an effort to obtain the consent of the Indians to the cession of their lands and removing beyond the Mississippi. He accordingly met them on the Cattaraugus Reservation in the Eighth Month, 1839. This council Friends were particularly invited to attend, but upon deliberate consideration they felt best satisfied not to do so. The council, however, was held in vain as regards the efforts to obtain the consent of the Indians, and after reporting the result of his labors to the President, the latter declined to sanction the treaty, and transmitted it again to the Senate with information that, in his opinion, it had not received the assent of the Seneca Nation in the manner contemplated and directed by the former resolutions of the Senate, yet after a long discussion of the subject as the Committee in the report to the Yearly Meeting in 1840, mention that "that body passed a resolution by casting vote of the presiding officer, declaring that it had been sufficiently assented to by the Senecas, and advising and recommending that the President proceed to proclaim it and carry its provisions into effect. It has accordingly been proclaimed, and there is no reason to doubt but it will be executed at the earliest period at which its terms admit, and the Seneca Indians be compelled to abandon their improvements on the reservations to which they have so fondly clung, and seek new homes in the territory assigned them west of the Mississippi."

The proceedings attending the signing of this treaty were forcibly reviewed by a member of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Ambrose H. Sevier, a Senator from Arkansas in a speech delivered in the Senate when the treaty was under consideration. It may be found in THE FRIEND, Vol. xxiii, page 242, some editorial remarks upon it appear in same volume, page 273.

In the Yearly Meeting held in 1840, an appointment of the Committee was made, consisting of the following: Thomas Wis Thomas Stewardson, George Williams, Sam Bettle, Enoch Lewis, William Evans, Ezra C. Fort, Robert Scott, Thomas Evans, Thos Wistar, Jr., Henry Warrington, Joseph Elton, Jesse Spencer, Josiah Tatem, Israel Morris, David Roberts, Benjamin Whitall, M. Kaign, William Kinsey, Joel Evans Samuel Cope.

At the first meeting of this Committee Sub-Committee was appointed to address letter to the Indians, informing them of conclusion come to in the Senate of the United States, respecting the treaty with the Seneca Nation, and of the sympathy felt by Friends with them on this occasion. This Sub-Committee consisted of Samuel Bettle, Joseph Elkinton and Thomas Evans. After stating facts of the case and their sympathy for these Friends expressed themselves thus:

"Brothers, we affectionately desire that you may look up to the Great Spirit, our Father who is in heaven, and beseech Him to strengthen you to bear the afflictions that may come upon you, and that He will be pleased to take care of you, of your wives and your little ones."

"Brothers, your old friends, the Quakers of Philadelphia, have loved the Indians since the days of William Penn, and are still the same. They are desirous of doing what they can to help their brethren, the Indians, and they request us to tell you that they will continue to think of you and are willing to care for you and assist you.

"Brothers, the situation in which they will place you will present many circumstances which will require your serious and careful consideration before you attempt to act. We hope you will be very careful you do, lest you should increase your difficulties. Do nothing in a hurry or rashly, but act with caution and prudence, and if there is anything in which we can be useful to you, we shall be glad to render you such advice and assistance as may be in our power."

(To be continued.)

The Word of Honor.

"Why, I told him I would attend to it," said a young voice with a note of wonder and impatience in it—the voice of a boy of eighteen or twenty who, with an older friend, was passing down the street. "I promised him. What's the good of my promising to look after it if he's going to keep on worrying just the same?"

There was a touch of righteous resentment that was good to hear in the question, as if the speaker so valued his own word that he considered its passing should have ended all doubt. What is the good of any promise, indeed, if it is not to be relied upon. When one who is entirely capable of attending to any matter gives his word that he will do so, that should mean the lifting from others of all anxiety and all responsibility concerning it. But all round us, on every hand, are lightly passed the promises which have no such effect, though they are not the word of the vicious or notoriously untruthful in ordinary conversation.

Every fairly given promise is a "word of honor"—a pledge to be redeemed at much greater cost than the sacrifice of convenience or self-indulgence.

Upon our houses and lands appraisers set the value, the goods in our stores and warehouses must go at the market price, and we cannot regulate that; but our honor stands at our own valuation, is worth just what we make it. Is it not worth while to have it always in our thought as those patriots of old wrote it—"sacred honor"—and to have our word of promise that which can be rested upon with quietness and assurance by whoever receives it? Reliability, dependableness, are wondrously strong virtues to build into a life, and they add more than strength and nobility of character; they bring comfort and faith as well. Can one hold his own promise sacred and not feel an increased reverence for those which God makes? If our human word means so much to us shall this fail? "Hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?"—Forward.

WE trust there may still be preserved a remnant to uphold the standard of truth as professed by Friends, remembering that strength is not always in proportion to numbers. For we are told that "one shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight."

For many centuries the public worship of Jehovah in any degree of purity was confined to an insignificant fraction of the world's population; and they were often lamentably corrupt; yet they were preserved from utterly perishing, a remnant of vitality being vouchsafed them, which has taken deep root and is still growing, bearing fruit to the healing of the nations.—Iowa Yearly Meeting at West Branch.

PERSEVERANCE is the price of success.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

A Mutilated Query.

The query in regard to love and unity was doubtless instituted to keep in view the religious vitality of our members, Our Saviour said "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one to another."

He well knew that the love that would follow the work of regeneration, would not only distinguish his followers from men of the world "which lieth in wickedness," but would unite them together in bonds of harmonious fellowship. Our first Friends partook so largely of this blessed fellowship that they regarded it as a test by which their successors of future generations, might determine whether or not "they were in the faith."

But as it is generally known in the course of a century the Society as a whole had sadly lapsed from its first principles. About the beginning of the last century this lapse had become very great in much of the district embracing within Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

It must have been so or there could not have been the great falling away which marked the separation. Besides this evidence the writer of this well remembers the glaring irregularity that then marked large companies of nominal members. It was probably about this period that feeling disqualified to handle a query whether their standard of love was such as "becomes followers of Christ" that they changed its language, dropping the part on account of which it had been originally framed.

We have a reminiscence of Caleb Pennock, that speaks of some of his utterances about the year 1840 in regard to which it is said, that he deeply regretted the change in this query, that formerly had the explanation "as becomes the followers of Christ." I am not informed just when this clause was omitted but it is obvious that this aged pilgrim had remembered the query in its fulness.

To answer the query in its present mutilated form has been a trial to concerned Friends. "They have felt that to ignore the distinction between Christian love and the fellowship that loosely binds men of the world was not subserving the cause of Truth. There is reason to fear that the careless manner in which we have answered this vague query, has been productive of positive evil. Has it not tended to lull minds still wedded to the world in a fancied security, when it is said of them from quarter to quarter, "a good degree of love and unity prevail?"

Who does not know that a company whose minds are filled with political strife, or whose leading themes are the contests of games and races, if left free to associate, will not be found grouped with a company who hold nearest their hearts the spread of the Redeemer's Kingdom? To say "what fellowship hath Christ with Belial" may be putting it rather strongly, but there are all grades of approach between these extremes in the various attitudes of the human mind.

It is hardly conceivable that we can say of a people thus widely conditioned that love and unity prevail, until one common theme attracts all hearts and that theme, though greatly varied, always redolent with the praise of our Creator and Redeemer.

L. BALDERSTON.

Twelfth Month 23rd, 1904.

Lofty Titles In America.

BY CALVIN DILL WILSON.

(Copyright, 1904, by Joseph B. Bowler.)

Some time ago, when the President of the United States was seated upon a platform from which a well-known bishop was making an address, the speaker alluded to him as "his excellency," and the President whispered to the man next him, "I do not like that title." Later in his remarks the same speaker addressed the chief executive as "the President," whereupon the gentleman whispered, "I like that. That is right. I like that." The President was right. His judgment was in favor of the simpler form of address, which is more American, more modern and not Oriental.

If we consider the origin of such titles as "his excellency" we may be persuaded of their uselessness in a republic. They are not European derivatively, and do not belong to our type of civilization. They are Orientalisms, introduced by Constantine, who affected the manners of Asiatic courts. All the world knows of the many adjectived forms of address in China and India and Persia. There emperors, kings, rajahs, shahs, nobles and all high officials have all manner of "glory" and "splendor" and "sons of heaven" attached to them. These are absurd and grotesque to our western taste, yet we use certain of these phrases, modified or diluted, and by habit have failed to see their uselessness. We obtained these grandiloquent terms originally through the court of Constantine, which was an essentially eastern court.

The Romans in their best days were severely simple in manners and in forms of speech and address. A ruler was called imperator, Cæsar or princeps; they used no ostentation, no high-sounding phrases. They were content with power and its realities; personal merit they deemed enough without tinsel trimmings. In their decline they were corrupted in taste by oriental importations; then they substituted for the order of merit a system of rank and office, "from the titled slaves who were seated on the steps of the throne to the meanest instrument of arbitrary power." Every rank was carefully distinguished from every other; each had its dignities, ceremonies and privileges. "A profusion of epithets was adopted in the intercourse of pride and flattery, which Cicero would scarcely have understood and which Augustus would have rejected with indignation." The chief officers were greeted as "your sincerity," "your gravity," "your excellency," "your eminence," "your sublime and wonderful magnitude," "your illustrious and magnificent highness." The bearers of these titles used also emblazoned patents of their office, images of the emperor and of triumphal cars, and the standards of the troops they commanded. All was pomp to impress and ornament; all was theatrical. Officials were divided into illustres, spectabiles, clarissimi, prefectissimi and egregii. All this came from Asiatic courts, and was a corruption of European manners.

Something of this bombast found its way into Northern Europe in later times, and thence fragments of it came to us. But the fact that Constantine grafted foreign manners and fashions upon the Roman State is not good reason for us to perpetuate these exotic habits in a republic that has arisen in modern times. Let Europe have its majesties and tranquilities and clemencies and eminenes, if it will. If a man is a king, call him a king; if he is a president, call him a president. And it can be no concern of ours in what manner the Archbishop of Canterbury is addressed in his own country, so long as he is addressed courteously by ourselves. It is offensive that a special cable must be sent to America instructing us how the archbishop is to be addressed, and what the "College of Heralds" has to say about American pedigrees. What have we to do with these things? If we are to throw overboard our republican manners, let us go to the Orient and import the whole cargo of grandiloquence and fustian that existed when Europe was peopled by half-naked, painted barbarians.

In the early days of our government we were not far enough away from the old order of things to get rid of all impedimenta; but because Washington was called "His Excellency" is not good reason for the present use of the phrase. It is Oriental bombast. There is no grander title for any man than "the President." We might as well call him "his egregiousness," "his most perfectness," "his sublime and wonderful magnitude," as to call him "his excellency," except that European custom has perpetuated the last. And even then we are wrong, for European habit is to call only viceroys, ambassadors and governors "excellency." Let us have done with this trumpery; let us rather emulate the severe simplicity of Rome's best days and not the fustian of her decline. The best taste of the republic repudiates these pompous phrases. In our modern "Sartor Resartus" why keep these rags of faded tinsel?

SOMETIMES the Christian life begins very simply, especially with the young. Among those who have been under good influences in the home, the church, the school, and have been living sweet and gentle lives, free from grosser forms of evil, it is unreasonable to expect any violent "experience" or marked change in the manner of living. Failing to recognize this fact, many parents continue to wrestle with the Lord in prayer for the conversion of their children long after that change has really taken place; while the children and young people themselves, on account of the same mistaken impression, continue long in strong efforts and deep, unsatisfied longings to become Christians after they are actually living devotedly in God's service. It is well for us all to recognize how simply and quietly the Christian life sometimes begins. A thoughtful girl of sixteen years read the memoir of a Christian woman. On closing the volume, she said to herself, "That was a beautiful life." After a little thought she added, "And I shall like to live such a life." A few minutes later she knelt down and said, "Lord, I will try from this time." The decision was made. She went on steadily, and is still a useful and influential Christian woman, honored and beloved and widely known for her beautiful and devout character.—Extract.

THE best sermon is that which prompts the hearer to do the most right thinking for himself.

Charles Rhoads.

Desiring to present a series of extracts from the private Journal of our beloved friend, Charles Rhoads, we would introduce it by the following "Testimony of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting, N. J.," concerning him:—

"The path of the just is as a shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

To show forth the praises of Him who hath called men out of darkness into his marvelous light, and to illustrate the way and means by which they may become possessors of an heavenly inheritance, through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, is the object of our testimony to the Christian career of our late beloved friend, Charles Rhoads.

He was born First Month 21st, 1828, in Marple Township, Delaware County, Pa., and was the son of Joseph and Hannah Rhoads.

Under the careful training of these, his deeply concerned parents, he was reared amid the refining influences of a truly Christian home, where piety and intelligence of a high order were beautifully combined; being surrounded by many conditions favorable to a just appreciation of the value of the Christian religion, as exemplified in the lives of his godly parents, whose chief aim was to do the will of their Father in heaven, and to manifest the rule of Christ's life in their daily practice.

After attending the Friends' school at Springfield, Pa., he had the benefit of the guarded education afforded by Westtown Boarding School. And yet, valuable as were these influences, they at times became overbalanced by the propensity of human nature to gratify its carnal desires, by indulgences in some directions, from which his better understanding of obedience to the rule of holiness would have dissuaded him.

The Divine Spirit visited his soul in very early life. At five years of age, and again at six, his feelings were much overcome at times of religious exercises in the family. An interesting instance of yielding to a sense of duty occurred about his eleventh year, when having quarreled with his twin brother, on their going to rest for the night, penitence was followed by the restoration of love, which was never after seriously interrupted. Late in life he recurred to these early visitations of Divine love, softening his heart, giving him a sense of the nearness and loving notice of his Saviour, and leading to the belief that, though a straying, he was not a lost sheep. In his early public ministrations he has been heard to refer to his youthful failures, in the words of David, "Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions."

As he grew to manhood the want of a strong physical constitution was compensated for by mental energy which carried him successfully through much labor, both in his private business, and in the cause of truth and righteousness.

About his thirtieth year he engaged in business in Philadelphia, where coming into close relations with acquaintances who had not the strong conscientious convictions which had been felt by himself, he was led into some indulgences of fashionable life which delayed his spiritual progress. Having a home with his uncle, Charles Evans, assisted to keep him in touch with those whose lives were regulated by Christian faithfulness, and whose company counteracted in measure, worldly tendencies.

In his twenty-eighth year he married Anna H. Nicholson, of Haddonfield, which happy union continued for eight years. During this period he was a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Southern District.

In 1859 Charles Rhoads recorded a Divine visitation to his soul, after a long period of temptation to doubt and gloomy incertitude regarding the truth of the Christian religion. He says, "With an ardent desire to possess true faith in the Christian scheme of salvation, and constant aspirations after some tangible and indisputable evidence of its consistency with human reason, . . . I have often secretly been enabled to put up strong aspirations to the Throne of grace, that the great Father of light would be pleased to admit one ray of his illuminating influence into my benighted soul. No answer, however, seemed to be vouchsafed to these petitions, but I have been struck with those Scripture passages which enjoin—long continued and repeated prayer."

"Sitting in Friends' meeting in Orange Street with my mind much engaged in these inward aspirations to God, I was favored to feel a tendering influence overspread my soul, and its character was such that I could not doubt my blessed Saviour had in great mercy, visited me with the presence of his Holy Spirit; so that I could say, 'Surely my Redeemer liveth, and will yet give me the victory over the cruel adversary.' I could not but be assured after all my distressing doubts, that there was a real supernatural influence granted me, in great condescension, to rebuke my tempter and enemy. My dear aunt, Elizabeth Evans, prayed as it were, especially for me, adapting her description of a peculiar state so remarkably to mine as to completely dissolve me in tears. I cannot describe the relief of mind this visitation has afforded me, and I hope it is the dawning of a new day in my life."

Although thus helped over a most difficult point in his Christian course, he still found it necessary to take the shield of faith, and have frequent recourse to supplication for the help of Him who has trodden the winepress alone, and is ready to succor all who are tempted.

That Charles Rhoads never yielded to unbelief, or to the rejection of the faith of Friends, is proven by remarks penned in his sixtieth year. He writes, "I believe that the Society of Friends as an organization of Christian people, has been a great blessing to thousands who have been brought within its influence. . . . I feel it to be the highest privilege of my life to have had my birth and education in a God-fearing family, and among pious people of our Society. The freedom from many hurtful associations that boys and young men are subject to, where their parents are careless of religious duties, has been a great help to me in my youth. The doctrines and principles maintained by Friends since their rise, and in which I was educated, became early in life those of my conviction and deliberate judgment."

Anna N. Rhoads died in 1864, and in 1867 Charles Rhoads's eldest daughter Mary was suddenly called away. These events deeply grieved his sensitive and loving heart. That they were among the things which worked together for his good, he shows by the following extract: "Surely he who has seen meet to recall from me my most precious jewel after her sainted mother, finds it needful again to query 'Lovest thou me more than these?'"

His character as a business man was marked by sterling integrity, coupled with intelligence and experience, excelling many of his profession; which caused him to be sought after by friends and neighbors for advice, to whose applications he ever gave a ready response.

Those who were in trouble found in him a truly sympathizing friend.—The following entry in his Journal was made in 1866: "It has long been a subject of great concern with me in carrying on my business, lest I should lose that delicate sense of responsibility to the lost High for all my time and powers, through the engrossing character of my avocations. My religious obligations are clearly paramount to all others, and my mind has often been greatly straitened to arrive at a just discrimination of my duty in all respects. Truly Oh! Father, nought but thy wisdom can direct; no ass a power than thine can keep me from emptiation and failure to duty, through over-exertion about the care and support of my family."

In 1868 he makes this record. "Since my last memorandum, my spiritual experience has been of a varied hue; but I have felt that I might safely record, perhaps, a hope I have had to-day, that some progress is experienced from time to time, through Divine mercy, in that holy way which leads to the city that has foundations, whose builder and maker is God. It surely have I often to feel that I take any halting steps through want of entire dedication to, and humble faith in Christ."

Fifth Month 13th, 1866. After alluding to refreshing meetings enjoyed in silence, and contrasting them with a period when a wandering mind and worldly thoughts were attended by great barrenness of spirit, he makes these remarks, "If those who absent themselves from our weekly assemblies for want of interest to bring them (there) could but know peace and joy which will attend all, as I believe, who wrestle when there for the water of life, surely we should not have to mourn over so many almost deserted meetings as we do."

Charles Rhoads had received a call to the ministry, and had engaged in it in 1866. His natural abilities, which were above the average, were being sanctified for the Master's use, and that humility which marked his character is being deepened as the sense of his Saviour's loving favor was heightened in his soul. His memoranda, however, refer repeatedly to a need he felt of spiritual food from Christ; and the cleansing of his atoning blood; leading him to adopt the language of David, "Create in me a clean heart, Oh, God; and renew a right spirit within me."

He quotes the words of the Psalmist, "It is good thing to give thanks unto the Lord." and continues, "I trust that this sense of attitude was inspired by the good Spirit of our Saviour who alone can beget a true appreciation of Divine favor."

(To be continued.)

Be kind and gentle to the poor.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Days and Times.

In the early days, Friends were an exercised people; they had come away from the lo here's, and lo there's, found the pearl of great price and were concerned that they might keep it, which they realized could be only by watchfulness. They were criticised and abused often by those who had been their friends; and had none to look to but the Lord alone. This proved them and caused them to watch their doings and steppings. As time wore along and these outward oppositions more or less ceased, Satan had an opportunity to beguile the unwary, and when they kept not properly under their first exercise, they lost. "Thou hast left thy first love."

As this deth of exercise was not persevered in, and that greenness preserved as at the beginning, consequently the Lord did not have their close attention to that extent, that he might use them as instruments, in his way, in his work, and while there was an apparent industry, yet there was an idleness of spirit which gave Satan an opportunity. The spiritual senses were not so keen, and worldliness found place more easily.

This handed down from father to son showed its fruit, but when the son yielded to the fresh visitations of Divine Grace, in all cases offered, there was a revival in individual cases at least, compatible, more or less, to that of those valiant sons of the morning. In all cases I believe we will find they were led out of the world, and the spirit of it, and still are when obedient to the Heavenly counsel. It was so in the Apostles' days, and because of laxity in some, Paul was led to write, "ye observe days and times, I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed labor in vain."

Do we not profess as a people to follow the same and walk in the same Light as they? "How is the gold become dim, and the fine gold changed." Is there not also a corresponding change in all the testimonies? Is there that deep love and true unity, heartfelt, not in word, but in power?

My beloved brethren every where, is it not time to return a little more to the faithfulness of our forefathers, ere it be too late, yet in mercy, ere judgment come upon us? To seek that we be clean, not pattering after one another, but after the lowly Christ in the way of the cross. To renew our covenants with an offended, but covenant keeping God, to return to our first love, earliest deep exercise and watchfulness, that we might be brought out again from the world and spirit of it into which we have wandered by neglect of our watchword, viz: "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself, take up his daily cross and follow me."

Oh, the joy and the peace that belong to such; hated of the world where'er it be, but chosen of God, such truly know each other and are known.

"The bond which binds these hearts gathers its strength from the degree of the faithfulness they bear to our Heavenly Father through the influence of the eternal spirit, Christ Jesus the righteous." We as Friends send forth our printed testimonies setting forth our belief in the Holy Scriptures, which testify to plain language, denying of self, and against feasting and the ways of the world. Will not those who read, look for examples in us?

May there not be many, unintentionally as it were, almost unconsciously, asleep as to these matters? spiritual ease, quietness as to outward trouble. "When the Lord's judgments are in the earth, then will the inhabitants learn righteousness." Sorrowful truth, not till then! "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead and Christ will give thee light," is the precious invitation to such.

George Fox testified that while others were feasting or engaged in idle pastimes, etc., on such days, in his earlier experience as a testimony against it, he sought the destitute, etc.

My beloved brethren, these indulgences ought not so to be, and such who will honestly, candidly and perseveringly examine, will find conviction to lead them away from the observance of days and times, and unto sobriety and watchfulness; and instead of thus standing idle, would find the Master's work for them, and could answer to those who have well provided for the occasion and often repented in sickness as a result, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of, my meat and drink is to do the will of Him who sent me." "He that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger," and is honored with clearness of vision, a lamp to the feet.

Oh, if we thus sought Him, how would there still be the shout of a King in our camp. It is not simply that we might bear the cross, that we might be conspicuous, a peculiar people; but beside this, on the other side of the leaf, hidden from the wise, it is that we might realize the precious privileges and blessings that befall such. After that the tithes have been brought in, (read iii Malachi) that they may be meat in the Father's house. "Then they that feared the Lord spoke often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it."

If the Lord should pass along the way on the feast days, for such they truly are, when would he find much difference among observers of such. The wicked would be laughing over his beer, cards and the rest, and would be any more ready to receive Him; would we not be too much saying in conduct, "Go thy way for this time, at a convenient season I will call for thee."

Do we use some other day to fare sumptuously? Is it a time to feast, and not rather fast from all evil, and appearance of it? Do we not as a people acknowledge we are in the wilderness? Then why not rather be intent to seek our way out?

Oh, I stand, my beloved people everywhere, to stand fast in the faith. Let the Caleb and Joshua's stand in the gate and be as a sign. Let us tell the children what God did for us, what He required of our forefathers, what He still requires of us. Let us be clean, that with us may still abide the law.

I know there are those who will laugh and mock, but in the solemn day of account may we all find mercy in God through Christ Jesus.

Then let us begin in sobriety right now.

With love, your brother in the Truth,

CYRUS COOPER.

SALEM, OHIO.

JUST to keep sweet and to repress uncharitable opinions, is to go far toward commending the Gospel.

Estes Newhall.

Testimony of Salem Monthly and Quarterly Meeting of Friends, in the State of Massachusetts, Respecting Estes Newhall, deceased.

He was the son of Daniel and Hannah Newhall, and was born at Lynn, within the limits of this Monthly Meeting, on the ninth day of Ninth Month, 1770. His parents were members of our religious Society, much esteemed, his father filling acceptably the station of an elder. Their pious care for the right education of their children was blessed in their preservation, in a great degree, from the alluring and corrupting influence of the world, its follies and its vices. The subject of this testimony having lived to an advanced age, and having survived nearly all his contemporaries, we are not able to speak of his childhood from personal knowledge, but it is believed that he was circumspect beyond his years in early life, and from his own testimony it may be stated that while young in years he was made acquainted with the secret touches of Divine love, drawing him into seriousness with desires to become what his Heavenly Father would have him to be. In early manhood he is remembered as a consistent, humble and conscientious Friend, evincing love for the Truth and for Truth's ambassadors and advocates; his house the home of hospitality especially to such, and his heart ever open to receive them and bid them godspeed. He was diligent in the attendance of our religious meetings, not allowing worldly cares or concerns to interfere with this duty, and even in old age he travelled considerable distances from his home to accomplish this object; and his solid deportment and the seriousness of his demeanor in our meetings, gave evidence of the weightiness of his spirit in his approaches to his Maker in worship, and of his concern that in the ordering of the discipline all should be done under the qualifying influence of the Truth.

He was of a cheerful temperament and naturally inclined to make himself agreeable in his intercourse with all with whom he fell in company. Yet through the restraining influence of Divine grace he was preserved from allowing this disposition to betray him into improper levity, or light or frivolous conversation, so that though fond of free and cheerful converse, his social intercourse and his speech were in accordance with apostolic exhortation accompanied with grace, seasoned with salt. In early life he entered into business requiring careful attention and much thought and industry, and he experienced in his outward affairs vicissitudes to which men of business are ever liable. Through these he was careful to maintain his integrity and to sustain a good reputation, which he carried through life as a distinguishing trait of his Christian character.

About the twentieth year of his age there was a time of increased seriousness and zeal among the members of the meeting to which he belonged. Some among the lukewarm were stirred up to a greater degree of religious concern for their soul's everlasting welfare, and were made partakers of the consolations of the gospel. On this occasion our beloved friend was, we apprehend, made to experience a deepening in the divine life whereby the work of the soul's salvation was furthered. In the year 1799 he was appointed an Overseer in our Monthly Meeting, which office he held, by reappointments from year to year, for more than fifty years. He was well qualified for the discharge of the duties of this station, and labored faithfully therein, much to the acceptance of Friends, and with so much Christian love towards those on whom his labors were bestowed, that the esteem of such for him was rarely lessened and often increased.

In the forty-second year of his age he was introduced into the Select Meeting by his appointment as an Elder, for which station he evidently was gifted. On this occasion it is remembered that deep baptisms were his portion under a sense of his own inability, without the blessed Saviour, to do anything to promote his cause, and very weighty was his spirit in entering upon the office to which he was appointed. For the many succeeding years of his life he fulfilled the important duties of this responsible station with great acceptance, encouraging the weak and feeble ones, and administering caution and advice as occasion required, to the comfort and edification of the Church and to his own peace. He was several times companion to Friends travelling in the ministry, as well within his own Yearly Meeting, as to parts more distant from his home. Cautious in his movements in the affairs of the Church and prudent in counsel, he was yet firm in his convictions of right and faithfully bore his testimony thereto, steadily persevering therein through various trials to which Friends have been, from time to time subjected.

Our beloved friend was deeply sensible of the fallen condition of man by nature, and of the degeneracy of the human heart; but we would commemorate the goodness and mercy of the Lord in that we believe he was enabled through his grace to fight the good fight of faith, and to know an overcoming of his soul's enemies.

He was twice married; first to Hepzibah, daughter of Paul Wing, and second to Miriam, daughter of Joseph Philbrick, who survives him. Happy in his domestic relations, his home, which was the house of his birth and residence through life, was the abode of cheerfulness, and his children have reason to rise up and call him blessed. Of domestic bereavements he had his full share in the removal by death of his first wife, and of dear friends and of children to whom he was doubtless looking for comfort in his old age. In these bereavements it was instructive to observe his struggle for Christian resignation, and how earnestly he desired to be enabled to say, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." We have long been accustomed to look to him as a nursing father in Israel, to whom we could apply for counsel and advice, and upon whose shoulders was laid much of the weight and responsibility of the affairs of the church. His memory is dear, and his removal is indeed a loud exhortation to us to gird up the loins of our minds, to watch and be sober. He was green, even in old age, and within a few days of his final release he was engaged, in company with a minister, visiting the families of Friends in his own meeting. He was taken sick on Second-day the sixteenth of Second Month last and continued until Seventh-day, the twenty-eighth of that month, when he quietly departed. In his sickness he was cheerful and composed, without anxiety as to the event, and as we reverently believe, has, through the mercy of God in Christ Jesus, joined the just of all generations in singing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

His remains were buried in Friends' burial-ground in Lynn on Third-day following, after a solemn and favored meeting held on the occasion, wherein at his grave divers testimonies were borne to the efficacy of that grace by which he was what he was.

Signed on behalf and by direction of Salem Monthly Meeting aforesaid, held at Lynn the fourteenth of Fifth Month, 1857.

STEPHEN A. CHASE, } Clerks.
ELIZA B. BOYCE. }

The Human Soul.

Several years ago much interest was awakened by finding lost treasure at the bottom of the Mediterranean. Divers brought up chests filled with gold coin and jewelry of great value. It was off shore, where, near a hundred and fifty years ago, two famous Russian warships were sunk in a naval battle.

There is always a fascination about the finding of lost treasure. But ever since the human race was sunk by the fall of our first parents in Eden, the greatest field for finding lost treasure is the human soul. As in Central Africa there are plains and matchless scenery, and mines of wealth where no white man has ever gone, so in every soul there are unexplored depths and rich mines, and scenery which strikes the explorer with wonder and awe.

The latest exploration has proved that the human soul is a marvelous organism, separate and distinct from both the mind and the body. It is that part of man which bears the likeness of his Creator. One feature of that likeness is that it is immortal. The mind and the body require periods of rest, but the soul like its creator, never slumbers nor sleeps. The mind obtains its knowledge through the aid of the five senses. It is related to the nerves much as electricity is related to wires. But the soul can live and act when the mind and senses are asleep. In fact, the less it is entangled with this physical machinery the more powerful its action and the more perfect its consciousness. Like its Creator, it is limited neither by time nor space. At the hour of death it throws aside the body as wornout garment and breaks through every circle. No walls can confine it; no flames consume it; no rocks or mountains can crush it; no floods can drown it; no time exhaust it; plummet can sound its depth. It is the source of the emotions, the throne-room of faith, love and conscience and imagination. It is the great storehouse of memory. The mind recollects, but the soul does all the remembering; and why I stand in awe of it is that sometime it will emerge into such perfect consciousness that its memory, like a mirror will give back every word and deed of my life.—M. A. Gault.

An artesian well never runs dry, because it has gone down beneath the weather. So are the Christian's unfailling resources.

John Hoowee.

John Hoowee, of Youghal, when in health, was rather a careless attendant of meetings, and in conversation, and evinced much lukewarmness in religious concerns. He was taken with a dropsical complaint and difficulty of breathing, with which he struggled for some time without much apparent alteration in the state of his mind, but about the Tenth Month, 15, he seemed to become more serious and thoughtful, and expressed to a friend that frequently visited him, "that he had gone through great deal which it was not necessary to mention," by which from the manner it was understood, he no doubt meant inward suffering. On the fourth of Eleventh Month a friend remarking to him that there was the sure Helper and Supporter, and recommending his seeking to Him and that it was a favor to have time allowed, he replied, "His mercy is beyond all mercy, and his goodness beyond all goodness; if it was not for his helping hand I should not have been able to have borne what I have gone through. I have feared of his judgments, but it's none but those who have felt of his mercy that can bear witness to the goodness of God," which were expressed as if he felt what he was saying.

On another friend mentioning his children and that Providence was kind and often provided for such in an extraordinary manner, he said, "Oh, He is good, and his goodness is incomprehensible; and when He takes us in the hand, none can help us from getting" and a little after added, "He is a help every time of need."

He said to a person sitting by him, "Health is a great blessing, and those that have it should be careful and thankful to the Lord for preserving it. I don't know that I did anything in particular to make me so well," meaning his being so afflicted in health, "but oh, the Lord is good! and it may be designed to bring me to a more intimate righteousness and nearer communion with my God."

After this he seemed to mend gradually a while and entertained some hopes of a recovery, but about the second or third of Eleventh Month, appeared again to decline, and in the evening of Second-day the 4th, on a friend's calling to see him he appeared very poorly, and on sitting up in bed, being seized with great pain in his sides, he called out earnestly, "Oh Lord God Almighty, help me," and a little after said, "He is riches in mercy, and strength in weakness," when the friend said, "I hope, John, thou wilt find Him to be so to thee," he replied, "Yes, I feel kind to me many times," after which he appeared to supplicate, but the only words heard were, "help—assist—for without thee," afterwards took the friend's hand, and said, "Oh, thou art welcome to come see me; I am friendly to come."

Next morning the fifth of Twelfth Month, about three o'clock, he breathed his last, and we trust has in mercy been permitted to enter that city whose walls are of salvation and its gates praise.

Dare to be true!

Nothing can need a lie.

The fault that needs it most Grows too thereby.

Missionaries to the Indians.

It appears that two young men were prepared at Princeton college to be sent as missionaries among the Indians. In order to habituate themselves to the hardships that awaited them, they lodged upon boards. When they set out upon their mission, several persons of respectability accompanied them to the Creek Nation.

When arrived, the chiefs were called, a conference was held with them, and it was proposed to call a council, which being met, the visitors informed them that they had brought two ministers of the gospel to preach salvation to them, and also a number of books, which would lead them the way to heaven.

The Indians received the information without apparent emotion; and said they would consider the subject, which should occupy the space of fourteen days. Meantime the young ministers proposed preaching; but the Indians would not suffer them, until their own conclusions were made.

At the expiration of the fourteen days, the Indians made inquiry, whether they had any dark-colored people among them, and whether they preached the gospel of salvation to them, whether they gave them those good books, which would show them the way to heaven; or whether they treated them as slaves, or as brothers.

Being answered accordingly, the Indians again spoke, "Go home, and preach the gospel of salvation to them; give them those good books, that will learn them the way to heaven, treat them as brethren, and not as slaves; then come and preach to us."

In consequence of this refusal, the whole missionary company returned, and one of them who was in the station of a congressman, was so affected with the circumstance, that he emancipated all his slaves.—Joseph Clark's Journal.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

SECRET EXERCISE. — A reader desires to emphasize and extend the following quotation: "The deep labor of suffering works a work in the spiritual realm, a work that changes conditions for us among spiritual forces, a work that prepares deliverance for those for whom it is wrought."

A mighty truth, little taught, less comprehended, true not alone of the Christ, but of every soul that enters the secret place of the Most High.

B.

Items Concerning the Society.

Haverford Monthly Meeting was opened on Fifth-day evening the 22d instant, after an interval of forty years since it was laid down. Two men were present at this re-establishment who witnessed the closing of the Monthly Meeting in the same room in Fifth Month, 1865.—Allen C. Thomas and Francis B. Gummere. About 150 were in attendance, including the committees from the Quarterly and the Monthly Meetings. A solemn season of silent and vocal worship preceded the opening of the business, in which all but one of the six voices heard were of visiting ministers.

David G. Alsop and Charles James Rhoads were named as clerks for the evening. The proper documents and minutes due for the opening of a New Monthly Meeting having been carefully and orderly prepared, enabled the business to proceed smoothly and with dignity through all the steps of a fresh organization. One hundred and thirty-nine members were attached to this Monthly Meeting through their own or parental preference and the action of Western District Monthly Meeting in thus assigning them. When the business common to men and women Friends was completed the women Friends withdrew and formed their own monthly meeting more completely.

The whole proceedings seemed to be of historic interest, and devolving an important responsibility on Haverford members, especially in the sight of many students who may find in its future proceedings an object lesson for their own conduct of the Society's business elsewhere.

John E. Garrett applied for a minute for religious service among the members of Muncy Monthly Meeting, Pa., which was feelingly granted.

It is ninety years since a monthly meeting was set off by Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, that of Western District having been instituted in the year 1814. One other Monthly Meeting, that at Lansdowne, has been set up within the past year by Concord Quarterly Meeting.

Notes in General.

It is a sad pity that we white men are so afraid that the Chinese will swamp us all if we allow them to come in. At least we may be glad that the new treaty negotiated with China will allow students and travelers to be admitted. Mandarins who wish to see our country and who come with plenty of traveling money will be allowed, if they will not stay too long. There are those who are trying to exclude the Japanese, as if we were in danger from the few thousand who have crossed the Pacific.—Independent.

The real "simple life" is the one in which all the activities, all the aims, are directed toward one end—the fulfilling of the will of God in ourselves, and in all that we do. To serve God, to do his will completely through this day and every one of the coming days—that is to be free indeed. He who is the servant of God is the slave of turmoil and care no longer. He has entered into a calmer, saner world, a world where every step is supervised by the great Master, the only Master who can bring right out of wrong, and can save us from all our blunders.—O. S. Davis.

A plan to provide Charles Wagner, the author of "The Simple Life," with a church edifice in Paris has been formed by John Wanamaker, Levi P. Morton, Robert C. Ogden and others. It will probably take $150,000 to erect a building suited to Pastor Wagner's needs. The family of Levi P. Morton recently were members of the Wagner congregation, and he will contribute to the fund and work to secure money from others. A committee of ten will be appointed to handle the fund. John Wanamaker said recently: "In his present little house of worship in Paris Mr. Wagner is not able to accommodate the many who are eager for his teachings. Many Americans in Paris have appreciated this fact for a long time, but have needed assistance in the matter of raising funds. This is a great opportunity for Americans to perform a service which will tell for good, not only now but in years to come."

Madame Wu, wife of the Chinese minister recently recalled to China, went back with unbound feet. Her residence in this country so convinced her of the superiority of natural feet that she willingly endured the pain necessary to regain their normal shape. The toes that had been pressed back to the heels, and kept tightly bandaged all the time, were gradually allowed to assume the natural position, until finally the bandages were removed entirely, and she could walk with ease. She said, in speaking of her feet: "My feet are quite big now, but I do not care, for I am not in sympathy with the little-foot practice in my country. It is unnatural and deprives a woman of so much that is beautiful and useful in life." She also said: "There are many American customs which I like and shall introduce in China. The Chinese women are eager to take their places in life along with the women of other nations, and I hope it will not be long before they will be given a reasonable amount of freedom."—Missionary Review of the World.

The fragments of the old book which contains the newly-found "sayings" are known as the Oxyrhynchus, one and two. These words given as those of Jesus are:

First, ". . . and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

Second, "Jesus saith, 'except ye fast to the world ye shall in no wise find the kingdom of God, and except ye Sabbathize the Sabbath ye shall not see the Father.'"

Third, "Jesus saith, 'I stood in the midst of the world and in flesh was I seen of them, and I found all men drunken and none found I athirst among them. My soul grieveth over the sons of men because they are blind in their hearts . . . poverty.'"

Fourth, "Jesus saith, 'whosoever there may be . . . and when there is one only . . . I am with him. Raise up the stone and there thou shalt find Me, cleanse the wood and there am I.'"

Fifth, "Jesus saith, 'a prophet is not acceptable in his own country, neither doth a physician work cures upon his own relation or acquaintance.'"

Sixth, "Jesus saith, 'a city built on top of a high hill and established cannot fall or be hid.'"

Seventh, "Jesus saith, 'thou hearest into thy one ear . . .'"

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

UNITED STATES.—A despatch of the 23d from Washington says: John Hay, Secretary of State, in a second circular note to the Powers, made public to-day, suggests that a further interchange of views preparatory to the formulating of a programme for another Peace Conference at The Hague be effected through the Inter-Allied Bureau under the control of the permanent administrative council of The Hague. The Secretary summarizes the replies of all the Powers to his note of Tenth Month 21, and expresses the gratification of the President at the cordial reception of his invitation. Having taken this initial step, however, the Secretary says: "The President feels that he has gone as far as he appropriately can, and that with the general acceptance of his invitation in principle, 'the future conduct of the affair may fitly follow its normal channels.'" Regarding the conditional acceptance of Russia, Secretary Hay says that while the postponement which this reply necessitates is to be regretted, the President recognizes the weight of the views which induced it.

The Administration's plan for dealing with the trusts has been made public in the first annual report of Commissioner James R. Garfield, of the Bureau of Corporations. He recommends the adoption of a compulsory Federal license or franchise system for all corporations desiring to do business, practically giving the Government control over all trusts. Among the features of this plan are the following:

"The granting of a Federal franchise or license to engage in interstate commerce.

"The imposition of all necessary requirements as to corporate organization and management as a condition precedent to the grant of such franchise or license.

"The requirement of such reports and returns as may be desired as a condition of the retention of such franchise or license.

"The prohibition of all corporations and corporate agencies from engaging in interstate and foreign commerce without attaining Federal franchise or license.

In the recent examination of witnesses in the Smoot case in Washington it was stated by a prominent Mormon that there is a large Mormon settlement in Mexico, and that one-third of the population of Idaho, and one-fourth of the population of Wyoming are Mormons. Other States and Territories having large settlements are Nevada, California, Arizona, Colorado and N. W. York, while Iowa has a large settlement of the reorganized church, which drew away from the other church because it did not believe in polygamy.

A despatch from Boston of the 20th says: Not within the memory of any but the oldest men has New England suffered as much from drought as now. In most parts of Massachusetts there has been no copious rain for six months. New Hampshire and Vermont are similarly situated, so that hills all along the Merrimac from Newburyport to Lowell are almost as dry as now or working part time or depending on steam power. Local authorities long ago issued warning notices to consumers urging them to be sparing in the use of water, for in numerous instances the reservoirs are almost dry, and the springs which feed them have dwindled to moist ditches. Water is sometimes brought in wagons considerable distances. Reports for rain have been offered in congregations in mill towns, where the bread and butter of the inhabitants depend on the operation of the mills. The Weather Bureau records no such prolonged drought during its existence of thirty years.

A despatch from Philadelphia of 25th says: "The drought which has afflicted western Pennsylvania industries $1,000,000 a day is broken. It has been eight months since the Ohio River has been navigable for coal floats. As a result, cities on the big streams have been suffering for want of fuel, since all railroads have been too much crippled by the droughts to aid the sufferers. The coal shortage is not confined to western Pennsylvania, who had been suspended from work because of the drought, have received orders to report for duty. Of these there more than 15,000 are coal miners.

In the mountains no water could be had, and the inhabitants, as well as live stock, were sorely afflicted. Many were said to have died of starvation. The mountains are covered entirely on melted snow. More than one inch of rain has fallen in the past twenty-four hours, the snow is nearly all melted and, in consequence, the streams and springs are running fairly."

A despatch from Washington of the 20th says: The commission which has been considering what standards will be adopted for food products to-day submitted its report to Secretary Wilson, who immediately approved it. Among the substances particularized are vinegar, milk, lard, sugar and molasses, spices, peppers and numerous by-products. The flour standard calls for not more than 13.5 per cent. of moisture, not less than 1.35 per cent. of nitrogen, not over 1 per cent. of ash. The report also contains the results of the late Presidential election shows that Roosevelt, Rep., received 7,627,632 votes; Parker, Dem., 5,080,054; Debs, Socialist, 291,587. Swallow, Prohibition, 260,303.

The annual report of the Governor of Alaska, John G. Brady, estimates the total white population of the territory at 29,550, with possibly a small increase in the native population since the 1900 census, which made the total number of natives 25,536.

In a recent report it was stated that the Southern States have 24 per cent. of the native white population of the country and 64 per cent. of the native white illiterates of the country. This is due to the enormous and dangerous work of negro illiteracy.

The Pennsylvania Railway Land Company, it is stated, has bought tracts of land in Maryland and Delaware for the purpose of growing trees for railroad ties. To be desirable from the point of view of the company land must be not more than $6 to $10 an acre, and adjacent to the railroad. The largest tract is in Pennsylvania, near the Maryland line. This year, near Altona, a forest of over 25,000 trees was set out.

A German scientist has discovered that peas, beans and other leguminous plants gather more nitrogen from the atmosphere than other plants, and that this is done largely by microbes which are found by the million in the soil about their roots. Dr. Geo. T. Moore, of the Agricultural Department at Washington, has suggested a method whereby these germs can be gathered and multiplied and finally distributed with the soil, there to absorb the nitrogen from the air and infuse it into the life of the plant. He can now fill a small piece of cotton with millions of the germs, dry it and send it to any part of the country. The experiments show wonderful results, in some instances the yield increasing eight and even tenfold. After a sowing of lands with inoculated seed the next crop following feels the effect of it. Under such circumstances potatoes have increased 50 per cent., cotton 40 per cent., wheat 46 per cent., and oats 30 per cent.

It is said that Professor Willmet M. Hays, a graduate of Iowa Agricultural College, has, after experiment with a number of wheat seeds, obtained one which, used two years ago, added 50,000 bushels to the yield of six bushels who employed it, the average advance being 4 1/2 bushels per acre. This year it was used by two hundred farmers and with a gain of 500,000 bushels.

The annual report of the Dawes Commission on its work for the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Indian Territory, has been made public and is a general review of the partition and allotment of the lands of those Indians during the past six years. Of the difficulties of the work, they say: "Every adult or head of a family in a total of more than 200,000 citizens and claimants was personally examined and their tribal records were fully reviewed. Of this number, and in this way, more than 120,000 have been examined. The proceedings were all taken down, especially as every case could be carried to Washington on appeal, and often the record of a single case was hundreds of pages in extent. Of the above number of people, approximately 90,000 will be finally allotted to lawfully possessed tribal membership and property rights." Seven years will have been consumed in this work if it is completed by Seventh Month 1st, 1905 and the administration of these communal estates, amounting to nearly 20,000,000 acres of land, and to perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars in actual values, if it is stated, will then have cost less than ten cents per acre.

The amount of snow fallen during the Twelfth Month of this year is said to be greater than during this month of any year since 1884.

FOREIGN.—A despatch from St. Petersburg says that the manifesto on the subject of reforms, approved by Emperor Nicholas, will contain four principal points. First, each Zemstvo shall send to the Council of State three representatives to advise on the question of internal affairs; second, that the press censorship shall be abolished and the press made free; third, that freedom of conscience shall be allowed, and, fourth, that elementary education shall be made compulsory throughout the empire.

Another despatch says: The special committee appointed in 1902 to investigate the question of the betterment of the conditions of the rural populations and the general revision of peasant laws, of which Witts, the president of the ministerial council, is chairman, has decided in favor of the extension of the system of State loans to agricultural banks to land-owners, especially to small farmers, for the purpose of the improvement of additional lands. The Emperor has formally approved the recommendations.

A despatch from London of the 23rd says: Dense fog envelops England, and there is as yet no sign of its lifting. The absence of wind throughout Great Britain almost completely stops the Railway traffic, both for long and short distances, is almost paralyzed. The destruction of life in the continued bombardment of Port Arthur by the Japanese is reported to be very large.

NOTICES.

Wanted.—Experienced Friend desires position as companion, care of invalid, or housekeeper. Address "E," Office of THE FRIEND.

Wanted.—A middle-aged man, or younger, competent to manage household duties. Address "R," Office of THE FRIEND.

Wanted.—A reliable young man Friend as mother's helper in small family. Address II., Office of THE FRIEND.

Westtown Boarding School.—For convenience of persons coming to Westtown School, the stage will meet trains leaving Philadelphia 7:16 and 8:18 A. M., 2:45 and 4:42 P. M., when requested. Rates, one fare, fifteen cents; after 7:30 P. M., twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, W. West Chester, Phone 1144.

EDWARD G. SMEDLEY, Sup't.

Owing to an error in the composers' office, the arrangement of dates for the Eighth Month on the Friend Card Calendar for 1905 is incorrect. A new sheet has been printed and will be mailed free to any recipient the Calendar who will send name and address to the Friend Association, Friends, No. 304 Arch St., Philadelphia. By careful cutting of the incorrect sheet near the top, the new one can be pasted on the stub left. To all purchasers on record, these new sheets will be mailed, but as the names and addresses of cash purchasers are not kept, will request of THE FRIEND kind direct the attention of recipients to the error and give the means of correction. Also will those who have been interested in distributing the Calendar, kindly give corrected sheets to such recipients?

WILLIAM H. FILLIS'S SONS, PRINTERS
No. 22 Walnut Street

THE FRIEND.

A Religious and Literary Journal.

VOL. LXXVIII.

SEVENTH-DAY, FIRST MONTH 7, 1905.

No. 26.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price if paid in advance, $2.10 per annum.

Subscriptions, payments and business communications received by

EDWIN P. SELLEW, PUBLISHER,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE,
PHILADELPHIA.

(South from Walnut Street, between Third and Fourth.)

Articles designed for insertion to be addressed to

JOHN H. HILLINGHAM, Editor,
No. 110 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILA.

Entered as second-class matter at Philadelphia, P. O.

WOULD THAT "THE FRIEND" WERE ONE OF THEM.—There are many religious periodicals, and the Christian Instructor, that come regularly to our table week by week. There are some of them we take up to read at once. They are not always the ones printed on fine sized paper, with flashy covers and filled with beautiful engravings. No, those are not always the ones best for souls hungering and thirsting for righteousness. Such are not always the ones that savor most of Christ, who said "no beauty that we should desire Him." They may tell all about the world as they have gathered facts from the godless secular press. They are often great with the flashy advertisements or with so-called religious fiction. On the other hand, we pick up some plain and unpretentious sheet whose outside and entire make-up show how straitened the publishers are to make ends meet, indicating that they are not publishing the papers for the money that is in them but for the love of the truth which they would desire to disseminate abroad. There we are likely to find the arrow of the gospel, the heavenly manna that feeds immortal souls. The spirit of truth is in them.

Here, then, lies the secret of their power. The world's lusts are not attractive. The power of God's truth is in them, and their influence for the kingdom of Christ goes beyond the other class. They are often opposite sides of questions from ourselves. Many things we take issue with them from week to week. But even in their opposition there is such a spirit of sincerity and godliness as to do souls good.

It is not pandering to advertisers nor to the opinion of the world, or winking at the bad customs and institutions of the world, that gives power. It is the same spirit of truth and love that is yet to conquer the world and establish the throne of the Redeemer on the ruins of the wrong-doers of the world. It will yet strike down even the most powerful systems of error and sin, no matter how long or how deeply they have been entrenched in the favor of the world. It is that which will yet, in its imperceptible progress, break in pieces the greatest armies of navies and transform their weapons of war into implements of culture and peace.

Nations, Christian and Pagan.

It is sometimes hard to choose between the christianity of one bearing the name Christian and that of another not claiming such a name, because we cannot see into their hearts. From the Divine standpoint, "if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Accordingly the nominal Christian may be less a Christian than he who not assuming the name is yet in spirit the more Christ-like. For the kingdom of Christ stands not in name, but in conformity to his power and spirit; not in profession but in possession of that which is of Christ himself.

Of two who are equally denying Christ by war with each other, we are told to prefer that nation which professes the name of Christian. But the name, however national, is not enough to make us know which is Christian, where both alike are in the same sin. Indeed we know not where to find any nation that is Christian, judged by its national conduct and spirit.

The carrying of a national or state church, under persuasion that it is the church of Christ, only adds to a nation's condemnation as worse than heathen if it does unchristlike things. Accordingly of two men or nations operating on equal grades of behavior internal or foreign, and one of them professing Christ and the other not professing Him, the one professing the Christian name or church is confessedly the less Christian of the two, as sinning against greater professed light and knowledge.

The divine foundation for the name of Christian "standeth sure, having this seal: The Lord knoweth them that are his," and "If any man (or nation) hath not the spirit of Christ, he (or it) is none of his," and this corresponding seal: "Let every one that nameth (or beareth) the name of Christ, depart from iniquity."

We are willing Japan should not profess Christianity till she at heart possesses it. But she will never possess it if she takes the practical standard of so-called Christian nations for her rule, or thinks she is taught that war is Christian because her antagonist is ranked as Christian, or that the atrocities of Europeans in the Boxer war were a part of the texture of Christianity. No, whenever Japan possesses Christianity, she will get it—not from Russia, not from England, not from Germany or the United States, called Christian nations prematurely—she will get Christianity from its living Source, Christ himself. She will have learned, and perhaps partly through these misrepresentations of Christianity, to see no man or nation, "but Jesus only." And while nations in their official conduct may be misrepresentations of Christ, there are, we believe in all of them, devoted individuals who are truly representations of Christ by his Spirit, who if rightly led among that people can persuade them, and do persuade some, to whom to look as the Fountain of Christian truth and life. Then by the living and inworking Word of God may the precious exhibit be sifted from the vile, the seals fall from a nation's eyes, and the day dawn in which it shall not have to be said as is said of the imperfect presentation, in a letter before us which a cultured Japanese Christian has written: "I believe I can say this without hesitation, that the said Christianity which was introduced into Japan is the mere shadow, appearance, smell and residue of the true Christianity and nothing more. Or else how can it be so powerless? I feel very sorry indeed."

But Japan does not stand alone in this starving on husks. The nations which by virtue of their name as Christian should have been better examples of the true, are one with her in the need, and in the manfully advancing cry, for the true spirituality of the gospel dispensation. What Christendom needs is Christ. Even Quakerism, as now held so languidly by professing members, its own alarming need is Christ, held less loosely, lived more entirely. Let no man take thy crown, while the increase of his government and peace is advancing.

QUAKERISM is the witness of the Holy Spirit carried into practica. Though it is generally that churches generally are now pronounced in the acknowledgment of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, yet the word "witness" still fixes for us a distinct place. We affirm the perceptible authority and influence of the Spirit of Truth, while others stumble at the word "perceptible."

NOTE.—None of our writers who may find in their mail an occasional copy of THE FRIEND, should feel that they are peculiarly obligated by its receipt. Such a copy is authorized only as paid for by a few friends who are not connected with the management of the paper. If they are desirous of this salutary medium, let us hear of it by meeting in some fraternal interest or aspheric care.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

The Indian Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

(Continued from page 185.)

The information thus conveyed to the Indians was truly distressing to them. In acknowledging its receipt, Governor Blacksnake and nine other of the chiefs remark: "The intelligence of the confirmation of the treaty caused many of our women to shed tears of sorrow. We are sensible that our situation is such that we stand in need of the advice of our friends."

In conformity, however, with the intention they had constantly expressed during these negotiations that they would not remove, a general council of the chiefs opposed to the treaty was called upon receiving intelligence of its ratification, in which a resolution was passed, subscribed by sixty-seven chiefs, that they would remain on their lands, that their minds were unaltered on the subject of emigration. In communicating this information to Friends, the ten chiefs above referred to add in their bewilderment and anxiety: "We wish you to tell us whether there is not some chance for us to remain here we now are, or shall we be compelled to remove?"

About this time a communication was also received by the Committee from the band of Senecas residing at Tonawanda, who were also involved in the common calamity, and whose case was a particularly hard one,—as out of six hundred who composed that tribe but one individual, and he, an Indian, residing at Buffalo, had signed the treaty. In expressing their alarm in regard to this matter, and their uncertainty as to the action which they should take, they remarked: "We look to you and solicit your advice and your sympathy under the accumulating difficulties and trials that now surround us. We feel more than ever our need of the help of the great and good Spirit to guide us aright. May his counsel ever preserve and direct us all in true wisdom." The communication concludes in the following pathetic words: "Brothers, we want the President to know that we are for peace, that we only ask the possession of our just rights. We have kept in good faith all agreements with the Government. In our innocence of any violation we ask its protection. In our weakness we look to it for justice and mercy. We desire to live upon our lands in peace and harmony. We love Tonawanda. It is the residue left us of the land of our fathers. We have no wish to leave it. There are our cultivated fields, our houses, our wives and children, and our firesides, and here we wish to lay our bones in peace. Will our brethren inform us whether General Dearborn in signing the treaty at Buffalo intended that it should comprehend the sale of the lands of the whole Seneca Nation, or only that of those who signed it? Will they inform us whether the Governor of Massachusetts has signed this treaty? Brothers, in conclusion, we desire to express our sincere thanks to you for your friendly assistance in times past, and at the same time earnestly solicit your further attention and advice. Please to send us word without delay. We want these agents and surveyors should be prohibited from our land. Brothers, may the Great Spirit befriend you all, Farewell!"

In deliberating upon the course which the Committee should recommend to the Senecas on their different reservations at this time, Friends saw no prospect of relief. An appeal to the Supreme Court had been suggested to the Indians, which as a possible means of help, they were disposed to grasp at; yet with the recent case of the Cherokees in mind, Friends could see no hope for them there. In replying to their inquiries Friends were obliged to say: "Brothers, you are acquainted with the Cherokees and their treaty. They had a strong plea of fraud in regard to the proceedings relating to it, and their case was brought before the Supreme Court, but the Court would not entertain it; they decided that there could not be such an appeal. We have taken the opinion of John Serreant, of this city, an eminent lawyer, one well acquainted with the business and very friendly to the Indians, who was counsel for the Cherokees in their suit and pleaded their cause. We believe him to be conscientious in the opinion he has given us, and he thinks it would be of no avail to you to resort to the United States Court; that you would gain nothing by it. The opinion of such a man is entitled, we think, to great weight, and he is strong and decided in giving it; besides, it would cost you much money to prosecute such a suit and end in disappointment; and you had need to store up all your money for your future wants."

After deliberating upon this affecting subject, there appeared to be no other course left than honestly to express the conviction that the Government intended to remove them, and that no exertions of theirs would be likely to prevent it, and Samuel Bettle, Thomas Evans, Joseph Elkinton, Robert Scotten and Jesse Spencer were appointed to state these views to them, and if the way should clearly open for it to pay them a visit.

Discouraging as the prospect appeared to be that the Indians would be allowed to remain on their reservations, yet as time passed on and no decisive steps were taken by the Government to remove them, hopes were entertained that some means might be found to avert this calamity, and the alternations of hope and fear attending different reports which reached the Indians kept them in a state of great apprehension and unsettlement during the years 1840 and 1841.

In order to carry out the provisions of the so-called treaty, an appropriation of money by the House of Representatives was necessary. This had not been done, and the period which elapsed between the dissolution of Congress in the Third Month, 1840, and its assembling in the Twelfth Month of that year, was one in which the political conditions of the country underwent a great change. The Democratic party, of which Martin Van Buren was a member, by the elections which occurred in the fall of 1840, lost its power in the councils of the nation. William Henry Harrison was elected President, and another class of public officials became influential.

Desirous of rendering such aid as might be in their power, correspondence had been held by members of the Committee with members of Congress on the subject of the treaty during this period, and two of their number visited Washington in the spring of 1841, when they were informed by the Secretary of War, then lately appointed, that it was his determination, and that of the other officers of the new administration to give to the treaty and the circumstances attending it a thorough examination, and to adopt such a course respecting it as justice and humanity to the Indians would dictate. The fact that the treaty had not received the assent of two-thirds of the Senators present, which is required by the Constitution to make it valid, but was carried by the casting vote of the Vice President on was a strong point against it.

Joseph and Rebecca Battey, who had for several years been usefully engaged at Tunesassa, were released at their own request on the tenth of Twelfth Month, 1841, and Robert Scotten, who had felt willing to spend some time there again, agreed to go out and remain in their place. Joseph Elkinton accompanied Robert Scotten to Tunesassa, and while there they had a council with the Indians, in which an address from the Committee and other documents were read and explained to them. The address, after stating the situation of the affairs at Washington, concluded as follows: "Brothers, amid all your engagements and difficulties, we wish you to remember that the great business of this life is to prepare for death and for the world to come; that we must all give an account to the Great Spirit of our actions in this life, and receive a reward of happiness or misery according as they have been good or evil. May you and we then endeavor to live in the fear of God, and to see his favor, that through his blessed help we may be kept from all sin, that when done with this world we may meet in another better country, even in heaven, there to live forever in happiness and peace. Brothers, farewell."

In the Second Month, 1842, Samuel Bettle and Thomas Evans were informed by one of the Senators at Washington that no measure had been taken by the Government to carry the treaty into effect, and that he did not think "there will be any attempt to execute the treaty." At this very time, however, steps had been taken, unknown probably to most of the Senators at Washington and to the Friends mentioned above, which in the course of a few months entirely changed the situation of affairs and rendered fruitless any further attempt to oppose the execution of the treaty.

After the withdrawal in 1827 of a large portion of the members of the Yearly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, on account of doctrinal views held by them, differing from those of early Friends, these members organized another body. An intercourse was maintained for some years by a Committee of this body with the Senecas residing at Cattaraugus, and one or more families of their members resided for a time among them. Early in 1842 the Committee associated with Committees of the Yearly Meetings of Genesee, New York and Baltimore, which were in correspondence with it, set on foot efforts to bring about a compromise between the Ogden Land Co. and the Indians, and for this purpose held a conference with Thomas L. Ogden and others in Washington, in the presence of John C. Spencer, New York, the Secretary of War, in the Fifth Month, 1842. The result of this conference was an agreement by which the Ogden Land Co. agreed to give up the Allegheny and Cattaraugus Reservations, retaining the Buffalo Cr and Tonawanda Reservations. The provisions of this agreement were embodied in what was called a supplementary treaty, which was afterwards laid before the Indians, and, in the course of few months, was reluctantly agreed to by them (excepting by the Tonawanda band, who entirely rejected it). It is now known as the treaty of 1842.

Some of the motives influencing the Ogden Co. to assent to these proceedings are thus referred to in a history of Cattaraugus Co., New York, published in 1879: "The Secretary of War, John C. Spencer, acting on a proposition which had been made, wrote to Thomas L. Ogden, suggesting to him whether 'considering the efforts that would be made and the powerful influences that would be enlisted to befriend the Indians whatever might be the issue of a suit, as the contest would lead to a protracted litigation and involve very heavy expenses: would it not, therefore, be to the interest of the Land Co. to endeavor to enter into some compromise by which they might come into an undisturbed possession of a portion of their purchase?' And he added: 'If this course should be approved, he would endeavor to assist in carrying it into effect.'" "Without entering into further details, it is sufficient to add that Mr. Spencer's droit argument of protracted litigation, involving much delay and heavy expenses, had its effect with the Ogden Co., and induced them to consent to a compromise by which some fifty-three thousand acres of Indian lands were restored to their owners. The Company might well be satisfied with this result, for it obtained its grip on nearly two-thirds of the entire area, including the more valuable of the lands."

The course thus pursued was believed by the committee, who had so long labored to assist the Indians in this matter, to have been very wise. The Sub-Committee, who had been engaged for several years in assisting to defeat the treaty of 1838, remark that they cannot but deeply regret that this compromise, so evidently favorable to the Ogden Co., was so hastily gone into and urged upon the Indians; believing that had Friends been permitted patiently to pursue, without interference, the measures which they had originated and matured, the unjust and oppressive treaty of 1838 might have been defeated, and if another had been gone into at all, much better terms for the Indians been obtained."

(To be continued.)

MODERN PROPHETS.—Every man who has a moral message to humanity wears the prophet's mantle.

It is a very narrow view of truth which limits the sphere of the prophet to the sacred desk. He who gives expression to the divine ideal in human motive and conduct, wherever he may be—in the pulpit or on the Bench; in the class room or in the Senate; elevating public opinion through the press; or creating better conditions among the helpless poor—is ever the same seer, herald, the mouthpiece of the lost High.

THOSE who seek and find can testify that God does satisfy and enrich. Truly lack of surrender of heart is a worse form of unbelief than intellectual doubt.—Interchange.

THE GATE OF THE YEAR

I saw a countless multitude before a golden gate
I saw their eager earnestness, I saw them watch and wait;

I saw the Porter opening, His gracious form I knew
And yet alas; how thoughtlessly that giddy throng passed through.

How few with heart-felt gratitude adored the wondrous grace
That opened thus another year to our unworthy race,

How few were they who turned aside to give Him
thanks who stood,
And watched as with a weeping eye, the rushing human flood.

I saw the aged trembling come and pass that golden door;
But would they pass that heavenly Friend so often passed before?

He looked, he spoke, he stretched his hand as o'er the step they trod;
But no, their eyes were turned to earth, they passed the Son of God!

I saw the young step lightly up, I heard the Saviour say,

Young man, give me thy noble life, my blessed will obey;

And as a maiden hurried through, He drew her near his side,
"Forsake the world's frivolities; I love thee, I have died."

I saw the matron and the sire, in life's meridian prime;

I saw the feeble and the strong pass 'neath the gate of time;

On, on into another year and yet, alas, how few Who even turned a glance on Him whose mercy let them through.

Oh! traveller at the golden gate, the Saviour speaks to thee,

"Believe my love, believe and live, commit thy soul to me."

Stay, wilt thou thus trust the year, or shall the Lord be passed?

Nay, at its threshold, bring Him now, lest it should be thy last.—Coptic.

Funeral Customs Attacked.

Speaking at the men's meeting of the Broad Street Baptist Church recently, Madison C. Peters appealed for the abolition of funeral pageants, and protested against the "ghastly humor of our mourning customs."

"It is high time," he said, "that we had in our country a funeral reform. 'Christian burial, falsely so called, is irrational, gloomy and despairing. Paul's glad music of victory over death and the grave is muffled by the raven feathers of funeral plumes. The waving crepe upon the door-knob, the darkened windows, the body shrouded in gloom, women and children veiled and draped in black, men's hats banded with crepe, all these things express no Christian comfort and suggest no immortal hope."

"It is a satire on real grief which mourns in secret. How often young women complain that they have to go into mourning, their only compensation being that it is becoming to them. We have 'full mourning,' 'mourning jewelry,' 'mourning visiting cards,' and 'mourning stationery' which, by its gradual narrowing, indicates that the days of mourning are approaching their end. But the ghastly humor of our mourning customs reaches its climax in 'second mourning,' followed by the full bloom of gorgeous colors, for the time appointed by the inexorable decree of fashion has passed, and now mourning may be laid aside with funeral garments.

"It is false reverence and mistaken affection and downright dishonesty if expenditures are indulged in that cannot be met. Do not keep your flowers for your dead friends. A rose to the living is more than sumptuous wreaths to the dead.

"Generally the less good a man has done, the more good the preacher is expected to say of him, and the preachers often discharge their duty in this particular in such a way as to bring their profession into ridicule. The most sacred place to hold a funeral is in the quiet home."

The Honesty of Women

It has long been an axiom, in cases of men who default, forge, abscond, or embezzle large sums "Cherchez la femme." The expert takes for granted that a woman is always behind such dishonesties. Yet it would seem that man excuses himself, in these cases, at the expense of the woman, as Father Adam did in the Garden; for it is a conspicuous fact that woman, employed in business affairs herself, is strikingly honest. Women bookkeepers do not embezzle; women as merchants pay their debts promptly; women as Treasury clerks are known for their integrity. The boarding-house keepers, themselves generally women, testify that their losses almost invariably come from male boarders, while those of their own sex are to be depended upon for regular payments.

Woman, left to herself, is thus found to be more honest than man. In coming into the commercial world, she brings to it a high standard of personal honesty. It is this quality that she owes part of her rapid advancement into the places which formerly were occupied by men alone. She is economical and careful of her employer's interests too, and he is not slow to recognize her value in this respect. Whatever the drawbacks of feminine labor—and they are many—woman's instinctive honesty is an important factor in redressing the balance and inclining the market in her favor.

If woman is thus honest in herself, why does man excuse himself by accusing her of making him dishonest? It is safe to say in many cases a woman is extravagant simply because she has no idea whatever of her husband's business affairs, nor of the value of money. It has happened more than once that a woman whose extravagance has been the ruin of her husband has supported herself and children after the crash, and done it honestly and economically. Of course, there are some dishonest women in the world; but if there is one fact proved by the entrance of women into modern business, it is that their personal honesty is at a premium and that man lags behind their standard.—Harper's Bazaar.

"GUARD me when I am off guard," prayed one the other day. It was a wise prayer, for it is not the danger against which we have fortified ourselves, the temptations which we know and are watching, which are so likely to compass a fall as some unthought-of point where no peril was suspected.

Charles Rhoads.

(Concluded from page 197.)

Referring to his success in business, for several years previous, he makes this note, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits? Grant, oh, Heavenly Father, that these blessings may not prove a snare to my soul, and rob Thee of that devotion of heart, soul, and time, which is thy due."

In the Third Month of 1870 he was united in marriage to Beulah S. Morris, of Germantown, in whom he found a wife who could join him in his spiritual exercises and aid him in efforts to the relief and elevation of many less favorably circumstanced. Among these were the colored race, towards whom an active charity was extended, and personal visits were made to their homes, schools and religious meetings.

Charles Rhoads had continued to exercise his gift in the ministry as renewed calls to service were from time to time extended; and in the Ninth Month of 1872, the Elders of his Monthly Meeting decided to propose official recognition of his gift.

In connection with this, he makes these remarks: "It is now nearly seven years since I first felt an obligation laid upon me to speak in the way of public ministry. During the intervening period of probation my spirit at times has almost fainted by the way; and I have been ready to exclaim with the prophet, 'Oh Lord God, behold I am a child, I cannot speak, yet I feel bound to acknowledge the unbounded goodness of Israel's Shepherd, that He has renewed his covenant with so poor and halting a servant, from time to time, and has not utterly taken his word out of my mouth."

"It is no small relief to my faltering spirit, that those Friends who are constituted the judges of such affairs by our church discipline, are so satisfied with the genuineness of my commission to the high and holy calling of a minister of the gospel of Christ.

"And now my hope is in Him alone, who is able to guide and keep his servants. And my prayer is unto the God of my life, that I may be endued with the armor of faith and humility, and not seek great things for myself."

He elsewhere had written the following: "My views of the qualification of those who speak in the Lord's name have been confirmed; that they must proceed directly from Him who is the key of David; 'who shuts and no man opens, and who openeth and no man can shut;' and a clearer light seems to have been cast upon my path in this service; which I trust emanates from the Sun of righteousness himself."

In 1872 he concluded to break off from the active pursuit of business, and remarks in regard to it, "It is a relief of mind to think of being more free from the close attention which seems necessary to carry on a successful one in a large city; and it is my earnest desire and prayer that being so favored by the great Author of all our mercies, I may more assiduously devote the remainder of my time to his service."

That his spiritual progress should be unimpeded, he was often engaged in prayer, and he has left numerous expressions of his longings in this respect. The following relates to this close introspection. "It is not sufficient that we set our faces Zionward and make some progress in the heavenly path. We must know the entire government of our hearts to be upon his shoulders, and that his heavenly kingdom has been set up there. In this state we shall bring forth fruit unto holiness, and honor the great Husbandman."

1876. In looking back to the affliction brought to him by the death of a beloved wife and two children, he observes, "I think I can set my seal to the scripture truth that 'the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether; more are they to be desired than gold, yea than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb. Moreover by them is thy servant warned; and in keeping of them there is great reward.' . . . How regardless of my true, my highest interests has my compassionate Redeemer proved himself to be, in thus loosening the bonds which had tied me too closely to temporal enjoyments."

1877—First Month 21st. "This day I enter my fiftieth year. Is there any growth in the Truth? This I feel to be a pertinent inquiry for me as age advances. The apostle exhorts to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. And of some he could say, 'Your faith groweth exceedingly.' I need more crucifixion of self. Not my will but thine, oh Lord, be done."

Some of his spiritual exercises at this time may have been a preparation for entering on extensive service in a distant field.

Third Month 18th, he remarks: "The concern of my mind relative to religious service distant from home continuing to press upon me, with fervent petitions to know the Divine will respecting it, I believe I have been favored in his compassion to so unworthily a servant, to have the clear pointings of the Shepherd's finger, that it is laid upon me to visit Friends in Kansas in their meetings, and also to attend the meetings held at some of the Agencies in the Indian Territory; and perhaps to appoint some meetings among those not professing with Friends, in those parts."

The concern received the approval of his Monthly and Quarterly Meetings. The unsettled state of our Society in those parts caused painful solicitude in the prospect of this visit; and his prayer was put up in the language of Moses: "If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence."

After the completion of this visit, he expressed his feelings in this fitting language, "Bless the Lord, oh my soul; all that is within me, bless his holy name." In the journey, which occupied about nine weeks, he had the congenial company of our late friend John Sharpless. All the service indicated above was accomplished, and its value is still remembered by Friends in Kansas Yearly Meeting. A general visit to Friends of North Carolina was performed in 1880, in company with his brother Joseph Rhoads.

Before and after this period he was frequently engaged in ministerial labors within the limits of our Yearly Meeting, either from his personally being drawn to it, or in connection with committees. As a member of the Westtown committee his labors in the ministry are believed to have been blessed.

1877. After alluding to his appointment by the Meeting for Sufferings to the Book Committee, and making observations on the distribution of Friends' writings, he says: "Having read much (religious) literature, and seen a good deal of professing Christians of most denominations, I am now well satisfied that the doctrines and practices of the ancient Friends are those of Christ and his apostles."

In 1878 he writes, "Oh, how weighty does the office of a minister of Christ often feel to me. May every unhalloved thought be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. May I be filled with Divine love towards all for whom Christ died; considering my own former sins, now blotted out, may I not reverently trust, through his pardoning mercy, upon faith and repentance."

First Month 21st. Recounting many mercies and blessings, he exclaims, "The hope and assurance of a rich and free redemption from the thraldom of evil, through the atoning blood of Christ is the climax of them all."

Again, "The veil seems lifted, and the way into the Holiest of all opened by Him who is the Way, the Truth and the Life."

In the course of the next year he suffered much from weak health and acute illness during which time, much searching of heart was known, and his prayers were earnest for entire purity of heart, and for communion with his Lord.

His interest in the cause of morality had led him to take an active part with others in the suppression of vicious amusements in his county, which was successful in abolishing the horse racing at Gloucester.

The evils of intemperance claimed his earnest efforts for the prohibition of the liquor traffic. He was for years a member of the New Jersey State Temperance Alliance, in the meetings of which he used the opportunity to explain the religious views of Friends. Respecting taking a public part in this cause he says, "I feel a caution not to compromise our testimonies in connection with it. I am satisfied there is no need to throw off the Friend, or our peculiar testimonies in moving amongst others, and that there is a Power which will preserve and carry safely through times of trial."

1880. In a family meeting he said, "Al my life's experience tends to increase my estimate of that religion which restrains the indulgence of the vain mind, in the friendships and allurements of a worldly spirit."

Calmness and dignity, tempered by cheerfulness and affability, marked his intercourses with others. Firm in his convictions, and fearless in expressing them, yet with tenderness, he found a place in the hearts of those with whom he came in contact. His reverential attitude in times of worship was impressive. His ministry was clear, sound and edifying, skillfully dividing the word of Truth in vocal supplication his utterance was often in much brokenness and self distrust.

Richly endowed with gifts natural and Divine, he was a faithful steward of his Lord's goods. Using the talents bestowed, their gain was manifold to the praise of the Giver. Advancing years and impaired health formed no excuse for neglect of the Master's work. I 1887 he wrote: "Pay thy vows unto the Most High. A sense of such an obligation is present with me. Oh, that it may be attended with his grace and strength to fulfil it. We may b nsible of our duty, but not devoted enough, to unselfish enough to carry it out. To love me and adore in Spirit and in Truth, we require to be transformed by the renewings of the mind, an infusion of Christ's spirit, and shall we not have this? Yes, He has said his Father will give the Holy Spirit to them who ask Him for it."

The uncertainty of prolonged life was evitently often present in his thoughts. The following review of his life may be appropriate: "I have been much favored with marital and social surroundings and sources of joyment in my life; but now as I near three score and five years of age, though I humbly trust, grateful to my Creator for all his bounties to me and mine, there is nothing on which my spirit can rest with solid satisfaction and peace, but the merciful love of God to man through the gift of his dear Son, as our sacrifice and atonement on the cross; and of his Holy Spirit as our baptizer and sanctifier from the pollution of sin, through faith and repentance toward Him. This blessed hope is an anchor to the soul, when the pleasures of sense and intellect decay and pall on the diminished physical powers; and I bless and praise my Heavenly Father that his unmerited grace to me, a poor unworthy sinner, has been an abundant in faith and love. That He has borne with me in my wayward youth, leading me out of darkness into his marvelous light, and from the power of Satan to yield myself up to Him for the washing of regeneration; and now in my advanced years not resting me off for my weakness and infirmities; but reviving a right spirit within me, and giving me at times the joys of his salvation, and the living bread which nourishes the soul to everlasting life."

The last entry in his journal is dated Twelfth month 9th, 1902. The following is an extract: "I have been quite sick and at times seriously so, but am now able to be about the house, and am regaining my normal vigor gradually. It has been a season of deep proving as to my foundation on the only Rock, which will stand in the day of account. There seemed at one time but a narrow step between life and death; and fervent have been my petitions that the work of sanctification might be completed before the day of probation is ended, and that an entrance might be granted, as an unworthy servant, through the atoning blood of Jesus, and the washing of regeneration by his Holy Spirit, into the mansions of heaven, when the spirit should vacate the earthly tabernacle. Truly I can say with the Psalmist, how excellent is thy loving kindness, oh Lord; therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings."

"Some assurance was felt in these times of trial that He would receive me for his mercies' sake."

On his seventy-fifth birthday a fresh accession of disease rapidly reduced his strength, and his life ended on the twenty-fifth of First month, 1903, with the voice of praise to Him who had redeemed him to Himself.

WM. C. COWPERTHWAIT, Clerk.
SARAH NICHOLSON.

How the soul of man rejoices in a living God who comes in touch with the need of the hour.

THE GUEST OF EVERY DAY.

Homely work is mine to-day,
Floors to sweep, and fires to lay,
Plates to wash, and clothes to mend;
Work which never seems to end,
Yet I pray,
Jesus, be my Guest to-day.

Not as one to dwell apart,
In the spare room of my heart,
But as One to whom my prayer
May confide the smallest care,

Thus I pray,
Lord, be Thou my Guest to-day!

He reproves me if I fret
Over work unfinished yet,
Checks me if I make a task
Of some work He does not ask;
My dear Guest
Wishes me to work and rest.

At the closing of the day,
When once more my heart shall say,
In this busy life of mine;
"All the glory, Lord, is Thine!
Christ, I pray,
Be the Guest of every day!"—Selected.

Deep-Toned Spirituality.

Our hope of continued existence, says the Free Methodist, depends largely upon the tone of spirituality which we as a church are in possession of. The demand for our existence as a church at all grew out of the fact that the departure from primitive devotion and apostolic spirituality by the churches of the land; and especially so as concerning the church from whence many of us came. When we cease to be deeply spiritual, truly humble, and earnest for God and souls; when we become cold and formal and begin to ape the worldly, large churches around us; then the larger denominations at once devour us and swallow up our people. When a man ceases to be deeply spiritual and thoroughly at heart loyal to God and the principles of righteousness laid down in his Holy Scripture, when, in short, he becomes a mere religionist, a churchman, a formalist, it is then he turns from the small company of truly godly men and women, and goes in search of the crowd, the fine church-house or cathedral, the pipe organ and the trained singers—the mere place of sensuous enjoyment. Then his mind, if he be a preacher, is occupied with the thought of "how much do they pay?" or "what is the salary?"

Another journal says of its denomination that it "will prosper there not by its close resemblance to the other churches, however strongly they may be committed to reform, but by the contrast in spiritual life. If there is not some level of attainment in spiritual life as well as in reform for our people above that of the nations round about them, there is no place for us at all. We cannot be below other churches and survive; we cannot be on a grade with them and not be swallowed by them; our only hope is in being in a spiritual realm above our competitors. When our ministers faithfully preach a doctrine and a life that carries men and women up and on and out into a victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil greater than our competitors, then will the people want to hear us and then will the Lord send us a work to do that no one else is doing."

THE HOME OF JOHN WOOLMAN.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

Having had occasion to visit Mount Holly, New Jersey, some weeks ago, I took advantage of the opportunity and went to see the old home of our worthy Friend, John Woolman. Tradition says his house stood on Mill Street, opposite the end of Cherry. Some years ago this house was moved to the rear of the lot and turned into a stable. It has since been destroyed by fire. As there is usually some foundation for tradition, it has been suggested that he lived here before going into business for himself, at which time he had charge of his employer's store.

Old deeds, now in possession of the Library Company at Mount Holly, tell us that John Woolman owned a large tract of land on the eastern outskirts of the town, bordering on Branch Street, which is still a country road. The house is located near the junction of this road with the turnpike, which leads into Mount Holly from Jobstown.

It is built of brick, two stories high, with a plain A roof without dormer windows facing the north. A door, in the middle of the first story, has one window on each side. There are three windows in the second story. The south side is the same, lacking the middle window in the second story. The gable end is toward the road, and attached to this was his one-story tailor shop, the front of which was glass sash with eight by twelve-inch window panes, the entrance being on one side. The shop was taken down several years ago.

The location was an admirable one for his business. Many Friends lived in that section and were mostly farmers. Those on the south of him passed his door on their way to meeting, and those on the north passed his door on their way to the grist-mill.

